

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

The review of reviews

THE REVIEW

A Sixpenny

OF REVIEWS

Monthly.

80964

Vol. IV.

JULY, 1891.

No. 19.

CONTENTS

Frontispiece:—

	PAGE.
Oliver Cromwell: A hitherto unpublished contemporary portrait ...	2

Progress of the World:—

Portrait of Mr. Balfour ...	3
" of M. Constans ...	5
" of Mr. Sutherst ...	6
Cartoon: A Party of Patches ...	7
Portrait of Mr. J. G. Blaine ...	8
" of Sir. W. Gordon Cumming ...	9
" of the Emperor of Germany ...	11

Diary of the Month. With portraits ...	13
--	----

Obituary. With portraits ...	15
------------------------------	----

Some Caricatures of the Month:—

The Prince of Wales and the Baccarat Scandal ...	16
The American, French, German, Australian and English Satirical Cartoons ...	18
The Strikes ...	21

Character Sketch: The Prince of Wales—

Cartoon: "At Tranby Croft. The Man with the Muck Rake" ...	22
Who is to blame? ...	23
Baccarat and Betting ...	24
The Political Significance of the Scandal ...	26
The Secret Source of all the Mischief ...	27
Is there a remedy? ...	28
How it could be done ...	29
Sandringhamise Marlborough House ...	30

Leading Articles in the Reviews:—

The Union of the Australias. By Sir Henry Parkes (illus.) ...	35
The Fascination of South Africa. By Olive Schreiner ...	36
Reminiscences of Archbishop Magee. By Rev. Benj. Waugh ...	37
The Little Wives of India ...	38
St. Francis of Assisi ...	39
Charles Bradlaugh. By Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P. ...	40
A Poet on Modern Poetry. By Mr. Lewis Morris ...	40
Some Tributes to Madame Blavatsky ...	41
A Mother and her Boy. By Queen Nathalie ...	42
Paris the Typical Modern City ...	43
Poetry in the Magazines ...	44
Women in the American Churches ...	44
Mr. Albert Pell and Poor Law Reform (with portrait) ...	45
Is Mammon the God of the Americans? ...	46
Some Austrian Statesmen (illus.) ...	47
Baccarat and the Law. By Sir J. Fitzjames Stephen ...	47
Dissent. By an ex-Dissenter (Rev. G. S. Reaney) ...	48
How to Federate the Empire ...	48
Eve of St. John. A Ghost Story ...	49
A French Lady of Letters ...	50
The A B C of Money. By Andrew Carnegie ...	50

Reviews Reviewed:—

	PAGE.
Arena ...	51
North American ...	52
Forum ...	53
Contemporary ...	54
Nineteenth Century ...	55
Fortnightly ...	55
New Review ...	56
Shorter Notices ...	57

Cromwell and His Independents:—

Portrait of Oliver Cromwell ...	58
Mayflower at New Plymouth ...	59
Chap. I.—Early Martyrs of Independency ...	60
Some Notable Independents (Portraits) ...	62
Chap. II.—The Founding of America ...	63
Leading Independents of To-day (Portraits) ...	64
Chap. III.—Cromwell ...	67
Chap. IV.—A Pilgrimage to Naseby. Thomas Fairfax (Portrait) ...	69
Plan of Battle of Naseby ...	72
Chap. V.—The Ideals of Independents ...	74

The Photographs of the Month ...	76
----------------------------------	----

Illustration, View of Mentone ...	77
-----------------------------------	----

Art in the Magazines ...	78
--------------------------	----

Russian Literature: a Causerie. By Dr. Dillon ...	81
---	----

FOREIGN REVIEWS—

French ...	84
Portuguese ...	84
German ...	85
Italian ...	88
Scandinavian ...	89
Dutch and Spanish ...	90

Military and Naval Magazines ...	91
----------------------------------	----

The Musical Magazines ...	93
---------------------------	----

The Book of the Month:—

Charles Booth: Life and Labour in London With Portrait. ...	94
---	----

Books of the Month. With Portraits. ...	95
---	----

Contents of Leading Reviews ...	100
---------------------------------	-----

Notable Articles in the Magazines ...	101
---------------------------------------	-----

Index ...	104
-----------	-----

For INDEX TO ADVERTISERS, see pages ii. and iii.; and GENERAL CONTENTS INDEX, page xi.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Leading Bankers and Merchants are availing themselves of the investment advantages of the Company's Endowment Policy with Life Option.

INSURANCE FOR THE WEALTHY.
£116,000 was recently paid by a Leading Merchant for an Investment Policy in this Company. Send for Prospectus.

BANKERS—BANK OF ENGLAND.
Accumulated Funds exceed, £30,600,000 | Bonuses Paid in 1890, £575,748; an increase over the amount Paid in Bonuses in 1889 of £98,899.
The BONUSES declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only Five Years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

LARGE BONUS.

The Company have recently forwarded to the holder of policy No. 278,127 a cheque for £1,099 13s. 6d. in payment of the cash value of the Bonus for 1891, the policy being for £10,000, and issued in 1886, on the five year distribution plan. This return is equal to an annual cash bonus of £2 4s. 0d. per cent. Many of these policies are reaching the bonus period with results very gratifying to the Insured.

ACTUAL RESULTS.

The New Six per Cent. Consol Policy now being issued by the Company is specially devised to meet the requirements of people of means, to whom a good investment may be of more moment than Life Insurance. This Policy meets both requirements.

ORDINARY POLICIES.

The Bonuses declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only five years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

The total payments to Policyholders to December, 1890, amounted £263,469,822, of which upwards of £16,500,000 were bonus payments—more than twice the amount of Bonuses paid by any other Company.

Head Office for the United Kingdom: 17 & 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.—D. C. HALDEMAN, General Manager.

SWAN FOUNTAIN PEN.

The "Swan" is a beautiful Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold enough ink for two days' constant work, or a week's ordinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as to wind a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and if by chance the writing point does not suit his hand, may exchange it for another without charge, or his money returned if wanted.

There are various points to select from, broad, medium and fine, so that every handwriting can be suited, and the price of the entire instrument, with filler complete, is only 10s. 6d.

The Gold Pens in the "Swan" are Mabie, Todd & Co.'s famous make: they are 14-carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The "Encyclopædia Britannica" says—"Iridium is a nearly white metal of high specific gravity, it is almost indestructible, and a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper, and writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens; one will outwear a gross of steel pens. They are a perfect revelation to those who know nothing about Gold Pens.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co.'s Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day.

Send Postal Card for Free Illustrated List (containing interesting Testimonials from the best people, who have used them for years) to

MABIE, TODD & BARD, 93, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA

(IN PACKETS ONLY)

IS THE BEST.

Strong, Delicious and Nourishing,
Selected from the Spring Crops of India, China, and Ceylon.

Price 1s. 10d. to 3s. 4d. per lb.

1000 AGENTS IN ENGLAND.

"SWIFT" & "CLUB" CYCLES.

THE LEADING MACHINES.
WORKS—COVENTRY.

New Spring Frame "Swift." Model A.

LONDON—
15 & 16, HOLBORN VIADUCT.
MANCHESTER—
9, VICTORIA BUILDINGS.
Catalogues Free.
Gradual Payments.
COVENTRY
MACHINISTS CO., Ltd.

081
TH
L
DO
JB
S.
ENTRI
LXX
DINGS

OLIVER CROMWELL.

From a contemporary panel oil painting in possession of Madame Parkes Belloc, by whose permission this copy is now published for the first time.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS

VOL. IV. No. 19.]

JULY, 1891

[PRICE SIXPENCE.]

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

MR. BALFOUR got his Bill through the House of Commons on June 15th, the third reading being carried by 225 to 96, the Irish Members supporting it without distinction of party or class. The debates, although prolonged, have been conducted, according to Mr. Balfour himself, in a businesslike way with very little surplusage. The Bill is too complicated to explain in detail here, but in brief it may be said that it provides for the issue of £33,000,000 of 2½ Stock by the Imperial Government for buying out the interests of the Irish landlords

From a photo by

THE RIGHT HON. A. J. BALFOUR.

[London Stereoscopic Co.]

July 1, 1891.

who wish to part with their property, and who can persuade their tenants to purchase. The tenants who buy obtain at once, for the first five years, an immediate reduction of 20 per cent. on their rent, and after that five years a further reduction, corresponding to the difference between their old rents and 4 per cent. on the purchase-money. For instance, landlord A agrees to sell to tenant B a farm for which the latter is paying £50 per annum at sixteen years' purchase. The Government will give to A Government Stock, bearing 2½ per cent. interest, to the amount of £800, and will give B ownership of the farm subject to a payment for the first five years of £40 per annum, and after that time of £32 per annum for forty-four years. The £8 extra per annum levied for the first five years goes to form an insurance fund. Afterwards, of the £32 paid by the tenant for forty-four years, £22 goes to pay the landlord, £8 to a sinking fund to repay capital, and the remaining £2 is devoted to local purposes, notably to the supply of labourers' dwellings. The advance of £33,000,000 is secured on the Consolidated Fund, which is guaranteed against loss (1) by the Irish Probate Duty grant of £200,000 and the Exchequer contribution of £40,000, and (2) by the Irish share of local taxation (Customs and Excise) duties, amounting to £700,000, for the following local grants:—Rates on Government property, grants to model schools, national schools, and industrial schools, grants to workhouses, dispensaries, and lunatic asylums. The bulk of the money is to be set apart for tenants and farmers under £50 valuation. Such are the main features of the latest of the long and weary attempts which the Imperial Legislature has made to settle the Irish Land Question. It is practically the execution by a Tory Government of the favourite scheme which John Bright set forth in 1870.

Of course it will not settle the Land Question. No one who has ever been in Ireland, or who has looked for a moment into the almost impenetrable jungle of interlaced interests, can expect any Act of Parliament to settle anything. Mr. Balfour, who compares the Irish Land System to a series of geological strata, knows well that his Bill will leave its main features unaltered. If it succeeds its success will be gradual. It can only succeed rapidly at the risk of a convulsion which will immediately necessitate fresh legislation. If it were not that anything ever happens in Ireland according to expectation, it would seem to be a safe prophecy that the immediate reduction of 20 per cent. in the rent of all purchasing tenants would lead all their neighbours to compel their landlords to agree to sell or to reduce their rents, but no one ever knows what to expect except the unexpected. Mr. Morley conveniently summarised as follows the Liberal objections to the Bill on the third reading:—

The first objection is that the probate duty grant was appropriated for a certain purpose without Irish consent. The second is that certain local resources were hypothecated without the consent or sanction or voice, in any shape or form, of any Irish local authority. Thirdly, that the notion of withholding money voted by Parliament for education or other purposes was practically and essentially unjust. Fourthly, that eviction was your only remedy in case of non-payment of these annuities, and that this eviction on a large scale was an intolerable remedy. The fifth objection is that the scheme of the Bill offered no safeguard against pressure being put by ill-disposed landlords on their tenants in the shape of arrears. The sixth is that outside of each purchase transaction all sorts of ulterior liabilities were left untouched, which would be disclosed after the purchase transaction was finished, and that all sorts of covenants might have been entered into destructive of the policy of this Bill. The seventh objection is inside the purchase transaction, that the security is the entire holding, the tenant's interest plus the landlord's interest, and as the Bill stands we are apparently again going to do what was done in the well-meant but disastrous measure of 1848, the Encumbered Estates Act, namely, selling the tenants' improvements over and over again. The eighth objection, which is one of the most important of all, springs from the danger we have pointed out of creating by law so great an inequality, so immense a disparity, between two sections of tenants, on the one hand those whose landlords are willing to sell to them, and on the other those whose landlords are not willing to sell; so that you will have two classes of tenants, a privileged class, paying the reduced annuity, and those outside the Bill, who are paying a rent appreciably higher. Those are the main objections which we took, and of these not one has been met.

The Congested District section of the Land Bill may yet prove to be the most important. It provides that £1,500,000 of the surplus of the Irish Church Fund shall be placed at the disposal of a Congested Districts Board, which shall be instructed to use it so as to bring about the amalgamation of small holdings, to assist migration and emigration, and generally to develop the industries of any district where the proportion between the total population and the total rateable value is less than £1 6s. 8d. per head. Mr. Balfour anticipates from this provision absolutely incalculable advantages. The Board has not only to provide the machinery of production, but at the same time to teach the people how the machinery is to be used. "What the Board has to do is to consider in its whole scope and bearings the question of the great poverty and misery in the West." It is to provide technical education, to provide harbours and boats, and above all to teach the people how to cultivate their lands to the best advantage, etc. Here is the Paternal State reappearing with its pockets filled with the proceeds of the disendowment of a Church. The example is not likely to be lost on this side St. George's Channel. Mr. Gladstone's remarkable speech on June 19th on the Colonial Bishoprics Fund shows that he is a Free Churchman at heart, and that he has almost convinced himself that State endowments cripple instead of help religion. The demonstration of the practical uses that can be made of a Church surplus by Mr. Balfour's Bill will prob-

State
Socialism and Church Funds.

M. CONSTANS, MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR, FRANCE.

ably tend to quicken the movement in favour of creating a similar surplus, first in Wales, then in Scotland, and ultimately in England, where the Church revenue from endowments left before 1703 is over five millions per annum.

The Re-peopling of Rural England. In Western Ireland the Paternal State, with its Church surplus, is about to deal with the overcrowding of the population on the worst land in the country. In England there is urgent need for the Paternal State to take in hand an evil that is exactly the antithesis to that of the Irish congested districts. The best land in rural England is being denuded of its population. What we want to do is to get the people back to the land. The population of England and Wales, according to the census returns, is 29,000,000, the rate of increase having fallen from 14·36 per cent. in 1871-81 to 11·64 in 1881-91. The increase is confined to urban districts, chiefly to the suburbs of towns. In the five months ending May 31st, 49,652 English people left this country for the New England beyond the sea—30,000 to the States, and 20,000 to our own Colonies—but this drain is nothing compared to the drain to the towns. We want a Depleted District Board in England with ample funds, which shall be authorised to undertake the re-peopling of any district which does not carry a certain minimum proportion of inhabitants to acreage. The experiment which the Salvation Army is conducting in Essex will be watched with intense interest from this point of view. The time is too short to enable them to speak with confidence, but the Army leaders are sanguine that they will be able to pay interest on capital; to feed their labourers, and show a small profit. If they can do this, it is by no means improbable that before long the revenues now devoted to maintain the ecclesiastical hierarchy of the wealthiest of English sects may be transferred to minister to the social necessities of the poorest of the English people.

Social Legislation in France. The wave of semi-socialist legislation is submerging all Europe. M. Constans, the one strong man whom France has produced since the death of M. Gambetta, has decided that the time has come for responding to the German initiative by introducing an Old Age Insurance Bill, which is to secure for French workmen an annual pension of from £12 to £24 after they reach the age of sixty-five. There are to be payments made by the workmen, other payments made by the employers, and a grant by the State, which will ultimately amount to £4,000,000 per annum. Whatever may be the immediate fate of this measure, it can hardly fail to stimulate the movement towards old-age insurance which is associated with the name of Canon Blackley in this country, and which Mr. Chamberlain is now working at with a view to practical legislation. The influence of France on England and England on France on such matters is very remarkable.

The Hours of 'Busmen. Of this, the most remarkable illustration afforded us in recent times was the omnibus strike in London, which followed immediately and quickly as the result of the successful omnibus strike in Paris. M. Constans had no sooner intervened to secure the twelve-hours day for the 'busmen of Paris than an agitation was set on foot in London for the same limitation of the day's work. Mr. Sutherst, a barrister, who is interviewed on the subject in this month's Help, organised a strike for the twelve-hours day, and after London had been without 'buses for a week, the men carried their point. It remains to be seen whether, in England as in France, the twelve-hours day will be extended to all railway, tram, omnibus and steamboat men throughout the country.

From a photo by the

MR. SUTHERST.

[London Stereoscopic Co.]

Old Age Insurance. The example of France in the matter of insurance against old age will not be followed so rapidly, but Mr. Chamberlain's letter last month shows that he is working away at the elaboration of a practical scheme. He has not as yet advanced so far as to discover that the scheme must be compulsory, but he has arrived at one or two conclusions which are worth noting. First, it will not do to begin your pension before sixty-five. To begin it at sixty would diminish the sum that could be paid by more than one half. Secondly, it will not do to forfeit the payment in case of death before sixty-five. It is true that this limitation will reduce the four shillings per week pension to two shillings or less; but notwithstanding this, he thinks "it will be necessary to permit the amount of the subscriptions which may have been paid to be allocated without interest to surviving relatives in the event of death before the age of sixty-five." He has not made up his mind as to the extent to which the State should subsidise the scheme. He has placed himself in communication with the officials of the Post Office and with some of the leading representatives of the friendly societies, and with their assistance he hopes to prepare a definite and practicable scheme which "will be popular with the working classes generally." Mr. Chamberlain will do well not to forget to consult Mr. Albert Pell, the leading representative of the old school of political economists. I interviewed him last month down at his place in Hazelbeach, and found him half disposed to go on the war-path against all schemes of insurance, which would be a great pity.

Free Education. One by one all the schemes of the Radicals of twenty years ago are being carried into effect by the Tory Government. Mr. Balfour has no sooner carried the Bill giving effect to Mr. Bright's proposal of 1870 than Sir W. Hart-Dyke comes to the front with his Bill for granting a State subsidy of 10s. per head on all the elementary scholars in schools between the age of five and fourteen. The effect of the measure will be to make education free in two-thirds of our English schools. The Liberals object to this increased endowment of denominational schools without securing at the same time a corresponding increase of popular control. But until we get our Village Councils we may as well leave that question over. When the County Councils have been supplemented by Parish and District Councils, then we shall have a representative administrative apparatus ready to hand to undertake the popular control of all schools maintained out of the rates and taxes. Till then we shall have to potter on as best we can, for the meantime making such protest, and, if possible, effecting a few amendments in the Bill, but accepting it gladly as a great stride in the right direction.

Parties and Social Programmes. It is becoming more and more obvious that, excepting Home Rule and the Dis-establishment of the Church, there is very little difference between the two parties in British politics. Lord Hartington, on June 24th, referring to the electoral leaflet circulated by the Liberal Caucus, said :—

They (the Liberals) are going further "to improve local government in the counties by creating district and parish councils; to make better provision for the housing of the working classes in town and country; to provide free education under the control of the people." They are going "to make provision for the direct and popular control of the liquor traffic; to improve the Poor Law; to extend the Factory Acts in order to do away with the evils of the sweating system; to give labourers and others a fair chance of getting as much land as they can profitably manage." Now, gentlemen, I say that with one exception I believe that the present Unionist Government and party have dealt or attempted to deal with every one of those subjects. I say with one exception. I do not know that the present Government has made any attempt to reform the Poor Law; neither do I know that a proposal has ever been made by any responsible leader of the Gladstonian party to reform the Poor Law.

Lord Hartington does not seem to be aware that Mr. Stansfeld has made very drastic proposals for the reform of the Poor Law, but this hardly affects his argument, which is that, outside Home Rule, both parties agree as regarding social legislation as the only legislation worth speaking about, and on that legislation they are practically agreed.

The New "People's Party." In the United States, the disposition to invoke the aid of the Legislature for the enriching of the farmer and the labourer, is showing itself in the formation of the "People's Party." The great nucleus of the "People's Party," formed at Cincinnati late in May, is the Farmers' Alliance. After its achievements in the West and South last November, it would be blind and stupid to treat the farmers' political movement as a trivial matter. Fundamentally, it is the inflation of the currency and a corresponding advance in the price of products that the farmers want; and the proposed Government loans to individuals introduce a wholly different class of projects. It is impossible to understand the farmers' movement and the motives that underlie the new party, unless one considers in a broad way the nature of the economic development of the West. To state it in the simplest way, let it be assumed that five hundred thousand square miles of good land, wholly unoccupied two decades ago, now support ten millions of people. The occupancy and the use of this land required, let us say, an investment of £400,000,000, half of which was furnished in one form or another by capitalists secured by mortgages and liens. When prices were high all went well, but when prices fell the West's great debt to the East

From Judge.]

A PARTY OF PATCHES.

[June 6, 1891,

GRAND BALLOON ASCENSION—CINCINNATI, MAY 20TH, 1891.

was payable in dollars, and its nominal dimensions did not shrink with the increased purchasing power of money, and it found itself obliged to pay back much more in value than it had received. The whole effort of the so-called financial heresies of the farmers' movement is based upon the idea that the average purchasing power of money should remain as nearly stable as possible, and that its subtle appreciation through a term of years is almost ruinous to a young producing community that borrows its fixed and its working capital from older and richer communities. Hence the demand for free silver coinage, for the direct issue of treasury notes, and for various other monetary and financial experiments. The remedies might prove far worse than the grievance; but it is absurd to regard the Western and Southern farmers who hold to these plans as cheats or repudiators.

Mr. Blaine and his Work.

Mr. Blaine's temporary indisposition has been made the occasion for much bewildering newspaper gossip as to his general state of health, his diplomatic tasks, and his plans and ambitions touching his future career. His convalescence should certainly be hastened by the peaceful surrender of the Itata, which removes all possibility of trouble with either faction in Chili, and by the acceptance on Great Britain's part of his proposal for a close season in the Behring Sea, pending arbitration. As for the Italian affair, the Government at Rome seems to have subsided entirely, and Mr. Blaine has won a clear victory in the diplomatic correspondence. The reciprocity treaties are progressing satisfactorily, and Mr. Blaine can well afford a quiet summer's vacation. He has reason to be gratified with the cordial manner in which the great majority of the American people, regardless of party, have recently sustained and commended the course of the State department.

THE HON. J. G. BLAINE, SECRETARY OF STATE.

Sir John A. Macdonald, whose character as a man and politician and whose career as an "Empire builder" were graphically sketched in the Review two months ago, has passed away, full of years and honours. He was one of the masterly parliamentarians and administrators of the century. The honours that were paid to his memory in Westminster Abbey had been earned by devoted service to the interests of the British Empire. While the Federation of the British American provinces was not in any sense the work of one man, it is true that Sir John, more than any other, was the statesman who led that important movement, and who worked out the terms upon which the Dominion was formed. It is interesting to note the new appreciation that we are manifesting for our colonial statesmen. The marked and official tributes paid to Sir John at London are without precedent in the history of the British dependencies. But so, also, is the elevation to the peerage of a Canadian, Sir George Stephen. If, as has been intimated, this favour bestowed by royalty is the first step in pursuance of a plan of Lord Salisbury's to create a number of Canadian life peerages, a majority of Canadians will not be pleased. Sir George has led in the achievement of the Canadian Pacific Railroad and cognate enterprises; but democracy is too deep-rooted in North America to make the erection of successful railroad men into titled aristocrats other than generally distasteful. It is, however, noted on the other side as one of the various marks of a growing sense in England of the dignity and importance of the colonies. The dominance of the Canadian Pacific Railway is at least suggested by the designation of Mr. J. J. C. Abbott, the railway company's chief legal adviser, as Sir John A. Macdonald's successor. Mr. Abbott is a Canadian public man of long experience, but he is not so well known as some of his colleagues.

Women
to the Front

Mrs. Grimwood, the widowed heroine of Manipur, has been decorated by Her Majesty with the Order of the Red Cross—the Victoria Cross as yet being a monopoly of the male. These unjust monopolies are, however, disappearing before the growing sense of justice in the democracy. Lady Macdonald, the widow of "Sir John A.," has addressed a spirited appeal to the Conservatives of Canada to remain true to the cause which her husband so often led to victory; but although while he lived Lady Macdonald was a potent force in Canadian politics, civilisation has not advanced far enough in the Dominion for the widow to be allowed to survive—politically—the decease of her husband. It is an attenuated form of the Indian suttee, the bitterness of which is only slightly modified by the peerage conferred upon her by the Queen. It may be noted as a remarkable indication of the trend of democratic thought that the Governments of the two leading Australian Colonies, New South Wales and Australia, are both committed to Woman Suffrage. Woman Suffrage was one of the planks in Sir Henry Parkes' programme, and last month the Governor of Victoria opened Parliament with a Speech promising Woman Suffrage as the natural corollary of the Bill for "One man one vote." How long, I wonder, will it be before our Liberals at home are ready to follow suit?

The result of the action for libel brought by Sir W. Gordon-Cumming against the ladies and gentlemen who detected him cheating at cards at Tranby Croft resulted in a verdict for the defendants. The Lord Chief Justice and twelve jurymen agreed with the Prince of Wales in regarding the weight of evidence against Sir W. Gordon-Cumming as irresistible. As the result

Social Sores.

SIR WILLIAM GORDON-CUMMING.
(Reproduced from "The County Gentleman.") of the trial Her Majesty dismissed Sir William from the army. An American heiress married him the day after the verdict, and the Town Council of Forres welcomed him as a hero returning triumphant from the war; but he has not yet been adopted as the popular candidate for a mining constituency. The Prince of Wales has been much criticised for playing at baccarat with his juniors, and the fact that he carried counters with him has given rise to much ill-natured remark. My American Editor, Dr. Shaw, thus expresses the view which is taken of the matter across the Atlantic:—"Viewed from the American standpoint, the foundations of the Throne itself would appear to be seriously affected. In a country like Great Britain, the chief security of monarchical institutions must rest in the conviction of the most of the best people that such institutions are upon the whole exerting a beneficent influence. But without a certain degree of seriousness and moral elevation in the personal life and character of the monarch, how by any pretence, in this generation, can royalty be held to make for righteousness in government or society? The English people had forgiven the Prince of Wales very much; and their mood to-day seems that of profound discouragement mingled with indignation. It is not, perhaps, one thing or another in particular that gives offence, so much as the painful evidence of a seemingly invincible frivolity and lightness that has accumulated against the Prince. The censures pronounced upon the Prince, in view of the testimony at the baccarat trial, are without precedent for plainness, and seem to mark another distinct step in the progress of modern public opinion as against traditional forms of authority."

When Mr. O'Shea obtained a divorce from his wife on account of her adultery with Mr. Parnell, Mr. Carnegie is reported to have telegraphed to the co-respondent, "Retire, marry, return." Mr. Parnell refused to retire; but he has married, and according to the information from Ireland, his marriage will be a fatal obstacle to his return. Until he married, many of his followers refused to believe that there was any truth in Mr. O'Shea's evidence; now they reluctantly admit that they have been mistaken. The news of the wedding in the registrar's office at Steyning on June 25th fell like a thunderclap on his agents who were fighting his battle at Carlow; and the Irish hierarchy regard the battle as practically over; nor do they think that the "religious ceremony" which is promised at an early date will do anything to rehabilitate Mr. Parnell in the eyes of his followers. An action for libel brought by Mr. Campbell, his private secretary, against a Cork newspaper which assumed that he had written the letters to which Mrs. O'Shea-Parnell seems to have signed his name, although it brought Mr. Campbell £250 damages, still further compromised the reputation of his chief. He avoided a subpoena calling upon him to appear as witness in the case, and then wrote a letter making statements which ought to have been made in Court.

Sir Charles Dilke. Having pledged his honour, publicly and privately, that he would not attempt to return to public life until he had cleared his character, Sir Charles Dilke has acted in thorough harmony with his previous record in breaking his pledged word by accepting the invitation to stand for the Forest of Dean. It is only one falsehood the more, and conclusively demonstrates the impossibility of ever trusting his word whenever it suits his interests to break it. Not a single person with any claim to respect, religious, social, or political, supports him in this latest outrage on good faith and public morality, the impudence of which has even provoked a protest from the Times. The argument of some of his supporters, who, when pressed, will admit that he is this, that, and the other, but who still assert that he is too valuable a public man to be excluded from public life on that account, reminds us of a grim little incident that was reported last month from Frankfort. A poor half-witted servant girl, dreading death from starvation, sought death by entering the bear-pit in the Frankfort Zoological Gardens. The bear seized her at once, and as he began to tear the flesh in strips from her face, she shrieked for help. The keepers arrived, saw what the bear was doing, and expostulated with it mildly by means of a long pole. As he took no notice of their expostulations they allowed him to go on with his hideous repast of living human flesh until, after half an hour of agony, the poor girl expired. When the keepers were asked afterwards why they had not shot the bear and saved the girl, they replied that the bear was much too valuable an animal to be destroyed. They have been indicted for manslaughter. Considerations as to the "value" of such a "statesman" will not, however, restrain the national conscience from effective action. Note as an indication of the set of Nonconformist opinion on this subject, that the General Baptist Association at Burnley, last month, unanimously passed the following resolution:—

That this Association, which at the institution of Divorce Court law sustained the Opposition so earnestly led by Mr. Gladstone, feels most strongly convinced that the persons found guilty of malfeasance in that court should be treated in the same way, with regard to subsequent civil rights, as persons scheduled under the Electoral Acts, or at least like men who have become bankrupt.

The German Emperor on his Travels. On the 20th June the Emperor William closed the Prussian Parliament in a speech which, after referring with satisfaction to the re-establishment of peace with the Catholic Church, and with hope to the vital development in communal life expected from the new law for the regulation of the rural communes, concluded by a declaration that he had no reason to fear that the blessings of peace were imperilled. The maintenance of peace, he said, was the constant endeavour of this young father of his country. Having said this he proceeded to give practical proof of the sincerity of his speech by setting off on one of his foreign tours. This time he visited Holland, where the Socialists lamented the expenditure entailed by the Imperial visit, and declared it foreshadowed the peaceful annexation of Holland by Germany. He came on to England, where unwonted demonstrations of welcome awaited him. Seldom has a monarch so completely reversed public sentiment as the Kaiser. Twelve months ago he was one of the least popular of European Sovereigns in the opinion of the British people; to-day no one stands higher in the public esteem. No Sovereign has done more to rehabilitate monarchy in the opinion of the democracy.

Imperial Federation. Lord Salisbury was last month waited upon by two deputations, who, in their concern for the future of the British Empire, called upon him to take practical steps to promote the closer union between the Mother Country and the Colonies. To each Lord Salisbury replied by expressing his sympathy with their ultimate objects, but suggesting that it would be well if they made up their minds what they wanted to have done before asking him to do it. His speeches were, however, encouraging in tone. He recognised the fact that Federation was emerging out of the region of aspiration into the sphere of practical schemes, and he invited the Federationists first to think out their plan, and then to convert the country to its support. A United Empire means a Zollverein and a Kriegsverein, a customs union and a union for war. The former is for the present unattainable; but the latter, which is growing more important every year, as the world shrinks under steam, and the Colonies lose the protection which distance formerly afforded them, already exists in some fashion, and is capable of indefinite development.

Centripetal Politics. The centripetal tendency of the age has been asserting itself in Europe, where the Triple Alliance, which has just been renewed for six years, seems to grow more solid the more attempts are made to rend it asunder. There have been stormy scenes in the Italian Chamber, but they only brought into clearer relief the determination of the great majority of the Italian deputies to support the Peace League. Attempts are being made to bring Switzerland into a Customs Union, including Germany, Austria, and Italy—a project which, but for the neutralisation of the little Republic, would be held to be the precursor of its adherence to the Peace League of Central Europe. Further East M. Tricoupis has been making an attempt to establish a Confederation of the Balkan States. He met with support at Belgrade, but at Sofia M. Stambuloff told him that Bulgaria would side with Turkey rather than with Greece. If, however, Turkey were to be seriously pressed by the spread of the Arab insurrection which has broken out in Yemen, M. Stambuloff might reconsider his attitude, especially if Greece and Servia attempted to invade Macedonia in alliance. Macedonia, which, according to the Berlin Treaty, ought to be enjoying autonomous institutions under the ægis of Europe, has been left to the Turk, with the result that some day the Macedonians will set the East in a blaze.

THE EMPEROR WILLIAM.

Admiral Hoskins, one of the best of our England and the Peace League. sea-kings, has been entertaining the Emperor of Austria at Fiume, on board the Mediterranean fleet. The incident, coming immediately after the repeated declarations made in Italy that Lord Salisbury had virtually guaranteed the Italian coast against an unprovoked attack by the French fleet, has led to much newspaper writing on the subject of England's relations to the Peace League of Central Europe. Russia and England might well consent to unite with the Central European Powers in maintaining the peace of the Continent, which is permanently threatened by France, and France alone. The French make great parade of their devotion to Russia; but the Russian Emperor, with whom alone lies the decisive word, abhors war, and has no sympathy with France. The French last month further alienated themselves from the friendly concert of Europe by refusing to ratify the Convention drawn up at Brussels for the suppression of the slave trade. The French Government supported the Convention, which has the support of all the Powers, but the Chamber rejected it by a decisive majority. The Tzar, selected by France to be arbitrator in a dispute between the French and the Dutch as to a frontier question in Guiana, has given his award entirely in favour of the Dutch. But neither that nor the expulsion of the Jews, to whom France has become a second Canaan, can cool the ardour with which the Republicans of the West make court to the Autocrat of the East.

Manipur and Tarquinus Superbus. Both Houses of Parliament have debated recent events in Manipur to little purpose. The debate in the Commons was notable, however, for the delivery of a cynical speech by Sir John Gorst, who has this session achieved for himself a unique position in the Ministerial ranks. Speaking in defence of the action taken by the Indian Government in deciding upon the suppression of the Sena-putty of Manipur, the Under-Secretary for India cynically remarked that such a decision was in accord with precedents, and represented the unbroken practice of our Administrators. "That policy," he said, "was as old as the days of Tarquinus Superbus. Whenever a vassal showed too much independence and strength of character, the suzerain power got rid of him. Governments have always hated and discouraged independent talent and promoted mediocrity; in my own time I have known cases of this kind." And he proceeded to illustrate his point by referring, not to the promotion of Lord Cross to the Secretaryship while Sir John Gorst was kept as his subordinate, but to the cases of Cetewayo, Arabi, and Zebehr. Naturally there was a hubbub, and Lord Cross was put up to explain that his Under-Secretary did not mean what he actually said. Sir John Gorst, however, did not resign, and the incident passed. Sir John Gorst may have been right in his reference to the suppression of Arabi as an illustration of the adoption of the Tarquinian policy by Mr. Gladstone; but no one can read the admirable interview with Mr. Alfred Milner, published in the Pall Mall Gazette of June 15th, without feeling that out of that evil great good has come.

Sir John Gorst being a man of independent talent, who was not sacrificed, à la Tarquin, survived in order to make his colleagues regret that they made an exception in his case. For a few days later, when the question of raising the age of half-timers in English factories came on for discussion, Sir John Gorst, by defending the action which he had taken at the Berlin Congress, in advocating the raising of the age to twelve, succeeded in inflicting a nasty defeat upon the Government, which, in the person of the Home Secretary, resisted Mr. Buxton's amendment raising the age to eleven, and got badly beaten in consequence by 189 to 164. After this the Government had no option but to give way, thus for a second time this session being overruled by a colleague to whom Lord Salisbury has not yet conceded Cabinet rank. The Labour Commission was of Sir John Gorst's appointment, but that was managed behind the scenes without inflicting upon the Administration the humiliation of an open defeat. On the Factory Bill, although he did not vote, he put the Government into a minority. Notwithstanding this, Sir John continues to act as Under-Secretary for India, deriving such satisfaction as he can from the fact that he is now recognised as the strongest man, after Mr. Balfour, on the Conservative side of the House.

DIARY FOR JUNE.

EVENTS OF THE MONTH.

- May 30. Queen of the Netherlands and Queen Regent visit Rotterdam. Foundation-stone of new quay laid by the former.
- June 1. Bill for the regulation of betting on rare-courses adopted by the French Senate by a large majority.
- Trial of Baccarat case commences. Sir W. Gordon-Cumming examined, denies having cheated at cards.
2. Trial of the Regent at Manipur. Meeting of 'busmen at Fulham Town Hall decides to strike unless better pay and shorter hours were granted.
- Baccarat case continued. Examination of the Prince of Wales.
3. Debate in the Spanish Senate on Bill to restrict Sunday labour. Señor Canovas states the intention of the Government to consult the Catholic Church.
- Annual Meeting of the Women's Liberal Unionist Association.
4. Arrival of the Itata at Iquique, and her surrender to the United States war vessels. Election of Dr. Hermann Adler as Chief Rabbi.
5. Meeting of the Church Union passes resolution declaring that friends of voluntary schools cannot support a Free Education Bill which does not adequately secure the pecuniary interests of voluntary schools.
- Deputation of medical men and Members of Parliament to Board of Trade, to ask for official recognition of a proposed British Institute of Preventive Medicine. Sir M. Hicks-Beach declined to permit the association to be registered without the word limited.
- Meeting of the Directors of the London General Omnibus Company to consider the threatened strike of 'busmen.
6. Portuguese Chamber of Deputies ratifies Anglo-Portuguese Convention by 105 votes to 6.
- Earthquake in North Italy.
- Strike of 'busmen commences.
8. Deputation of representatives of 'busmen to the Directors of the London General and the London Road Car Companies.
- Sir Edward Clarke's speech for the plaintiff in the Baccarat case.
9. Summing-up of the Lord Chief Justice in the Baccarat case. Verdict given for the defendants.
10. Provisional Government of Chili issues circular note to the Powers, asking them to recognise the Junta as a belligerent, and to preserve neutrality in the struggle against ex-president Balmaceda.
- Portuguese Chamber of Peers passes Bill for ratification of the Convention with England.
- Breach of promise of marriage action of Miss Wiedemann against Mr. Walpole came up for trial a third time.
11. Meeting of Directors of the London General Omnibus and London Road Car Companies decides to make no further concession to employees beyond reducing the working day to one of twelve hours.
12. 'Bus strike ends.
- Funeral service held in Westminster Abbey in commemoration of the late Sir John Macdonald.

14. Debate in the Italian Senate on the Triple Alliance.
- The Spanish Senate passes Bill for regulating Sunday labour, making it apply to members of all religious creeds as well as to freethinkers.
- Hon. J. J. C. Abbott accepts the Premiership of Canada.
- Regent of Manipur condemned to death.
- The City of Richmond arrives at Queenstown having carried a cargo of smouldering cotton for six days.
- Giving way of a bridge, and consequent serious railway accident, at Basle.
- Demonstration of laundresses in Hyde Park, demanding to come under the operations of the Factories Act.
15. Agreement between England and the United States for the establishment of a close sea-

13. French Chamber votes a credit of £260,000 for the destruction of locusts in Algeria.
19. Labour Commission resumes its sittings.
- Meeting of Imperial Federation League.
- Lord Brassey urges that they should endeavour to frame a practical scheme for bringing together the Colonies and the Imperial Government.
- First section of the Ship Canal opened at Eastham, Cheshire.
20. Prince and Princess of Wales visit Eastbourne to open the new Children's Hospital, and a children's wing in the Princess Alice Memorial Hospital.
- Impromptu show of the Royal Agricultural Society opened at Doncaster.
22. M. de Freycinet defends the War Department in connection with the melinite scandal, and claims a vote of confidence.
- Vote carried by 138 to 137.

Deputation of Limited Empire

Trade League to Lord Salisbury, to urge the abolition of foreign treaties restricting British trade with our Colonies, and to ask for a Colonial conference.

23. Arrival of the Austrian Emperor at Fiume.

Deputation of newspaper proprietors and publishers to Mr. Raikes to ask for revision of regulations for postage of newspapers, magazines and books.

Installation of the new Chief Rabbi at the Great Synagogue, Aldgate.

24. Duke of Connaught lays the foundation-stone of the new Church House.

The Austrian Emperor visits the British Fleet at Fiume.

25. French Chamber rejects Bill for ratification of the Convention agreed to at Brussels Conference for suppression of the slave trade.

26. New buildings erected in connection with the London Hospital opened by the Duke of Cambridge.

27. Uproar in the Italian Chamber of Deputies consequent on the withdrawal of Signor Cavallotti's interpellation on the foreign policy of the Government.

Crisis in the Welsh tin-plate trade. Sixty works stopped and 25,000 operatives thrown out of employment.

29. Christening of the infant daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Fife. Sponsors, the Queen and Princess of Wales.

Petition of King's and University Colleges for Charter to establish in London a teaching University before the Privy Council.

Oxford and Cambridge at Lords'.

30. French Squadron anchors in Copenhagen Roads, en route for Cronstadt.
- Oxford and Cambridge Match at Lords' finishes, Cambridge winning by two wickets.

UTTERANCES, NOTABLE AND OTHERWISE.

- June 2. Sir John Lubbock makes the annual statement of the work of the County Council and its position, and declares that considering the benefits conferred the increase in the rates was moderate.
3. Mr. Balfour at the annual meeting of the Women's Liberal Unionist Association on the improved condition of Ireland.
4. Mr. Findlay, General Manager L.N.W.R.,

From a photo by]

DR. ADLER.

[Mr. H. S. Mendelssohn.

- son in Behring Sea signed at Washington.
16. Meeting of Standing Committee of the National Society and representatives of Diocesan and Local Boards of Education, under the presidency of the Bishop of London, decide that amendments should be introduced to the Assisted Education Bill.
17. Sentence of high treason passed on M. Turpin, M. Tripon, and two others involved in the melinite scandals.
- Deputation of the Imperial Federation League to Lord Salisbury, urging a Conference of the Colonies to consider the question of their securing a real share in the privileges and responsibilities of Imperial Government.
- Wiedemann-Walpole case concluded, jury finding for plaintiff, £300 damages.

THE VERY REV. JOHN GOTT, D.D.

(From a photo by Messrs. Russell and Sons.)

before the House of Commons Select Committee on railway servants' hours of labour declares himself opposed to interference with railway management by trades unions, official travelling inspectors, or boards of conciliation.

10. Mr. Mundella at the meeting of the British and Foreign School Society on the Free Education Bill.
11. Mr. Findlay, before the Select Committee on railway servants' hours of labour, declares that the percentage of men working over thirteen hour a days has been reduced to a mere fraction.
14. Viscount Cross at annual dinner of Newspaper Press Fund.
- Marquis di Rudini on the necessity for Italy to continue the Triple Alliance.
16. Mr. Lambert, General Manager of the G.W.R., before Select Committee on railway servants' hours, states that a Board of Conciliation would not be a proper tribunal for settling disputes between the companies and their servants, the directors being responsible to the shareholders as well as to the men.
17. Lord Salisbury to a deputation suggests that schemes to give the Colonies a real share in the privileges of the Empire should be proposed for consideration.
18. Sir R. Temple explains the Budget of the London School Board, and points out the growth of expenditure out of proportion to the increase of schools and scholars.
- Mrs. Bishop, in a committee-room of the House of Commons, upon the persecutions of the Christians of Kurdistan by the Turks.
19. Mr. Gladstone, at the jubilee meeting of the Colonial Bishops Fund, on the great development of the Church in the Colonies during the last half-century.
20. The Kaiser, in closing the Prussian Diet, declares that "the preservation of peace is the object of his unremitting endeavour."
23. Mr. T. W. Russell at dinner of the Liberal Union Club, contrasts the promises of Gladstonians with work accomplished by Unionist party.
- Mr. Baikes states to a deputation that there was no intention to restrict the privileges of the press as to transmission.
24. Lord Hartington at a Liberal Unionist Meeting in St. James's Hall on the approaching General Election.
29. The Kaiser at Hamburg states that the Triple Alliance had been prolonged for six years.
- Mr. Balfour on thrift at the annual meeting of the South-Eastern and Metropolitan Railway Employes' Savings Bank.

PARLIAMENTARY RECORD.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

- June 5. Behring Sea Fishery Bill read a first time. Motion by Lord Herschell agreed to that an inquiry should be instituted to ascertain whether some better method of dealing with habitual drunkards could not be adopted.

8. Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill passed. The Marquis of Salisbury and the Earl of Kimberley on the death of Sir John Macdonald.
11. Marquis of Salisbury makes a statement as to the differences between the Treaty just concluded with Portugal and that concluded in August.
15. Drainage of Lands (Ireland) Bill read a second time.
16. Irish Land Bill read a first time.
18. Customs and Inland Revenue Bill read a first time. Fisheries Bill, giving effect to the agreement between England and Belgium in regard to the North Sea Fisheries, read a second time.
19. Customs and Inland Revenue Bill read a second time.
22. Debate on the Manipur Disaster. Marquis of Ripon, Viscount Cross, Duke of Argyll, Lords Kimberley, Northbrook and others.
23. Fisheries Bill through Committee. Judicature Acts Amendment Bill, Budget Bill, read a third time.
25. Second reading of Irish Land Bill moved by Earl Cadogan. Marquis of Waterford and the Duke of Argyll. Debate adjourned.
26. Debate on the motion for the second reading of the Irish Land Bill resumed. Lords Camperdown, Kimberley, Ashbourne, Herschell, Derby, and the Marquis of Salisbury. Bill read a second time.
29. Debate on motion for second reading of Factories and Workshops Bill. Lord Kimberley, Lord Salisbury, Lord Sanhurst. Bill read a second time.

MRS. BISHOP.

(From a photo by Mr. Moffat, Edinburgh.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

- June 1. Sir J. Fergusson states that Her Majesty's Government had brought to the notice of the French Government the report that a French officer had warned fishermen in St. George's Bay, not to sell bait to United States fishermen under penalty of seizure of their boats. On the motion of Mr. W. H. Smith, the Seal Fishery (Behring Sea) Bill, was read a second time. Irish Land Bill, as amended, under consideration. At the request of Mr. Sexton, supported by Mr. T. W. Russell, Mr. Balfour consents to the withdrawal of the Land Department (Ireland) Bill.
2. Consideration of Irish Land Purchase Bill, as amended, resumed. Debate on Mr. Sexton's new clause to give prior right of purchase to evicted tenants. Clause rejected by 112 to 74.
  3. Rating of Machinery (No. 2) Bill in Committee.
  4. Sir J. Fergusson makes statement as to England's attitude with regard to the Triple Alliance.
- The Home Secretary, in answer to Mr. C. Graham, said it was not the function of the Home Office to interfere in disputes between employers and employed. Behring Seal Fishery Bill, through committee and read a third time. Debate on Land Bill, as amended, continued.
5. Debate on Irish Land Purchase Bill on Report resumed. Mr. Lea moved new clause to enable the Land Commissioners in addition to the Purchase Commissioners to administer Land Purchase Act, which was read a second time by 136 to 83. Debate adjourned.
  8. Resolution on which Government Education Bill will be based, moved by Sir W. Hart Dyke. Resolution agreed to after speeches by Mr. Mundella, Sir W. Harcourt, and Mr. Chamberlain, and reported to the House.
  9. In answer to questions, it was stated that Scotland's share of the two millions to be devoted to free education would be applied for a year to the relief of municipal rates, and that in Ireland it would be devoted to primary schools. Elementary Education (Fee Grant) Bill brought in by Sir W. Hart Dyke and read a first time. Debate on Report of Land Bill resumed.
  10. Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister Bill in Committee.
  11. Consideration of Report of Irish Land Bill resumed.
  12. Bill to facilitate reinstatement of evicted tenants in Ireland brought in by Mr. Parnell and read a first time. Report stage of Irish Land Purchase Bill concluded.
  15. Mr. Stanhope makes an authorised statement from the Prince of Wales with reference to his conduct in hushing up the Baccarat scandal. Motion for the third reading of the Irish Land Bill. Amendment by Mr. Labouchere that the Bill be read that day three months rejected by 225 to 96, and Bill read a third time without opposition.
  16. Debate on the Manipur disaster.
  17. Navy Estimates.
  18. Manchester Ship Canal Bill read a third time. Bill to amend the Coinage Act of 1870, brought in by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Bill to amend the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Act brought in by Mr. Chaplin, and read a first time. Debate on Mr. Sydney Buxton's motion to add a new clause to Factories and Workshops Bill to prohibit the employment after January 1st, 1893, of children in factories or workshops under eleven years of age. Mr. Buxton, Sir W. Houldsworth, Mr. Burt, Sir John Gorst, in favour of the clause, and the Home Secretary in opposition to it. On a division, second reading carried by 202 to 186. Clause read a second time.
  19. Home Secretary announces that the Government would accept the decision of the House on Mr. Buxton's Clause. Clause to prevent children under 14 being employed other than as half-timers rejected by 189 to 164. Clause to bring laundries within the scope of the Bill rejected. Bill read a third time.
  22. Debate on motion for the second reading of the Education Bill. Amendment by Mr. Bartley declining to accept a measure which threw the whole cost of elementary education on the general taxation of the country and also endangered the continuance of denominational schools.

REV. CANON LEGGE.

(From a photo by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.)

June 32. Debate on Mr. Bartley's Amendment to the Motion for second reading of Education Bill, resumed. Lord Cranborne, Sir L. Playfair, Mr. Bryce, Mr. Stanhope. Debate adjourned.

24. Debate on second reading of Education Bill resumed. Mr. Henegge, Sir A. Rollit, Sir W. Hart-Dyke, Mr. Mundella. Amendment rejected by 319 to 10, and Bill read a second time.

25. Army estimates.

26. London Public Health Bill as amended by Standing Committee under consideration. Bill read a third time.

29. Debate on Order for going into Committee on Education Bill. Mr. Fowler's instruction to Committee that local control should be introduced in district where no School Boards existed, rejected after speeches by Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Goschen by 267 to 166. Debate adjourned.

30. Debate on motion to go into Committee on Education Bill continued. Instruction moved by Mr. Summers that the educational standard be raised for partial and total exemption in schools receiving fee grants rejected by 186 to 133, House in Committee on the Bill. Amendment by Sir W. Hart Dyke introduced extending grant to children between three years and five. Amendment by Mr. Mundella abolishing limit of fourteen years. Mr. Goschen, Mr. Chamberlain. Proposal by Mr. Henegge to raise limit to fifteen agreed to. Progress reported.

SIR JOHN HAWKSHAW.

(From a photo by Messrs. Maull and Fox.)

BY-ELECTIONS.

June 1. Paisley:

W. Dunn (L) ... 4,145
Major R. W. McKerrel (C) ... 2,807

Lib. Majority 1,338

In 1885 the figures were: And in 1886:
(L) 3,360 (L) 3,057
(C) 2,526 (U L) 2,491

Lib. majority 864 Lib. majority 566

June 2. Derbyshire. (Western Division):

Victor Cavendish (U L) elected unopposed.

In 1885: In 1886:
(L) 5,020 The Lib. Unionist
(C) 4,138 was returned unopposed.

Lib. majority 882

June 3. London—City:

Sir Reginald Hanson (C) elected unopposed.

In 1885: In 1886:
(C) 12,287 Two Conservatives
(C) 8,802 were returned
(L) 5,817 unopposed.
(C) 5,563

OBITUARY.

May 25. Charles H. Fuller, Deputy Inspector-General of Hospitals and Fleets, R.N., 90.

29. James Crichton, Sheriff of the Lothians and Peebles, 67.

Earl of Clancarty

John Webster, ex-M.P. for Aberdeen, 79.

Richard Nugent, founder of the National Protestant Union, etc.

Dr. Fordyce Barker.

Duchess Wilhelmine Marie of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, 83.

Señor Dublan, Mexican Minister of Finance.

Hon. Sir A. A. Dorion, Quebec, 73.

31. W. W. Follett Syngue, ex-Consul General at Cuba, 65.

Cardinal Allmond, Bishop of Turin.

MME. BODICHON.

June 1. Dr. William E. Steavenson, of St. Bartholomew's, 41.

Professor Anto Springer, art historian, 66.

2. Admiral R.D. Aldrich, 82.

Ernst Wunnerburg, Waterloo veteran, 94.

Mrs. Booth, wife of the Sec. of the Baptist Union.

3. Colonel Sir Oliver St. John, 54.

Mrs. Horby, wife of the Provost of Eton College.

Dr. Benson J. Lossing, 78.

Judge Barron, Chairman of Monaghan Quarter Sessions, 86.

Frederic Love, homœopathic doctor.

MR. JAMES BEAL.

(From a photo by Messrs. Fradelle and Young.)

4. Lieut.-Col. J. S. G. Ryl-y, 83.

Dr. Frery, Republican Senator for Belfort, 45.

Lacroix St. Pierre, Chairman of the Messageries Maritimes, 63.

Leopold von Haasner, ex-Prime Minister of Austria, 73.

Rev. William James Kennedy, formerly Inspector of Schools, 77.

Sir John A. Macdonald, 76.

Frederick Calvert, Q.C., 84.

Charles K. Freshfield, ex-M.P. for Dover, 83.

General Sumpt, Governor of the Hôtel des Invalides, 74.

2. General S. R. Lowder, C.B., 79.

June 8. General Canavos del Castillo.

William T. S. Daniel, Q.C., 65.

Lieut.-Col. D'Arcy Hunt, survivor of the Balaclava charge, 64.

9. Sir Andrew Stuart, 79.

Lady Reed, 73.

General Sir Archibald Little, G.C.B., 80.

Father Curci, 80.

Lieut.-Col. James Reid, survivor of Waterloo campaign, 96.

10. Dr. Egan, R.C. Bishop of Waterford.

Marquis de Montaignac de Chauvance, ex-

11. Mr. Clark, ex-M.P. for County Derry, 82.

11. Charles Fisher, American actor.

Edmund Leathes, actor.

Sir Harford Jones-Brydges, 83.

Mdme. Bodichon, one of the founders of Girton College, etc., 64.

E. Chevasus, French Republican, 73.

James Beal, Nestor of municipal reform, 63.

12. Rev. T. B. Llewellyn Browné, 82.

Canon Perry.

13. Philip Jenkins, Professor of Naval Architecture and Marine Engineering at Glasgow.

Prof. Scanzoni, Gynecologist, 71.

14. Capt. Charles Le Strange, R.N., equerry to the Duke of Edinburgh, 44.

J. K. Emmett, actor.

15. Gen. R. Woolley, 73.

Capt. Wray G. Palliser, R.N.

Rev. Thos. Pearce, of Ely, 93.

16. Gregor Lechner, carver, and impersonator of Jesus in the Passion Play at Oberammergau.

Lieut.-Col. Sir Gustavus Hume.

The O'Gorman Mahon, M.P. for Carlow

University, 90.

Chas. Andrews, Q.O.

THE O'GORMAN MAHON.

(From a photo by Messrs. Russell and Sons.)

17. Miss F. M. Walford.

Adm. Thos. Fisher.

H. n. Payan Dawny, 76.

Wm. Byles, Yorkshire journalist.

18. Calmann Lévy, Paris publisher.

19. Lieut.-Col. B. P. Browne, 92.

Sir Prescott Hewett, Surgeon-in-Ordinary to the Prince of Wales, 79.

22. Major-Gen. E. M. Lawford, 64.

Earl of Clonmel, 62.

Dr. Harvey, of Iquique.

Mr. McDonald, ex-Senator for Indiana.

23. N. R. Pogson, C.I.E., Government Astro-nomer at Madras, 62.

Gen. Bronsart von Schellendorff, 58.

George Parr, cricketer.

24. Alex. Chas. Ewald, of the Record Office, 49.

W. E. Weber, Professor of Physical Science,

M. Burdo, Belgian explorer in Africa.

Alex. McKean, financier.

26. Henry Farmer, musician, 72.

Dean Madden, of Cork.

Richard Henry Major, writer on geographical subjects, etc.

27. Miss Anne Mozley, 81.

Rodol h Koppelin, professor of physics and natural history, 81.

28. Dr. J. Merrifield, formerly head-master of the Plymouth Navigation School.

THE CARICATURES OF THE MONTH.

THE caricatures of the month are, for the most part, caricatures of the Prince of Wales. They are, some of them, witty, some of them coarse, some of them brutally rude and unjust. But for all that they deserve attention. In olden times monarchs had their jesters, who were privileged to say with a laugh what the most powerful Minister dare not whisper below his breath. These caricaturists, whose handiwork we reproduce, are the licensed jesters of our time. Even the worst of them, with their irreverent pencils, illustrate better than any articles could do the kind of misconceptions that prevail concerning the Prince—misconceptions which, I hope, the Character Sketch may do something to dispel—but still misconceptions which must be recognised as existing before they can be dispelled. It is not well for princes, or for any other men, to live in a fool's paradise, without any knowledge of what the great, rude, outside world thinks of them and of their doings. One of the most valuable safeguards of the English monarchy is that the nation has ever felt its institutions were so excellent in themselves, and so firmly based upon the people's will, that they were likely to be strengthened rather than endangered by rough, unsparing criticism.

If it is unjust, the injustice works its own remedy. If any part of it is well founded, its publication is the first step to reform. In these caricatures the American cartoons are much the most offensive. The German is the wittiest. The English are, for the most part, much more restrained, but take them together they represent with fidelity what people have been saying all over the world about the baccarat scandal at Tranby Croft.

From Judge]

[June 17.

AN AMERICAN PICTURE OF H.R.H.

From U'k.]

A SUGGESTED COAT OF ARMS FOR PRINCE OF WALES.

From the Pall Mall Budget.]

[June 11, 1891.]

SIR EDWARD CLARKE'S TABLEAU.

From Punch

"L'ENFANT TERRIBLE."

Digitized by Google

From Fien. THE APOLOGY. [June 21, 1891.
Scene from "L'Enfant Prodigue," now performing at the Prince of Wales' own Theatre.

From the St. Stephen's Review. [June 20, 1891.
SARKEY GAMP (log.): "Lawk a mussy, Betay Frig, it do make my blood run cold to read of them aristocrats a-playin' cards—and for money, too!"

From the Sydney Bulletin. [May 16, 1891.
THE WOLF AT THE DOOR—A BRITISH MOTHER RESCUING HER OFFSPRING.

CUMMING DOWN.

From the Pall Mall Budget.]

[June 11, 1891.

THE PRINCE: "Ah! well, I must give up baccarat and take to cribbage with Mamma."

From the Pail Mall Budget.]

[June 18, 1891.

KING HENRY IV. ACT II. SCENE IV.

PRINCE HENRY (P. of W.).

POINS (Sir Francis Knollys).

"By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame,
So idly to profane the precious time;
Give me my sword and cloak: Falstaff, good night."

From the Australian Boomerang ]

Says Her Gracious to her graceless Son and Heir, "This is flat!
Just this once I'll help to make your banker square; Mind you that!
If you promise me as follows—
'To provide for 'Cuffs and Collars,'
And to plank none of the dollars
On baccarat."

Oh, Theosophy is looming
On its way,
And the Brotherhood is booming
Every day
With its wonders Oriental—
Psychic, hypnotic and mental,
Mystic things experimental—
So they say.

[May 16, 1891.

Holy Moses! says the Hebrew to the bear,
Have a care!
Your growling cheek's enough to make me swear,
I declare!
Asking me to lend you roubles,
Or to blow you golden bubbles,
While you cause the Jews such troubles
And despair!

From Ariel.]

[July 13, 1891.]

From Funny Folks.]

[June 13, 1891.]

A "COUNTER" IRRITATION.

"You are a naughty boy to go about playing cards with all and sundry. Deliver up every one of those nasty counters, and then sign this paper."

From Judge.]

INSIDE.

From La Silhouette.]

[June 28, 1891.]

THE IMPERIAL WIGGING.

THE PRINCE OF WALES: "Pooh, pooh! my nephew William, the Lucky Card does my business too well."

[June 17.]

WINDSOR CASTLE AS IT WILL BE WHEN ALBERT IS KING.

OUTSIDE.

Digitized by Google

From the Birmingham Dart.

[June 26, 1891]

THE PRINCE'S VISIT TO BIRMINGHAM.

THE MAYOR: "Whatever shall we do to amuse His Royal Highness?"
 MASTER PRITCHETT: "He won't want to play baccarat, I think.
 What do you say to sixpenny Nap?"

From the Pall Mall Budget.

[June 18, 1891.]

AFTER THE 'BUSMAN'S VICTORY.

"Who's that man, mother?"
 "Why, it's your father. Come home before you've gone to bed.
 Ain't it wonderful!"

From U.K.

[June 26, 1891.]

A GERMAN READING FROM SHAKESPEARE.

ULK (Falstaff) to the Prince of Wales: "Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch; this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest."—
 HENRY IV., 1st part, Act 2, Sc. 4.

From Funny Folks.

[June 20, 1891.]

'BUS HORSES AND 'BUS MEN—THE DIFFERENCE.

"Treat us half as well as the 'osses, and we'd be hange's; but, you see, over-workin' 'osses don't pay—others have to be bought."

From the Papagallo.

[June 13, 1891.]

QUEEN NATALIE OF SERVIA.

The butterfly seeks flowers, but only finds flames in which to singe its wings.

TRANBY CROFT, 1890 (AFTER BUNYAN).

"The Interpreter takes them apart again, and has them first into a room, where was a man that could look no way but downwards, with a muck rake in his hand. There stood also one over his head, with a celestial crown in her hand, and proffered him that crown for his muck rake; but the man did neither look up nor regard, but raked to himself the straws, the small sticks, and the dust of the floor."

"Then said Christiansa, O deliver me from this muck rake."

CHARACTER SKETCH: JULY.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

A Prayer for the Queen's Majesty.—O Lord our heavenly Father, high and mighty, King of kings, Lord of lords, the only Ruler of princes, who dost from Thy throne behold all the dwellers upon earth; Most heartily we beseech Thee with Thy favour to behold our most gracious Sovereign Lady, Queen VICTORIA; and so replenish her with the grace of the Holy Spirit, that she may always incline to Thy will, and walk in Thy way: Endue her plentifully with heavenly gifts; grant her in health and wealth long to live; strengthen her that she may vanquish and overcome all her enemies; and finally, after this life, she may attain everlasting joy and felicity; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for the Royal Family.—Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness, we humbly beseech thee to bless Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and all the Royal Family: Endue them with Thy holy Spirit; enrich them with Thy heavenly grace; prosper them with all happiness; and bring them to thine everlasting kingdom; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE Prince of Wales is now fifty years of age, and a grandfather. Since his birth, in all churches by law established, which comply with the plain ordering of the Book of Common Prayer, the prayers quoted above have been offered twice daily, morning and evening, for half a century. But as daily service is the exception rather than the rule, we may take it that the above prayers are only offered twice a week, instead of fourteen times, as by law enacted, in each of the Anglican churches throughout the Empire. As there are 28,000 clergy in England alone, there must be at least 20,000 churches at home and abroad using the Book of Common Prayer. The prayer for Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, must, therefore, in the last half century have been said aloud in the hearing of the worshippers at least 100,000 times since first the cannon thundered at the birth of the Heir-Apparent to the British throne. It is a moot question how many in a congregation actually unite in the prayers that are read by the minister. Perhaps we shall not overestimate the average if, out of a congregation of a hundred, we suppose that ten intelligently follow the service so far as to experience a real wish that the petition sounding in their ears should be granted. Allowing ten persons who really join, I do not say with passionate fervour, but with a conscious desire, more or less tepid, that their humble beseechings on behalf of the Prince may be heard at the Throne of Grace, we have one thousand millions of prayers offered up to God that he would endue the Prince of Wales with His Holy Spirit and enrich him with heavenly grace.

Eight hundred and eighty millions of prayers, and as answer thereto the Baccarat Scandal of Tranby Croft! As a prayer gauge on the principle suggested by Professor Tyndall, His Royal Highness, who in course of time may become Defensor Fidei, can hardly be said, as Heir-Apparent, to have contributed much to strengthen the faith of the modern world in the efficacy of prayer. Rightly or wrongly, if we may judge by the utterance of such grave and official organs of public opinion as the Times and the Standard, the net result attained so far has been so unsatisfactory as to amount to a dramatic fiasco, as if all the prayers of the Church for fifty years had been but as the whirling of prayer mills innumerable of pious Thibet.

With such a result before us, is it not time to ask ourselves seriously, and with due practical precision, whether, after all, the fault lies with the Prince or with Providence; whether, in fact, the fault does not lie mainly with ourselves? May we not, as a nation, largely be responsible for the unsatisfactory issue of our prayers? Have we not been imitating the lazy waggoner of Æsop, who, when his cart stuck in a mudhole, contented himself with bellowing to Hercules instead of clapping his own shoulder to the wheel—with this difference, that we ourselves have made the mudhole in which our princely chariot is sticking? This is the topic to which, in all seriousness, recent events call our attention with an impiousness that may not be gainsaid.

It is surely time, after fifty years, that we should give Hercules a fair chance. Even the most fervid Christian has come to recognise that if you allow a girl-child to be reared in a haunt of vice, and suckled on gin, you have no more right to expect a miracle to be wrought in response to your prayer that the girl might grow up a vestal virgin, than you have to expect Snowdon to be cast into St. George's Channel, let prayer be offered never so earnestly. Is it not just the same with the Prince? It is true that the Book of Common Prayer tells us that God is the only Ruler of princes; but it is quite possible for man so to mar His work that His ruling seems to go awry. If we cannot help, at least we might refrain from hindering.

A familiar story occurs to me in this connection. A revival service was once going on in a Methodist chapel, a drunken mob burst open the door and was pouring in, when they found their progress arrested by a stalwart convert, who, planting himself in the porch, drove the invaders back by the simple but effective process of knocking down like ninepins all who came within reach of his fists. The preacher, hearing the hubbub, hurried to the porch, and was greatly scandalised to find his convert wielding weapons of warfare which, though natural, were not less carnal. "Brother," said he hastily, "forbear! Is it not written, 'Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord.'" "Yes, yes," answered the convert impatiently, as he dealt another intruder one from the shoulder, which sent him reeling, "I know all that, but—don't you see—I'm helping the Lord?" The moral of the Tranby Croft scandal seems to be, that the time has fully come for some of that kind of helping to be done without delay.

I.—BACCARAT AND BETTING.

If the Prince of Wales had never done anything worse in his life than play at baccarat for stakes which, in proportion to his income, were no higher than the half-crowns staked at any round game, there would not be so much reason for wringing our hands over the absence of any apparent answer to the prayers of the Established Church. It is, of course, perfectly consistent for those who, like most of the Evangelicals, and Non-conformists of the Prince's age, have never staked to win or lose a pennypiece in their lives, to lift up hands of holy horror at the spectacle of the Prince amusing himself at baccarat. But the ostentatious and Pharaonic virtue of the majority of our newspapers savours too much of Monsieur Tartuffe with a dash of Chadband thrown in.

I rejoice at the protests that are rising, and that will continue to rise, against the gambling habit, which is one of the curses of our race. But if we are really in earnest about this matter, it is not with baccarat that we should begin. In England there are only two popular gaming halls—the turf and the Stock Exchange. To betting and speculation, baccarat bears the same relation that in the sphere of temperance Chartreuse bears to beer and gin. To extirpate the use of Chartreuse would not abate by one decimal the sum of England's intemperance, and to abolish baccarat and all gambling at cards would not by itself produce any appreciable effect on the serious gambling of our time.

The outcry against the Prince for playing at baccarat at Tranby Croft was natural enough in certain quarters, although, even there, it partook to some extent of exaggeration, considering the apparent indifference with which the Prince's devotion to the turf has been regarded all these years. But no one who studies the undercurrents of English life can have failed to notice that there has for some time been a rising tide of moral dissatisfaction with the extent which gambling has been spreading amongst us. This is best shown by the increasing strenuousness with which the clergy have spoken out against gambling, in Convocation, and out of it, and the zeal of the police in raiding gambling clubs and betting dens. Neither clergy nor police represent the section of the nation most zealous in moral questions. They are official, they dislike too much zeal, and they are too closely connected with the powers that be to bestir themselves too diligently in raising ethical difficulties of this kind. When the chairman of the watch committee rents the grand stand, and the patron of your living keeps a racing stud, there is, to put it mildly, not the same temptation to lift one's voice on high in testimony against betting and gambling that assails the Nonconformist minister, or the Methodist preacher, who believe that the turf is as the vestibule of hell, and the painted cards are the devil's prayer-book. But of late years police and parsons have been very busy about gambling. Convocation, both in York and in Canterbury, has been drawing up reports on the subject, declaring that war to the death must be waged with this moral pestilence, and demanding all manner of remedies, from a Royal Commission to an Act of Parliament. One reverend reformer was so far carried away by his pious zeal some time ago, as publicly to call upon the Prince of Wales to place himself at the head of a crusade against the plague of gambling! The evil had increased, was increasing, and must be abated. A bishop told a lamentable story of a child found crying in the street, because "I had twopence for father's beer, and I put it on a horse and lost it," and a horror-struck M.P. related with bated breath that even a clergyman had excused his overdrawn banking account because "a little speculation relieves the monotony of a country parsonage." Sir Richard Webster, the Attorney-General, lifted up his voice to protest against the national vice, and Nonconformists saw, with almost indignant surprise, that they were being outstripped by the clergy in the agitation against gambling. The police on their part had made raid after raid upon betting houses, crowding the cells with a miscellaneous multitude of gamblers. Magistrates declared that they were determined to put gambling down. "It is most lamentable," said Mr. Vaughan at Bow Street, "this betting; I regard it as a curse to the country, because I see how young men are lured until they fall into a state of misery and destitution." Sir John Bridge, senior metropolitan magistrate, declared "that the evil done by the keepers of gambling houses was something terrific. There was nothing to which dishonest men attributed their dishonesty so much as to gambling and racing."

The Judges on the Bench said the same thing even more strongly. Mr. Justice Manisty declared that he was perfectly appalled by the extent of gambling. He did not hesitate to say, from his experience as a judge, that "there was no greater evil in society, and none which caused more misery and ruin in families. The practice of gambling has been carried to a frightful extent." One bishop went so far as to suggest the advisability of every merchant, banker, or tradesman dismissing every betting man from his establishment. National conferences were suggested. An ex-Home Secretary asked Mr. Matthews if he was prepared to bring in a Bill to strengthen the law. Mr. Matthews said that the Government would bear the question in mind. The growth of the popular zeal against gambling was logical and consistent. It attacked equally lotteries in bazaars, pitch and toss in the streets, betting on the tape, baccarat, and speculation on the Stock Exchange. The late Baron Huddleston, speaking of the speculative transactions at "bucket shops," said "this vice is worse than gambling on the green cloth, or betting on horses." "While it is permitted," said Mr. Justice Manisty, "the notion of putting down gambling in certain cases is a complete farce."

Nothing can be more admirable than all this outburst of a healthy moral sentiment against gambling. It is a sincere and unmistakable evidence of a national conscience, and of the gradual formation of a standard of social morality immensely in advance of that which existed a few years ago. But it is easy to see, with the public opinion of the best part of the community in this healthy state of vigour, what a shock was occasioned by the spectacle of the Prince of Wales, the Heir to the Throne, sitting as banker at baccarat, and presiding night after night over a gaming table, which, if it had been set up in any public-house in the land would have rendered all those present, the Prince included, liable to be run in to the nearest police station.

In politics and in morals, as well as in war, everything depends upon the psychological moment. The baccarat scandal at Tranby Croft five or even three years ago would have excited comparatively little remark. Occurring when it did, it made a sensation that vibrated through the whole country, and provoked an outcry which was perfectly natural and for the most part perfectly justifiable.

But if there was one section of the community which should for very shame have kept silence, it was the press. Nothing recurs more constantly in all the speeches that have been delivered in the course of the agitation against gambling, than the declarations of all the authorities as to the great source and cause of the spreading evil. It has been recognised on all hands that it was the newspapers which pandered to the passion of the people for gambling, that it was the newspapers which constantly fanned the flame by the pains which they took to disseminate the "latest betting," and that it was the daily press of the land which contributed more than almost any other factor to inoculate the community with the mania for betting, against which the magistrates, judges, and the clergy were up in arms. Several years since I urged the desirability of making the publication of the odds a punishable offence, and although at that time mine was but the voice of one crying in the wilderness, it is possible that a majority in the next Parliament will be pledged to legislate in this sense. But notwithstanding all the protests of the reformers, the newspapers continued, and continue to this day to do all that journalism can to foster the national vice. Day after day, before the eyes of all their readers, were flourished forth, with every appetising detail, all the items of information that could tempt men to bet. Prophets were paid handsome salaries for the purpose of encouraging the credulous to put their money on horses warranted to win. "Straight tips," "finals," "latest from Tattersall's," and all the rest of it, appeared as punctually as the leading article, or the Parliamentary reports. Some newspapers, which had at first stood out against it, driven by the stress of competition, were compelled to give in. Editorial scruples were overridden by proprietorial necessities, and all the protests of all the clergy failed to diminish by a single paragraph the space devoted to betting news.

It might, then, have been fairly expected that these habitual and hardened offenders, each one of whom actively did more to encourage and universalise betting than all the bankers at baccarat that ever sat, might, from a mere sense of a common failing, have done their best to screen the Prince. He had but done for his own amusement in a private house what they were doing constantly in open day before all men for filthy lucre. Far from showing a generous sympathy for a brother gambler in difficulties, it was the press which took the lead in holding up the banker at Tranby Croft to public execration. With a few notable exceptions, the journalists gave cry after the Prince, like a pack of hounds when they strike the trail of a fox. An edifying spectacle indeed! From the extreme teetotal standpoint it is a sin to take a glass of beer, but it does not lie in the mouth of a gin-sodden drunkard to lecture a man who washes down his dinner with a pint of "bitter." It is well to be zealous against gambling, but it is well also to be consistent, and it is still better to be just. And much of the censure passed so freely upon the Prince was not only inconsistent with the constant daily practice of his critics—it was also cruelly unjust. By a curious perversity the Prince was severely censured for offences which he did not commit, while that which was deserving of all praise received no recognition. The Prince, for instance, is most frequently condemned for having forced an unwilling host to allow baccarat to be played under his roof. There is not a word of truth in this story. It rests entirely upon a mistake made by Mrs. Wilson, when in the flurry of cross-examination she omitted an adjective. Mr. Wilson never objected to baccarat being played at Tranby Croft. What he objected to was the playing at baccarat for high stakes. His wishes were respected. No high play was allowed. Yet, owing to that mistake, what eloquence has been wasted!

That is not the only point in which the Prince has been the victim of most unfortunate misconceptions. The ways of examining and of cross-examining counsel are a mystery to non-legal minds, and it is not at all surprising that the public should have put a false construction on the extraordinary laxity with which the Prince's evidence was taken. If it had not been for the two questions asked by a juror when the examination was over, the Prince would have left the witness-box without having said anything about the very points on which it was most important he should have given evidence. There was a third question, which most unfortunately for the Prince did not occur to the mind of the juror, but which it was most important the Prince should have been asked. That is the question whether it was he who had divulged the Tranby Croft secret. Every one knows that he has been saddled with that act of bad faith. Various detailed statements are current in society which would lead you to imagine that the breach of faith, instead of being committed in secret, had taken place in broad daylight, on the very housetop of the world in the presence of an army of reporters. Of all the stories most firmly accepted amongst us, is the tale that His Royal Highness told the fatal secret to a lady, who in turn told another lady, who, finding an opportunity of paying off old scores, smote the culprit in the presence of his friends with the cruel facts full in his face, and so forth and so forth. The only colour for this tale which the judicial proceedings supplied, was the fact that the Prince was not asked whether or not he had divulged the secret. As subsequent witnesses were asked that question, charitable gossip assumed that the silence of counsel in the Prince's case was arranged in order to spare the Heir-Apparent an additional humiliation. Considering the efforts made by the Solicitor-General to transfer the shame and disgrace attaching to his client to the shoulders of the Prince, this theory of prearranged silence is rather difficult of belief. But as a matter of fact I am in a position to state, on the very highest authority, that there is not a word of truth in the whole story from beginning to end. It was not the Prince who revealed the secret, and if it had been known that the other witnesses were to be asked that question, he would also have been afforded an opportunity of denying the imputation on oath. He was the first of the Tranby Croft party examined, and when he left the witness-box no hint had been given that this question was to be put to any witness. The moment the rest of the party were put in the box and examined on this point, the Prince saw the disadvantage in which he was placed, and appealed to his legal adviser to be allowed to re-enter the witness-box in order that he might have an opportunity of rebutting on oath an imputation which he felt all the more keenly because it was utterly groundless. In law courts, however, lawyers are supreme, even over the Heir to the Throne. The Prince's urgent application was overruled, and so the trial came to a close without any opportunity being afforded him of clearing up the suspicion which had gathered darkly over him on this particular point.

Such is the statement which I am authorised to make. The facts, of course, do not lie within my own knowledge; but I have received the above information from two sources which leave no doubt as to its accuracy.

The most heinous crime committed by the Prince, it is said, was his carrying counters about with him. It never seems to have occurred to these severe moralists that so far from this being a monstrous aggravation of the Prince's offence, it is quite the other way. What were these counters, stamped, as we have been told, by a friend with the Prince's crest? "Gambling tackle" is the usual reply, and their presence is regarded as in itself sufficient to convert the place where they were used into a gaming hell. But that simply is not true. A moment's reflection will suffice to show that so far from these counters making things worse, they distinctly minimised the evils of the gaming table. Counters are not necessary for playing baccarat. The counters really were nothing more or less than a kind of pasteboard currency, one counter standing for a pound, a different one for £5, and so forth. Now what is it that constitutes the fatal fascination of the tables at Monte Carlo? Is it not universally admitted that it is the glitter of the gold, or the massive silver "cart-wheels," to say nothing of the notes which, spread out before the eyes of the players, intoxicate them with a frenzy that lures even the most austere to try their luck? If play at Monte Carlo were conducted exclusively by counters, much of its dangerous seductiveness would disappear. Clearly, then, by bringing with him the plain, unromantic counter as a substitute for gold and notes, the Prince did what could be done to render the game with which he amused himself as innocent as possible for the inexperienced on-looker.

But the most scandalous injustice of all to which the Prince has been subjected has been in the abuse heaped upon him by the admirers of Sir W. Gordon-Cumming. Without attempting in any way to extenuate the Prince's offence in not reporting the offender to his commanding officer—an offence for which he has publicly apologised—is it not as clear as day that in refusing to shield his guilty friend, and in insisting that he should be publicly exposed if he did not place himself for ever out of the reach of similar temptation in the future, the Prince was really undertaking the unpleasant but necessary duty of an upright judge? In the society over which he presided on that occasion there is practically only one law. To cheat at cards is the only sin recognised as mortal. All manner of other sins and uncleanness are forgiven freely according to the peculiar ethics of Society, but cardsharpping—never! When the accusation was brought to the Prince, he found himself compelled to choose between the strait and narrow path of insisting upon the maintenance of the only ethical standard left, or to take the broad and easy road of allowing that last remnant of a sense of right and wrong doing to be trodden underfoot. The Prince, to do him justice, never seems to have hesitated. It may be that he imperfectly realised the risk of insisting that justice should be done though the heavens fell; but he saw his duty a dead sure thing, and, like Jim Bludso on the burning boat, he went for it there and then. Had he done as many others would have done under the circumstances—nay, as many others have done—hushed it up, Sir W. Gordon-Cumming would have been still free to practise his peculiar arts at the card tables of society, but His Royal Highness would have avoided an ugly scandal which has brought him no small annoyance. In a small matter he took the same stand against the offender against his social ethics as the Irish hierarchy took against Mr. Parnell, and as the Nonconformists of England have taken against Sir Charles Dilke. That assuredly ought to have been more generously recognised by the exponents of the moral sense of the community.

The fact is, of course, that ordinary folk are all at sea, because, for the most part, they do not understand, and therefore cannot appreciate, the immense distinction which Society makes between gambling fairly and gambling unfairly. "They are all gamblers alike," says the ordinary man, who never played at baccarat in his life; "perhaps one did cheat, but all gambling is more or less dishonest, and why make such a pother about Sir W. Gordon-Cumming's conduct?" Society will never understand that to at least thirty out of the thirty-nine millions in this country it is as absurd to condemn Sir W. Gordon-Cumming and to let his fellow gamblers off as it would seem to a vigilance committee in the far West to hang a thief who stole a horse and to acquit his mate who merely stole a mare.

Probably the majority of the Methodists in the country if polled to-morrow would decide that the man who kept the bank at baccarat was distinctly a worse criminal than the player who surreptitiously increased his stakes. In dealing with the ethics of the gamester these good people are out of their depths. It is as if they were discussing what happens in space of four dimensions. This is the real explanation of the Cumming cult, and, silly though it is, it is not at all difficult to understand.

We see just the same thing in the Forest of Dean, where good men in Church and in Dissent are supporting a perjurer of a much worse description than Cumming on much the same grounds. Their charity leads them to ignore the weight of evidence that convinced judge and jury, and their unacquaintance with the profligacy of the corrupt society in which he lived naturally predisposes them to doubt the antecedent possibility of acts which, to those who know the man, seem all but inevitable under the circumstances.

The other day a popular Wesleyan minister addressed a congregation in Leeds on the baccarat scandal. The newspaper report brings out very clearly the point of view of the non-cardplaying public. The minister, says the reporter, had the sympathy of his audience in his plain, outspoken address. "Waiving aside the comparatively immaterial point of Sir William Gordon-Cumming's innocence or guilt, he called attention to the evil example of the Heir-Apparent to the throne, but for whose action the game would never have been played. We are glad," said he, "to be loyal to the Throne and to the Prince, but we have a right to demand that the future King of England shall set an upright example, and obey those laws which he expects his subjects to respect. The working men were strongly urged to avoid those evils which seem to prevail so much amongst the upper classes, and the prayers of all were asked that the Queen might be comforted in this sore trouble."

That kind of sermon has been preached all over England, and, after all, it is natural enough. It is only those who are accustomed to go into the water who appreciate the significance of going out of your depth. Those who hold it wrong to bathe at all, and who have never wet their feet, can hardly discriminate between those who never venture out of their depths and those who do. That, they will say, is a mere detail—"comparatively immaterial." What business has any one to go into the water at all, especially one who, from his position, ought to set the example of remaining on dry land?

The extent to which the Prince is devoted to play has been much exaggerated. For ten years he has never touched a card in any London club. No one, of course, can pretend that the Prince has used his influence to abate the plague of gambling, but he has in his kind-hearted way often interfered in order to dissuade young friends of his from playing high. It will be replied, the Prince has often played high himself. But height is a question of degree. In the Nineteenth Century this month, Sir James Stephen, discussing the question of wherein lies the principal moral objection to gambling, states the views of Society accurately enough when he says:—

The principle appears to me to be perfectly simple, and not very difficult to apply. It is that gambling, like any other thing, is a question of degree. A bet for one man is unobjectionable if it is a matter of shillings, for another man it may be of no harm if it is a matter of pounds; but questions of degree of this sort must by the very nature of things be decided by the people whom they actually affect—a man must decide for himself how much he can afford to lose, and if he is wise he will not exceed his limit.

But, it will be said, the Prince has exceeded his limit. If it were not so we should not hear so much about his immense debts—debts which it is confidently declared were incurred at the gaming table. But what proof is there that the Prince has any debts, much less debts incurred at the gaming table? What proof is there that he has ever lost heavily at play? His friends assert that he quite as often wins, and at the end of the year his gains and losses are pretty evenly balanced.

And now that I have broached this subject of his alleged debts, I may as well go on to repeat the statements made to me on the highest authority. The matter, of course, is one upon which no outsider can possibly have personal knowledge. All that can be done in such a matter is to gather up the current rumours which find credence in the best-informed circles—such as that frequented by members of the Privy Council and the like—and to ask at headquarters what is the actual truth. You can be refused information, of course, or you can be deceived. But in the latter case the responsibility for the deception does not lie with you—it lies with those on whose authority you publish the assurances which you receive.

I am in a position to give the most absolute contradiction to the whole series of falsehoods which have been disseminated so diligently in certain quarters. So far from the Prince being waterlogged with debt and embarrassed by obligations to money-lenders, I am assured on the highest authority that the Prince has no debts worth speaking of, and that he could pay to-morrow every farthing which he owes. I am assured on the same authority, and with equally definite emphasis, that there is not a word of truth in the oft-repeated tale of the mortgage on Sandringham said to have been granted first to Mackenzie and then passed on through the Murriettas to Baron Hirsch. The whole story is a fabrication, and is on a par with similar tales which represent the Prince as being financed by Israelites of more or less dubious honesty.

Further, it follows as a necessary corollary from this that, as there are no debts, there has never been any application to Her Majesty to supply funds. No funds were needed, for the debts do not exist. Not only has the Queen never been appealed to, but no idea of making such an appeal has ever been entertained at Marlborough House. All the ingenious card-castle of caricature and of calumny raised upon this legend, of which I reproduce some Australian illustrations, falls to the ground. As for the report, half credited with a sort of shuddering horror, that it might be necessary to apply to Parliament for a grant to defray the Prince's debts, that also may be dismissed. No such grant has been thought of, for the simple fact that the Prince is not in debt.

Such an assurance, given to me for publication on the very highest authority, will be read throughout the Empire with pleasant surprise. It is hardly too much to say that almost every one believed exactly the opposite, nor would I have printed the above statement if I had not received it from one who was undoubtedly in a position to know, and who, as a gentleman and man of honour, is incapable of misleading the public.

II.—THE POLITICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE SCANDAL.

When I was down last month in Northampton I was astonished to find how vehemently the Prince's conduct was condemned by plain country folk, who probably do not know the difference between baccarat and bagatelle. "Look here," said a farmer to me over the supper-table, "I hope you will make it plain that such as he will never be allowed to sit on the throne. We don't want any gamblers to reign over us." The question of the guilt or innocence of Cumming was to them perfectly immaterial. If they did not exactly say that the infamy was in the gambling, not in the cheating, they stoutly maintained that it was more infamous for the Prince to gamble than for the baronet to cheat, and the opinion was freely expressed that if evenhanded justice were done without regard to persons, H.R.H. ought to be in the lock-up. The opinion of these straightforward quiet countryfolk. was echoed with more or less modification in quarters of unimpeachable Conservatism and loyalty. It was not merely the baccarat they said, but the kind of life of which this was an illustration. Rightly or wrongly, there is a suspicion in the minds of many simple folk that the private life of the Prince of Wales, especially in relation to the other sex, is not a subject to which any one can allude without casting a reflection upon His Royal Highness. It is in vain that you ask for tangible facts or verified instances to support the dark cloud which in their minds hovers round the Prince's head. They smile when you quote the Prince's declaration, made nearly thirty years ago, when he said, "I cannot divest my mind of the associations connected with my beloved and lamented father. His bright example cannot fail to stimulate my efforts to tread in his footsteps." "Perhaps so," they reply; "but if so, then the Prince has somehow missed his way." It is this uneasy sense of a background of a life of self-indulgence which has given force and volume to the outcry against baccarat. It is absurd to imagine that the average Englishman, who regards the turf as a national institution, and inscribes a Bible text over the Stock Exchange, would have made such a fuss over a mere game of cards. In most cases when his critics are pressed, they take refuge in the other deadly sins, which they seem to believe are or have been in high favour with the Prince and his entourage. But it is unfair to hang a man for swearing because you are morally convinced he spent his youth in horse-stealing; and there is very little logic in the condemnation heaped upon the Prince for playing baccarat, when the offences in the mind of his assailants are of an altogether different category. "It is all of a piece," they growl. "We have never had a chance before, and he shall have it hot now." This fashion of punishing the Pope for Cæsar's crimes, and of slanging the Prince of Wales after he has become a grandfather for the sins of his youth, is, however, most unjust and misleading. It is detrimental to the interests which it seeks to serve, for, even supposing all the current gossip to be correct, the exaggerated condemnation passed upon baccarat contrasts so much with the silence observed about the other things, as to imply that card-playing is far more heinous than other offences which, although not judicially proved, are nevertheless almost universally assumed to be true.

The comments of the Times and the Standard, among others, proved that sentiments usually denounced as Puritan and Methodist have gained a lodging in quarters hitherto unsuspected of such sympathies. As the Lord Chief Justice reminded the jury, we are no longer living in the days of Stuart and Tudor, and princes must expect that their actions will be criticised in a spirit very far removed indeed from the sycophantic loyalty that prevailed before the Commonwealth. But they might at least be consistent in their moralising. When the Gloucester Congregationalists took upon themselves to reprove the Prince for card-playing, without apparently caring to say one word in condemnation of the infinitely more flagitious conduct condoned at their very doors by some of their own body in the Forest of Dean, the cynic can hardly repress a smile. However much we may discount these deliverances, there is no doubt that the resolutions passed by representative religious associations are at least indicative of the set of certain steady currents of public opinion. Hence I reproduce here a resolution passed unanimously by the Methodist New Connexion Conference which met at Leeds last month:—

That the Conference feels bound to express its deep sorrow at the recent revelations in a court of law, of gambling and cheating in gambling, by those who occupy high positions in society, and from whom, therefore, a high example of virtue should proceed. But it is most concerned that His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales should have been so prominently and intimately involved in these disreputable proceedings. The Conference feels that such encouragement of vice and immorality by one from whom the nation has a right to expect impulse and encouragement to its higher life is fraught with great danger to its future well-being. It earnestly hopes that all such practices by one who aspires to be the King of a Christian people will henceforth cease. The Conference rejoices to observe, in the discussion arising out of these proceedings, that the moral sense of the country demands that those who occupy positions of trust and authority should be men whose character and conduct entitle them to public confidence.

Note in this resolution the curious phrase describing the Heir-Apparent as "one who aspires to be the King of a Christian people." In the minds of these good men—who represent congregations in all parts of the land—the Right of Succession has already become attenuated to a mere aspiration which may or may not be gratified.

The seriousness of all this, and its bearing upon the future of the Monarchy, cannot be disputed, but its full significance can only be adequately appreciated when we take into account the immense change that has come over the world since the Prince of Wales was born. In those days the English-speaking world was two-thirds Monarchical and one-third Republican. To-day it is two-thirds Republican and only one-third Monarchical. Every day the English-speaking folk, who are to all intents and purposes under Republican institutions, grow comparatively more numerous. There is no active Republican propaganda at home. Mr. Bradlaugh is dead. But the influence of the Republican communities beyond the sea has made itself felt even in the most courtly circles. Democracy is triumphant. France is a Republic in name as well as in fact. Spain was a Republic a short time ago, and may be a Republic to-morrow. The fall of the unobjectionable Dom Pedro cleared the last remnant of Monarchy out of the Western Hemisphere. All our great colonies, although content enough with a Sovereign like the Queen, regard monarchy and monarchs from a purely democratic standpoint. Hence the air, like that in a fiery mine, is charged with explosive gas, in which a single serious scandal—I do not mean such an affair as this game of cards—might act like the match which the miner strikes to light his pipe. And a Prince who has surrounded himself with boon companions more worthy of Prince Hal in his unregenerate days than of Prince Albert, and who amuses himself in a fashion that exposes him to risk of exposures before the Courts, acts exactly as such miners used to do until they were literally killed into observing the elementary precautions of safety. The difference between the England of to-day and the England of George IV., is the difference between a coal-pit free from gas and one which has been filled with carburetted hydrogen. In the former you can smoke in safety all day long, in the latter a single match may wreck the mine.

III.—THE SECRET SOURCE OF ALL THE MISCHIEF.

How comes it that, after fifty years of such a reign as that of Her Majesty, we should now be landed in this disagreeable difficulty? The cause, we are told, is not far to seek. It is to be found in the character of the Prince of Wales. But we must go beyond that. For character itself is largely influenced by, if it is not altogether the product of circumstances. What, then, are the circumstances which have contributed to fill Europe and America with contemptuous laughter at the spectacle presented by the Heir to the Throne? The truth I take it is this. The Prince of Wales occupies a position which exposes him to temptations against which human nature is not proof, because it deprives him of the balance weight which would have enabled him to stand firm.

Every human being has not only a natural inclination to sin, but also a very potent detestation of being bored. And by our Constitutional arrangements we have succeeded in placing the Prince in a position where he must of necessity be bored inexpressibly. All day and all year long he is doomed to an endless sentry-go of monotonous and soul-wearying ceremonial. His social duties have frequently been descanted upon, and they are onerous and exacting enough to occupy almost all his waking time. But after dinner he gets a respite, and then le Prince s'amuse—with such results as we see. No doubt a man of exceptionally strong character might create for himself out of all this Sahara of Royal functions an oasis of enjoyment, or a man of imbecile mind might come to regard the reception of addresses and the laying of foundation-stones as the chief end of man, and one for which it was worth while having an immortal soul incarnate in the flesh. But the Prince is neither a genius nor an imbecile, and so it comes to pass that he is simply bored, and has sought his distractions at the card-table, and in times past in those pleasures of the senses which are apt to transform themselves into Deadly Sins.

It is impossible to cast even a cursory glance at the Prince and his alleged shortcomings without being struck by the close analogy which exists between his position and its outcome, and the position of women in modern society and the results which necessarily follow therefrom. The Prince, like the fine lady, is set on a pedestal apart. The one has the surface homage of conventional loyalty, the other the equally beautiful mockery of customary chivalry. No one contradicts the Prince, no one contradicts a lady. Both Prince and fine lady are habitually treated as if such creatures were "much too good for human nature's daily food." They are pampered and amused, and taught from infancy to attach an altogether ridiculous degree of importance to outward appearance.

The parallel is so exact that there are whole passages of Mary Wollstonecraft's admirable treatise on the "Rights of Woman," which without the alteration of a syllable might be reprinted as explaining how it is that the prayers of the Church have never been answered in the case of the Prince of Wales. Women, like the Prince, suffer from the mock homage with which they are surrounded; they are sacrificed to the dominance of man, as the Prince of Wales has been sacrificed to the Constitutional machine. Deprived of all direct share in the responsibilities of government, never consulted as intelligent beings about the solution of the problems of State, shut up to the mere drudgery or the frivolity of life, their character deteriorates. We have mended matters to some small extent in the case of women; we have left it as bad as ever it was, or worse, in the case of the Heir-Apparent. And as we have sown, so have we reaped. If we really wish to improve things, we must change all that and that right speedily. The Prince is frequently contrasted, very much to his disadvantage, with his father. But the Prince Consort was king in all but in name. He was constantly saddled with the responsible duty of advising his wife in all the gravest affairs of State. He was "in the swim" and behind the scenes in everything. If the Prince of Wales had been saddled with his father's duties he might have developed somewhat more of his father's virtues. Instead of doing this, we did exactly the reverse. His mother went into retirement as of the mausoleum, and he, when in the full vigour of his youth, was called upon to fill the duties of leader of English society. In a democratic or constitutional state, politics form the preoccupation of all serious men who find themselves sufficiently near to the centre of things to acquire knowledge at first hand of the problems of State. But from all political controversy the Prince was fenced off by an impassable wall. The Queen and her Ministers alike impressed upon him that there is no place for the Heir-Apparent in politics. His own taste did not lie that way, otherwise no Constitutional fiction would have prevented the son and heir from being the constant adviser and confidential secretary, as it were, of his widowed mother, the Sovereign Lady of the Realm. But we have no right to expect from those born in the purple the faculty of vigorous initiative. Princes, like most men, take the line of least resistance. Just as no Society lady a few years ago would have dreamt of taking politics seriously when the world of fashion, of intrigue, and of amusement lay at her feet; so the Prince, finding that he could not succeed his father as his mother's right-hand man, without an effort that was uncongenial to him, suffered himself to be carried off into the primrose path of dalliance by the fast companions of his set. All that followed came as a natural result. He became, he was doomed to become, a mere social ornament, surrounded by any number of social parasites.

All that the world had to give of pomp and pleasure was his without an effort. If he had possessed the wishing cap of fairy tale, he could not have had the world and all the things that are therein more absolutely at his disposal. His whim, his caprice, was law. Within the velvety paddock set apart for the Heir-Apparent his will was supreme. But struggle was denied him. The Governor of Holloway Gaol told me that he deplored long sentences on account of the benumbing effect they had upon the mind of the prisoner. The convict has no daily battle to fight. He has his appointed tale of oakum to pick; but his bread is given him, his water is sure. If he needs anything, he touches a bell, and a turnkey supplies his want. No forethought is needed; an outside agency has superseded the struggle for existence by a turnkey providence, and the result is the man becomes month by month less of a man and more of a sloth. His mental faculties become sluggish; his horizon gradually contracts, and he shrinks into a mere digestive apparatus and human automaton. We can see the same process producing the same results in the more splendid cells of Sandringham and of Marlborough House. When to wish is to have, there is no incentive for exertion; self-denial seems ridiculous; self-indulgence becomes the only law of life. Royalty has many advantages, but it is a hothouse at the best. Its scions never enjoy the bracing blast of the fierce north-easter. Our princes are never put to school under the stern preceptors which discipline other men. The marvel is, not that the Prince of Wales should have disappointed many hopes, but that he should have preserved so many of the ordinary virtues of humanity, and should retain unimpaired to this day so high a sense of his obligations within a certain limited sphere.

From 1865 to 1871 the Prince, "with youth at the prow and pleasure at the helm," abandoned himself to the full enjoyment of the life of the senses. Every door stood open before him save that which led to the Council Chamber. His boon companions hurried him from room to room of the Palace of Lucifera, in the "Faerie Queen," where Gluttony was Steward, and Sloth the Chamberlain who called to rest. From time to time faint rumours of the kind of life which the Prince led reached the outer world, but they were speedily hushed to silence. The Mordaunt Divorce Case led for the first time to distinct accusations, which were rebutted in the witness-box to the satisfaction of the Court. People hearing of the Prince's wild oats, remembered George the Fourth; others, more charitable, referred to Shakespeare's Prince Hal, and hoped that after a time he would slough off this foul coil.

Even the austere Puritan remembered the temptations which assailed the Heir-Apparent, and reflected that it was perhaps too much to expect from the nephew of George the Fourth the virtues of St. Anthony. But not all their charity could blind them to the fact that the Prince's set were re-establishing, under the very shadow of the stainless throne of his widowed mother, a princely court which bore a distant likeness to that of the Tuileries under the Second Empire.

Then, as it seemed to many of these dissatisfied moralists, by the interposition of a merciful Providence, the Prince was prostrated by fever, and for long lay battling with death. In the north of England, where I then lived, the feeling with which his fight for life was regarded differed widely from that which found expression in the press. Broadly speaking, the stalwarts of the North in those days only wished him to recover if they could be certain he would leave the sick-room an altered man. I well remember a leading Radical in county Durham coming into the office of the Northern Echo one of the nights when the malady was at its worst, and arguing that the only proper and fitting leading article to publish on receipt of the telegram of his death was the single line, "De mortuis nil nisi bonum," and then to fill up the rest of the column with significant asterisks. When he began to recover there were many expressions of opinion that England might find herself "cursed by the burden of a granted prayer." The charitable hoped for the best; and when the Prince drove through London to take part in the National Thanksgiving Service in St. Paul's, every one thought, or at least said, that the Prince would now turn over a new leaf, and that, brought back from the gates of death, he would prove to be more like Albert the Prince Consort, than Albert Edward before his illness.

That is twenty years since, and there is no doubt that the Prince has profited to some extent by the lessons of that crisis in his history. That he has not profited much more was due to the fatal circle in which he was bound. It was from his recovery that he began to wish to take more part in public life. That aspiration, if it had been welcomed by the Queen and her Ministers in the spirit that would not quench the smoking flax nor break the bruised reed, might possibly ere this have redeemed the Prince. But the force of old habits, the attraction of old associates, proved too strong. No new sphere of action was opened to him; but instead thereof, the mill-horse round of ceremonial grew year by year more exacting. From time to time the Prince struggled against the soul-deadening routine of his Royal existence, but whenever he ventured to make a way for himself he was politely but firmly thrust back. The visit to India was one welcome break in the dreary round, and his appointment as one of the Royal Commissioners on the Housing of the Poor was another. How on earth Her Majesty's Ministers ever mustered up courage sufficient to permit the Heir-Apparent to touch, be it only with so much as one of his finger tips, the responsible duties and burdens of citizenship, remains to this day a mystery. Mr. Gladstone was then Prime Minister, which may account for it, and it deserves to be noted as a welcome and bold innovation, which, if it had been followed up, might have redeemed everything. Unfortunately, it was not followed up. The Prince attended all the sittings, went slumming in the East End, invited the Commissioners to Sandringham, and, in short, did his first maiden Commission excellently well. But never again was he permitted to share in anything serious.

Meanwhile all the sentry-go was resumed, and made more onerous than ever. Life became more and more an unceasing round of appointments, interviews, foundation-stone laying, exhibition opening, and the like. The Prince, it is universally admitted, performs all his functional duties with precision, punctuality, and courtesy. He attends, for instance, with the utmost regularity the meetings of the Council of the Royal Agricultural Society, and contrives never to look bored for an hour on end. Besides his Royal official duties, he has endless business to transact in connection with his estates.

It would be a mistake to under-estimate the importance of the work which the Prince performs merely from a ceremonial point of view. After all, ceremonial counts for a good deal in life, and it is an excellent thing to have our ceremonial functions discharged with almost ideal perfection. Together with a great deal of mere sentry-go there is also much of genuine interest. The Prince has seen nearly everything that is best worth seeing in the United Kingdom. He visits one great town after another, and he rightly accepts invitations from hosts, even although, like the Wilsons, they are not of blue blood, and have no claim to have come over with the Conqueror. Of all the unreal snobbery that disgraced the press during the recent outcry against the Prince, the most utterly hollow was that which made it an offence in the Heir to the Throne to visit the country seat of a plebeian. It is absurd to pretend that the Prince's labours are herculean, but on the other hand, the diary of his day's work is sufficient to prove how idle is the popular impression that the Prince of Wales spends all his nights at cards and his days on the race-course. He has an immense deal of worrying monotonous work to do, and one of the most curious reasons alleged in defence of his after-dinner card-playing is that he is so utterly worn out by the arduous drudgery of his day, nothing but the stimulus of the gaming-table would suffice to keep him awake!

There is no doubt some force in the excuse. The overdriven labourer or worried wife, who seeks distraction in the ale-house, is acting upon the same principle as that which drives the Prince to baccarat, and occasionally to the dissipation of Paris. He cannot get "thrills" out of his work, and as he has no simpler means of getting "thrills" easier than at cards or on the turf, it is there where he is to be found. There is no serious sustaining purpose in his life to give dignity to his thought and occupation for his leisure. What wonder if in his case, as in so many others, "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Far more people take to vice as a means of finding relief from ennui than from any overmastering passion. Distraction is sought for as hid treasures, and almost all that a man has he will give to escape from boredom.

IV.—IS THERE A REMEDY?

This state of things is very serious, but fortunately it is not without a remedy. Everything here again depends upon the character of the Prince. It may be that the fatty degeneration of the moral sense which often sets in after prolonged self-indulgence may have made so much progress that a change for the better is impossible. If so, no human power can save the Prince from the abyss, and he may count himself fortunate if a timely recognition of his own impossibility may save his country from constitutional convulsion.

There is no doubt that if one-half, or even one-twentieth part, of the statements constantly repeated about the Prince and his entourage were ever to be publicly proved in the Courts, as it might be any day by the merets accident if the stories are true, England would find itself confronted by a similar dilemma to that which confronted Ireland after the O'Shea Divorce Case. To save Home Rule Ireland sacrificed Mr. Parnell, and to save the Monarchy England would have to accept the abdication of Albert Edward. The materials for such a scandal, however, may not exist, and even if they do, the peril may easily be averted if the Prince of Wales takes to heart his second warning. He had his first twenty years ago; he has his second to-day. If it is neglected, he will probably discover that the third will precede its fulfilment as the lightning flash precedes the thunder. This is no doubt plain-speaking, but who that read the papers in the month of June can doubt that in such plain-speaking there is the truest loyalty?

Those who know the Prince of Wales intimately assure me that, notwithstanding all the mistakes—which outsiders would call by a harsher name—of his past life, he is capable of rising from the ashes of his dead past to something more worthy of the nation of which he will, in the ordinary course, one day be the crowned head. If so, there are none who will more sincerely rejoice than those who have been foremost in denouncing the scandal of Tranby Croft. That in itself, it cannot be too often repeated, would never have been more than a nine days' wonder if it were not for the universal impression that the incident was but a sample of the kind of life the Prince was living. It was but the peak of the iceberg that alone showed above water and testified to the huge mass below. What that impression is finds far more force and outspoken expression in the cartoons of American caricaturists, which are reproduced elsewhere, than in any of the printed comments of our own press. But of the English-speaking family the American snow form the largest section, and there is not an Englishman or Englishwoman who will not blush at the thought that a Sovereign of ours should ever be represented in this fashion in the press of our transatlantic kinsmen.

There is one misconception that is alluded to in one of the American cartoons reproduced elsewhere which has absolutely no foundation in fact. The assertion that the Prince is given to indulgence in intoxicants is a simple calumny. There was a time—many, many years ago—when Lord Hastings and others of the same class surrounded the Prince, when there was more champagne drunk at dinner than even the Church of England Temperance Society would altogether approve. But all that has long since passed away, and temperance in the use of alcohol is one of the moral reforms which has penetrated into the highest society—in some degree, no doubt, owing to the example of the Prince. It is not fashionable to drink much now. There is nothing like so much drunk-to-dry as there was before the Prince's illness. The happy results that have followed the change in the Prince's habits in this respect justifies a confident hope that in other matters also, if he sets the fashion, he may effect as salutary a change.

The fact is that the old conception of the constitutional monarch, which made him, as Napoleon said, a fatted hog, is breaking down—has, indeed, already broken down. At present the strongest influence which tells in this direction is not republican, but monarchical. The German Emperors have revived in the popular mind the almost extinct conception of real kingship. The average Englishman sees and understands the republican system, which he establishes everywhere beyond the seas where he founds a colony or a state, and he is now beginning to see and understand the monarchical system under which a young and energetic Emperor rules as well as reigns, not only by virtue of his descent, but because he is the hardest working and nimblest-witted of all the Germans. We have enjoyed for more than fifty years a Crowned Republic, under which there is united the freedom of the republican system with the order, the decorum, and the stately life of an ancient monarchy. The years will bring us no second Victoria; but Her Majesty has accustomed her subjects to an ideal which harmonises ill with the disrepute that gathers round the revellers at Tranby Croft and their princely chief. The Prince himself, in a dim, half-conscious fashion, recognises this truth and aspires after something better. But if he is to have a chance he must be given something better to do than merely to lay foundation-stones and maintain the reputation of being the best-dressed man in London. In other words, it is with the Prince as with the sex whose political lot he shares. He must be emancipated, he must be enfranchised, he must be weaned from frivolity by being allowed to share responsibility.

Of course I assume, as I have a right to do—the Prince being now fifty and a grandfather—that the nation can count with some certainty upon an entire and final abandonment of all those failings which have left so unpleasant a memory in the public mind. While I admit without reserve that if the assertions so constantly repeated in society as to the morals of the Prince and his entourage could be proved in open court, the monarchy could only be saved by treating the Prince like Jonah, it must equally be borne in mind that nothing has ever yet been proved in court that justifies these accusations; that those who know him well declare that nothing of the kind could be proved; and that the Prince, equally with the meanest of his future subjects, is entitled to be regarded as innocent until his guilt has been judicially established. It has never been so established in the past, it may never be so established in the future. But as there is never any smoke without fire somewhere, and there is now established, on incontrovertible evidence, the devotion of the Prince to gaming, we are justified in saying that if the danger ahead is to be averted, there will have to be a radical change at headquarters.

It has been said half jestingly by some of his apologists, that it is a mistake to be too hard upon the Prince for gambling. Everything is comparative in this world, and although baccarat may not be a proof of virtue in itself, if it has been used to drive out worse things it may be regarded as the ally and not the enemy of a virtue struggling into existence. It may be so; but if so, then we may hope that the time has come for the Prince to take a second step on the upward road. And it is the duty of the Nation to make this second step as easy as possible.

But how can this be done? It is not difficult if the Prince is really going to turn over a new leaf, and really set to work to make up for lost time. It is perilous in the extreme if he is not going to do these things. For to bring him more to the front, and give him more responsible functions, if his set is to continue to be the centre of moral contagion that it used to be, would be the short cut to the Republic. If the Nation gives the Prince a new chance, it is a case of doubles or quits. It is to be a fresh chance and a new place to do good; it is not to be an extension of the area of demoralisation. If the Prince is so much wedded to his baccarat and his boon companions—even minus Sir W. Gordon-Cumming—that he cannot support existence without them, then by all that is sensible let him stay where he is and as he is, and do not let us raise him any higher in the sight of all men; for the higher the pinnacle the more conspicuous the scandal, and the more disastrous the fall. Granting, however, as we do and must, that our elderly Prince Hal is going to cut his Falstaff, and Poina, and Bardolph, and other companions of the green-room and the green table, it will not be difficult to suggest ways and means by which the Prince might be afforded a healthy interest in public affairs, and the Empire benefited by the utilisation of what is at present a wasted force.

V.—HOW IT COULD BE DONE.

The Prince remarked the other day to a friend of his, somewhat pensively, upon the difference between his nephew, William of Germany, and himself. "Look at my nephew," he said. "He is but a youth, but he is the centre of everything. He orders everything, directs everything, is everything, whereas I am not allowed to do anything at all." That expression of His Royal Highness's justifies a hope that there is in him sufficient aspiration after higher things to make it worth while to endeavour to utilise the Heir-Apparent in the service of the Empire.

In the French and American Republics cool-headed observers as far apart as Paris and New York, have no hesitation in laying their finger upon the folly of our English system of spoiling the Prince of Wales. A writer in Figaro says:—

The English have no right to get indignant with their Heir-Apparent; but it appears to me that they would do well on this occasion to make some slight reforms themselves. If they want princes to be prepared to act as kings, they must not keep them entirely out of the domain of politics. If they want the princes solely as ornaments, they ought to make them a suitable allowance. If they don't want princes at all, let them say so. Meantime, they have no right to flagellate Queen Victoria's son with the maxim, however just it may be, that a prince has higher duties to fulfil than an ordinary individual. Prince! he is so little of a prince, the Prince of Wales! *

Almost in the same strain, the Independent of New York says:—

The baccarat case has moved more loyal Britons to ask, than ever asked the question before, what possible excuse there can be for keeping up such a prolonged, expensive, and dangerous sham as an idle Heir-Apparent with no duties, no responsibilities, and nothing in the world to do. Frederick of Germany, while he was Crown Prince, was kept full of care and responsibility which led straight on to the supreme duties of the head of the State. In England the actual Royal responsibilities of the Sovereign are not great, and those of the Heir-Apparent are still less. The Prince of Wales is past fifty, and has not yet had responsibility enough to have ceased to be frivolous. The whole system is bad.*

The whole system is bad indeed, and therefore the whole system must be changed. But how? That is the question to which I will attempt to suggest an answer.

Let it be admitted, as a matter beyond all controversy, that whatever is found for the Prince to do, must be outside the pale of party politics. That limitation, which at one time would have practically sealed the whole field of interest against the entrance of the Heir-Apparent, is now a matter of little importance. Party politics to-day consist almost exclusively of Home Rule and its related questions. Exclude Home Rule, and there is hardly the difference of tweedledum and tweedledee between the two parties. The Prince of Wales can therefore be provided with an ample field in which to exert himself in the service of the Empire over which he will one day reign.

* Quoted in the Pall Mall Gazette, June 25, 1891.

It is an open secret that the Prince of Wales was very anxious to serve on the Labour Commission. He had served on the Commission on the Housing of the Poor, and he saw no reason why he should not be a member of the Commission which owed its existence to the initiative of Sir John Gorst. But for reasons of State, the Ministers of the Crown snubbed the Prince and excluded him in the same arbitrary fashion as they excluded women from the list of their Commissioners. It is easy to see many good reasons why a prudent Prime Minister might deem it undesirable to sandwich the Prince between Mr. Livesey and Tom Mann. But it is equally easy to see that if the Prince had occupied a seat on the Commission it would have brought him into close contact with the stern realities of existence among the poor, and would have given him opportunities of which he would have been able to avail himself to use his undoubted abilities in the service of the nation.

I say undoubted abilities, not because I believe the Prince to be a genius, but because he has partly inherited and partly acquired qualities that are quite invaluable in such inquiries as those of a Royal Commission. He has an unfailing courtesy, an unwearying patience, a marvellous memory, and a kindliness and bonhomie which are rare among Royal Commissioners. He has a genuine sympathy with the people. There are in him all the elements of a democratic Prince. His presence on the Commission would have been an education for himself in practical sociology, and for both employers and employed in the finer qualities of pleasant social intercourse between man and man. The fact that he was a Commissioner would have added to the prestige of the Commission, and when it came to summing up, his influence would have been weighty in favour of unanimity and practical good sense.

All this must be admitted by every one who gives the subject a moment's reflection, but it is possible that the practical danger of bringing the Heir-Apparent into the arena of controversial sociology may justify Lord Salisbury in vetoing the Prince's wish. Nevertheless, Her Majesty's Ministers must recognise that as you cannot have an omelette without breaking of eggs, so it is impossible to utilise the Prince without running some risk. The risk does not lie on one side only. The risk of leaving the Prince to find the only zest of life in the card-table, far outweighs the worst perils that lurked in his nomination to the Royal Commission.

That mistake, however, has been made, and it is no use crying over spilt milk. There are two fields of activity which naturally suggest themselves as offering excellent opportunities for employing the Prince in a way that would be at once interesting to him and profitable to the nation. One is that of the Colonies, the other that of the amelioration of the Social Condition of the People. Both are subjects in which the Prince is interested, and both stand very urgently in need of careful and systematic handling.

I will take the question of the Colonies first. When, last month, two deputations waited upon Lord Salisbury to urge upon him the importance of taking steps to draw more closely together the world-scattered communities of English-speaking men, the Prime Minister said frankly that no question could exceed this in importance, for it involved the future of the British Empire. He said, further, that the time had fully come for getting out of the sphere of mere aspiration, and he invoked the strongest brains to examine the whole subject with the utmost care, with a view to the preparation of some practical scheme which could be submitted to a Conference of all our Colonies. There Lord Salisbury left it, but there the Prime Minister of the Crown ought not to leave it. A question which has in it the vast destinies of the future of the British Empire cannot, and ought not, to be left to be battledored and shuttlecocked between Ministers and Federation Leagues. If Lord Salisbury meant what he said, why should not the Government appoint a small but strong Commission which, like Lord Carnarvon's Imperial Defence Commission, would sit in private for the consideration of the above question? Of that Commission the Prince of Wales would make an admirable President. Such a Commission would take evidence from all the representative colonists, would summon before it all the most experienced of Colonial governors, and carefully examine into and report upon all the various suggestions which have been thrown out from time to time as to the best means of bringing together more closely the mother country and her Imperial progeny beyond the sea. As President of such a Commission the Prince would have unrivalled opportunities, which he now very much lacks, of getting into direct personal touch with representatives of the Colonies. Marlborough House, and Sandringham, in this way, might become as important centres for uniting the Colonies to the Mother Country, as Westminster, and the Law Courts. At present Colonials are snubbed at the Colonial Office, and left neglected by Royalty. So little thought is bestowed on those upon whom the future of the Empire depends, that even in such a simple and obvious thing as the issuing of invitations to the opening of the Naval Exhibition, the Colonial Agent-Generals were not invited to attend. The Prince believes in the Colonies. He is zealous for the Imperial Institute. He sounded the right note when he said, some years ago, that we should aim at making British subjects in Canada or Australia feel as much citizens of the Empire as if they lived in Kent or Sussex. Why not, then, place him at the head of a strong select private Commission to devise ways and means for bringing this about?

That would be very well for a beginning. But the Prince could very well do other work besides this Colonial business. The Labour Commission, dealing with questions at issue between employers and employed, still leaves a great field unoccupied. What all social reformers everywhere are crying out for is the elaboration of what may be termed a normal standard of the necessities of civilisation. This is a matter that can best be drawn up by a Royal Commission, on which the Prince might well be invited to serve. As the Prince said the other day, "The time has come when class can no longer stand aloof from class, and that man does his duty best who works most earnestly in bridging over the gulf between different classes which it is the tendency of increased wealth and increased civilisation to widen." On such a Commission he would be able to give practical effect to this conception of civic duty. The Commission should take the life of man from the cradle to the grave, from daybreak to sunset, from Sunday to Saturday, and ask what society, whether acting through the State, through philanthropic associations, or through commercial agencies, has done, and is doing, to render the life of the common man healthy, comfortable, and dignified. After such a Commission has collected evidence as to what is the best of everything yet devised by the inventive and constructive genius of mankind, it would find it an easy task to draw up a normal standard for, say, every aggregate of 10,000 souls. That standard once set up would tend by the mere fact of its existence to bring all communities up to its level. It would supply a handy test by which every one who wished to improve the conditions of life in his own neighbourhood would be able to compare what is with what might be, and at the same time it would furnish a guide to the best information as to how and at what cost of money and labour the improvement could be effected. Take, for instance, to name only two topics out of a thousand, the two questions of the preservation of open spaces in the midst of crowded populations, and the related question of providing cheap transit from crowded centres into the suburbs. Such a Commission would ascertain what minimum of open space the best sanitary and municipal authorities considered as indispensable for the healthy life of an urban community, and would set forth the legal and local measures found most efficacious for securing the maintenance of that minimum at the least possible cost to the country. In like manner the question of transit would be treated in the same exhaustive fashion, so that every one who wished to know how cheaply and quickly it had been found possible to convey workmen from the heart of great cities to the open country would be able to turn to a certain page in the report and ascertain in a moment exactly the best that had yet been attained and the cost of attaining it. Communities are trying the same experiments all over the world, repeating needlessly the same blunders, traversing the same blind alleys and beginning all over again. A Royal Commission to inquire into, and report upon, the best means of compiling and keeping up to date a universal register of the best results attained by the human race in supplying its wants would be one of the most useful yet suggested. It would supply an endless field for inquiry. It would bring the most interesting people in the world to London, and would enable the Prince to make himself the heart and soul of the whole of the forward social movements of the Empire.

There could be no personal objection taken to this on the score of the risk of breaking constitutional crockery or of dragging the Prince into the arena of party strife. It is good work that wants doing. It is work in which Prince Albert would have revelled. It presents endless variety, and therefore is of inexhaustible interest. Why can it not be adopted?

VI — TO SANDRINGHAM MARLBOROUGH HOUSE.

The notion that the Prince of Wales might be a better and a more useful man, if he had a better chance of doing more useful work, may be laughed at as an idle dream. Such a supposition, however, carries with it no antecedent improbability, and, apart from the strength of the general argument, that what a man is depends very much upon what you give him to do, there is one fact which strongly supports the theory. The Prince of Wales at Sandringham is a different man to the Prince of Wales at Marlborough House. In his country place in the bosom of his family, surrounded by those to whom he stands in neighbourly relation, over whom he has the responsibility of his position, his life is altogether different from that which he leads in town. At Sandringham he is freer, and at the same time more conscious of responsibility; therefore he is at once less frivolous and more domesticated.

As a landlord, those who have visited Sandringham are loud in his praise. The cottages on his estate excited the admiring remark of the most radical of the Royal Commissioners on the Housing of the Poor when they visited the Prince, and there is a general concurrence of opinion that as a landlord, as an agriculturist, and as a country gentleman, the Prince sets an example which might be followed with advantage throughout the country. Temperance reformers rejoice that he permits no public-house on his estate, while reasonable men reflect with satisfaction that he has provided an admirable substitute for the village tavern in the Sandringham Club.

What a blessing it would be if we could but Sandringhamise Marlborough House, and establish in St. James's Park something of the sense of the obligations of responsibility and of the conscious intimate relationship to the poor which exist on the Norfolk estate! It is an old saying that "God made the country but man made the town," and it would be as the breath of heaven if the air of the Sandringham home could be brought to Marlborough House. The popular idea of the Prince as a man of pleasure has obscured the less generally known side of his character which is revealed when he is in the family circle. His worst enemies will admit that the Prince's greatest failings arise from too great kindness of heart. However far short of an ideal standard he may fall in some respects, he is in other matters quite a devoted family man. His brothers and sisters are most affectionately attached to him. His tenderness to his wife during her illness, his constant attention to her wants, the pains which he takes to keep her informed of all that is likely to amuse her, and the interest which he always takes in the welfare of the children—these are all strangely at variance with the popular conception which has gone abroad. The Prince and Princess have more tastes in common than most people imagine, and no wife could be more indignant at the injustice with which her husband has been assailed the last few weeks than the Princess of Wales. Certainly those good people greatly err if they think that in running down the Prince they are in any way avenging the wrongs of the Princess. She is somewhat like her sister, the Tzarina. There is not in her the stuff of an Elizabeth or a Victoria. But perhaps on that very account they live on much more harmonious and affectionate terms than they might have done had she been otherwise.

The Prince, not less than other men—perhaps more than other men—has a claim to a little charity which cannot show itself more profitably than in the manifestation of a very healthy scepticism concerning nine-tenths of the scandals current in Society. The mistakes, the follies, and the sins of his earlier life form a dark background which to some affords

LEADING ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

THE UNION OF THE AUSTRALIAS.

BY SIR HENRY PARKES.

In the Contemporary Review for July Sir Henry Parkes is awarded the post of honour with a short article, in which he gossips pleasantly concerning the Australian peoples of the British stock who are engaged in the grandest of all human work, the founding of a great free nation. He tells us that of the 3,226,000 persons distributed in the six States of the proposed Australasian Commonwealth there are in no part of the British dominions a population so thoroughly British.

BRITONS ALL !

Notwithstanding some faint sprinklings of German, French, and Italians, the elements of the coming nation are free from the taint of foreign blood. Already the native-born Australians more than double the number of English, Scotch, and Irish. There is no such thing as destitution in the land, and nowhere is there a group of school-children without a school. For an industrious man who knows how to work out his own self-help the earth has no better field than Australia. But although not only the aspiration for national life but the material conditions of nationhood are to be found in Australia, the federal idea has not yet crystallised into a clear form in many minds. The average politician, whose mind has been enervated by the struggle for the publican's vote, and who falls into the narrowest ruts of provincialism, finds the federal idea too large and weighty for him. Nevertheless, the federal cause, which was first pleaded twenty-five years ago by Wentworth and Gavan Duffy, is marching steadily on to assured success. Sir Henry Parkes declares that the new order of things will be firmly rooted long before the close of the century.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

Speaking of the scheme approved of by the Conference, Sir Henry Parkes says :—

It contemplates throughout a loyal union with the Empire, and the sublime and entrancing idea of a future world-wide confederation of the English-speaking race must have influenced at progressive stages the minds of its framers.

The following is his account of the constitution drafted for Australia :—

It provides for a Federal Parliament, consisting of a House of Representatives, based upon the widest popular suffrage, and modelled on the type of the existing House of Commons; and a Senate modelled from the representative character of the illustrious Senate of the United States, without its executive functions. All through, the principle of responsible government is preserved and skilfully adapted to the inherent conditions of a Federation. It calls into existence an executive of the English pattern—a representative of the Crown acting politically with the advice of responsible Ministers; and it makes adequate provision for the exercise of the popular will in both Houses of Parliament by a frequent reference to the electors of the country. It creates an Australian judiciary which, besides conducting the ordinary judicial business of the Commonwealth, would enable appeals from the Supreme Courts of the several States to be made with the legal assistance of professional men familiar with the laws, usages, and conditions of the country. It is not disfigured by any attempted restraint upon the free spirit of a free people.

So sanguine is Sir Henry Parkes of the birth of this new nation, that he thinks it possible and by no means impracticable before the close of 1892, and in all probability the great consummation cannot be held back by any untold cause of events beyond the year 1893.

The churches even now have awakened to the advantages to church government and discipline, and to the organisation of spiritual effort, which would come by Federation. The Primate of the Church of England, the Cardinal of the Church of Rome, the heads of most of the Nonconformist Churches, I am assured, are fervent Federationists. The far-seeing men engaged in commerce are Federationists. The men of enterprise of all classes are Federationists. The men who have chosen as their calling the pursuit of literature, more especially those conducting the higher class of newspapers, are Federationists. In two years more the whole Australian population will be welded into one enthusiastic body of Federationists.

Sir Henry Parkes dismisses the opposition of the republicans in a contemptuous paragraph. He says :—

Men, who really have faith in nothing, profess to believe in the necessity for some organic change in the free government which shelters their useless lives. But the dominant feeling of the Australian populations is soundly loyal to the Liberal institutions and the noble mission of the Empire. Without cause for separation, it is hardly within the range of probability that the young nation would separate at the bidding of the most worthless part of her population. She will be true to the builders, and set her face against the destroyers.

Of this the Sydney Bulletin will, no doubt, have something to say, and will say it with all the more effect because the protectionists and labour party have just defeated Sir Henry at the general election of New South Wales.

A PROPHECY OF DEFEAT.

The following cartoon of May 9 seems to some extent prophetic.

THE FASCINATION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

BY OLIVE SCHREINER.

"STRAY Thoughts on South Africa," in the Fortnightly for July, is signed by "A South African," but even if you read it with your eyes shut it would be identified in a minute as the handiwork of the woman of genius who gave us the "Story of a South African Farm." As there is only one Rhodes in South Africa, so there is only one Olive Schreiner, and the Cape is fortunate indeed in producing a statesman to make history and a writer of genius to record it. Here is Miss Schreiner's account of the country which gave her birth:—

"THERE IS SO MUCH OF IT."

It is the intense blue of our skies, the vastness of our mountains, the fierceness of our rivers, the wideness of our plains, the roughness of our seas that form the characteristic of our land. There is nothing measured, small, nor petty in South Africa. We recall once, many years ago, travelling from Port Elizabeth to Grahamstown in a post-cart with a woman just come from England. All day we had travelled up through the bush, and at midnight came out on a height where before us as far as the eye could reach stretched the bush, without break or sign of human habitation. She began to sob; and, in reply to our questions, could only say inarticulately, "Oh, it is so terrible! There is so much of it!"

It is this "so much" for which the true South African longs when he leaves his native land. The little lane, the pond, the cottage with roses climbing over the porch, the old woman going down the lane in her red cloak driving her cow, the parks with the boards of notice, the little hill with the church and ruin beyond, oppress and suffocate us. Amidst the art of Florence and Venice, amid the civilisation of London and Paris, in the crowded drawing-room, surrounded by all that wealth and culture and human fellowship can supply, there come back to us remembrances of still Karoo nights, when we stood alone under the stars and heard the silence; and we return. Europe cannot satisfy us. The sharp business man who makes money at the "fields" and goes to end his life in Europe, comes back at the end of two years. You ask him why he returned. He looks at you in a curious way, with his head on one side, and replies meditatively: "There's no room, you know. It's so free here." Neither can you entrap him into further explanations. South Africa is like a large fascinating woman, with regard to whom those who see her for the first time wonder at the power she exercises, and those who come close to her fall under it, and never leave her for anything smaller because she liberates them.

THE KAROO.

Olive Schreiner loves South Africa, but she idolises the Karoo, and there are three or four pages of her favourite retreat. The Karoo, she maintains, is the sanatorium of the world; it is dry, stimulating, and will attract invalids from everywhere. The following is a passage in which she attempts to enable us to understand why the Karoo is the home of her heart:—

The Bushman and the wild buck have come, they crept over the scene and are gone, and the Englishman with his horse and gun have come; but the plain lies, with its sharp stones turned to the sky, as it has lain for a million years unchanged. It is not fear one feels with the clear blue sky above one; that which creeps over one is not dread. It was amid such scenes as these, amid motionless, immeasurable silence, that the Oriental mind first framed its noblest conception of the Unseen, the "I am that I am" of the Hebrew. Not less wonderful is the Karoo at night, when the stars of the Milky Way form a band across the sky. You stand alone outside, you see the velvet blue-black vault rising slowly on one side of the great horizon and sinking on the other; the earth is so motionless, the silence is so intense you almost seem to hear the stars move. Nor less wonderful are the moonlight nights, when you sit alone on a kopje and the moon has risen across the plain, and the soft light is over every thing; even the stones are beautiful; and what you have dreamed about human love and fellowship, and never grasped, you believe in them. Hardly less beautiful is the sunrise, when the hills, which have been purple, turn to gold, and suddenly the rays of light shoot fifty miles across the plain and make every drop on the ice-plants sparkle. Not less lovely are the sunsets; you go out in the evenings; the fierce heat of the day is over; as you walk a cool breath touches your cheek; you look up, and all the hills are turned pink and purple, and a curious light lies on the top of the Karoo bushes; they are gilded; then it vanishes, and all along the west there are bars of gold against a pale emerald sky, and then everything begins to turn grey. In the Karoo there are also mirages. As you travel along the great plains, more especially between Beaufort and De Aar, you may almost reckon to see on a hot summer day, away on the horizon, beautiful lakes with the sunlight sparkling on the water, and islands and palm trees, domes and minarets on the mainland, and snow-capped mountains rising behind them. If you stop for half an hour watching them you will still see them.

HOW TO PAINT THE MAP OF SOUTH AFRICA.

But it would be a mistake to regard her paper as merely describing natural scenery. It is an attempt, and on the whole a successful attempt, to explain the political position of South Africa:—

To grasp our unique condition more clearly, it will be well to take a blank map of South Africa, and to pass over the entire map from east to west, from north to south, from the Zambesi to Cape Town, from Walvisch Bay to Kafirland, a coating of dark paint, lighter in the west, to represent the yellow-tinted Bushmen, Hottentots, and half-caste native races, and darker, mounting up to the deepest black, in the extreme east, to represent the vast numbers of the black-skinned Bantu to be found there. From no part of the map, from no spot so large that a pin's point might be set down there, will this layer of paint representing the aboriginal native races be absent; it will be darker here and lighter there, but always present. If now we wish to represent the earliest European element, the Boer or Dutch-Huguenot, we shall have to pass over the whole map lines and dots of blue paint, thicker in some parts, scarcer in others, but hardly anywhere entirely absent. And if we now wish to represent the English element we shall have again to pass over the entire map, from the Zambesi to Cape Agulhas, a fine layer of red paint, thinner here, thicker there, but never wholly absent. If we add a few insignificant dots on the extreme east coast, to represent the Portuguese, our racial map will be complete.

A MIXED POPULATION.

There is probably not a civilised roof in South Africa which covers people of only one nationality: as a rule they are of three or four. We take a typical Cape household before us at the moment: the father is English, the mother half Dutch and half French-Huguenot, with a French name, the children sharing three nationalities; the governess is a Scotchwoman, the cook a Zulu, the housemaid half Hottentot and half Dutch, the kitchen-girl half Dutch and half slave, the stable-boy a Kafir, and the little girl who waits at table a Basuto. This household is a type of thousands of others to be found everywhere throughout Africa.

The question of questions is whether or not they can make of these opposed and conflicting races a united whole. In the next article she promises to give us an account of some of the conditions and individuals that at the present moment influence the future of the Cape. The article will be awaited with interest, for nothing could be more charming than to read Olive Schreiner's account of Mr. Rhodes.

REMINISCENCES OF ARCHBISHOP MAGEE

BY THE REV. BENJAMIN WAUGH.

In the Sunday Magazine Mr. Waugh publishes the last sermon of Dr. Magee, which, curiously enough, was upon the text "Give an account of thy stewardship, for thou must be no longer steward." Mr. Waugh supplements this with an article entitled "Reminiscences of Dr. Magee: His Championship of Little Children." Mr. Waugh says that he has but one thought associated with him, namely, his compassion for suffering children:—

Deep beneath that imperative, stern appearance of his was a compassion for their pains more lovely than I have ever had the opportunity of seeing in any public man with whom my special work has brought me. Externally like the prickly burr of a beech nut, within he was like its satin lining. After his first response to what I said at Peterborough Town Hall, I had frequent and long interviews with him, always upon the one topic which moved what, to the public at least, was an almost unknown power in him, and the spell of it grew on me until I came to feel towards him as one feels towards a Great Master whose will must be obeyed. What he wanted done, out of loyalty to his passion for childhood, I willingly did.

He became positively beautiful. I often saw this; and when I had once seen it I could have done anything for him. When certain cases came before him his sternly-moulded face radiated with compassion. It was like a rock with sun-glow on it. And then, as if what was noblest in him must still be secret, his expression suddenly assumed a sternness to which every tender feeling seemed foreign. He seemed always to be led forward by the vision of the troop of neglected dying children he had seen.

"Mr. Waugh," he said to me early in the struggle, "in this matter we have to count with two things. First, almost all our facts are secrets of the bed-chamber; and secondly, we are opposed by great vested interests. This thing is not to be done without a good deal of pain. We must take up our cross. That alone is sufficient for our purpose."

Before going into the House of Lords on the day when he was to make his speech on the second reading of his Bill on Child Life Insurance, I spent half an hour with him in the Bishops' Room. When the last business had been arranged and he rose to robe, as I turned to leave him, I said, "The Lord be with you"—half expecting the familiar response to the words. "No, Mr. Waugh," he said, "that is not the word for to-day. 'The Lord be with you' is for victory. The word for to-day is, 'Quit you like men; be strong.'"

On the same day, as I walked with him after his speech from the House of Lords on his way to a cab, he said, "How did I do?" "All you wanted to do," I replied; you were most powerful." He continued, "I never was more anxious about anything. My facts oppressed me, and the House of Lords is a most difficult assembly to speak to. I wanted the relief of a more responsive audience. But the House is always good to me." "You have a mighty master," I said,

"which even the Lords must feel—a Suffering Child. I found it so in the Commons when the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Bill was there. Neither the leader of the House nor the leader of the Opposition was leader then. It was a little child." "That is most encouraging," he replied. Then after a step or two along St. Stephen's Porch, with his head slightly bent and voice subdued, in a reflective and almost regretful mood, he added, "How little we all think of the Master's views of the government of a little child."

I have already made too many quotations from the article, but cannot resist the temptation to quote the following paragraphs:—

"I never asked you," he continued, "why you took this matter up, but I think it well that I should know. Why did you?" I then told him of the circumstances of the death of two of my children; and a little more. I had scarcely finished what I was saying when he said, "Dear me—I understand." Then, as if curbing a too strong emotion for the place, he looked out of the window for a moment and added, "Isn't it wonderful—a dead child!" There stood two big tears in his eyes.

At another time, when in the Bishops' Room at the House of Lords, he said, "You saw the effect of the witness to-day. We have one king in England, King Demos. I believe in Demos, when he gets his facts. You must get at him, Mr. Waugh. Have some big meetings in the great towns. We shall not fail with him when he knows."

THE LATE ARCHBISHOP MAGEE

THE LITTLE WIVES OF INDIA.

AN AMERICAN PROTEST.

I SOMETIMES wonder how long it will be before the United States of America insist on taking an active part in the government of India. The suggestion, no doubt, will be scouted as monstrous by those who merely look at the surface, but those who are familiar with the undercurrent will know that few things are more probable than that the whole of our Indian administration may be profoundly influenced by American opinion brought to bear, not at first by ironclads and diplomatic despatches, but by the constant pressure of American opinion.

AMERICAN INFLUENCE IN INDIA.

The administration of India is coming more and more to be regarded as a great experiment, in which the English-speaking race is interested in the elevation of 250 million Asiatics. We in the old country are, at present, solely responsible for the work, but although we are the men at the front, the Americans are the men at the rear; and their criticisms, although pretty plainly audible, will probably increase in volume as the world shrinks, and India and Indian administration is brought more closely under the microscope of civilisation. Already we hear of missions organised by the Women's Christian Temperance Union for the purpose of examining into and reporting upon the sale of drink and opium in India and Burmah, and on the way in which the regulations adopted by the Indian Government as substitutes for the C. D. Acts are being worked in our great dependency. Thus, whether we like it or not, we have got to face the fact that American opinion will exercise a continually increasing pressure upon our Indian administration until at last it is by no means improbable this influence will make itself felt directly through the ordinary channels of Governmental action.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN'S PROTEST.

An illustration of this tendency is afforded by a very remarkable paper on the "Little Wives of India," which Dr. Emma B. Ryder contributes to the Home-Maker for June, a New York monthly magazine which is not so well known in this country as it deserves to be. Dr. Ryder is a New York physician who is at present at work in Bombay. Her paper is well worth reading by those who imagine that our American kinsfolk will not try their hand at bettering the condition of their fellow creatures in India. Dr. Ryder declares that the condition of the little wives of India for misery, degradation and hopelessness, has no equal on the face of the entire earth. "If the never-published record of oppression, tyranny and murder which goes on constantly in cold blood in the homes of the Hindus could be spread out to view, we should behold a living inferno such as has never been pictured by the imagination of man." Of course we will be told that this is none of Dr. Ryder's business, just as American slave-owners were very emphatic in telling English people, when they were roused by reading "Uncle Tom's Cabin," that slavery in the Southern States was a domestic institution with which Britishers had no concern. But people who speak the common language and profess the same religion are practically one nation, and the things which powerfully affect one section make themselves felt throughout the whole extent of the community. For our part, we heartily welcome Dr. Ryder's criticisms.

THE EFFECT OF EARLY MARRIAGES.

Dr. Ryder says :—

In coming to India I expected to find women and girls that would much resemble those I had seen in other tropical countries—in Mexico, Central America, and on the Isthmus of Panama—healthy, with dark faces and laughing bright eyes. I can never express the sadness of heart that I experienced when I met these half-developed women, with their look of hopeless endurance, their skeleton-like arms and legs, and saw them walking the prescribed number of paces behind their husbands, with never a smile on their faces. I expected the little girls in India would be the same precocious, strong, fully-developed girls that I found in other tropical countries; and how great was my astonishment to behold the little dwarf-like, quarter-developed beings, and to be told that they were wives, and serving not only their lords and masters, but the mothers-in-law, and often a community family of ten, twelve, fourteen, or twenty. Talk of maturity for these little creatures! They can never come to full maturity, for they were robbed before they were born, as were their ancestors. If they could have proper exercise, with all the food they need, and above all if they could be made happy until they were twenty-five years old, it might not be a sin for them to give birth to an immortal soul.

THE BRUTALITY OF THE HINDU HUSBAND.

If I could take my readers with me on my round of visits for one week, and let them behold the condition of the Little Wives, it would need no words of mine to send you forth crying into this wilderness of sin. If you could see the suffering faces of the little girls, who are drawn nearly double with contractions, caused by the brutality of their husbands, and who will never be able to stand erect; if you could see the paralysed limbs that will not again move in obedience to the will; if you could hear the plaintive wail of the little sufferers as, with their tiny hands clasped, they beg you to "make them die," and then turn and listen to the brutal remarks of the legal owner with regard to the condition of his property; if you could stand with me by the side of the little deformed dead body, and, turning from the sickening sight, could be shown the new victim to whom the brute was already betrothed, do you think it would require long arguments to convince you that there was a deadly wrong somewhere, and that someone was responsible for it! After one such scene a Hindu husband said to me, "You look like you feel bad" (meaning sad). "Doctors ought not to care what see. I don't care what see; nothing trouble me, only when self sick; I not like to have pain self."

THE WORST SLAVERY ON EARTH.

A man may be a vile and loathsome creature; he may be blind, a lunatic, an idiot, a leper, or diseased in a worse form; he may be fifty, seventy, or a hundred years old, and may be married to a baby or a girl of five or ten, who positively loathes his presence, but if he claims her she must go, and the English law for the "Restitution of Conjugal Rights" compels her to remain in his power, or imprisons her if she refuses. There is no other form of slavery on the face of the earth that begins with the slavery as enforced upon these little girls of India.

Dr. Ryder's method of dealing with these evils is as follows :—

I would allow all to marry their children at any age, and by any form they preferred, and to spend an amount of money on the occasion to satisfy the individual pocket, as that seems to be an essential element in all Indian marriage ceremonies. But so soon as the ceremony was ended, I would cause the powerful arm of Statute Law to take these child-brides under its protecting care, and would make it a criminal offence—punishable by fine and imprisonment—for a man to cohabit with his "religious" wife, until the parties had been either duly registered as man and wife, or had been married by civil law. Registering and certificates should be withheld from all children, and those not men and women as decided by taking the totality of conditions.

ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI.

THE STORY OF HIS CONVERSION AND CONSECRATION.

THE sketch of the life of this famous saint which M. Arvéde Barine contributes to the Revue des Deux Mondes for the 15th of June has a strong human interest which can hardly fail to attract readers of the most different habits of mind. It is not the Catholic, it is not the Italian, it is the man we meet who holds and draws our thoughts with a sense of personal sympathy.

HIS YOUTH.

M. Barine gives us a picture of him first as a young man in his father's home, a young man such as most of us, if we think, can remember to have met at least once in replica among our friends, beloved of every one, talented, fascinating, gay and loving, with a deeply earnest and also a most socially frivolous side to his character. His father, Pietro Bernardone, was a rich merchant or draper of Assisi. Francis was his spoilt darling, and everything that money could buy was at the young man's disposal. The rest, which money could not buy, was also his by virtue of his natural endowments. Everywhere that he appeared he was the leader—behind his father's counter, in young men's frolics, in study in the arts and athletic exercises of the place, above all perhaps in appreciation and enjoyment of all the lively sights and sounds of nature. He had at first no higher aspirations than to love and live, and perhaps a little fight. The last he did as well as he did all the rest, and his proud and jovial father was at all times willing to bear the expense and take the consequences. The young fellow was extremely particular about his clothes and his food; he liked to take pleasure and to give it; when misfortune came he was scarcely less gay than he was in the height of success. Once captured in a defeat of the Assisi militia, and carried off to the dungeon of a neighbouring town, he arrived and remained there in overwhelmingly good spirits, brimming so with laughter and good stories, that his fellow-captives were almost shocked. Peace was made. He got home to Assisi, and instantaneously, of course, enrolled himself again. Probably the secret of his universal charm, as of his subsequently universal influence, lay in a power of almost universal sympathy.

HIS STRUGGLE.

The earliest indications which have been preserved of his sense of a more serious aim are indications of this. It was not grief nor disappointment which impelled him to the service of his fellows, but simply the loving sense of their claim upon him. One day, when he was only twenty, a poor man came into his father's shop at a moment when it was full and Francis busy. The young fellow could not be bothered with him, and sent him roughly about his business. But afterwards a gentler instinct caused him to dwell with regret upon the incident. He compared the condition of the beggar and his greater need with that of the rich man to whom, in spite of pressure, he had found means to attend. The thought that he, renowned as he was in Assisi for his courtesy, could so act without discredit caused him to ponder on the claims of the poor and unprotected to consideration. It was the point of departure of his championship of poverty. But the recognition of his own vocation did not come upon him all at once. He began only to open his ears to the manifold cries of earthly sorrow. He looked out from the complacent happiness of his father's home to the suffering of the mediæval world. The faction fights of the day began to have a meaning deeper than that which lay in a cheerful exercise of his athletic gifts. Military glory on a larger scale might, he thought, ease the longings of which he was conscious. A lord of Assisi was starting for distant fields of battle. Young Francis enrolled himself in the train, and entered with all the old animation into the necessary preliminaries. The old life, but more of it, was what he imagined that he needed. He prepared an elaborate costume. Heroic deeds, he chose to fancy, required a suitable setting. His dress was richer than that of his chief himself. All preparations were made with the same care for detail. He told his friends that he intended to return a king. He could neither eat nor sleep for excitement till the day of departure came. But on that very day there was a typical victory of the real over the unreal in his nature. As he pranced on horseback through the streets he noticed a poor knight so badly dressed and accoutred that impulsively he gave him his own best costume, and left the town himself in his ordinary garb. Whether, indeed, the dream of military glory was involved in the trappings the chronicle does not say, but the next thing that is heard of him is that he fell ill of fever within twenty-four hours at Spoleto, where, as he lay on his bed, he heard a voice warning him that the path he was pursuing was but leading him astray, and the next that, in obedience to the voice, he returned on the third day to Assisi and gave a great banquet to his friends at which he announced that he had renounced the hope of a kingdom gained by arms. At this banquet it was observed that he was strangely unlike himself, absent-minded and silent, and unmoved by the songs, the dancing, and the rollicking in which he had been accustomed to take a prominent part. His friends mocked at him. He answered with a smile, he had never been so happy. It was his farewell to the material pleasures of the world.

HIS VOCATION.

He had recognised that he was not dependent upon external circumstances. He had found himself within his trappings, and dimly discerned that there was something ahead for him to do. But what? He had still fierce struggles to pass through, an anguish of the soul, in which, for all his prayers and yearnings, he could not discover his appointed task. At last, in the ever-present thought of the poor, he found his work. And before he could efficiently help them he felt that he must be one of them. He renounced all that he had once enjoyed. He became a mendicant, and through many scenes of anguish, doubt, self-conquest, we are brought to the supreme and celebrated scene in which he was brought by his own father before the justice of the town and prosecuted for having given away what did not belong to him. The bishops exhorted him to return to his father all that was rightly his. St. Francis instantly stripped himself naked, and laying his clothes and his money in a little heap before the bishop, he cried to the surrounding crowd, "Listen and understand! Up to this moment I have called Pietro Bernardone my father. I now return to him his money and the garments I have received from him, and from this day I will only say, our Father which art in heaven." Individual love was to be no more his than any other individual possession. The personal was henceforth entirely merged in the universal, and the Franciscan Order was there and then founded by one naked man.

REMINISCENCES OF CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

BY MR. THOMAS BURT.

In the Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review there is a very interesting paper by Mr. Thomas Burt, which contains reminiscences and an estimate of his friend Charles Bradlaugh. It is twenty-three years since Mr. Burt first met Mr. Bradlaugh. It was at Blyth, when the much-abused iconoclast paid his first visit to that Northumbrian seaport, where the hotels refused to afford him lodging, or even to supply him with a cup of tea. Mr. Burt brought him home to supper, and he well remembers the flutter in his little dove-cote when he introduced Mr. Bradlaugh to his wife and father. But for that invitation Mr. Bradlaugh would have had to walk four or five miles in order to get something to eat. The friendship thus begun ripened in later years, and lasted until his death. Mr. Burt declares that Mr. Bradlaugh was far the best speaker in mass meetings for workmen that he ever heard; he was unequalled and unapproached:—

He was an accomplished debater, a powerful reasoner, but his logic was not based upon the cold formal rules of the schools; it was fused, fired, set ablaze by the deep convictions and the passionate earnestness of the man. Mr. Bradlaugh's addresses to the northern pitmen were always memorable. He loved the rough, horny-handed toiler. Long and deeply he had studied labour questions. Impassioned, eloquent, impressive, his speeches were at the same time measured, temperate, thoughtful, well-reasoned.

Mr. Burt tells an amusing story of the estimate which Mr. Bradlaugh and Alexander Macdonald formed of each other on their first meeting. The sole weakness of these two men was their egotism, says Mr. Burt, and the curious thing was that each impressed the other as being the most egotistic man he ever knew. Mr. Bradlaugh's egotism, however, was on the surface frank and undisguised. It was not the selfish conceit of a small fussy nature; it had in it something of the lofty imperial bearing of Milton's pride or of Burke's. It was not the egotism of the heart, but the belief of a strong, brave man in himself, in his rectitude and power. In the struggle for his seat he bore himself like a hero. In the quiet intervals of the fray, his forbearance, his patience and gentleness astonished everybody. Only once did he murmur, when in answer to some words of sympathy he spoke confidently of his ultimate triumph, but added, "there is so much for me to do, and I am growing old." Of Mr. Gladstone's speech on the Oaths question, Mr. Burt says it completely reconciled Mr. Wendell Phillips to the Liberal leader. Mr. Burt was in America at the time, and he found Mr. Phillips in raptures over Mr. Gladstone's speech.

One of the finest speeches I ever read. It strikes the same high note of religious equality and freedom of thought as Milton's "Areopagitica," and John Stuart Mill's "Liberty," and is not unworthy to rank with these great efforts of the human intellect. That, or something like it, was Wendell Phillips's verdict.

Another anecdote in Mr. Burt's paper is the statement that Mr. John Bright told him that he would gladly have accompanied Dr. Kenealy up the floor of the House had he known that the Doctor had no friends to introduce him. As a member of Parliament, Mr. Burt gives Mr. Bradlaugh the highest praise. He says he was the most industrious and painstaking of members.

No man ever did his parliamentary work more thoroughly and conscientiously; no unofficial member ever in the same space of time made such an indelible mark on the statute book by carrying useful measures; no man in the same period so powerfully and so beneficially influenced the Government departments of the country.

The workmen never had a truer, abler or more judicious friend than he.

Nothing touched Mr. Bradlaugh so much as the prayers which were offered up for him when he was at death's door two years ago. On his recovery, says Mr. Burt,—

He told me how kind everybody had been. "My own people," he said, speaking like a sort of Secular bishop, "were loving and helpful. That was not strange or unexpected. But that those who so utterly disagree with me, who think me so terribly wrong, should have shown sympathy, kindness, and appreciation is surprisingly wonderful." Mr. Bradlaugh was not only one of the most generous, but he was one of the kindest and most tender-hearted men I have ever known. Mr. Bradlaugh's lack of faith in personal immortality did not blunt his sympathies, or slacken his endeavours. He was neither a fatalist nor a sensualist. He did not say, "There is no life beyond the grave, therefore let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die;" on the contrary, he said with Professor Clifford, "Let us take hands and help, for this day we are alive together." He acted on the admonitory text of a greater Teacher still, which men of strong and of weak faith, and those of no faith at all, would do well to take to heart—"Work while it is day, for the night cometh when no man can work."

A POET ON MODERN POETRY.

A PROPHECY BY MR. LEWIS MORRIS.

In Murray's Magazine for July Mr. Lewis Morris has an article upon modern poetry, in which he speaks his mind pretty freely upon the poets of the century. He admits the improved technical workmanship in verse of the present day, and he speaks appreciatively of the emancipation from all rules that embarrass the flow of the writer's inspiration, for which the supreme example is Walt Whitman. The initial defect of most of our poetry is that our poets do not consider whether or not they have got a good subject with which they are adequate to deal. Another defect is its tendency to extraordinary prolixity; akin to this there is the cultivation of obscurity and the copying of the artificialities of the French verse.

Mr. Morris concludes his paper as follows:—

When we have got rid of the devastating pests of obscurity and triviality, when our poems are made lucid and not immensely long, when our poems have some human interest and pedantry has been rooted out, and we follow Greek models in the spirit and not the letter, and rely more upon metrical harmonies than upon the mere jingling of sound,— . . . when all this is done, will the English poet of the future, the poet long overdue, who will be, perhaps, wholly the poet of the twentieth century, turn his eyes exclusively, or even mainly, to the past? A great reward of fame awaits the writer of verse who shall so reproduce the emotional features of our modern life, its doubts and its faith, its trials and aspirations, as to transfigure it into a story more real and more touching than any story of a remote past. The great drama of human life is constantly being played on a wider stage, to larger and more critical audiences, with more complicated springs of action, with finer insight, with deeper and more subtle psychological problems to solve, than were possible in old times. It is from these that real and new springs of poetry must flow. It is only in this direction that real progress can be made. All the varied impulses and wants of our modern life should find treatment by the poet of the future—the great gains of science should not be ignored by him, nor the insoluble but ever recurring problems of the relations of the Human to the Divine. Great as is the wealth of English poetry, I confess that to me the great bulk of it—and indeed, of the poetry of the world—even when it is not mere cater-wauling, seems trivial, insincere, and ineffectual to the last degree. Worthier interests and wider knowledge will inevitably generate a higher poetical type, which will be poetry and not prose, though it may throw aside much that to-day seems to differentiate the one from the other.

SOME TRIBUTES TO MADAME BLAVATSKY.

BY THEOSOPHISTS.

Lucifer for June 15th is almost entirely devoted to tributes to Madame Blavatsky by those whom she has left behind her. Mrs. Besant succeeds to the sole editorship of Lucifer, over which she has been for some time co-editor with Madame Blavatsky. There are no fewer than sixteen articles devoted to this remarkable woman, all of them couched in the most exalted strain of loving reverence. Emily Killingsbury gives the following anecdote of Madame Blavatsky's occult powers:—

One morning at breakfast she told us that she had while asleep seen her nephew killed in the war then going on between Russia and Turkey. She described the manner of his death-blow, how he was wounded, the fall from his horse, and other details. She requested Col. Olcott and myself to make a note of it, as well as the date, and before I left New York full confirmation of the event was received in a letter from Russia, all the circumstances corresponding with H. P. B.'s dream or vision.

Countess Wachtmeister declares that Madame Blavatsky was the noblest and grandest woman this century has produced. Mr. Sinnett indulges in the expectation that her followers may recognise Madame Blavatsky in her new incarnation, for he speaks of the possibility that the new personality she may now have been clothed with, if already mature, may in the progress of events be identified by some of us now living before we in turn are called upon—or permitted—to use whichever phrase best suits our internal condition of mind—to pass through the great change ourselves.

Mr. Charles Johnston says that with unparalleled force she asserted the soul, with transcendent strength she taught the reality of the spirit, by living the life and manifesting the energies of an immortal:—

And this dominant power and this clear interior light were united to a nature of wonderful kindness, wonderful gentleness, and absolute self-forgetfulness and forgiveness of wrong.

She has left us the great lesson of her life, a life true to itself, true to its spirit, true to its God. Mrs. Besant says that the most salient of her characteristics was strength, sturdy strength, unyielding as a rock. She asserts in the most unqualified manner the absolute rectitude of Mme. Blavatsky:—

She was rigidity itself in the weightier matters of the law; and had it not been for the injury the writers were doing themselves by the foulnesses they flung at her, I could often have almost laughed at the very absurdity of the contrast between the fraudulent charlatan and profligate they pictured, and the H. P. B. I lived beside, with honour as sensitive as that of the "very gentil parfait knyghte," truth flawless as a diamond, purity which had in it much of a child's candour mingled with the sternness which could hold it scatheless against attack. Apart from all questions of moral obligation, H. P. B. was far too proud a woman, in her personality, to tell a lie.

Looking at her generally, she was much more of a man than a woman. Outspoken, decided, prompt, strong-willed, genial, humorous, free from pettiness and without malignity, she was wholly different from the average female type. She judged always on large lines, with wide tolerance for diversities of character and of thought, indifferent to outward appearances if the inner man were just and true.

The most interesting paper is Mr. Herbert Burrows', who writes of what Madame Blavatsky was to him:—

Two years ago Annie Besant and I saw H. P. B. for the first time, and now it is not many days since I stood by her lily-covered coffin and took my last lingering look at the personality of the marvellous woman who had revolutionised the lives of my colleague and myself. Two years are but little as men count time, but these two have been so pregnant with soul-life that the old days before them seem ages away. If it be true that life should be counted by epochs of the mind, then life, from the day that I first clasped H. P. B.'s hand to the moment when, majestic in her death sleep, I helped to wreath around her body the palms from that far-off East which she loved so well, was richer, fuller, longer to me than a generation of the outward turmoil which has its little day and then is gone.

He recalls the fact that Mrs. Besant and he first went to Madame Blavatsky's with an introduction from me. Mr. Burrows, after seeing her several times, began to see light:—

I caught glimpses of a lofty morality, of a self-sacrificing zeal, of a coherent philosophy of life, of a clear and definite science of man and his relation to a spiritual universe. These it was which attracted me—not phenomena, for I saw none. For the first time in my mental history I had found a teacher who could pick up the loose threads of my thought and satisfactorily weave them together, and the unerring skill, the vast knowledge, the loving patience of that teacher grew on me hour by hour. Quickly I learned that the so-called charlatan and trickster was a noble soul, whose every day was spent in unselfish work, whose whole life was pure and simple as a child's, who counted never the cost of pain or toil if these could advance the great cause to which her every energy was consecrated.

In addition to these articles, ten of the Theosophists publish a manifesto staking their honour upon the statement that Madame Blavatsky's character was of a lofty and noble type; that her life was pure and her integrity spotless.

A WORD FROM THE PSYCHICAL RESEARCH SOCIETY.

I regret to learn that some expressions in last month's article on Madame Blavatsky seem to the officials of the Psychical Research Society to reflect an unjustifiable harshness upon Mr. Hodgson, who conducted their research into the "phenomena" in India. The following letter from Mr. F. W. Myers explains itself:—

Leckhampton House, Cambridge, June 22, 1891.

SIR,—I should not have troubled you with any reply to Mr. Sinnett's paper, in the REVIEW OF REVIEWS for June, upon Madame Blavatsky and the Society for Psychical Research, had it not been for one sentence in that paper which suggested an inference at variance with fact, an inference which, on Mr. Hodgson's behalf, I am bound to repudiate.

"At first," says Mr. Sinnett, "the leaders of the S.P.R. undoubtedly accepted Mr. Hodgson's views." If it is intended to suggest that the members of the Committee who inquired into those alleged marvels have since that date in any way modified their condemnatory judgment, that suggestion is absolutely without foundation.

I have not, indeed, encountered any member of our Society who, having studied the evidence contained in Part IX. of our Proceedings (published by Trübner in 1885, and to be had of any bookseller), has found his judgment in any degree affected by any of the so-called replies, or protestations of innocence, which have as yet been given to the public.

I would beg the insertion of these few lines in justice to Mr. Hodgson, whom Mr. Sinnett has attacked in your columns, and who is now the secretary of the American branch of the S. P. R.—I am, sir, faithfully yours,

FREDERIC W. H. MYERS, Hon. Sec. S.P.R.

A MOTHER AND HER BOY.

BY HER MAJESTY NATHALIE, QUEEN OF SERBIA.

In the double holiday number of the Gentlewoman, a solid mass of printed and illustrated matter, which, although it weighs a pound and a half, the Post Office carries from one end of the country to the other for a halfpenny, there are many attractive features, but the most interesting is a contribution from Queen Nathalie of Serbia, to which we are very glad to give the more extended publicity of our pages. In this story Queen Nathalie tells in a parable the troubles through which she has gone in the attempt to secure her maternal rights over her unfortunate child, who is now the boy-king of Serbia. It begins as follows:—

NATHALIE AND HER SON.

Once upon a time the good God gave to a woman a darling child. This child grew and developed in the arms of its mother, like a rosebud that is well cared for. The mother tended and loved it, for her sole happiness was bound up in the life of this child.

The pleasant days passed quickly, one succeeding the other rapidly, without the mother taking note how quickly they came and passed. In the boundless love which she had for her son, she looked on him as an angel which God had sent her to watch over.

An Evil Spirit, whose only call was to thwart and make wretched persons who seemed contented and kindly, learned that there was in this world a mother, whose supreme happiness infinitely surpassed all the ill-doings which the Evil Spirit had hitherto been able to effect.

This made the dame angry, and from that date she began to cogitate what could be done to destroy the happiness of this proud mother.

At length she decided to consult her most intimate friend, a black-browed creature named Intrigue, so she flew rapidly to the home of the latter, who was seated in her hammock, her grizzly hair floating over her brooding, threatening countenance.

A PARABLE OF EX-KING MILAN.

Evil and Intrigue then decide to summon up three black imps, who decide to kidnap the child, as they cannot endure to witness the happiness of any human being. What follows is simply the recent Servian history written in the form of a fairy tale:—

In the interval Intrigue had thought of something which she whispered in the ear of Evil, and they then disappeared.

At that same hour the Mother was dreaming that she and her son were in a pleasant garden, surrounded by sweet-smelling flowers and the songs of birds. She gathered flowers to form a crown for her child, and interleaved therein with roseleaves the words Goodness, Pity, Sympathy, Love, Pardon, while the child ran along before his mother, clapping his hands with joy at being in such a charming place. Suddenly there came a change—all was dark. The song of birds, the scent of flowers disappeared, and they were led to another country altogether strange to her. A powerful hand seized hold of the boy. With a cry of agony the Mother awoke, to find her boy sleeping calmly by her side, a smile illuminating his face, as if brought there by a dream.

Two days later, early in the morning, Intrigue went, staff in hand, from neighbour to neighbour, with crocodile tears in her eyes, saying it was rumoured that the child was to be torn from his happy mother.

The neighbours hurried to the Mother, begging of her to be on the watch, for that there were evil men in the town who had been instigated to rob her of her son.

The Mother, alarmed, called to mind her dream, but quickly took courage, and replied, "It is impossible that such a thing can be contemplated! No power, be it ever so great, could steal a child from its own mother. No woman ever brought into the world a son so wicked as to take from me my only joy!"

THE KIDNAPPING AT WIESBADEN.

Poor Mother! She did not know that Intrigue was spreading this false news so as to induce her to withdraw herself from the protection of her friends and to go to a far-off country where the capture of her son would be more easily effected.

Evil and Intrigue succeeded in inducing the Mother to leave the place where she had lived so long, and to seek refuge in another country with her child.

Soon the evil spirits had matured their plan. While the Mother slept, strange hands carried away her son. On awaking she was desperate; like a wounded lioness she ran from chamber to chamber, calling, "My son, my son!" but only echo answered through the deserted rooms. She raised her arms imploringly to heaven, but only to hear the cry of Evil, who was floating in the air—

"Ha! ha! Now, where is your boasted happiness? Never again shall you look on the face of your child."

"Oh! mercy, mercy!" cried the Mother. "Why have you separated me from my son? Who will care for him? Who will inspire him with the love of gentleness and goodness, those things which only a mother knows how to teach? Have mercy, Spirit of Evil, and give me back my child."

With a mocking laugh, Evil flew away, leaving the despairing mother weeping and tearing her hair.

After a while the distraught mother arouses herself and sets off in the quest after her son. She wandered wearily from town to town for weeks and months, crossing rivers and mountains and passing over vast plains of snow until at last she comes back to a place which she recognises, and which of course stands for Belgrade under the new dispensation. The rest of the story ends more happily than it did, unfortunately, in real life.

A FALSIFIED PROPHECY, ALAS!

There was an immense rampart erected, which could not be surmounted in any way. Seeing a traveller approaching, she said, "Friend, can you tell me who has put this barrier here?"

"That is the work of the black spirits," said he; "they have constructed it to prevent your from reaching your son."

She sighed when she heard that her son was on the other side of this mighty barricade, and endeavoured to scale it, but the traveller prevented her efforts. Then she tried with all her strength to push aside the barrier, but all in vain. Weeping, she appealed to passers-by, but not one would give her any help, so alone she continued to force her way.

Neither Evil nor Intrigue could prevent her doing this, and while she was resting from her labour, Hope appeared with his bright blue eyes, and gave her a passing smile of encouragement.

When Evil and Intrigue, who were on the alert, watching her unsuccessful efforts, saw the rampart begin to bend they called upon the three imps, and bade them hold the barrier fast.

But it was rather late in the day. While the black spirits were shrieking with anger, Hope was calling to her, "Forward, forward!"

"Where is my son?" asked she, and from the other side of the barricade might be heard a child's voice calling, "Mamma, mamma."

The rampart fell asunder, and the Mother and son were in each other's arms.

"No power can separate us now, my angel," cried she.

"But the three black imps—where are they?" cried the boy.

"Do not be afraid of them; they are chained for ever, they can no longer harm us."

Evil and Intrigue spread their wings and flew away in despair.

"What shall we do with these evil ones?" asked the child. The Mother answered, "Our happiness will be their punishment. When demons weep, men are happy."

PARIS THE TYPICAL MODERN CITY.

BY DR. ALBERT SHAW.

WHEN Dr. Albert Shaw was on this side the Atlantic last Christmas fixing up the arrangements for taking over the American editorship of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, he spent a week in Paris to finally revise the facts and figures which he had collected on a previous visit in order to describe the salient features of the government of Paris. His paper appears in the July number of the Century, and is as full of solid information as his other municipal studies which we have from time to time quoted in these pages. He regards Paris as the typical modern city which has sacrificed everything to the modern ideas of symmetry and regularity and has built an opera house as a central feature and suggestive symbol of the new spirit.

ITS ADMINISTRATION.

Dr. Shaw regards the administration of French municipal government as admirable for its simplicity. Counsellors are elected for three or four years at a time, and all retire simultaneously. The council elects the mayor and his executive assistants, who in some places number ten or twelve. The mayor is a fully-armed executive officer and the council is limited chiefly to deliberation. Instead of administering the town by a municipal council, a French town is administered by the mayor and his adjuncts. The American system is a futile attempt to combine both these systems, and the result is conflict, dissipation, and degradation of public municipal life. In Paris there are twenty arrondissements, each with its mayor and three adjuncts. They are really the salaried agents of the Prefect of the Seine.

LIGHTING AND TRANSIT.

After describing the police and the proposed scheme for reforming the administration, Dr. Shaw devotes three or four pages to the explanation of the scientific system which has resulted in making Paris the best lighted city in the world. She was the best lighted city even when she only used gas, but now she is on the point of being completely supplied with electric light better than in any other large city in the world. Dr. Shaw speaks very severely of the comparative barbarism of the electric lighting appliances in America. Instead of leading the van America is between ten and fifteen years behind Europe in all the matters. He thinks that Paris requires a very great extension of street railways and omnibus lines, and the introduction of small and rapid vehicles as well as a metropolitan system of railway. The underground electric road is destined to be in Dr. Shaw's opinion the permanent rapid transit system of the world's greatest cities, and in this matter Paris is likely to resume her place in the forefront by securing the Nord-Eiffel system of underground lines.

WHAT PARIS DOES FOR HER CITIZENS.

The following is Dr. Shaw's conclusion as to what Paris does for her citizens and what it all costs:—

Paris, within its present limits, covers thirty square miles, ten of which are occupied by streets, waterways, and parks.

Two and a half million people dwell upon the remaining twenty square miles. They live in a remarkable condition of order and apparent thrift and comfort. It requires an ordinary expenditure of from 250,000,000 to 300,000,000 francs every year to defray the expenses of the city government—$25 for each man, woman, and child. This sum is more than twice as great as the average corresponding figure for the other great cities of Europe, such as Berlin and Vienna. The great public improvements and transformations of Paris have imposed a debt upon the municipality of nearly $400,000,000, upon which the annual interest charge is about $20,000,000. This is a vastly greater debt than any other city carries; but it is steadily shrinking under a system of terminable annuities by which the yearly interest payments gradually extinguish the principal.

HOW THE MONEY IS SPENT.

Assuming the annual cost of the city government per inhabitant to be 125 francs, it may be instructive to show where the money is expended. Twelve francs go to the maintenance of the police department with all its various services, three are paid for the cleansing and sprinkling of the streets, three and a half are paid for public lighting, half a franc goes for protection against fire, ten francs are expended for the maintenance of the schools, ten more go for the support of hospitals and the relief of the poor, from eight to ten are spent in maintaining the ways of communication; a sum that varies greatly from year to year, but which we may assume to call five francs, is paid out on new construction of streets and means of communication; and forty francs are required to meet interest and other payments on account of the municipal debt. The expenses of the general offices and city council, with a large salary list, and of various minor departments and services that need not be specified, easily account for the remainder of the 125 francs.

The expense of public education in Paris will not be seriously criticised in any quarter. Probably no other city in the world secures equally advantageous results from the outlay upon schools. But Paris does not stop with elementary education in reading, writing, and numbers. It maintains a marvellous system of industrial and trade schools for both sexes, in which almost everything that pertains to the production and traffic of Paris is taught and encouraged. I need not refer to the higher schools of science, of classics and literature, of engineering, and of fine art. All the flowers of civilisation are encouraged by the Paris municipality.

The city's care for its poorer population, as shown in the famous Mont de Piété and in the great system of savings banks, as well as in the various kinds of hospitals and retreats, seems fully justified by the facts of Paris life. The municipal savings bank is another great establishment that represents the thrifty side, just as the Mont de Piété suggests the unfortunate side, of the life of the common people of Paris.

HOW THE REVENUE IS RAISED.

Having given the cost of Paris government, I must not omit in a summary way to explain how the 250,000,000 francs or more a year come into the treasury. More than 140,000,000 francs accrue from the octroi taxes—levied as local customs dues upon foods, wines, fuel, building materials, and certain other articles brought into the city—and are therefore indirect taxation. Some 35,000,000 francs are obtained by direct forms of taxation, chiefly upon rental values and house occupancy. From 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 francs are gained by the profits of the city's various enterprises such as markets and abattoirs, and from its relations with the gas, water, street-railway, cab, and other profitable monopolies. The rest comes in large part from the national treasury, which pays its considerable proportion towards the cost of police, of paving, and of some other services in which the country as a whole is concerned. If Paris spends vast sums in her municipal housekeeping, she has diverse, magnificent, and permanent results to show, and her people are, as I believe, enriched rather than impoverished by their common investments as a municipality.

WOMEN IN THE CHURCHES.

SOME AMERICAN EXPERIENCES.

THE Homiletic Review for June publishes a symposium of interviews as to the change in the position of woman in the American Churches which has been brought about of late years. Four representative women are interviewed on the subject, and the statements which they make should be read by all who are interested in woman's work in the Church throughout the world. Mrs. Margaret Bottome says :—

As far as my observation goes, women are now doing more church work than they ever did. I have never known the poor and the sick to be so well cared for as they are to-day.

To-day women are ahead of men in their religious readings—actually they are better informed. Then, if they are Christians, they are supposed to be more spiritual than men. Women have the opportunity of speaking in the Methodist, the Congregational, the Presbyterian and the Baptist churches. There has been a wonderful change in the higher education of women, and the Church ought to be benefited by it. The old notion was that the women should keep silent in the Church, but the time has come, I think, when she had better be active on that line. In society she leads in conversation, she leads on the stage, she leads everywhere else—why should she not lead along the particular line where she is needed?

Mrs. A. R. Brown, of the New York City Mission, confirms Mrs. Bottome :—

In the church work in which I am engaged, we have had deaconesses for fifteen years, though we do not call them by that name; they are practically the same thing, and I am highly in favour of having deaconesses in the churches. They have them in the Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Church has them without calling them by that name; they call them church officers, but they do the deaconess's work all the same.

In the matter of parochial visitation, women would be better than men. In city missionary work we find that women can get access to a home where a prejudice would exist against a pastor representing a church.

Marion Harland says :—

Women are now better organised and comprehend more intelligently their place and importance in the Church. Witness the Boards of Foreign and Domestic Missions managed by them, each of which has its auxiliary in every country and city church. Thirty-five years ago, woman's work in the parish was represented by an annual fair, a strawberry festival, and a Sunday-school class. Everything else was done by her at second hand.

Miss Greenwood, the superintendent of the Evangelical section of the N.W.C.T.U. thinks that while much has been done, much remains to be done, and illustrates what she thinks by the following remark :—

That women are increasingly active in the philanthropies of the Church, her entertainments for raising money, and in charitable institutions, none can doubt. But the question may be seriously asked whether she is as active now as formerly in the spiritual work of the Church. The failure of many pastors to recognise the fitness of woman for spiritual work and teaching has led hundreds of them to seek elsewhere an open door of liberty and service. Woman's Union prayer-meetings, missionary organisations conducted by women, and especially the varied departments of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, have manifested the power and ability of women in executive and spiritual work. The Church is losing, we believe, great power by failing to recognise fully the leading of Providence and the spirit of the times.

POETRY IN THE PERIODICALS.

THERE is a charming poem in the English Illustrated for July, by Violet Fane, on an old rocking horse in a lumber room :—

He wears saddle, and stirrups, and snaffle,
And frontlet of faded blue,
And a bridle-rein
On his flowing mane,
And his tail fits on a screw.

Alas! for the sorrows and changes
Since, mounting this dappled grey,
With whip in hand
To some fairy land
I was speedily borne away!

And I think, as I stroke him sadly,
"For one hour, how sweet it would be
If the women and men
Who were children then,
Could be all as unchanged as he!"

Although it does not properly come under the head of "Poetry in the Periodicals," I publish with much pleasure the following verses which have been sent me from the Congo Free State in response to Mr. Harrison's appeal for the restoration of the Elgin marbles to Greece. It is a remarkable instance of the large range of the Review, and of the interest which many of our expatriated countrymen take in the problems of the old world which they have left behind :—

Give back the Elgin marbles; let them lie
Unsullied, pure, beneath an Attic sky.
The smoky fingers of our northern clime,
More ruin work than all the ancient time.
How oft' the roar of the Piræn sea,
Through column'd hall and dusky temple stealing,
Hath struck these marble ears, that now must flee
The whirling hum of London, noonward reeling.

Ah! let them hear again the sounds that float
Around Athene's shrine on morning's breeze,—
The lowing ox, the bell of climbing goat,
And drowsy drone of far Hymettus' bees.

Give back the marbles; let them vigil keep
Where Art still lies, o'er Pheidias' tomb, asleep.

ROGER CASEMENT.

Lukunga Valley, Cataract Region of the Lower Congo.

In the Atlantic Monthly for July appears the following sonnet, by Philip Bourke Marston :—

When with thy life thou did'st encompass mine,
And I beheld, as from an infinite height,
Thy love stretch pure and beautiful as light,
Through utmost joy I hardly could divine
Whether my love of thee it was, or thine,
Which so my heart astonished with its might.
But now at length familiar with the sight,
So I can bear to look where planets shine,
Even more deep the wonder grows to be
That thou shouldst love me; while my love of thee
Does of my being seem a second part;
Still often now as from a dream I start,
To think that thou, even thou,—thou lovest me,
I being what I am, thou what thou art.

In addition to a sonnet there is a poem entitled "Love's Lady" in the Fortnightly Review, by the same hand. I have only room for one verse :—

In stately body God thy soul did clothe—
Thy perfect soul—that so thou might'st have both
To take away the hearts of men, withal;
And tenderness to strength He did betroth.

MR. ALBERT PELL.

A POOR LAW REFORMER OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

THE first place in the current number of Help is devoted to an account of an interview with Mr. Pell, a member of the old school of political economists, to whom out-door relief is the accursed thing. Mr. Pell belongs to a school which has had its day, and he is in pronounced opposition to the tendencies of the present times. But Mr. Pell is a man who has thoroughly mastered the subject with which he deals. He puts forward no proposition which he has not tested in practical administration, and his experience is as great and as varied as that of any person who deals with the subject at the present time. I have not room to extract much of what Mr. Pell had to say, but his interview is full of acute observation and embodies the result of a life spent in the service of the poor. The following list of books which Mr. Pell has drawn up for those who wish to study the question of Poor Law Relief will be found very useful. The best work on the subject is "Aschrott's Study of the English Poor Law System." Aschrott was a German sent by Prince Bismarck to draw up a report of our system for guidance of the Germans. Aschrott is an extremely able and accurate writer; his book has been translated into English, and is published by Knight and Co. There are all the facts that are necessary to a due understanding of our system. It is the most complete monograph of which I know. In addition, here is a list of some of the books which should be on the library table of any one who deals with the question of Poor Law Relief:—

MR. ALBERT PELL.

"The History of the Poor Laws, with Observations," by Richard Burn, LL.D., 1764. "A History of the English Poor Law," by Sir Geo. Nicholls; dedicated to the Boards of Guardians of the several Poor Law Unions in England and Ireland (John Murray, 1854). Professor Fawcett on "Pauperism." Dr. Chalmers' "Christian and Economic Polity of a Nation." "The Original," by Thomas Walker, barrister-at-law, and one of the police magistrates of the Metropolis. "What Social Classes Owe to Each Other," by Professor Sumner (New York: Harper Brothers). Arthur Young's "Travels in France," 2nd part, p. 438, 2nd edition. Report of the Poor Law Commission, 1834. Reports to the Foreign Office on Poor Laws in Foreign Countries; with introductory remarks by Andrew Doyle (Parliamentary Paper, 1875). Reports of the Poor Law Conferences, 1876 to 1890 (Knight and Co.). Local Government Board Annual Reports—1st Rept., 1871-72: Edward Wodehouse on "Out-Relief;" 2nd Rept., 1872-73: Albert Pell on "Out-door Relief in Brixworth Union;" 3rd Rept., 1873-74: Rev. Wm. Bury on "Out-door Relief in Brixworth Union;" Hy. Longley—"Poor Law Administration in London;" Octavia Hill—"Relief: Official and Volunteer Agencies in Administering;" and Col. Lynedoch Gardiner.

The method by which reform may be effected will be found fairly stated in the 2nd and 3rd Reports of the Local Government Board in the case of the Brixworth Union in Northamptonshire.

In reply to a question Mr. Pell said:—

"I think you exaggerate the feeling in favour of out-door relief. I am an East Londoner; my father was born there. I have spent much of my life in the midst of the population which is supposed to demand most of the sympathy and the compassion of your philanthropic reformers, and I do not hesitate to say that I would undertake to fight a guardians' election in any part of the East End where out-door relief has been abolished, and win it on the strength of the feeling in opposition to out-door relief. It is the most potent engine yet devised to drag down the rates of wages to starvation limit.

"In the East of London we found that when we abolished out-door relief the sweaters simply raised the wages by the amount of the help the workers had been receiving from the rates. A certain minimum is indispensable to keep body and soul together. Where outdoor relief is given, the sweater simply makes up the margin, and so reduces wages; when no relief is given he has to pay the sum which is necessary to keep his men going. All this, however, is mere A B C, and has been verified over and over again. If you want to reduce wages, give out-door relief, and," said Mr. Pell, brightening up as he talked, "there can be no greater mistake in the world than to think that the East Londoners are to be pitied. I have a great admiration for the denizens of East London. They are self-reliant, energetic, highly-vitalised people. The happiness, the buoyancy, and the good spirits are to be found not in the West, but in the East. They are a happier set of people than you take them to be, and if you leave them alone they would work out their own salvation much better than you think.

"In seventeen years in Brixworth Union, since we discontinued out-door relief, we have saved the rates a gross sum of £80,000, which is equivalent to a money grant to each household in the Union of £20, and all this without any real hardship. When we began in Brixworth one person in every thirteen was a pauper, and there were out-door paupers in every one of the thirty-six parishes of the Union in 1876. Now, in nineteen parishes we have no out-door paupers, and in seven no paupers of any kind in or out of the workhouse. Instead of one pauper in thirteen, the proportion is now one in a hundred and one, and instead of the numbers in the workhouse having gone up, as people declared, they have actually gone down."

IS MAMMON THE GOD OF THE AMERICANS?

YES AND NO. BY TWO DISPUTANTS.

GENERAL HAWKINS writes an article in the North American Review for June, entitled "Brutality and Avarice Triumphant," in which he declares that "Plunder Made Easy" ought to be the motto of the United States:—

From the beginning of the Rebellion to the present time insatiable greed, practically uncontrolled by law or by any decent show of regard for morality or rights of property, has swept over our land, a mighty, invisible power for evil.

A TERRIBLE INDICTMENT.

In support of this terrible indictment he describes, first, the gigantic frauds perpetrated by dishonest contractors during the war. Secondly, the great series of schemes for plunder called the Land Grant Acts, which were bribed through Congress, and which resulted in the handing over to corrupt private corporations large public lands, amounting in the aggregate to a territory larger than France. . . . Thirdly, even worse than this was the granting of public bonds to the civic railroads to the extent of sixty-five million dollars. Fourthly, railway wrecking has become a favourite American industry, and has been reduced to a fine art. Fifthly, land stealing from the Government is one of the most popular and profitable occupations of a considerable number of citizens. The Starroot thieves stole property in this way to the value of six millions sterling. Sixthly, another favourite industry is stealing standing timber from public lands. Seventhly, stock-watering has been carried to such an extent that three-fifths of the alleged stock of the railroads in the United States represent water, that is to say, purely fictitious capital, of five hundred million sterling, has been created by this simple expedient. Eighthly, trusts have been formed which have capitals for three times their real value and are responsible for an unwarrantable and dishonest issue of stocks and bonds to the extent of one thousand million sterling. Ninthly, American officials habitually practise a system of corporate bonds which, if it were initiated in Europe, would lead to the officials being sent to gaol as felons. Tenthly, truck in its worst form in the shape of contractors and contracts flourish everywhere. In addition to these various ways of thieving, General Hawkins proceeds to indict American civilisation under many other heads. American hotels are built like match-boxes, as if for the purpose of providing an expeditious crematory furnace for their unfortunate denizens. American theatres are built like inflammable tinder-boxes. Game is being exterminated throughout the whole continent. Three million buffaloes were killed in three years, and now there are said to be in the American continent only 1,091 buffaloes either running wild or in captivity. Singing birds are being exterminated in the most ruthless fashion, the lobster is being killed out, the choice oysters are following, and the salmon will disappear. But the climax of all American iniquity is the ill-treatment of the Indians. It is a black story covering the American people with everlasting shame. All this is due to the fact that the average American worships mammon, and mammon alone:—

They have established a national standard, and now only one kind of success is acknowledged. Morality has no market value. High character is impracticable, and intellectual achievement pays no dividends. These qualities count for very little in the estimation of the public when compared with the glory of great possessions. The ownership of millions, no matter how obtained, constitutes a theme of almost national admiration; and if they were stolen outright and their possessor is out of prison, the homage would be about the same. The motto is, "We worship the millions in hand, and no questions asked."

COL. INGERSOLL'S REPLY.

The other side of the picture is represented by Colonel Ingersoll, who challenges almost every count in General Hawkins indictment, although he admits that nothing can be said to justify the American treatment of the Indians. He extenuates most of the offences alleged by General Hawkins, and then winds up by an eloquent eulogium upon the improvement that has been effected since the American war. He says:—

The constitution of the United States is now the charter of human freedom, and all laws inconsistent with the idea that all men are entitled to liberty have been repealed. The black man knows that the constitution is his shield, that the laws protect him, that our flag is his, and the black mother feels that her babe belongs to her. Where the slave-pen was used to be, you will find a schoolhouse. The dealer in human flesh is now a teacher; instead of lacerating the back of a child, he develops and illumines the mind of a pupil.

There is now freedom of speech. Men are allowed to utter their thoughts. Lips are no longer sealed by mobs. Never before in the history of our world has so much been done for education.

The amount of business done in a country on credit is the measure of confidence, and confidence is based upon honesty. So it may truthfully be said that, where a vast deal of business is done on credit, an exceedingly large per cent. of the people are regarded as honest. In our country a very large per cent. of contracts are faithfully fulfilled. Probably there is no nation in the world where so much business is done on credit as in the United States. The fact that the credit of the Republic is second to that of no other nation on the globe would seem to be at least an indication of a somewhat general diffusion of honesty.

There is in our country no real foundation for these wide and sweeping slanders. This, in my judgment, is the best government, the best country, in the world. The citizens of this Republic are, on the average, better clothed and fed and educated than any other people. They are fuller of life, more progressive, quicker to take advantage of the forces of nature, than any other of the children of men.

The highest test of civilisation is the treatment of women and children. By this standard America stands first among nations.

There is a magnitude, a scope, a grandeur, about this country—an amplitude—that satisfies the heart and the imagination. We have our faults, we have our virtues, but our country is the best.

THE month of June saw the first number of the London Phonographer, a journal devoted to typewriting and shorthand, published at twopence monthly at 63, Chancery Lane. It is clearly printed, and contains much matter of practical interest to typists and stenographers.

SOME AUSTRIAN STATESMEN.

THE writer of the article on the "Statesmen of Europe" in the Leisure Hour this month deals with some statesmen, who, although well known in Austria-

HERR GREGR.

Hungary, are seldom heard of in western Europe. This gives greater value to the paper, because it is very rarely that you can find any authentic information on the subject of the personalities of Austria-Hungary in English print. Of those described in this month, Dr. Rieger is the best known, the leader of the Old Czechs, although, as is often the case when he has obtained recognition abroad, his day has almost closed in his own country. The writer says:—

At present it is Gregor's star which is in the ascendant; Rieger has been cast to the political dead, and the word "Hajmba" (shame) is constantly thrown in his face. He is an old man now, and with the trembling hand of age he has addressed a melancholy farewell to his people, which has been published in the Pozor. He bids adieu to those who will no longer recognise his leadership, and who so ungratefully reward his lifelong services, his exhausting struggles against the Germans, against mighty governments, even at moments against the Crown itself; combats which he has conducted with the wild enthusiasm of a Ziska and the passionate ardour of a Hus.

Dr. Rieger has certainly done more for the revival of Czechish nationalism than any other man alive, and to him the Bohemians owe the creation of the Czech University and the Czech Academy of Sciences. In company with his father-in-law he was the first who by pen and tongue stemmed the Germanic current that was fast obliterating all the distinctive national features of Bohemia, and for many years he was the most popular man in the country.

Whether he did his Czech compatriots real service by resuscitating their pride in their Slavonic origin, and rendering their amalgamation as Austrians with their German fellow subjects for ever impossible, is a question upon which opinions must differ; but no one can doubt the sincerity of Dr. Rieger's patriotism, and when the passion of electoral contests has subsided, there must inevitably be a feeling of regret throughout Bohemia that the eloquent statesman should at the last elections have failed to find a constituency to return him.

HERR VON KALLAY.

Herr Gregor, the editor of the Narodny-Listy, has been for eighteen years always ready for combat, writing all night and speaking all day, although it was not until 1885 that he was elected to the Reichsrath. He is a man of fierce eloquence and violent temper.

He speaks highly of Herr Von Kallay, who, as Minister of Finance, is Minister for Bosnia and Herzegovina. He speaks Russian, Servian, Roumanian, and Turkish as well as Hungarian and German. He says the appointment of Count Kalnoky to Foreign Affairs has increased the probabilities of European peace.

It may be interesting to note that the new Austrian Parliament contains fifty lawyers, twelve doctors, eight architects and engineers, twenty-nine civil servants, twenty priests, 146 landowners, thirty merchants and manufacturers, nine authors and journalists, forty professors, and six gentlemen of no profession.

THE BACCARAT CASE AND THE LAW.

BY SIR JAMES FITZJAMES STEPHEN.

IN the Nineteenth Century for July Sir James Fitzjames Stephen deals with gambling and the law in a somewhat dull and prosy article, the gist of which is contained in the following remarks:—

Parliament will not have done what it practically can to discourage gambling and bets, until it has condemned it in general terms, which it would be perfectly easy to do, by reciting that, whereas gambling is a practice opposed to the public interests, it is hereby declared to be illegal, and all bets, whether made by agents or between principals, and all contracts ancillary to gambling, shall be void, and if made by an agent the principal may revoke his authority to pay the bet at any time whatever.

There is one point of view in the recent baccarat case which has possibly appealed forcibly to the people at large, though with no great claim to reason upon the part of those who make the appeal. It is occasionally said that the law as it stands exhibits practical partiality in the odious form of undue lenity to the rich in comparison with the poor. How can it be just, it is said, that the Prince of Wales and other people of the highest rank should go to Mr. Wilson's house and play baccarat with impunity, whilst the newspapers are continually filled with accounts of raids upon gambling-houses which do not do a tenth part of the harm that is done by Mr. Wilson's house? The answer, of course, is plain. There is all the difference in the world between keeping a house in which every one may gamble and private gambling which no one can share in without a special invitation.

It may be a question whether, as matters go, too much indulgence is not shown to notorious gamblers who carry on their practices in public. It is true that under 36 and 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, a man who plays or bets in any street, road, highway, or other open and public place to which the public have, or are permitted to have, access, with any cards or instruments of gaming, or any coin, cash, token, or other articles used as an instrument of such wagering or gaming, is a rogue and vagabond, and as such may be imprisoned by a magistrate for three months; but though at most great racecourses this offence is frequently committed with every sort of impudence and impunity, it is not properly punished, as the police are not instructed to apprehend the offenders, as they certainly ought to be.

Upon the whole, I think that nothing beyond the slight modification above suggested could be done by way of addition to the law relating to gambling except a remedy which, if it were efficient, would be worse than the disease.

DISSENT BY AN EX-DISSENTER.

BY THE REV. G. S. REANEY.

THAT there is no one so zealous as a pervert is an old saying, of which the Rev. G. S. Reaney is the latest illustration. Mr. Reaney the other day was a Congregationalist minister, well known and universally respected by his fellow-Congregationalists, who certainly could not be accused of treating him with any harshness or injustice. Recently, however, he has discovered that duty calls him to the Church of England, and thither he has betaken himself, carrying with him the cordial good wishes of the Nonconformists whom he has deserted. Unfortunately this good feeling does not seem to be reciprocated, and in the Newbury House Magazine for July we have an article, entitled "Dissent at the May Meetings," which is much more hostile to Nonconformity than any article I have read for a long time from the pen of a Churchman. Mr. Reaney seems to have gone over not so much to the Church of England as to the Church Defence Association, for his paper is much more like the style of a lecture on Church Defence than that of the graver and more statesmanlike attitude of the Church of England herself. Mr. Reaney's method of dealing with the voluntary churches of which he was until recently a bright and shining light, may be gathered from the last paragraph in his article, in which he summarises what he has to say upon the subject:—

Egotistical, yet depressed; united only as against the Church, but separated into scores of sects and as many necessary schisms; professedly more spiritual than the Establishment, yet cultivating the seeds of secularism in their political policy and national education—Dissent with much zeal and generosity, with many notable, eloquent, scholarly and saintly men, with traditions both splendid and sad, is fast yielding the ground it once held, the spiritual principles it once defended and adorned, and the noble protest it once raised against political tyranny. This may seem a severe judgment; but it is just, and the justness of it is proved by the appearance which English dissent made at its annual functions in London during the last two months. Under the sonorous and common designation, Dissent, there exists a denominationalism as varied as it is mutually antagonistic, as egotistical as it is depressed, and which, while more professedly spiritual than the Church, is deeply secular in the two most vigorous and vehement movements which characterise it to-day—Liberationism and National Elementary Education.

Natural History Papers.—In the Gentleman's Magazine, a Country Parson, writing from a country parsonage, gives us a study of the natural history of his parish. In the Contemporary, Mr. Pigott describes the last home of the bearded tit in England. The haunts of the black sea-bass and lizard hunting in the Pyrenees are described in Scribner's Magazine. In the Atlantic Monthly an article on "The Male Ruby Throat" continues the discussion of the question as to how it is that the male humming bird takes no part in the rearing of its young. In a paper in Longman's the writer protests against the habit of wholesale murder which is exterminating many of our rarest birds.

HOW TO FEDERATE THE EMPIRE.

A PROFESSOR'S SCHEME.

PROFESSOR CYRIL RANSOME discusses this question under the title "Wanted, a Statesman," in the Contemporary Review for July. He passes in review several schemes, and sums up strongly in favour of admitting Colonial representatives into the House of Commons.

In the first place, it may be noted that such a plan would be strictly in accordance with precedent, for Henry VIII. at the same time when he called members from Cheshire and from Wales called them also from Calais, and members from Calais sat in the House of Commons, with full rights of membership, down to the time when the town was lost to the English Crown. In the second place, it is in accordance with the practice of at least one other Colonial power, for members for Martinique and Algeria sit in the French House of Deputies. It is in accord, too, with the views of Burke, who would have wished to see Colonial representatives at Westminster had the conditions of time and space rendered such an experiment possible in his day. It seems also to be in accord with the wishes of the Prime Minister.

In the second place, the shrinkage of the world has made the representation of the colonies at Westminster a very simple matter, and if the basis of the representation throughout the Empire were to be taken at one member for every 60,000, we should have a House of Commons numbering 832 members. In the United States, the scale is one member to every 170,000, which would give a House of Commons of 294. In the third place, there would have to be some readjustment of functions. To meet this difficulty Mr. Ransome makes the following suggestion:—

It would clearly be inadmissible for the Colonial representatives to sit and vote upon all affairs as the members for Calais did in the old days. They would not wish it, and we should not allow it. The problem to be solved, therefore, is narrowed down to the discovery of some plan by which a distinction could be drawn between Imperial and local affairs, the one to be the province of the House as a whole, the other of the representatives of the United Kingdom. Three methods of dealing with the case present themselves immediately—(I.) A large extension of the system of local government, which should reduce to a minimum, even if it could not eventually get rid of, the domestic business of the United Kingdom, or of the several sections of it, possibly carrying with it the reduction of membership in the Imperial Parliament in exchange for the constitution of a local assembly; (II.) The free use of the expedient of Grand Committees constituted on the lines of the several sections of the United Kingdom; (III.) The withdrawal of Colonial members when business was in hand which the Speaker defined as domestic. In all these cases the Constitutional crux would lie in determining the relations of the heads of departments to the Imperial Parliament, to the localised Parliament or Grand Committee, and to one another. It is a problem of enormous difficulty; but there is nothing to show that it is insoluble.

Letters of Charlotte Brontë.—In Macmillan for July there is another instalment of the unpublished letters of Charlotte Brontë, in one of which she distinctly says that her brother Branwell never knew that she had written a single line, which proves that he never claimed the credit of her writings. There are some interesting letters in which Charlotte Brontë defends the character of Rochester in "Jane Eyre."

A MURDER ON THE EVE OF ST. JOHN.

A WEIRD GHOST STORY FROM SWITZERLAND.

THERE is an excellent ghost story quite of the first class in the July number of Blackwood. It is called the "Eve of St. John in a Deserted Châlet," and is told by Frank Cowper as a marvellous experience through which he passed on a little plateau quite hidden from the Lake of Geneva, but sufficiently near to be visible from the hotel of Territet. If it be a genuine experience, and not merely spun from the imagination of the writer, in which case, of course, it would lose all interest, it is impossible to deny that Mr. Cowper is right in saying "it seemed as easy to explain it as a spiritual manifestation as to believe in so marvellously circumstantial a dream."

The story is briefly as follows:—High in the hills around Lake Geneva, Frank Cowper, belated, found himself at midnight beside a ruined châlet, on the Eve of St. John. Cold, weary, and faint from loss of blood by a fall, he sought refuge within. There was a dank, horrible smell inside the châlet, and the light which he had seen in the window as he entered it disappeared. Groping in the darkness his foot kicked against a bundle, which he took to be a bundle of sticks or twigs. He sat down upon it and the twigs, or what he thought to be twigs, cracked and broke under his weight. Just as he was nodding off to sleep something cold grasped his hand and held it as cold as ice:—

A low, unearthly, far-away laugh—a laugh so full of blood-curdling, heartless, cruel, mocking devilry, such as I never heard before, and I hope never to hear again, broke the dead silence. At the same time a shadow seemed to pass between me and the pale light which marked the other window.

As he sat there with his hand fast as with paralysis, the twigs in the sack on which he was sitting cracked when he moved, and a pale phosphorescent glow, which he had noticed on entering the châlet, seemed brighter over the sack than elsewhere. There was a great tub in the corner, a kind of tub which he had never seen before. He looked closer at the sack, and noticed what looked like three long twigs lying almost across it; he looked closer still, and to his horror he saw they were the emaciated fingers of what was almost a skeleton. Springing up in horror, his foot kicked the sack, and the skull rolled out on the floor. But there was worse to follow:—

I started up, and would have rushed from the hut . . .

"Good heavens; what is that?" I gasped, as, instead of stepping forward, I shrank back in greater horror. A figure was entering the hut. A wizened decrepit figure staggering under a heavy load. It made no sound as it came in. I could not see its face. The load on its back seemed to be alive. It stirred and writhed as it lay across the shoulders of its bearer. The figure came close to me. As it stepped over the sack, the same horrible, blood-curdling, cruel low laugh or chuckle grated on the silence. It paused and looked up. Can any words describe that face, the expression, I wonder? Malignant, gratified hate, the cruel smile of a dangerous lunatic, cunning and diabolical; the ferocity of a brutal murderer, were all in that awful face. The face of a man long dead, grinning, dry, black, and repulsive, like the mummies in the morgue of the Hospice of St. Bernard.

The figure passed on. It went towards the huge tub in the corner. The burden still convulsively writhed at intervals. I now noticed, for the first time, that a vapour seemed to curl up and float over the great caldron. The figure, with its still feebly moving burden, had reached the corner. Silently it came up to the tub. The burden twitched convulsively. There was a heave. The vapour seemed suddenly agitated, and the figure remained alone, intently watching the interior of the tub. The vibrating of the huge vessel and the twisting vapour told of some frightful contortions within. But all was silent as the grave. I could stand it no longer. I rushed to the door.

Notwithstanding this terrible experience Mr. Cowper managed to return to the châlet and go to sleep, which says a great deal for the strength of his nerves. When he awoke he remembered what he had seen, as if in a horrible dream, but in the light of day he saw the ghastly hands and the grinning skull. He went to examine the gigantic wooden vessel, and in it he found another skeleton. The head had fallen off, and was lying at the side of a heap of mouldering bones. He hurried down to the lake and came upon two peasants who upon hearing that he had passed the night in the châlet asked him if he had seen a ghost. He asked them why the châlet was left neglected. They told him that it had once belonged to a fairly well-to-do peasant:—

The husband's life was wretched. The douanier was young, big, brutal. The husband was small, old, cunning. It was when the cattle had gone to the mountains. There was a very good path up there then. Pierroch and his wife had gone up to their châlet with their cows. "It was just such a night as last night, and it was—why, it is the Feast of St. John to-day!" and the two peasants looked at each other and nodded significantly. The douanier was seen climbing the mountain path. He never was seen again. Nor were Pierroch or his wife ever heard of after. The châlet was visited a week later, but nothing was found. The huge tub was full of water as usual. For there was no water up there, and that made the pasture less useful than it would have been. All the water for the cattle had to be accumulated in that large tub, either from the snow or the rain. All was in fairly good order. A sackful of hay lay on the floor of the stall. The few cows Pierroch possessed had all disappeared, and the door stood wide open. Nothing more was ever heard of any one of the three. Since then the place bore an evil name. It was called the "Revenants," and no one ever went there now. Only on St. John's Eve a light was always seen.

Clearly Mr. Frank Cowper should immediately place himself in communication with the Society for Psychical Research, and if there be any truth in his narrative a picked body of psychical researchers should spend the Eve of St. John in that ruined châlet.

Love Letters by Mrs. Lucy Clifford.—Some years ago Mrs. W. K. Clifford delighted the world of letters with some charming love-letters which she published in the Fortnightly; we have now a second instalment in the English Illustrated for July, under the title "On the Wane: A Sentimental Correspondence," which describes how two young people who were engaged, cooled off and made it up and then cooled off again. The first time the man broke it off, the second time the woman. The woman has much the best of it. Mrs. Clifford has a marvellous knack of making her letter-writers real and vivid. She is one of the few women of letters whose letters are as charming as herself. Very few women, and still fewer men, write letters that do them justice. Mrs. Clifford has the art, and there is about her such an abundance of epistolary activity that it is delightful to see her making articles out of imaginary correspondence which is much better worth reading than most people's genuine correspondence.

A FRENCH LADY OF LETTERS.

THE "young lady of the eighteenth century" whom M. Philippe Godet elects to honour in the Revue des Deux Mondes, is Mademoiselle Isabelle de Tuyl, better known to the general reader as Madame de la Charrière, the author of "Caliste." Sainte Beuve has already celebrated her wit, her charm and her good sense. Above all, he admired in her the perfect naturalness of her mind and the absence of all pose, moral or intellectual. The unpublished correspondence from which M. Godet has compiled his further study, and which dates back to the days of her girlhood, entirely bears out this view. Here, for instance, is a passage relating to her theories of life. After saying that she has no system, that "they only serve to lead you methodically astray," she continues, "I read the teachings of the theologians with boredom, of atheists with horror, of libertines with disgust. At fourteen I hoped to understand everything. I have renounced that ambition since. I have remained in a state of very humble and fairly tranquil scepticism; when I have more knowledge and more health, perhaps I shall perceive more altitudes. At present all that I see is at the outside probability, all that I feel is doubt." She does not believe much in exceptional virtue. "I admire heroes and martyrs as I ought to do, but I think it is dangerous to put oneself in a position which demands long continuance at that pitch. My intention is certainly to be a good woman, but there are a hundred thousand husbands with whom it would be extremely difficult to me, and with whom I should be sorry to answer for myself. God keep me from a fool!"

Her life before marriage was filled with occupation. She did not marry until she was thirty-one. Then after deliberate choice of a man with whom she felt that she would not bore herself when they chanced to be left together, she was happily able to fulfil her girlish conception. "I should like," she wrote "to be the faithful and virtuous wife of an upright man, but for that I must both love and be loved." She loved her husband not passionately and romantically, but moderately, loyally, and well, and he loved her perhaps a little more. After a very short trial, she writes to her favourite brother, "We have been married for eleven days, I have just counted them on my fingers. We have only quarrelled twice—and luckily" (the handwriting of her husband interpolates) "the fault was all on my side." Eighteen months later, in writing to an intimate friend, she gives more serious testimony to her satisfaction. "I am not always the best or sweetest-tempered woman in the world, but no woman ever liked her husband better than I liked mine. I don't remember to have been ever bored in a tête-à-tête with him, and yet we are often alone." They possessed two requisites for happy companionship; they could each acknowledge their own imperfections, and they were full of individual resource. She loved books, music, painting, and her fellow-creatures. He shared in all those tastes. She was Dutch by birth, he Swiss. Their mutual language was French, and she was so fully abreast of the Parisian thought of her day that French literature claims her as a Frenchwoman. "I should like to be a native of the world," was her own ardent expression of nationality. This particular paper is concerned almost wholly with the story of her marriage as told by herself. She is as frank in the expression of her ideas regarding it as she is about everything else, and her charming capacity of being interested must infallibly interest every one who reads. "Not a moment in life is indifferent to me," she cries; "every minute is happy or unhappy. They are all something."

THE A B C OF MONEY.

BY MR. ANDREW CARNEGIE.

IN the North American Review for June, Mr. Andrew Carnegie contributes twenty-eight pages to set forth the true doctrine of currency in such a way that the way-faring man, though a fool, shall not err therein. He begins by stating, what is not generally known, that the McKinley Bill has hit him harder than almost any one else in the United States, because it has reduced the duties upon iron and steel by 20, 25, and 30 per cent. Mr. Carnegie is a thoroughgoing advocate of the gold standard. As a treatise upon the currency, Mr. Carnegie's paper is one of the most lucid that I have seen for a long time. It is too long to summarise, but any one who is interested in the bi-metallist controversy will do well to read it. Mr. Carnegie will probably reprint it, and distribute it broadcast in both countries. Its weak point is the assumption that gold is not liable to fluctuation like silver or any other commodity. Ninety-two per cent. of the business of the United States is done with cheques and drafts, which is equivalent to a paper currency. Silver rose from 96 to 121 as the result of the speculation when the Silver Bill was introduced; it has now fallen from 121 to 97. The only effect of that legislation has been that the owners of unsaleable silver have succeeded in unloading upon the American Government 390,000,000 dols. of their silver. Some idea of the importance of the currency question may be gained from the following passage, in which Mr. Carnegie distinctly subordinates protection to the gold standard, and declares he would prefer free trade to bi-metallism:—

Shall we discard the gold basis, or even endanger it? This is the question before the people of the United States to-day.

The New York Evening Post is a free-trade organ, but it has recently said that it would rather be the party to pass ten McKinley Bills than one Silver Bill such as was urged; and I, a Republican and a believer in the wisdom of protection, tell you that I would rather give up the McKinley Bill and pass the Mills Bill, if for the exchange I could have the present Silver Bill repealed and silver treated like other metals. In the next presidential campaign, if I have to vote for a man in favour of silver and protection, or for a man in favour of the gold standard and free trade, I shall vote and work for the latter, because my judgment tells me that even the tariff is not half so important for the good of the country as the maintenance of the highest standard for the money of the people.

RESIDENTIAL CLUBS FOR YOUNG PEOPLE.

THE current number of Help contains a description of a scheme which ought to succeed, meeting as it does a great want in the shape of cheap lodging for young people of both sexes. It is proposed to build in Kennington, in Hampstead, and in the City, large residential clubs for young men and women, which will be conducted on the basis of co-operative housekeeping, and will supply an excellently furnished room, lighted by electricity, reached by an elevator, and maintained in first-class style at a rent varying from 10s. to 18s. a week. Each block of building will contain 300 or 400 rooms. There will be clubs for young men, and clubs for young women, and while the sexes will be kept apart in their own private rooms, they will be allowed to mix together in the reception-room, the restaurant, the library, and reading-rooms.

THE REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE "ARENA" AND ITS EDITOR.

IHAVE in previous numbers of this REVIEW described the Forum and North American, now it is the turn of the Arena. The portrait of its editor I reproduce from the June issue. The Arena is not yet two years old, but it has already established a position for itself in the first line. Mr. Flower, its editor, impresses his personality upon its pages, which is more than can be said of the editors of either the Forum or

Cordially Yours
B. O. Flower.

MR. FLOWER, EDITOR OF THE "ARENA."

North American. If we may judge of the editor from the magazine he edits, I should say that Mr. Flower is a young man with strong sympathies for the people, and whose humanitarian instincts have not yet crystallised in any definite formula in politics or in religion. In the current number he describes his slumming experiences in New York, and there is never a number of his magazine which does not bear the impress of the mind of a man who has been down into the social depths. But Mr. Flower is not a socialist properly so-called. He has great sympathies with socialism, especially in its protest against the slavery of women, but he recoils against any system which destroys liberty and cripples individualism. He is a man with an open mind, who, if he does not believe in millionaires, nevertheless is quite open to believe in ghosts. He does not bar his magazine to the orthodox, but they never seem to be quite at home in his pages. He is a spirit in revolt, who is beating against his prison bars, and does not yet see his way out. There is more variety of a certain sort and within a certain range in his magazine than in others of the same class. The tendency of American reviews, with the exception of the Forum and the North American, is to become really dull. The Arena is never dull, although it is sometimes mad, or, to speak more correctly, it sometimes publishes a mad article, which, after all, is rather welcome after all the stodgy, respectable, dull outpourings which occupy so much space in periodical literature. Mr. Flower has a good deal of the instinct of the journalist in him, and he has from time to time contrived many ingenious devices for increasing the interest of his readers in the magazine. One of these is the "No Name Series," which obtains its name from the fact that each article is anonymous, and prizes are offered for guessing the identity of the writer. The magazine is devoted to the free discussion of living issues by the ablest thinkers of the day. The Arena numbers among its contributors some of the best modern American and English writers. The tendencies of the Arena are Radical, not to say Socialist. It is an open arena for the discussion of subjects tabooed by the Forum and the North American. The editor wisely refuses to regard the vital and dominating questions of human society, the right and wrong relations of men and women, as lying outside the sphere of a high-class review. There is more audacity about the Arena than in its older rivals. It has an open mind upon every subject, from the immortality of the soul to the scavenging of the streets; but it has a tolerably clear conviction that whatever else may be true, the conventional orthodoxy is false, whether in economics, morals, politics, or religion. It is a thoroughly live magazine, with more of the American woman in it than any of its rivals. Special prominence is given to the leading moral, social, educational, and economic problems agitating society, which are discussed in its pages. Humorous and pathetic sketches, autobiographical notices, historical passages, and poems are a characteristic feature of the magazine.

The Arena for June is even more desperately strenuous than usual. The Rev. Herber Newton writes to the editor:—

Let me express to you my ardent admiration for the strong moral tone you are breathing into the Arena. It is certainly one of the most hopeful and significant signs of the times that two such magazines as the Arena and the REVIEW OF REVIEWS should be not merely devoted to letters, but powerful agents for Social Reform.

Mr. Newton couples us together; but although I am tolerably strenuous, I cannot hold a candle to Mr. Flower, of the Arena, whose magazine from first page to last page is strained almost to breaking point with overcharged earnestness.

IS SUICIDE THE BETTER PART?

The most striking paper is William A. Dromgoole's short story, entitled "The Better Part." It is a brief tale, full of tragic force, of an orphan girl of good birth and refinement, who, after long struggling against adverse circumstances, found herself shut up to starvation or vice and committed suicide. The story is called "The Better Part," and a more thoroughgoing laudation of suicide has seldom appeared of late years:—

Dear heart! dear, sad soul! She had sought her refuge and indeed found strength. Strength! I brand him liar who calls it other.

One hand lay on the coverlid beside her, and one upon her breast half hidden by the dark blood-roses covering her heart. And that heart when I placed my hand over it—was still.

Broken! who dares say suicide? I say it was the grandest blow that weakness struck for virtue—her life, offered in the name of outraged womanhood. The choice lay open. Shame or suicide! and like the real woman that she was, she made her choice for virtue. Conquered by fate, overcome by adversity, those who should have been helpers turned tempters. Who dares meet God in his soul and say she did not choose the better part?

IS LUXURY A CRIME?

Professor Buchanan publishes the first part of his paper entitled "Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes," in which he denounces the chief crime as ostentation. He says that the millionaire who spent £147,000 upon his stables was a criminal, for the sum invested at seven per cent. would permanently sustain a reformatory which would rescue fifty waifs from the slums of New York every year until the end of time. New York spends a million annually on flowers, and her police stations shelter 150,000 homeless persons every year. He quotes a remarkable passage from one of Abraham Lincoln's speeches on the subject of the danger to American liberty of the accumulation of excessive wealth in the hands of a few colossal corporations:—

I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned, and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavour to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicion may prove groundless.

SLUMMING IN NEW YORK.

Under the title of "Society's Exiles," the editor describes some of his slumming experiences in New York, and illustrates his paper with a series of photographs taken by flash light, in underground New York. After describing what has been done in Liverpool and in London in the matter of the housing of the poor, Mr. Flower concludes as follows:—

To my mind, it seems far more practicable for philanthropic minded men to prosecute this work as a business investment, specifying in their wills that rents shall not rise above a figure necessary to insure a fair interest on the money, rather than leave it for city governments, as in the latter case it would be in great danger of becoming an additional stronghold for unscrupulous city officials to use for political purposes. I know of no field where men with millions can so bless the race as by following Mr. Peabody's example in our great cities. If, instead of willing every year princely sums to old, rich, and conservative educational institutions, which already possess far more money than they require, wealthy persons would bequeath sums for the erection of buildings after the manner of the Victoria Square or the Peabody Dwellings, a wonderful transformation would soon appear in our cities.

WANTED, A NEW COLUMBUS.

Mr. Julian Hawthorne proclaims that the time is ripe for the appearance of a new Columbus who will reveal to us a new world, material, moral and religious. He thinks that in Keeley there may be a possible prophet who has discovered a new law that substances of all kinds are specific conditions of etheric vortices. If we can control vibrations we can create substances, and in the future labour for daily bread will be unnecessary, as bread will be made out of stones by the mere creation of a vibration. Side by side with other material transformations there will be a re-establishment of religion. Ecclesiastical forms and dogmas will vanish, and nature will be recognised as a language whereby God converses with man.

AN ASTRONOMER ON SPIRITUALISM.

M. Camille Flammarion begins a paper on the Unknown, in which he describes his experience in the investigation of spiritual phenomena. It is the work of an accomplished man of science, who has brought to the subject a candid mind, and who states the conclusions at which he has arrived with lucidity and precision. He says:—

Personally, I declare that I have not yet discovered for myself one fact which proves with certainty the existence of soul as separate from body.

If we have no clear and irrefutable proofs, we have still the aid of a goodly number of observations, establishing the conclusion that we are compassed about by a set of phenomena, and by powers differing from the physical order commonly observed day by day; and these phenomena urge us to pursue every line of investigation having for its end a psychical acquaintance with human nature.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Mr. Julius Chambers, editor of the New York World, writes on "The Chivalry of the Press," in an article the chief point of which is that the defeat of Horace Greeley in his candidature for the Presidency, represented the revolt of the people against the dictation of the press, and that MacGahan, the war correspondent, was the greatest and noblest of the knight errants of the newspaper. He concludes by maintaining that the newspaper of to-day, evolved from rudimentary forms, is a splendid and heroic organism. The Rev. T. E. Allen discusses the question whether Spencer's doctrine of inconceivability has driven religion into the region of the unknowable.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

The North American Review for June is a very solid number. It opens with an article by Mr. Tracy, Secretary for the Navy, on "Our New Warships," which describes the extraordinary departure which the United States has taken in naval construction since 1881. It is largely a reply to Mr. White's criticisms on the defects of the American ships.

A PLEA FOR COMPULSORY GYMNASTICS.

Lord Meath writes on "Compulsory Physical Education," in which he points out, that what with trains and trams every one is not using his own legs, and that, especially in America, it is necessary that children should be trained in gymnastics as well as in drill:—

Great Britain is almost the only great European State which does not insist upon its school authorities caring for the bodies as well as the brains of its children. In Germany, France, Sweden, Norway, and Switzerland physical instruction is compulsory in all schools.

Two hours a week compulsory gymnastics is considered sufficient in Germany, because when children leave school they pass into the army. But as in England there is no compulsory military service, we must not be satisfied with two hours a week, which would be quite inadequate, but must endeavour to get at least an hour a day set apart for physical instruction in our national schools—if possible, divided into two half-hours, one in the morning and one in the afternoon. When we consider the number of hours a day which it is thought necessary that British public-school boys of the richer classes should spend in playing athletic games in the open air, it cannot be said to be excessive if we ask that poor city children, who have little or no means of exercising their limbs in this healthy fashion, shall have physical exercise for an hour a day under the direction of skilled instructors.

THE LAW AND THE LYNCHERS.

Mr. George T. Curtis discusses various questions as to the bearings of international law upon the question of the recent lynchings in New Orleans. He entirely approves of Mr. Blaine's action. He says that Italy cannot demand that the United States Government shall take the punishment of the murderers out of the hands of the State authorities; and Mr. Blaine has defined with entire precision all that the United States can or ought to do. He has declared that, if it shall appear that the local authorities connived at the doings of the mob, the President will ask Congress for an appropriation of money to indemnify the families of the murdered Italians for the loss of their lives. With this Italy must be content.

OTHER ARTICLES.

There is a pleasant paper, entitled, "A Chat About Newfoundland," by Lady Blake, which seems to be in some things a curious reproduction of Ireland on the other side of the Atlantic. Gen. John Gibbon defends Gen. Mead's strategy at Gettysburg against the criticisms of Gen. Sickles. The shorter papers deal with Secretary Rusk and the farmers, changes in the Ballot Law, the Relation of Floods to Forests, the Contagion of Leprosy.

THE FORUM.

The Forum for June is as poor a number as the editor has ever brought out. It is very dull. Its only new feature is the introduction of a list of the new books of the month, somewhat in the same way as in the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, but not so complete. There are three articles avowedly financial, and three others which deal with financial subjects.

A RATIONAL SYSTEM OF PHYSICAL TRAINING.

President W. de W. Hyde describes the Sargent system of physical training, which at a cost of a little more than three pounds gives every student, not hopelessly handicapped by heredity or dissipation, a sound and healthy body. Here is his account of the system:—

In Bowdoin College every student is measured, and receives a chart in which his line is drawn and a handbook in which exercises for making up his defects are prescribed according to the Sargent system. Each class prepares a drill for the annual athletic exhibition, and we maintain a ball nine, a football team, and a boat crew. Our main reliance, however, for physical education is upon athletic exercises under the immediate instruction, direction, and control of the director of the gymnasium. The Freshmen receive sufficient military drill to give them erect form and graceful bearing, and to enable the class to be directed in their subsequent work by military orders. Club-swinging is taught during the remainder of the year, as this is found to be an exercise in which a class can be most effectively brought to act in unity, and in which students take enough interest to keep it up afterwards. By the end of the Freshman year the members of the class are able to stand erect, to obey orders, to keep time, and to endure without fatigue or injury a half-hour of vigorous exercise. During the first half of the Sophomore year the class is taught the elements of wrestling. During the last half of the year the same is done in boxing. The students practise the blows and guards, and learn the elements of self-defence. At the end of the period of exercise a space of a minute or two is allowed for boxing or wrestling matches between the pairs who have been practising together. In the Junior year fencing with single sticks and in the Senior year fencing with foils and masks are taught in the same manner.

WANTED, A NEW CONSENSUS CREED.

The Rev. Dr. Charles Briggs, who was recently tried for heresy, urges that every Christian should rally to the position of the Anglican Church, that the Apostles' Creed and the Nicene Creed are sufficient. In attacking the Westminster Confession, he says that 666 texts quoted as proofs of this doctrine are from the Epistles of St. Paul and the Epistle to the Hebrews, 248 from the Gospels, and 247 from the other writers of the New Testament.

The aim of Christianity is to march forward toward the full realisation of the Christian ideal. We should use our utmost endeavour to construct a new consensus creed that will better express Christian faith than the old creeds. The Alliance of Presbyterian Churches is approaching this problem with some degree of hopefulness of ultimate success. When each of the great alliances of Christian denominations has reduced its symbols to consensus creeds, it will be easier to frame a consensus creed in which all may unite.

THE SUBMERGED AMERICANS.

The Hon. William McAdoo maintains that the extent to which America is being submerged by the pauper labour of Europe is due to the protective tariff which compels European labour and capital to establish itself inside of the American frontier. The only result of McKinleyism is to transfer the foreign competitor to American soil, where his labour competes directly with that of the American workmen, and his ignorance threatens the institutions of the English-speaking American.

THE APOTHEOSIS OF AMERICA.

Ulysses D. Eddy dons the prophet's mantle, and predicts the marvellous future of the American Republic. The first European war, he says, will see the transference of the world's surplus capital from London to New York. America is going to dominate the world, not only commercially, but also in art and literature.

The fittest qualities for permanent dominance, gained from the mingling of the blood of all the nations of Europe, will have survived. Then from this nation, strengthened in character, trained in intellect, and elevated by these great events, may be expected works of genius in all the arts, and a literature of fact and imagination such as the world has not yet seen.

OTHER ARTICLES.

President Francis A. Walker discusses the Census of 1890 in an article in which he points out that, instead of reaching a hundred million population in 1900, the United States is not likely to contain more than eighty million inhabitants. Mr. Henry Holt, writing on the "International Copyright Law," thinks that there is more chance of a new race of Irvings, Longfellows, Hawthornes and Emersons to bring us back from Anglomania and many other manias to our own free ways, and to a new delight in our own free life.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

WITH the exception of a somewhat spread-eagled prophecy, couched in the vein of genial optimism, concerning the future of Australia, by Sir Henry Parkes, and a story by Mr. Rudyard Kipling, the Contemporary is this month somewhat sombre.

MR. KIPLING'S NEW STORY.

"The Finest Story in the World," which livens up the somewhat solid articles of a strenuous type in the Contemporary, is by Mr. Rudyard Kipling. It is somewhat slight, and plays with the fringes of the immense question of reincarnation. Charlie Mears, a bank clerk, has reminiscences of his previous life without being conscious that they are reminiscences. He described with vivid reality the life which he lived when he was a galley slave, first in a Greek galley, and then in a warship of the Vikings. These reminiscences occur in a haphazard fashion and finally disappear altogether when their subject falls in love with a tobacconist's shop-girl. The conception upon which this tale is based opens up great possibilities to the novelist. I have only known two persons, both women, who firmly believed that they had a conscious memory of experiences which they had passed through in a previous state of existence. In this, as in other respects, Madame Blavatzky has influenced the thought of her contemporaries more than most people realise.

IN DEFENCE OF NEWMAN.

In an article entitled "Philaethes: some Words on a Misconception of Cardinal Newman," Mr. Wilfrid Ward devotes nearly twenty pages to the examination of Dr. Abbott's contemptuous estimate of Cardinal Newman's position. Mr. Ward rages against Dr. Abbott, whom he cannot forgive for having charged Newman with immoral shiftiness. Speaking of Dr. Abbott's book, he says:—

But such a work as this, inaccurate in statement, partisan in character, and based throughout on the travesty of a misconception of the man whom its author assails, can satisfy no one except other blind partisans, who welcome any attack on views they dislike, caring more for statements in harmony with their prejudices than for statements accurate in fact. As a serious contribution to the important matters it reviews it can have no value, whether to those who agree with the author's conclusions or to those who do not.

THE JUBILEE OF "PUNCH."

On the 17th of this month Punch celebrates its jubilee, and Mr. Spielmann, editor of the Magazine of Art, contributes an historical article under the title of "Punch and his Artists." The paper, which is full of detail of the biographical historical order, is one which it is impossible to summarise. He quotes from Mr. Birket Foster a statement that the workmen all thought the title Punch a very stupid one. Mr. Tenniel's first drawing appeared in 1850. He has designed some two thousand cartoons, to say nothing of minor work. He became first known to Punch by his illustrations of Æsop's Fables. Du Maurier, who joined in 1860, has done drawings of all kinds to the number of five thousand. Mr. Linley Sambourne made his début in 1867, and has since then had three thousand five hundred drawings in Punch. Mr. Spielmann says of Punch:—

It is more than a comic journal; it is and has been for fifty years a school of wood-drawing, of pen-draughtsmanship, and wood-engraving of the first rank; nay, it is a school of art in itself. The effect of its art teaching has been widely felt, and on this ground alone its doings should command interest and justify a close examination into its rise and progress.

THE JUBILEE OF THE TONIC SOL-FA.

Mr. J. S. Curwen, writing on the jubilee of the tonic sol-fa system, quotes a saying of a Dublin Catholic organist, to the effect that the simple and imperfect attempt to join in Presbyterian church song week by week, did more to train the voice and ear than all the listening to good music in Roman Catholic churches.

Of the importance of music in popular culture Mr. Curwen strongly insists, strengthening his argument by a quotation from an address delivered from the new chair of music at the university of Melbourne by Mr. Marshall Hall:—

Music, as Mr. Hall insists, is an idealised language of the emotions, capable of arousing, purifying and sustaining these. The emotions are the backbone of life. Man is not what he knows, but what he feels; his emotions are a part of his physical being, to be guided into right or wrong channels; active agents for good or evil, possible to deprave, but impossible to suppress. The world suffers not from too much emotion, but from too little. The ideal man is one whose emotions are strong, trained to flow in the right channels and equals of, not slaves to, his will. Music possesses unexampled power to stimulate and control our emotions. Hence the place of the popular musical educationist among national benefactors. To scatter a love of music broadcast, to open the gates of musical life to the masses, is to tame and humanise, to increase the store of national self-control, to lift and purify the national current of feeling.

This is all very fine, but the Philistine will remark that musical people as a class certainly do not possess any unexampled power of stimulating or controlling their emotions. They are very much like other people; as for practical work of self-control, elevation and purification, they are certainly not above the average.

TWO VIEWS OF THE EDUCATION QUESTION.

Mr. Lyulph Stanley writes on the Free Education Bill, specifying ten points in which the Government Education Bill ought to be amended, without raising the question of public against private management. He thinks that the Bill gives to denominationalism what will tend to make the Establishment odious and unpopular, and thereby hasten disestablishment. Mr. Samuel Smith publishes a plea for continuation schools. In studying the systems in Germany and Switzerland he was impressed with the enormous improvement of the continuation system of education which in Germany has almost extirpated the class of ragged and pauper children. Mr. Smith appeals for a lengthening of the school age, but he chiefly advocates the immediate establishment of continuation classes, which would bridge over the interval between thirteen and sixteen. The tendency of opinion in Germany is to make attendance at continuation schools universally compulsory.

Thomas Binney—Mr. Birchenough, in the Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review for July, has an article on Thomas Binney, who was in many ways the greatest Congregational minister that this century has produced. Many Congregationalists, who owe much to the old man eloquent, will be glad to read this tribute to him whose life, as Mr. Birchenough says, was an inspiration, and his sermons a spiritual tonic.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

THE Nineteenth Century is hardly an average number. I quote elsewhere some extracts from Sir James Stephen's paper on Gambling and the Law.

HOW TO UTILISE THE NAVAL VOLUNTEERS.

The best article is the shortest; it is written by Mr. Arnold Foster, to whom the navy owes a great debt, and who in his way has done as much as any one of his years to strengthen the services and to improve the naval strength of this Empire. The subject of his paper is the proposed destruction of the naval volunteers, against which he lifts up his voice on high, and protests with an emphasis which will command the sympathy of any rational being. Any more demented folly than that recommended by Admiral Tryon's committee has seldom disgraced the British Admiralty. Mr. Arnold Foster proposes, instead of turning the naval volunteers into Marines to develop them by placing at their disposal the hundred ex-first class torpedo boats which are now laid up as so much lumber in various dockyards. He would supply a torpedo boat to each port on condition that the naval volunteers undertook to provide two complete crews to keep the vessel in order and the crews in efficiency. This or some similar proposal ought to be adopted. It is unpardonable if we allow professional jealousy to stifle the volunteer movement in the navy.

THE ARMY AS A PUBLIC DEPARTMENT.

General Sir John Chesney has a long paper of twenty pages, in which he propounds his scheme for the improvement of the administration of the army. Long as his paper is, it is only the first part of his whole treatise, and the second instalment is promised on a future occasion. His idea is embodied in the following paragraph:—

The first reform needed is a readjustment of the relations between the permanent heads of departments and the Minister of the day, and a proper allocation of their relative responsibilities to Parliament. Until and unless this primary reform is carried out, all minor reforms, such as the redistribution of duties between departments within the office, or the substitution of one title or office for another, will prove insufficient and ineffectual, the administration of the army will continue to be defective, and the country will fail to get value for the money it spends on it. What is wanted is a system under which the Minister, instead of professing to do everything himself, shall supervise the conduct of the business by others, giving the final decision where that is needed, and acting as the intermediate agent between Parliament and the department. Let this change be made, and responsibility will then have a definite meaning, and be distributed in a rational way.

HOW TO PROVIDE OPEN SPACES FOR THE PEOPLE.

Robert Hunter, in his paper on Fair Taxation of Ground Rents, has got hold of a good idea for the preservation of open spaces for the people. He would provide them by laying down a law that fifty acres of open space should be left free for recreation and public gardens in every square mile and a half that is built upon; that is to say, as London increases at the rate of one and three-quarters square miles per annum, the open spaces of London should be increased at least by fifty acres per annum. He would obtain the funds for this by taxing the unearned increment now paid in ground rents to the landlord.

A tenth of the new ground-rents is, therefore, the least that London can ask, while perhaps it might be inexpedient to ask more.

One-tenth of the estimated increased rental of £123,278 would be £12,327. One would not do much with £12,000, but this, it must be remembered, would be the produce of the tax for the first year only. In the second year the income of the Open Space Fund would be £24,000, and at the end of twenty years it would be £240,000; at the end of thirty years, £360,000.

Our proposal is, then, that a tax of two shillings in the pound should be imposed on all ground-rents or increased annual land values derived from the erection of houses on land hitherto uncovered.

THE WILD WOMEN AS POLITICIANS.

Mrs. Lynn Linton is now perpetually on the war-path against her own sex. Her latest idea of what is just and expedient in the campaign on which she has entered is to describe those ladies who advocate woman's suffrage as wild women, from which I suppose Mrs. Lynn Linton thinks herself a tame specimen of her sex. This probably consoles her for having missed the vocation which she says is the raison d'être of women. Mrs. Lynn Linton, although a wife, has never been a mother; possibly this is one cause of the bitter shrewishness with which she pursues all those who, being mothers, are also politicians. Another shrewish touch in the present article is one in which she declares that if England were to enfranchise women it would become a "hag ridden" country. If we go on at this rate we shall soon have Mrs. Lynn Linton described as an old hag; which would be very impolite and improper; but would it be more so than this application of "hag ridden" to our School Boards and Boards of Guardians, merely because woman can elect and be elected to these bodies?

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE TO IMPROVE OUR WOODLANDS?

Sir Herbert Maxwell once more makes his moan over the deplorable backwardness of England in providing for the preservation of forests and the improvement of our woodlands. The article leads up to the following practical suggestion:—

The first step in the right direction will be taken (if possible, let it be during the present summer) by summoning a meeting in London of landowners and others interested in the matter, to discuss the position and to take counsel with the managers of the English and Scottish Arboricultural Societies, with the view of securing their co-operation in undertaking the work which the Select Committee has rightly described as necessary, the neglect of which is discreditable.

OTHER ARTICLES.

The dialogue of Mr. Champion, entitled "A Labour Inquiry," is as unsatisfactory and inconclusive as those which preceded it. As all roads lead to Rome, so with Mr. Champion all discussions on social questions lead to the compulsory shortening of the hours of labour. Mr. W. F. Lord contributes an interesting historical study of Pasquale de Paoli, who invited the British to seize Corsica and then made the island too hot for them. An Indian Rajah dwells lovingly upon the industries of ancient India in the hope of persuading the Indian Government to do something for the industries of the country. Dr. Jessop gives us a "Rustic Retrospect, 1799," which is not quite up to his usually high standard. The Rev. J. Guinness Rogers discourses upon the Congregational Council. Mr. Rennell Rodd introduces to the English readers the poet of the Klephts, "Aristoteles Valaoritis." Mr. G. H. Reid, of New South Wales, briefly explains the constitution of the proposed commonwealth of Australia, and Mr. Boulton reports a conversation which he had with Sir John A. Macdonald some years ago, in which the federator of the Dominion expressed a confident belief in the certainty of the federation of the Empire.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

MR. FRANK HARRIS, having begun to write, seems disposed to keep it up. His story, "Montes, the Matador," is a great improvement upon "The Modern Idyll," which, but for its unpleasant motif, would never have attracted any attention. The story of Montes, although culminating in jealousy and deadly revenge in the last two pages, is, for the most part, a vivid picture of the life of a matador. It may be noticed that here, as in "The Modern Idyll," Mr. Harris makes his woman absolutely detestable, false, selfish, and immoral. Perhaps in his next attempt he will give us a female less worthy of perdition, otherwise the uncharitable will say that he knows no other women, which would be unjust.

THE CREDIT OF AUSTRALIA.

Sir George Baden-Powell defends Australian bonds as a security against the criticisms of Mr. Fortescue. He makes out a very good case for Australian credit, and one remarkable fact which he mentions may be noted for the enlightenment of the British taxpayer. In speaking of the assets of the Colonies he points out that they own 1,600 million acres of Crown Lands, the upset price of which stands at 20s. an acre; and if you reckon only one quarter of this area as worth that it is equivalent to a dowry thrown to the colonists by the mother country of the value of half our National Debt. Another fact is that the population of four millions in Australia has an over-sea trade which already equals that of England with the forty million inhabitants of France.

ARE WE TO BE EATEN UP BY THE JEWS?

MR. S. H. JAYES, in an article on "Foreign Pauper Immigration," states the case strongly in favour of passing an interdiction on the free flow of Polish Jews into England. He points out that these immigrants are supposed to be, rightly or wrongly, responsible for the sweating system. He warns us that Burns, Tillet, and Mann, could, if they pleased, start a Judenhetze in the East End to-morrow:—

Let the politicians look to this question. The agitators have taken it up: the strike-leaders are discussing it. At present it is a manageable problem; but if it were neglected much longer we may witness in civilised England scenes not greatly unlike those outbursts of popular persecution which have recently shocked us in the Ionian Islands—followed, at no distant date, by summary measures of similar aim with those now adopted by the Russian Government. That would not be so much a disgrace to our civilisation as a reproach to our short-sighted legislators.

READING FOR SIR W. GORDON-CUMMING.

MR. EDWARD DELILLE has a pleasantly written article absolutely unintelligible to those who do not know how to play at cards, entitled "Cardsharpping in Paris." He introduces it as follows:—

Paris is the home of baccarat; in Parisian soil the weed first sprouted, and has ever since rankly flourished. Where baccarat is most played, there as a logical result cheating is most rife. The present article is an attempt to exemplify and explain some of the least known and most peculiar modes of cheating practised in the Parisian hells.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD.

MR. COLMER, who wrote the admirable sketch of Sir John Macdonald which we published three months ago, contributes to the Fortnightly a more finished sketch of the great Canadian. Mr. Colmer says:—

There is little doubt that he had the true conception of what Imperial Federation must be, and that in his utterances lies the solution of the problem—a galaxy of nations, under one sovereign, having complete local government, united together for commercial development, for offence and defence, and with one voice in foreign affairs. His Imperialism was strong and unswerving, and formed the keynote of his career.

A CYCLING CLUB.

MR. R. J. MACREDY has an enthusiastic paper on "Cycling." He is a Dublin man, and is very proud that Ireland invented the pneumatic tyre. He says that more people cycle in Dublin, in proportion to the population, than in any other large city in the world. He gives a very pleasant account of his cycling club, which is well worth reading.

A PLEA FOR MORE ANNEXATIONS.

MR. EDWARD E. OLIVER in his paper on the "North West Frontier of India," strongly advocates the annexation of all the border tribes. If they are not annexed he maintains that we shall always have to look forward to an endless series of punitive expeditions, but if once British authority was established on both sides of the hills peace and prosperity would result, fresh recruiting ground would be opened up for the Empire, and hill stations innumerable would be obtained for our troops.

WITH KING GUNGUNHANA.

MR. DENNIS DOYLE describes Gazaland and its king. He seems to think that as we will not take Gungunhana under our protection South African whites will form a republic in his territory with his consent, and will make short work of the Portuguese. He has about 60,000 of the best fighting-men in South Africa, and it will require little stiffening with white colonists to dispose of the Portuguese.

THE NEW REVIEW.

THE New Review for July is a fair average number, with nothing exceptionally brilliant in it. The most readable article is Mdlle. Blaze de Bury's sketch of Guy de Maupassant, some of whose stories she tells, describing him as the physiologist and real exponent of his time, which, in France, is the age of science. Count Tolstol's paper on the "Right of Revolution" is simply a re-statement of his old thesis that no one has any right to use force under any conditions or under any pretext whatever. M. Camille Flammarion, in his paper on "Photography of the Heavens," waxes ecstatic over the enormous possibilities of photography as applied to astronomy. Who knows, says M. Flammarion, but some day in a photographic view of Venus or Mars, some new method of analysis may be discovered to see their inhabitants. Photography is a new eye which transports us across the infinite and enables us at the same time to trace the periods of past eternity. Mr. Tuckerman demonstrates once more the fact that there is a slave market in Constantinople, where white slaves are sold to this day. Mr. Edward Clodd discourses on the spiritual essence in man from the point of view of one who does not believe in such an essence. Francis Prevost's "Hyperboreans of To-day" is an account of Countess Platoff. There are the inevitable papers on education, one by the Dean of St. Paul's, who began by liking the Bill, but now fears it may do great evil, and the other by Mr. Lyulph Stanley, who maintains that the Bill is drawn primarily in the interest of managers and secondarily in that of the parents. Lord Rayleigh discusses electric lighting in London somewhat in the abstract, while Mr. E. Vincent, dealing with the question of gas, decides that the experience of Birmingham shows that a municipality can manage its own gas works well, and therefore London gas may be handed over to the control of the London County Council.

The Atlantic Monthly.—"The Lady of Fort St. John" is the new serial which begins this number, by Mary H. Catherwood. The scene is Nova Scotia, the Arcadia of Evangeline in the early days of the colony. There are two papers on Rome, one by Rodolfo Lanciani, the archaeologist, describing underground Rome, and the other by Mr. Spielmann in praise of modern Rome, even after the demolition which has been wrought in the city by its present owners. Mr. Spielmann says:—

All that is most modern is most execrable; all that is oldest is most execrated and profaned. The new barbarians who, in the present dispensation, swoop down from cisalpine Gaul, reared in the civic ideals of Genoa and Turin, have no sympathy with the monumental records of Rome, and no conception of anything to replace them. The Rome of 1870 was dirty, but dignified; inconvenient for people with modern tastes, but most comfortable for those who had adapted themselves to its mediæval ways. The Rome of 1890 is comfortable for nobody; the acres of new palaces that were to be are mainly huge, ugly tenement houses, stuccoed flimsies, abhorrent without and inhospitable within—a tasteless waste, where the highest virtue is fragility and the noblest destiny demolition.

"The Story of a Long Inheritance," explains the genesis of the tornado. Miss Repplier describes English railway fiction. It is a view, not at all appreciative, of the popular penny literature which supplies railway reading to the great majority of railway travellers. Octave Thanet describes Plantation Life in Arkansas, and gives us a vivid social picture of the south, which has come into existence after the war. Mr. McCracken, in a paper on the "Neutrality of Switzerland," suggests that we might with advantage extend the system of neutralisation to the Balkan Peninsula and Egypt. Switzerland, he says, is the type of Europe that is yet to be, and the formula for the future is the Helvetianising of the Continent.

The Parents' Review.—In the Fesole Club papers for the month Mr. Collingwood elucidates the mysteries of "tree touch." Dr. Scharff, of the Dublin Museum, a specialist, gives "Snails and Slugs" the benefit of a hearing. Mr. Hoare, an authority on the subject, has an interesting sketch of that vivid personality of the antique world, the "Pharaoh of the Oppression." The evolution of Max Pauli is pursued through the bouleversement of ideas attending the French Revolution. In a paper on "Bible Lessons" the editor traces to its root the general laxity which prevails with regard to religious instructions in the upper and middle classes; and Lady Laura Ridding, in a paper on "The Woman's League," presses on all women the duty of maintaining a pure standard of morality in the world and in the house.

The Leisure Hour.—The Leisure Hour for July is a very good number. The author of the "Dead Man's Diary" writes a very beautiful little tale, "The Garden of God," a story for children from eight to eighty. Mr. W. J. Gordon contributes a paper full of facts and figures on "Sea Perils in Instance and Percentage." Professor Blackie's "Song of Death" is better verse than often appears under such a head. Miss Seguin describes François Poyer as one of the heroes of the Montyon Prize. Mr. G. Millan gives an interesting account of two London prisons, Millbank and Wormwood Scrubs. Every cell in Millbank cost £500, and the history of the prison is the signal illustration of the hot and cold fits which succeed each other in the administration of our prisons.

Scribner.—The first place in Scribner for July is devoted to an article on the Speed of Ocean Steamers, by Mr. A. E. Seaton. It is copiously illustrated by a series of instantaneous photographs. Mr. Seaton does not think that the Atlantic is likely to be crossed much more rapidly than at present. The distance is done in 140 hours; to reduce that by 20 would require an increase in power of 62 per cent., and in fuel consumption of 38 per cent. The most interesting and out-of-the-way paper, however, is that in which John H. Wigmore describes the operation of starting a parliament in Japan. Such a thing can only be done once in a nation's lifetime, and it is well to have Mr. Wigmore's account of it. An illustrated paper describing life in an old Danish town contrasts with Mr. Pilcher's picture of outlawry on the Mexican border. It is almost a daily occurrence to find in a Mexican town one or two murdered bodies lying in the streets.

The Cosmopolitan.—The Cosmopolitan for July is again a capital number, containing matter full of interest for English readers. The lady who writes of "Country Life in Honduras" would delight the heart of General Booth, who has more than once thought of settling an agricultural colony on the uplands of Central America. The writer says:—

There are persons who assert in all seriousness that Honduras was the Garden of Eden. Certainly it might be made as beautiful as that paradise, if skilful human hands would aid the rich endowments nature has lavished on this inter-tropical country. Never were more fertile valleys, more genial suns, softer breezes, fairer skies by day or lovelier by night, than these.

Miss Bisland has a charmingly illustrated paper on London Charities. Mr. Waddle describes the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in an article entitled "A Modern Crusade," illustrated by portraits of Miss Willard and her leading associates. The article on "Two Modern Knights Errant" describes the adventures of Cushing in the Navy and Custer on the land. Mr. Lawler describes "The Diamond Fields of South Africa" in an article which contains the usual illustrations. I am glad to see an announcement that Amelie Rives's new novel is to begin in the next number. It is entitled "According to St. John," and will embody the result of her life in Europe.

Harper.—Harper has a frontispiece, the face of an old friend, in Oliver Wendell Holmes, very beautifully executed in Harper's best style. Col. Dodge has a third paper on American Riders, which is full of interest, not only to horsemen, but also to the general reader. Mr. Brander Mathews, in a paper on "Britishisms and Americanisms," maintains that no one can say what the English of the future may be, that the existence of Britishisms, Americanisms, and Australianisms, is a sign of vitality, and to declare a single standard of speech is impossible. Mr. Theodore Child describes the republic of Paraguay, one of the least known of South American States. Mr. Walter Besant describes "London—Saxon and Norman," with views of some London churches. The copiously illustrated paper on the Warwickshire Avon is continued. A new novel by Mr. W. D. Howells, "The Imperative Duty" is begun in this number.

In the Sunday at Home there are two curious maps of Protestant France showing the division of the Protestant churches connected with the state in France, as well as one showing the Protestant Missions and Free Churches. The Reformed Church is chiefly confined to the south of France, in the neighbourhood of Marseilles. The Augsburg Confession is on the German frontier, while the Protestant Missions and Free Churches are scattered over the whole country, not even excepting Brittany.

your most humble servant
Oliver Cromwell

Engraved by Francis Holl from a miniature by Cooper, in the possession of the Rev. Archdeacon Berners; reproduced from J. Allanson Picton's "Oliver Cromwell: The Man and His Mission."

GROMWELL AND HIS INDEPENDENTS; OR, THE FOUNDERS OF MODERN DEMOCRACY.

THE "MAYFLOWER" AT NEW PLYMOUTH, 1620.

IN the present month of July there will assemble in London the first International Council of the Independents, the present-day representatives of the religious sect to which we largely owe the remodelling of the world. The Independents have remade England in their own image. The British Empire as we now know it, the American Republic as it exists to-day, are superstructures reared upon the foundations laid by the despised sectaries who in gaol, on the gallows, and on the bloody battlefield earned the royal prerogative of transforming the laws, the institutions, and the very political atmosphere of the land in which they were born.

History, all history, is as miraculous as the day dawn, or as the blossoming of the flowers in spring-time; but there is no more miraculous chapter in the annals of our race than the transformation effected by the Independents in the polity of the world. It is a strange reverse process to the transformation which the world wrought in the Church in the early days of Christianity. The Roman Empire, in dying, bequeathed its ideas, its system, and no small portion both of its genius and of its crimes to the new religion which had sprung up under its feet in the Catacombs. The world transformed the Church, and the Popes appeared in due time as the heirs of the Cæsars. Within the last three hundred years of the Christian era we witness a great movement in the opposite direction. The Church—the Church of the Independents—has gradually transformed the world. The whole of English-speakingdom, if we may coin the word, is now governed upon the principles first brought into the domain of practical politics by the early Independents. Nor is it only in the English-speaking world that the Independents have created a new State. The French Revolution was but a Continental adaptation, with blood and fire accompaniments that had better have been omitted, of the fundamental doctrines, for preaching which the early Independents had been hanged. They are, it may be fearlessly asserted, the remodellers of the modern world. The great principles upon which all society is now based, although they had, of course, been recognised in very early times, as in the first making of England, were first proclaimed and enforced and put in a way of practical realisation by the Independents. They were the pioneers of all our liberties. The spirit which they generated in the conventicle has become the oxygen of the atmosphere of modern civilisation. If you want to see the democracy of our day in its cradle, you must go back to the years when the Brownist Sectaries, in the reign of Elizabeth, first confronted an intolerant and contemptuous world with the realised conception of a free Commonwealth, emancipated from the feudalism of the old Monarchy and the intolerance of the Established Church—a conception which has been the matrix in which every New England beyond the seas has been cast, and which tends every day, more and more, to complete the transformation of our own country. The Independent Church was the germ cell of the modern Democratic State.

In the United States of America and in the Colonies, where the New World has been as a sheet of blank paper, on which the new settlers could trace at will the outlines of the new Commonwealth, the ideas of the Independents have been adopted almost in their entirety. In England, where the Old World has struck its roots far down into the lowest strata of society, much still remains to be done before the nation fully assimilates the principles of the Independent meeting-house. The Established Church still lords it over God's heritage, offending in principle and in practice against the elementary doctrine of religious equality. The corpse of feudalism still lies in state in the House of Lords, and caste distinctions, plutocratic or otherwise, still deface and deform the simple brotherhood of a free and equal citizenship which forms the solid basis of the modern State. But everywhere and always the leaven of the Independents works and is working, and will work until it has subdued all things unto itself. The other side will, no doubt, exist. The prelates and the princes, the swashbucklers and the braves, will survive. But they will go under. The future is not with those who seek to set up again the dead past upon its throne. It lies with the men of stronger faith and clearer insight, who first saw in the simple Christian polity of the New Testament Church the clue to the solution of the difficulties of the modern State.

The English-speaking world represents with curious fidelity the limitations as well as the abounding strength of its Independent model. Notably is this the case in two directions. The first is the failure, up to the present time, of the English communities to recognise that in citizenship, as in the Church, there must be neither male nor female. There are exceptions, no doubt. Wyoming is a case in point, and the right of women not only to elect but to be elected to school boards indicates the extent to which the ancient usage of the Independents in allowing women a vote in Church

THE CROSS, A.D. 33.

"If they have persecuted Me"—

meetings is working its way into the modern State. But Independents, unfortunately trammelled by a literalism that made them regard the limitation imposed on Corinthian women as the universal rule of the Church, never recognised the female ministry as freely as did the Friends in the seventeenth, the Wesleyans in the eighteenth, or the Salvationists in our time. Hence the source of much trouble, and the certainty that, following the precedent of the Independent conventicle, the right to elect will be conferred upon women in the State long before they succeed in securing its logical corollary in the right to be elected.

The second point in which the Independent new modellers have somewhat hindered progress is visible in the present condition of the British Empire. The Independents, as their name implied, were jealous of the independence of each particular church and congregation. In their protests against prelates and presbyters, who were but "priests writ large," they pushed the right of isolation to the extreme. As it was with them, so it has been with our colonies. Each colony acts like an independent church. It stands apart on its own feet, it elects its own officers and makes its own rules; it is a law and a world unto itself. Nothing can more clearly demonstrate the failure of either the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, or the Methodist Church to impress its character upon the English-speaking people, than our present Imperial chaos. Independency has stamped its peculiar character upon the English world, and it would be well if it had not been quite so successful. This is serious, but it is not fatal. The Independents are beginning somewhat tardily to recognise the need for fraternal union. This International Council is itself a proof illustrative of this tendency. But the most reassuring demonstration of the compatibility of federation with independency is afforded by the history of the United States. The sons of the Pilgrim Fathers not merely federated a continent, but when the descendants of the Cavaliers attempted to rend the Republic in twain, they showed that the heirs of the Puritan traditions were as able to wield the sword in defence of federal unity as their forefathers were to use it in vindication of the liberties of the people. In the British Empire, the antagonism of the old with the new, and the imperfect and halting application of the principles of Independency to the body politic, have retarded the natural development of the federal principle. It is coming, however, and those who disbelieve this may at least recognise that if it does not come all is up with the Empire. Possibly and providentially this centrifugal tendency of Independency may but retard the federation of the Empire until the time has fully come for undoing the fatal mistake of George III. and of uniting the English-speaking Commonwealths—Republican and Imperial—in a fraternal federation. Nothing could be more in harmony than this with the traditions of the men of the Mayflower and the men of the Commonwealth. Towards that great ideal our efforts should constantly be directed, and so strong is the sense of brotherhood amongst some of us that, if there were no other way, the reunion of the English-speaking world would be accepted on the basis of the American Constitution rather than that the old schism of last century should be made eternal. Of that, however, it is as yet unnecessary to speak.

I.—THE EARLY MARTYRS OF INDEPENDENCY.

In this paper I shall not attempt to do more than indicate, by a few free rough sketches, one or two of the more salient features of this sect, which has in so marvellous a fashion transfigured the world. It began, as is usual, in obscurity, and it was nourished by persecution. England, whose whole future was to be transformed by the ideas of the obscure fanatics, treated them as Herod treated the infants of Bethlehem. When Browne, Lord Burghley's kinsman, began preaching towards the close of the sixteenth century, nothing could have seemed more absurdly impossible than the prediction that the principles expounded by this obscure and somewhat erratic youth of twenty-nine would triumph over the old orders, both Catholic and Anglican, which were then in deadly strife. Yet that impossible thing has clearly come to pass. Brownist principles as to the relation of the magistrate to the Church are accepted as practical politics by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and enforced as an actual fact upon the Pope of Rome by the head of the Italian monarchy.

It is very glorious to sit as a prophet on the mountain-top and to be the first to see the splendour of the new day dawning on the eastern horizon; but its glories are apt to be forgotten in the discomforts of the exposed position and the scoffing incredulity with which the news of the sunrise is apt to be received by the dweller in the valley, to say nothing of the more active opposition of the candlestick-makers, and the children of darkness who hate the light because their deeds are evil. The early Independents had their fair share of the disadvantages of the post of pioneer.

THE GALLOWS, A.D. 1593.
—"they will also persecute you."

Robert Browne, from whom the Independents were first known as Brownists, as the Methodists became known as Wesleyans, was a Rutland gentleman, educated at Cambridge, who about the year 1580 set the eastern counties aflame by the preaching of the fundamental principles of Independency. Independency seems to have found the Eastern Counties the most congenial soil. They were to Independency what Scotland was to Presbyterianism. Here Browne preached, here Cromwell was born, thence the Pilgrim Fathers sailed to found the New World beyond the seas, and here it was that the Puritans founded the Association which shattered the Stuart Monarchy into irretrievable ruin. Browne's doctrine was, in its essence, the doctrine of every sincere democrat in every land. Democracy is saturated, often unconsciously, with Christian ideas. Browne made Christ the corner-stone of his whole system. Equally against the Romanists, who proclaimed that the headship of the Church belonged to the Pope, and against the Anglicans, who claimed the headship for the Sovereign of England, Browne asserted that "One is your Lord, even Christ," and he followed that up by the equally apostolic corollary that "all ye are brethren." "The voice of the whole people, guided by the elders and the forwardest, is the voice of God." Over the Christian democracy no apostle, prophet, evangelist, pastor, teacher, or particular elder was suffered to bear rule or exercise authority. Each little community of believing men and women was a microcosm of the Church Universal; Christ was its only Head, and all its members were equal. The lead was to the worthiest and the forwardest. Here we have the aboriginal bed-rock of democracy. All ranks, hierarchies, feudalisms disappear. The career is open to all talents. The drayman is equal to the noble, the peasant to the prince. In this equality there is something of the same spirit as in the faith of Islam. Indeed, no one can read Ockley's "History of the Saracens" without being reminded in every page of the Puritans of the Commonwealth. But the Independent Apostle, unlike Mohammed, grasped the doctrine of Liberalism, and supplemented his gospel of equality by the equally emphatic assertion of the gospel of religious liberty. The civil magistrate, he taught, had no right to interfere in the domain of spiritual affairs. Against Erastianism in every shape and form the Independents have always protested. It is one of the points upon which we often find ourselves more in sympathy with the "pretensions" of the Church of Rome than with the subserviency of the Church of England to the authority of Parliament.

The teaching of the early Independents on this point is clear and unmistakable from the earliest times. We read in Dexter a contemporary complaint as to Browne's teaching:—

Concerning the magistrate, Master Browne teacheth that he hath no right to meddle with any matter of religion, but to permit the liberty and free choice of religion to the conscience of every one of his subjects.

And so he declares again:—

Mr. Browne did take from the magistrate all powers about matters of religion; these he did remit absolutely to the conscience of every particular person, declaring himself, while he stood in his infamous ways, for a full liberty of conscience, uncontrollable by the laws of any mortal man; but in this all the disciples till of late did leave the Master.

Said one of the earliest martyrs for the faith on the eve of his execution:—

I thinke that the Queenes maigestie is supreme gouvernour of the whole land, and ouer the church also, bodies and goods; but I thinke that no prince, neither the whole world, neither the church itself, may make any lawes for the church other than Christ hath already left in his worde. Yet I think it the dutie of every Christian, and principally of the Prince, to enquire out and renue the lawes of God, and stir vp al their subiects to more diligent and careful keepings of the same.

But there was to be no compulsion. The Lord's people must be willing. Barrowe, who was hanged for the faith, was not so clear. He admitted the right of the Prince to compel his subjects to attend divine service, even when he denied his right to compel any one to be a member of the Church. Church discipline was to be in the hands of the Church alone:—

It (a Congregational Church) is neither monarchical, like the Church of Rome, nor aristocratical, like the Presbyterian Church, but a pure democracy, which places every member of the Church upon a level, and gives him perfect liberty with order. If any one commits an offence, he is to be tried by his peers, by his Christian friends, and by the whole ecclesiastical body to which he belongs.

It was natural that such doctrines, preached at a time when Anglican and Romanist were slaying each other for the love of God and zeal for pure religion, would excite the liveliest feelings of indignation. Browne had to leave the country and settle in Holland. When he returned he made his peace with the Anglican Church, and died as one of its clergy, not altogether in the odour of sanctity. But the seed which he sowed fell on good ground. As usual, not many rich, not many noble, were called. But the common people received the doctrine gladly, dimly, perhaps, discerning in it the germ of their own future emancipation—the day-dawn of the Democracy which three centuries hereafter was to consummate the triumph of the people.

But in proportion as the common people welcomed the new doctrine, the authorities regarded it with alarm and indignation. They watered the growing cause with the blood of its professors. In this operation, the Old Bailey dock and Newgate gaol figured as conspicuously as usual in the story of the struggle for progress. Twenty-four persons, including several women, were done to death in the prisons of London alone—most of them dying untried in the dungeon at Newgate. Six were publicly executed, viz. Mr. Henry Barrowe, Mr. Greenwood (these suffered at Tyburn); Mr. Penry, at St. Thomas Watering, by London; Mr. William Dennis, at Thetford, in Norfolk; two others at St. Edmund, in Suffolk, whose names were Copping and Elias. The stake had gone out of fashion as an instrument of conversion. The gallows was more convenient. But sometimes, as in the case of Copping and Elias, the moral effect of the hanging was heightened by the burning of the books of Browne and Harrison, "to the number of fortie." The victims did not wince.

God gave them courage to bear it, and to make this answer: "My Lord, your face we fear not, and for your threats we care not, and to come to your read service we dare not."

It is a curious story—or rather it reads curiously to-day—of how the authorities of Queen Elizabeth's day attempted to exorcise the unwelcome apparition of Independency. At first they resorted to the simple expedient of clapping as many of them as they could discover into the common gaol, and then, after a sufficient number had accumulated on their hands, they were parceled out among the clergy to be converted.

ISAAC WATTS.

JOHN MILTON.

JOHN BUNYAN.

DANIEL DEFOE.

The Bishop of London, on order of the Archbishop, with the advice of both Chief Justices, parcelled out fifty-two prisoners of this general quality, of whom there were in Newgate, five; in the Fleet, eight; the Gatehouse, ten; the Clink, ten; the Counter, Wood Street, fourteen; and the Counter, Poultry, five—among forty-three clergymen in and around London, headed by Dr. Bancroft; instructing these gentlemen "twise every weeke (at the least)" to "repayre to those persons & prysones" and "seeke by all learned & discrete demeanure you may to reduce them from their errors."

When this process of combined prison and persuasion failed, the authorities employed the gallows, prefacing the execution by a trial at the Old Bailey. The most famous of these trials was that of Barrowe and Greenwood in 1593. They had written very severe things about the Book of Common Prayer, and this was regarded by the judges as the same thing as libelling the Queen.

They were indicted under a statute of the 23rd of Elizabeth which made it felony, punishable with death without benefit of clergy, or right of sanctuary, to write, print, set forth or circulate "any maner of booke, ryme, ballade, letter, or writing," which with "a malicious intent" set forth "any false, seditious, and slanderous matter to the defamation of the Queenes Maiestie," or to "the stirring up of insurrection or rebellion."

After their conviction they were twice reprieved. The second occasion is thus described by Barrowe:—

"Vpon the last day of the third moneth (31 March), my brother, Grenewood, and I, were very early and secretly conveyed to the place of execution, where being tyed by the necks to the tree, we were permitted to speak a few wordes" They declared their innocence of all malice or ill-intent, exhorted the people to obey and love the Prince and magistrates: to follow their leaders no further than they had followed Scripture; then craving pardon for all in which they had offended, and freely forgiving all who had offended them, they were in the act of praying for the Queen when they were again reprieved; this time as the result of a supplication to the Lord Treasurer that "in a land where no papist was put to death for religion, theirs should not be the first blood shed who concurred about faith with what was professed in the country, and desired conference to be convinced of their errors."

Six days later they were taken out and hanged suddenly. Shortly afterwards a gallant young Welshman, Mr. Penry, was hanged at St. Thomas Watering, the Sheriff, under orders from the prelates, forbidding him to say even a farewell word to his friends.

Law courts and Episcopate having done their part, Parliament took up the task of making short work with the Separatists. In 1593 an Act was passed banishing all Separatists from the country and menacing with heavy penalties all who gave them shelter. The Parliament of Elizabeth for years after the defeat of the Armada was about as blind as the present advisers of the Russian Emperor are to-day. The following passage from Lord Bacon's writings might be perused by M. Pobedonostzoff, if we substitute Pashkofski for Brownists:—

As for those which we call Brownists, being when they were at the most a very small number of very silly and base people here and there in corners dispersed, they are more (thanks be to God) by the good remedies that have been used, suppressed, and worn out, so as there is scarcely any news of them.

The "good remedies" of gallows, dungeon, exile, have always been in repute among the wise and the great; but seldom have the mighty of the earth been more blindly deceived than they were when Lord Bacon, "the wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind," penned this pious thanksgiving, six years before the birth of the Independent who was destined to Make his simple oaken chair

More terrible and grandly beautiful,
More full of majesty than any throne
Before or after of a British king.

II.—THE FOUNDING OF AMERICA.

There is nothing of the debased perversion of democracy, only too common in these latter days, about the Independent ideal. The idea that the mere counting of noses, wiped or unwiped, constitutes a short cut to the Eternal Truth, would have been scouted as indignantly by the early Independents as by any prelatists of Tudor or of Stuart. The right of governance in the Church belongs only to those who personally recognise Christ as King, who have entered into personal relations with their Divine Lord, and who will in all things endeavour to do His will. But that is the sole test. Male or female, rich or poor, high or low, matters not. The equality of all believers is absolute. Yet the lead belongs to the forwardest, the guidance to the most worthy. There is here a recognition of the indestructible principles both of monarchy and of aristocracy. But the only monarch is Christ, the only aristocracy that of worth, and the only means of securing the recognition of that aristocracy the free vote of the whole body of believers.

The Independent principle is based upon the belief that there is a real God, a living God, who has not retired from business and become a mere sleeping partner in the affairs of the world which He created and the men whose salvation necessitated the incarnation, but one who is the living, personal, ever-present Guide and Father of all who diligently seek to do His will and help in the great work of transforming this world into the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ. Compared with the supreme duty of doing His will, all worldly laws are as nothing. The decrees of Star Chambers, the declarations of Councils, the Acts of Parliaments, are as mere waste paper if they conflict with this supreme law. Christ is the only King, Conscience is His Chief Justice, and any company of believing souls who meet together with a sincere desire to help each other in making His will supreme in the earth, need never fear that they will be left without His guidance.

If this seems a bold assertion, it has at least received very startling confirmation in the history of our race. The principle held by these base and mean sectaries whom the great Elizabethans thanked God they had made short work of, has revolutionised the world. Our forefathers accepted it as their working hypothesis, and we their sons can point to results as affording no slight justification for their faith. In the American Continent other systems had the first chance. Adventurers, commercial, and aristocratic, and episcopal, had the field to themselves before the Pilgrims chartered the Mayflower. The Independents had everything against them. They were proscribed exiles, without patrons, almost without money, who landed upon a bleak, exposed coast long after the more fertile south lands had been occupied by their rivals. Shortly after their arrival they were submerged by new-comers who had never mastered the A B C of religious liberty, and who very soon afterwards introduced into the New World the fierce religious intolerance that disgraced the Old. But notwithstanding all these difficulties, and especially the most fatal of all, the falsification of the very principle for which they had crossed the Atlantic

[From a photograph by]

REV. ANDREW MEARNS.

REV. J. G. ROGERS.

REV. JOSEPH PARKER, D.D.

[Whitt and Fry, Baker Street,

REV. H. ALLON, D.D.

REV. R. F. HORTON, M.A.

REV. JOHN BROWN, D.D.
(Chairman of Congregational Union.)
PRINCIPAL FAIRBAIRN, D.D.
-- (Mansfield College.)

REV. R. W. DALE, LL.D.
(Chairman of the International Council.)

REV. HEBER EVANS
(Chairman Elect).
REV. C. A. BERRY
(Wolverhampton).

by later comers who had never mastered the truth for which they testified, the principles for which they suffered attained the most conspicuous triumph of modern times. The United States of America is their creation. They fashioned the mould in which the greatest of the Republics has been cast. They mastered its destinies. They imprinted their character on state after state. In all that vast congeries of commonwealths there is not one which does not bear in every branch of its administration the patent mark of the men of the Mayflower. They and their descendants have been the soul of the nation. They presided over its birth, they guided its youth, they saved it from disruption and from slavery, and they and the men whom they have inspired are still the hope of its future. Power has gravitated from the Eastern states to the West, as in England the centre of the progressive movement is no longer in the Eastern but in the Northern Counties. But the West is the sturdier manchild of the East, the lusty progeny of the men of iron mould who, with Bible and broadsword, founded the New England beyond the sea.

The establishment of modern democracy, the establishment of religious liberty, and the establishment of the American Republic—these are the most considerable achievements of our race in the last hundred years, and in all three the Independents played the leading part. The French Revolution was a mere French echo of the proclamation of principles realised in action by every Independent conventicle two hundred years before, and by the Independents laid down as the foundation of the great Republic, of which that of France to-day is but a second-hand imitation. Hence it is that Mr. Carlyle rightly declares that, compared with the Mayflower, which carried the life-spark of Transatlantic Anglo-Saxondom, the Argo was but a foolish bumbarge. The American Continent became a vast sounding-board whereby Independent principles were echoed back to the Continent of Europe. Through the Mayflower the English Independents created a new world in America, through America they recreated Europe.

There is no need here to tell again the oft-told story of the Mayflower. The Independent Congregation, driven out of the Eastern Counties by the persecution of the Anglican authorities, settled in Leyden, and here they prospered in peace for twelve years. But they began to see that this precious seed of a Christian democracy stood in imminent danger of being wasted in Holland. They could not hope to form a permanent and a growing English colony in the Low Countries. Their children might become Dutch, as the Huguenot refugees became English. They dimly felt that they carried with them in their small ark the hope of the future. So they began considering where they could go to found a community which would have liberty to worship and space in which to grow. After much dubitation, some of them wished to go to Guiana! They decided upon settling in North America. They got permission to settle in some part of Virginia, but they could not get a promise from the King of freedom of worship. All that he would promise was, that he would consent to let them go unnoticed. In order to obtain capital for the settlement, they had to practically sell themselves into servitude for seven years to some London financiers.

Their reasons for believing they would succeed where so many had failed are set forth in a document which is well worth quoting. They said:—

We are well weaned from the delicate milk of our mother country and inured to the difficulties of a strange and hard land, which yet, in a great part, we have by patience overcome.

The people are, for the body of them, industrious and frugal as any company of people in the world.

We are knit together in a most strict and sacred bond and covenant of the Lord, of the violation of which we make great conscience, and by virtue whereof we hold ourselves straitly tied to all care of each other's good, and of the whole by every one, and so mutually.

Lastly, it is not with us as with other men, to whom small things can discourage, or small discontentments cause to wish themselves at home again.

Armed with this faith in God and in themselves, they bought a 40-ton boat, the Speedwell, and hired the Mayflower, of 180 tons. The Speedwell brought the pilgrims from Delft to Southampton, where she joined the Mayflower. They sailed August 5, 1620, but soon after the Speedwell sprung a leak and had to return to Plymouth. The Mayflower, with 182 passengers, sailed alone, September 6th, and after two months stormy tossing on the Atlantic reached the other side on the 9th November.

Of their subsequent fortunes there is no need here to tell. But I may quote from an admirable article by Edwin D. Mead, on the "Message of Puritanism for this Time," in the current number of the New England Magazine. Speaking of the men of the Mayflower, Mr. Mead says:—

These most practical and hard-handed and hard-headed of men were the greatest idealists in history, the most imperious and thorough in subordinating every interest of life to the power of their great faith and vision. Lowell pronounces them "the most perfect incarnation of an idea which the world has ever seen." How important the idea which they bore seemed to him he declared when he said: "Next to the fugitives whom Moses led out of Egypt, the little shipload of outcasts who landed at Plymouth two centuries and a half ago are destined to influence the future of the world." I think, too, that from the time of Moses on there had never been any enterprise so full of the spirit of Moses as this. There are whole chapters of Deuteronomy which might well enough be chapters of Bradford's Journal. Some poor, weak creatures, who had been over and spent a few months with the Plymouth colony in 1623, had gone back to London and discouraged others from coming by stories of all sorts of hardships at Plymouth. There was lack of the sacraments, the children were not properly catechised, the water wasn't good, the fish wouldn't take salt to keep sweet, there were foxes and wolves, and so on—a dozen objections in all, the last being that the people were "much annoyed with muskeetoos." "They are too delicate and unfit to begin new plantations and colonies," wrote Bradford, answering every objection in detail, "that cannot endure the biting of a muskeeto; we would wish such to keep at home till at least they be muskeeto proof." The men who planted New England were "muskeeto proof." And so have the men always been who have pushed ahead the New England idea. So were the men who have gone out of New England to carry New England all over the Great West. The men who followed Gen. Rufus Putnam from Massachusetts to Marietta were "muskeeto proof." The men who followed Moses Cleveland from Connecticut to the Western Reserve were "muskeeto proof." The Pilgrim Fathers of Illinois and Michigan and Wisconsin and Minnesota and Kansas and Colorado were "muskeeto proof." They had all learned that great lesson of not being greatly vexed by life's little vexations, which are what bring so many good men to nothing.

The Pilgrim Fathers were "muskeeto proof." None of them sulked over sore fingers, or bothered Bradford over their feet. They got no miraculous manna or quail, they were reduced to the three grains of corn; but still no complaint, no hankering after things left behind. And when the Mayflower went back, after the first winter of death, while half their number lay in the graves in the wheatfield, not one went back, no, "not one looked back who had set his hand to this ploughing."

These are men worth celebrating, these most practical, most religious men, these men who put their highest idea most absolutely into life. This is the thing to be said about Puritanism altogether, that it was idealism with hands, a faith that made faithful, religion wholly in earnest.

After them came other emigrants who were not of their mould, and whose inability to grasp their great principle caused much trouble in the infant Commonwealth. Yet not even the thought of the bitter persecution which these new comers brought over to America can prevent our feeling sympathy with their parting words when they left their native land :—

We will not say, as the Separatists were wont to say at their leaving of England, "Farewell, Babylon! Farewell, Rome!" But we will say, "Farewell, dear England! Farewell, the Church of God in England, and all the Christian friends there!" We do not go to New England as Separatists from the Church of England, though we cannot but separate from the corruptions in it. But we go to practise the positive part of Church reformation, and propagate the gospel in America.

Notwithstanding their determination to remain members of the Church of England, the Independent principle of Church government soon made captives of the new colonists; and although it did not convince them for many years of the sin of religious persecution, it succeeded in establishing the New England colonies on the broad basis of Christian democracy.

The Independents have thus been always a link between the ocean-severed sections of the English-speaking race under the early Stuarts. As Dexter says, in his "Three Hundred Years of Congregationalism,"—

The effective mass of English-born Independency lay wholly without the bounds of England, partly in little companies of Separatists and semi-Separatists among the English exiles in the towns of Holland, but chiefly and in most assured completeness both in bulk and in detail in the incipient Transatlantic Commonwealth of New England. One thing, however, was certain all the while. These two effective aggregations of English-born Independency beyond the bounds of England—the small Dutch scattering and the massive American extension—were not disassociated from England, and had not learned to be foreign to her, but were in constant correspondence with her, in constant survey of her concerns, and attached to her by such homeward yearnings that, on the least opportunity, the least signal given, they would leap back upon her shores.

To leap back upon our shores is impossible now, but they may attain the same end in more practical fashion by working for the reunion of the English-speaking nations. Of our colonies and offshoots it may be said, as was said two hundred years ago by the Independents of their churches :—

From the first, every, or at least the generality of our churches, have been in a manner like so many ships (though holding forth the same great colours) launched singly, and sailing apart and alone in the vast ocean of these tumultuous times, and they, exposed to every wind of doctrine, under no other conduct than the Word of the Spirit, and their particular elders and principal brethren, without associations among ourselves, or so much as holding out common lights to others, whereby to know where we were.

But as good John Wise said in New England to these disunited, unassociated churches, we may say to the various English-speaking commonwealths which encircle the world :—

Hold your hold, brethren! Pull up well upon your own oars, you have a rich cargo, and I hope you will escape shipwreck; for according to the latest observations, if we are not within sight, yet we are not far from harbour; and though the noise of great breakers which we hear imports hazard, yet I hope daylight and good piloting will secure all.

Amen and amen. And may the "good piloting" not be lacking to the Empire and the Republic, which count Cromwell and the Independents as their political progenitors.

III.—CROMWELL.

Cromwell has ever been the patron saint of the Independents. Hallam, on the authority of Crabbe, tells a touching story of the reverence, almost approaching to worship, paid by some Independents of his acquaintance to a portrait of the Lord Protector, which they treated with the same respect that the Russian peasant pays to the icon of our Lord, or Mary the Mother. Of all men of women born, no man has ever appeared to me so altogether worthy of the love, the devotion, and the passionate admiration of English-speaking men as Oliver Cromwell.

Milton did not speak unadvisedly when he sang "Cromwell, our chief of men." Cromwell is our chief of men. Beside him there is none other. He is the incarnate genius of the English race at its best. What Shakespeare is in literature, Cromwell was in practical affairs, alike in tented field, in the senate, and in the administration of the affairs of the Empire. It is the glory of the Independents that they have never wavered in their allegiance to their chief. Not when his bones were buried at Tyburn and his skull was grinning on the point of a pike above the Hall of Westminster, did any of his own people hesitate for a moment in the homage which they paid their man of men. One must love the highest when we see it; and the Independents, having seen Cromwell at close quarters all his life, mourned him as the hero-saint of Christian democracy. Carlyle, fifty years ago, unveiled to the literary and general public the features of the Lord Protector which had long been a familiar object of admiring homage to the Independents. Nor was it only by the Independents that his name and fame have been cherished. Deep in the heart of the common people the memory of Cromwell survives to this day as that of the hero-deliverer of the nation, the heaven-sent scourge of the oppressor. In seasons of prosperity and of peace his name is seldom heard. But let misfortune and war overtake us, and as the stars appear in the darkened sky, the name of Cromwell rises instinctively to the lips of our common people. In times of domestic trouble and foreign peril the yearning of the English-speaking man never varies. "Oh for another Cromwell!" is the more or less articulate aspiration of his heart. Cromwell is to all of us, even to those who are descendants of the Cavaliers, the supreme embodiment of heroic valour. Victory ever sat upon his helm, and before the resistless might of his sword all enemies were scattered "as a little dust." It is very touching and memorable this devotion of the dumb heart of England to Cromwell. Our village folk, they say, know no history. That is true, and yet it is false. Their history is summed up in one word, and that word Cromwell. Nothing to them are the stories of Plantagenet and Tudor. The Wars of the Roses have become as the battles of Kites and Crows that preceded the Roman Conquest; but they all know of Cromwell. He is the day-star of modern democracy, the incarnation of the religious revolt against tyranny, in whose single person are summed up all the glories and all the triumphs of the revolution which emancipated mankind from the superstition of kingship. As the German in dire stress sighs for the return of Frederick Barbarossa from his enchanted cave, as the ancient Roman prayed for the appearance of the great Twin Brethren in crises of the fight, so do our people's thoughts go back in hours of darkness and danger to him who, "guided by faith and matchless fortitude," hewed down the embattled hosts of the tyrant, and made England for the first time mistress of the world that was to be, sovereign of the seas, and nursing mother of the free and nascent commonwealths in whose hands lie the sceptre of our planet.

Alfred, Cromwell, Nelson, are three of the greatest names in English history. Of the three, Cromwell is far the most real. His is "a name earth wears for ever next her heart." Nelson, first of sea-kings, who died with the watchword of duty on his lips, will ever be an inspiration to those who follow after. But Nelson, although supreme in his own department, never touched the inmost heart of English life. He was a sentinel on her watery frontier. King Alfred has become almost as shadowy as King Arthur. But Oliver Cromwell touched the national life at every point, and his personality was never more vividly realised than it is to-day. His exploits are still the theme of popular legend, his career a stimulus to the schoolboy's ambition, his renown the cherished heritage of all English-speaking men. To-day we are but beginning to bring our governing classes up to the line of his imperial march. As Cardinal Manning said long ago, Cromwell, more than any English sovereign or statesman, realised the imperial grandeur of his country and at the same time cared with passionate earnestness for the welfare of the common people. We are entering into his labours, and shall count ourselves happy if, in the course of the next few generations, we can but fill in the majestic outlines of the Cromwellian policy.

The very thoroughness of his victories has rendered their importance almost inconceivable to us. The truths for which martyrs have cheerfully rendered up their lives in the arena and at the stake become so universally recognised by the next generation that we marvel at the need of the sacrifice. It seems to us now, no doubt, almost as absurd to question the doctrine of religious liberty as it is to cavil at the multiplication table. But two hundred years ago through what bloody sweat and bitter tears our fathers had to pass before they could get even a conception of the sublime truth into the dull heads of their intolerant contemporaries! The paradox of yesterday is the truism of to-day, and the immortal principles for which our forefathers were proud to die have become the commonplaces of the man in the street. It is almost impossible for us to conceive how much obloquy the Independents suffered because of their advocacy of religious liberty. It is curious to read the invectives of the seventeenth century, and to see that the head and front of their offending was their refusal to accept a toleration for themselves without at the same time securing liberty for others. Baillie, the Presbyterian chronicler of the proceedings of the Westminster Assembly, was particularly indignant at this shameless consistency. He writes:—

Many of them preach, and some print, a libertie of conscience, at least the great equitie of a toleration for all religions; that every man should be permitted without feare so much as of discontenance from the magistrate, to profess publickly his conscience, were he never so erroneous, and also live according thereunto, if he trouble not the publick peace by any sedition or wicked practise.

He (John Goodwin) is a bitter enemy of Presbyterie, and is openly for a full libertie of conscience to all sects, even Turks, Jews, Papists, etc.; a new faction to procure libertie for sects.

The Independents in our last meeting of our grand committee of accomodation have expressed their desyr: for tolleration, not only for themselves but to other sects.

The cantankerous Thomas Edwards, author of "Gan-græna," expressed himself with even greater vehemence. He writes:—

A Toleration is the grand design of the Devil; his masterpiece and chief engine he works by, at this time, to uphold his tottering kingdom. It is the most compendious, ready, sure way to destroy all religion, lay all waste, and bring in all evil; it is a most transcendent catholic and fundamental evil for this kingdom of any that can be imagined. An original sin is the most fundamental sin, having the seed and spawn of all in it; so a Toleration hath all errors in it and all evils. . . . Independency in England is the mother, nurse and patroness of all other errors. . . . Let us, therefore, fill all presses, cause all pulpits to ring, and so possess Parliament, City and whole kingdom against the sects, and of the evil of schism and a toleration, that we may no more hear of a Toleration, nor of separated churches, being hateful names in the Church of God.

Facing all this, the Independents, under Cromwell, fought and conquered. It was a work to which they were naturally called. Hallam remarks that it is certain that the Congregational scheme leads to toleration, as the National Church scheme is averse to it, for manifold reasons.

It is true that the toleration which they claimed was not extended to Roman Catholics, although Hallam admits that never since the Reformation had they enjoyed so much liberty as in the Commonwealth; but in those days a Papist was almost ipso facto a rebel, and the Papist priest was the emissary of a power which was plotting day and night to unite all the Popish interests in all the Christian world against England. If the Papists would have left off attempting to destroy England, Englishmen would have desisted from attempting to destroy Papists.

Religious toleration was, however, but one of the achievements of the Independents. They live in history as the men who smote down the Stuarts, hewed off the head of the first Charles, and founded the Commonwealth, thereby establishing for the first time that principle of the government of the people by the people and for the people which is the fundamental doctrine of modern democracy. Lord Brougham's eulogy of the Independents may be quoted here as a proof that I am not exaggerating the part played by them in that great crisis of our race:—

The Independents are a body much to be respected indeed for their numbers, but far more to be held in lasting veneration for the unshaken fortitude with which in all times they have maintained their attachment to civil and religious liberty, and holding fast by their own principles have carried to the uttermost pitch the great doctrine of absolute toleration—men to whose ancestors this country will ever acknowledge a boundless debt of gratitude as long as freedom is prized amongst us, for they—I fearlessly proclaim it—they, with whatever ridicule some visit their excesses, or with whatever blame others, they, with the zeal of martyrs, the purity of the early Christians, the skill and courage of the most renowned warriors, gloriously suffered and fought and conquered for England the free constitution which she now enjoys.

IV.—A PILGRIMAGE TO NASEBY.

I spent the anniversary of Naseby fight on the sloping upland where the sword of Cromwell decisively sealed the doom of the ancient Monarchy. Naseby village stands high in central England, about a mile to the rear of the spot where the forces of King and Parliament met in death-grapple. The hamlet has been transformed out of all semblance to its former self. The old windmill has disappeared. The curious copper ball from Boulogne on the steeple has been replaced by a new spire. With one or two exceptions, all the old thatched cottages have given place to modern houses. The stooks have vanished, only the stump of the market-cross remains. The only attempt to commemorate the battle which made Naseby famous is a memorial obelisk, erected some seventy years ago, about a mile from the battlefield. As it is now obscured by trees, it serves no purpose save that of affording in its hollow interior a commodious hive for swarms of bees, which have stored it with honey for ten years past. In the village one of the oldest buildings is the vast tithing-barn; but it was not built until after the Restoration.

At the rear of a farmhouse, opposite the church and near the inn, there is still standing a part of one of the houses where Rupert's rear-guard were quartered on the eve of the famous fight. They were supping here, sitting at a heavy table—long prized as one of the relics of the fight, and now carefully preserved at Holmby House—when Ireton's troopers burst in upon them even as they sat at meat, and terminated abruptly their evening meal. The spacious fireplace, from which you can look up into the sky, is still in use—the rafters of the roof are as rough and rude as they were two centuries since; but alas! the place that knows them now will soon know them no more. The present tenant, who asked disdainfully, "What use was it?" has determined to improve it out of existence. In a few months the last relic of the skirmish that brought on Naseby fight will have given place to a brand-new building, replete with modern conveniences no doubt; but it is the old story of Aladdin's lamp.

The people of Naseby have never prided themselves much upon their association with the epoch-making battle. No one seemed to remember that June 14th was the anniversary of the fateful fight, and it is noted as an extraordinary omission that the parish register of the year 1645 contained no entry of the occurrence which will bring pilgrims to Naseby to the end of time. Local traditions about the place are rare, and relics are rarer still. Fifty years ago bullets were common; to-day they are seldom found. A ploughboy occasionally turns one up in the furrow, so white with chalk deposit that it might be mistaken for a marble; but there are probably not more than a score to be found in the parish. The ploughboy's tariff for bullets is ninepence each—the price paid by the village publican, who sells them to collectors for as much more as he can get. The publican has two treasures which he will not sell—a fragment of chain shot, a lump of lead with iron imbedded in the centre, and a silver groat of Philip and Mary. At Clipstone Mr. Haddon, whose father once farmed part of Naseby field, has the rusted remains of a two-edged sword; the tenant of Millhill ploughed up a gold ring, which he incontinently sold for a sovereign to a Harborough jeweller; but of other relics there is but small trace.

Of local traditions there is small store, although, from the extreme longevity of the villagers, the reverse might have been expected: for, after all, the space of three lives would cover the 246 years that have elapsed since Roundhead and Cavalier met in death-grapple on the slopes of Broadmoor. A few there are, but very few. Mr. Albert Pell, who lives at Hazelbeach, near by, kindly copied out for me the following statements by the Rev. John N. Simpkinson, now a rector in Norfolk:—

In the summer 1865 I rode over from Brington (of which I was the rector) to Naseby, and while I was examining the field, I fell in with an old labourer of more than eighty years of age, who showed me various spots where the battle had been hottest, as was evident by bullets and fragments of weapons, which are still turned up occasionally by the plough.

He told also an anecdote of the battle day which he had heard from his grandfather when sitting on his knee as a little boy, and which that grandfather had similarly heard from the person to whom the incident happened—just 220 years before.

The story was this: The subject of the incident, being then a child of about four years old, was standing at his cottage door on the morning of the battle, when Cromwell's troopers came riding through the village. The cottage was on the south side of the churchyard in a narrow part of the village, a high wall at that time separating the churchyard from the road. The little boy seeing the horses ran across the road in front of them, as children will, and the foremost

The above plan of the order of battle at Naseby on the morning of June 14th, 1645, is reproduced from the rare engraving in fight, and subsequently wrote a history of the campaigns of the New Model Army.

Sprigge's "Anglia Rediviva." Sprigge was one of Fairfax's chaplains, was present at Naseby, stayed with the baggage during the trooper, fearing that the child would certainly be killed, stooped from his saddle, caught the boy by the nape of his neck, and flung him over the wall on his right. The child fell happily on soft ground in the churchyard, with no injury done to him, and lived to tell the story as above.

When staying in the Naseby country I received a letter from a friend, in which he said :—

Let me tell you an incident which has always reminded me of the comparative newness of the world as we know it. My old grandmother, who died five years since, aged ninety-six, was born when her mother was forty-five. My granny told me that her grandmother told her she had seen an old housekeeper at Woollaton (Lord Middleton's) who saw Cromwell at Woollaton after the fight at Naseby. She followed him cautiously upstairs, and he threw himself, armour and all, down by the bedside and prayed.

Skeletons, with bones of horses and men, are occasionally disinterred.

There was a curious story that Thorold Rogers used to tell, to the effect that as the two armies stood in array over against each other, a hunting party, with the hounds in full cry, swept across the plain between Roundhead and Cavalier, which led to much moralising on the part of keen partisans that men could be so indifferent to such momentous issues as were then waiting for decision. I could find no confirmation of this story, although it may have been true for all that. Local tradition tells of women coming out to watch the battle from Naseby and suffering thereby, and also of the herds of cows which were driven out of the way of the contending armies. Their herdsmen looked on with eager curiosity, minding the cows, which had to be milked whichever side won, while Cromwell and Rupert delivered their charges, and the centres under Charles and Fairfax fought with pike and sword and clubbed firelock. Charles had been hunting the stag at Daventry, in leisurely disarray, little dreaming that "Ironsides," as Cromwell was then called quite distinct from his men, was riding hard from the Eastern Counties to join the New Model.

There is a charming ghost story told in the local histories about the royal visit to Daventry that ought to be true if it is not. "Two hours after the King had retired to rest," writes Rastell in his History of Southwell, "some of his attendants hearing an uncommon noise in his chamber, went into it, and found his Majestie sitting up in bed and much agitated, but nothing which could have produced the noise they fancied they heard. The King in a trembling voice, inquired after the cause of their alarm, and told them how much he had been agitated in a dream by thinking he saw the apparition of Lord Strafford, who, after upbraiding him with unkindness, told him he was come to return him good for evil, and that he advised him by no means to fight the Parliamentary army that was at that time quartered at Northampton, for it was one whom the King could never conquer by arms. Prince Rupert, in whom courage was the predominant quality, rated the King out of his apprehensions the next day; and a resolution was taken to meet the enemy. The next night, however, the apparition appeared to him a second time, but with looks of anger, assuring him that would be the last advice he should be permitted to give him, but that if he kept his resolution of fighting he was undone." The King remained a day in a state of inactivity, and finally determined to march off northward. He took up his quarters at Lubbenham, near Market Harborough, on the eve of the battle, intending to march northward on the morrow. Ireton's troopers, by surprising the Royalist rear-guard at Naseby, led the King to hurry on to Market Harborough, where Rupert's counsels led to a decision to fight next day—Strafford's ghost notwithstanding. The result justified the King's forebodings. "He was often heard to say that he wished he had taken the warning, and not fought at Naseby; the meaning of which nobody knew but those to whom he told this appearance at Daintree, and they were afterwards all told to conceal it."

On the morning of June 14th Sir Thomas Fairfax, who was then a comparatively young man, being several years junior to Cromwell, rose at three o'clock and put his troops in motion. They had lain the night before at Guilsborough, a pretty village on the top of a hill almost due south of Naseby, and being advised by their excellent scoutmaster-general that the King was falling back on Market Harborough, Sir Thomas wished to compel him to a speedy action. In the early morning of that Saturday in June, when the dew was still heavy upon the grass, and the air was tremulous with the song of larks, the army of the Commonwealth marched down Guilsborough Hill and up the Naseby slope, reaching the village about five. There they breakfasted, as all armies would do under the same circumstances; but after breakfast, presumably while they were still in doubt as to whether the King would turn back to meet them or would pursue his march northward, they had a sermon. Who preached tradition sayeth not. Whether it was Hugh Peters, or the worthy Sprigge, or whether it was not a chaplain, but an officer, or even Cromwell himself, is not recorded. Only the text has come down to us, and a text worthy of the occasion; it was taken from Joshua the twenty-second chapter and the twenty-second verse, "The Lord God of gods, the Lord God of gods, he knoweth, and Israel he shall know; if it be in rebellion, or if in transgression against the Lord, save us not this day." Seldom was more solemn appeal ever made to the Lord of Hosts, seldom have more earnest men more boldly invoked the ordeal of battle as a test of the justice of their cause. When, at the close of the service, great bodies of the enemy's horse were discerned coming over the hill from Harborough, they rejoiced with exceeding joy. The set time had arrived, and the Lord was about to make bare His arm to minister judgment among the peoples.

It is easy to make out the ledge of the hill running east to west for about a mile upon which Sir Thomas Fairfax drew up his forces, and behind which, for about a hundred paces, they retreated, "so that the enemy might not perceive in what form our battle was drawn, nor see any confusion therein." For there was confusion. Fairfax had thrown upon Cromwell, at the eleventh hour, the command of the cavalry, which was 6,000 strong—forming, indeed, a full half of the entire army. Cromwell appointed Ireton to the left wing with five regiments of horse, while he retained six regiments under his own command. The clock was pointing to eight when they began placing their line in a posture of defence, and it was two hours before all was ready. Meanwhile the enemy came on again in passing good order, in numbers about equal to those of the New Model, but with 1,500 veteran officers skilled in the art of war to keep their troops in line. Maurice was there, and Rupert of the Rhine on the extreme right wing of the King's forces, stretching down to Sulby Hedge, which Cromwell had lined with dragoons to cover his left flank. Sulby Hedge still stands, marking the western border of the battlefield. Nor does it require much imagination to see once more the puffs of smoke that broke from under the May blossom as the dismounted troopers warned off the Cavaliers who ventured too near the boundary hedge. The King was in the centre with Lord Astley's foot, while Sir Marmaduke Langdale, with the northern horse, formed the left wing. The baggage waggons, with the ladies of the King's train and the royal cabinet with the compromising letters of his most sacred Majesty, were dispersed in the rear on the summit of the northern slope behind Broadmoor, from whence bright eyes watched eagerly the preparations for the fray.

When Cromwell was placing his cavalry in position, perceiving the confusion of his new troops and the excellent order of the Royal advance, "So far from being dismayed at it, it was the rise and occasion of a most triumphant faith and joy in him, expecting that God would do great things by small means, and by the things that are not bring to nought the things that are." Such a faith, converting even disadvantage and weakness into sources of strength, was capable of doing much greater things than the mere pulverising of the Stuarts.

Pulverised they were, however, as all the world knows. Millhill farmhouse stands back from the ledge looking down upon the fields sloping to Naseby, where the Roundheads' train was left with sturdy guard, whose firelocks went off with precision when Prince Rupert, in a red montero, came riding up after he had broken through Ireton's troops and driven them backwards, still hotly resisting, as far as the church. Passing Millhill you have in front of you the fields where the Parliamentary centre of foot was drawn up under stout old Skippon, whose cheery speech to his troops reads much more real than the set orations usually put in the mouths of commanding officers. "Come, my boys, my brave boys, let us pray heartily, and fight heartily. I will run the same fortunes and hazards with you. Remember the cause is for God and for the defence of yourselves, your wives, and your children; come, my heroic, brave boys, pray heartily and fight heartily, and God will bless us." To the left as far as Sulby Hedge stood Ireton with his cavalry. The right wing, where Cromwell fought, stood along the slope as far as the road to Sibbertoft. The plan on pages 71, 72, reduced from the original in Sprigge, exhibits the order of battle before the armies engaged, that is to say, just before ten o'clock.

"Both sides, with mighty shouts, express a hearty desire of fighting," say the Parliamentary Commissioners, "having for our part recommended our cause to God's protection and received the word, which was, God our strength, theirs Queen Mary; our forlorne hopes began the play." These "forlorne hopes" were 300 musketeers, who were thrown out in advance of the main body—an advanced skirmishing line, in short, which fell back as the centre advanced. Both wings appear to have engaged at the same time, and the battle became general. Anything more unlike a modern battle could hardly be imagined. The cannon in the centre did small execution, the shot passing over the heads of the combatants. The moment the foot came within carbine range both sides fired one volley, and then, clubbing their muskets, went for each other as if gunpowder had not existed and the battle had to be decided by a hammer-and-tongs mêlée. In reality it was decided by the cavalry. The horse, under Cromwell, charged down the hill, breaking up Langdale's cavalry, which were charging up. The first divisions, so broken, found refuge with the reserve of foot, and rallied there, but the other were hopelessly scattered and driven from their foot a distance of a quarter of a mile to the rear. The method of a cavalry charge was very simple. The horse rode full gallop at each other, pistols were fired as soon as they came within range, and then the sword-play began. Cromwell was much hampered by furze bushes, whose descendants still give a golden livery to the slope over which Langdale's troopers were driven in hopeless confusion, and by rabbit holes which rendered it difficult to advance in good order. "Nevertheless, not one body of the enemy's horse which they charged but they routed." While this was going on on the right, Ireton was having a bad time of it on the left. Sprigge gives a curiously detailed account of the action of the left wing, which for a time placed victory in jeopardy. "Upon the approach of the enemy's right wing of horse, our left wing drawing down the brow of the hill to meet them, the enemy coming on fast, suddenly made stand, as if they had not expected us in so ready a posture; ours seeing them stand, made a little stand also. Upon that the enemy advanced again, whereupon our left wing sounded a charge and fell upon them. The three right-hand divisions of our left made the first onset, and those divisions of the enemy opposite to them received the charge, and the two left-hand divisions of the left wing did not advance equally; but being more backward, the opposite divisions of the enemy advanced upon them. Of the three right-hand divisions (before-mentioned) which advanced, the middlemost charged not home; the other two coming to a close charge, routed the two opposite divisions of the enemy." Ireton, seeing the foot on his right hand sore pressed by the onslaught of the Royal infantry, charged to their relief. His horse was shot under him, while he himself, run through the thigh with a pike, and into the face with a halbert, was made prisoner. Notwithstanding this disaster, the horse on the right of his wing broke through the first line, and part of the reserves. The other Royal reserves then coming up, the Roundheads were broken up, the tide turned, and Prince Rupert meanwhile having swept through the cavalry opposed to him, captured six pieces of the rebels' best cannon, and pursued the broken regiments as far as Naseby village.

Meanwhile the infantry in the centre were pounding away at each other, the Parliamentarians on the whole getting the worst of it. The whole of the Roundhead infantry, excepting Fairfax's own regiments, fell back under the onslaught of the Royalists, and were only saved from a total overthrow by the Reserves, who, however, succeeded in driving back the enemy. Skippon was dangerously wounded, and Lord Astley's regiment held its own "with incredible courage and resolution, although we attempted them in the flanks, front and rear." Then about two hours after the fight began the decisive stroke was delivered. Fairfax brought up his regiment of foot, Cromwell mustered all his cavalry, and they fell together with overwhelming force upon the gallant tertia. Nothing could stand before the combined onslaught, and the King's cause was lost, all his foot being at the mercy of the Parliamentarians. The King, with his life-guards and his reserve of horse, was strangely hindered from making a counter charge. His troops marched to the right, when the only chance of averting crushing defeat was a desperate charge to the left. The last chance was gone, Rupert, too late, came riding back, closely pursued by the broken remnants of Ireton's wing, and the Royalists with their horse alone attempted to make one last stand. Fairfax re-formed his whole line of battle; both horse, foot, and artillery advanced anew to the attack. Without waiting for the charge of Cromwell's troopers, King Charles and his men broke and fled. It was one by the clock. In three hours the fate of England had been decided.

Eight hundred of the Royalist dead lay in heaps upon the hard-fought field, including, as Clarendon laments, 150 officers and gentlemen of "prime quality." All their foot were taken prisoners, to be marched to London, and afterwards sent for the most part on forage; all their cannon, their carriages, and the King's cabinet were captured. All that afternoon a stern and merciless chase went on. The pursuit was kept up almost to the walls of Leicester. Some women, chiefly Irish papist camp-followers, fell in the chase, and the village of Oxendon was burnt down. On the side of the Parliament 200 were slain.

"Sir," wrote Cromwell to the Speaker, "this is none other but the hand of God, and to Him alone belongs the glory, wherein none are to share with Him. Honest men served you faithfully in this action. Sir, they are trusty. I beseech you in the name of God not to discourage them." These men who were trusty, and who feared discouragement at the hands of the Presbyterian Commons, were Independents. Naseby was an Independent victory. In three hours on that summer's day, with no more loss of life on their part than results from a first-class railway accident, these despised sectaries had given the death-blow to absolute monarchy, and laid the foundation of England's liberties. Other Churches may glory in their councils and their creeds, but the Independents will ever regard Naseby, and the long series of victories of which it was the first, as one of the achievements of which they have most reason to be proud. The warrior saints who wielded the sword of the Lord and of Cromwell had stern work to do, but they did it well, and it was work that needed doing.

When I reached Naseby three merry brown hares were leaping in the meadow-land where the last fierce death-tussle ended in the breaking of Lord Astley's gallant tertias. The glory of our belated spring was on the hedges, the birds were singing at eventide, all nature seemed at peace. Yet there, not far from Broadmoor farmstead, still distinctly discernible after the lapse of two and a half centuries, were the pits in which, in one red burial blent, victor and vanquished were laid together in death. An old man, still living in 1792, "remembers very well to have been told by his grandfather, that he was present at the burial of the dead, which was done by the country people coming in from all quarters; some were stripped, others buried in their clothes, but in general so shallow that the bodies in a short time became very offensive, that matter issued from the graves and ran several yards upon the ground, which having subsided, the cattle ate those spots for several years remarkably bare. The graves are very visible, but are become concave, and water stands in them in the winter season." One more extract and I will leave this painful subject. I quote again from Mastin's History:—

The late Dr. Hill informed me that he had a relative, a Mr. Mansell, who fought in the battle of Naseby field, that he was wounded in the breast and left for dead; and being stripped to be buried, a young woman, daughter to an apothecary, happened to be upon the field, and finding his hand to be very soft exclaimed, "This certainly was a gentleman!" She further observed that she felt a pulse, and consequently he was not quite dead. She pulled off her under-petticoat, and wrapping him in it, had him conveyed to a neighbouring village, where he recovered and lived some years after. He kept the young woman as a companion or housekeeper to the time of his death when he left her a handsome annuity.

V.—THE IDEALS OF THE INDEPENDENTS.

At Naseby, Clarendon noted the superiority of the New Model alike to the old Parliamentary army and to the Royalists:—

That difference was observed all along, in the discipline of the King's troops and of those which marched under the command of Fairfax and Cromwell, that though the King's troops prevailed in their charge, and routed those they charged, they seldom rallied themselves again in good order, nor could be brought to make a second charge again the same day. Whereas the other troops, if they prevailed, or though they were beaten and routed, presently rallied again and stood in good order till they received their new orders. All that the King and Prince could do, could not rally their broken troops.

Yet the New Model was constructed on principles which every military martinet would have declared to be fatal to all discipline. Cromwell's army was as much a great debating society and political caucus as it was a fighting machine. The representative principle was established in every regiment. Elected agitators were as much a feature of the organisation as colonels, or its religious exercises; privates and generals met on an absolute equality before the throne of grace; the whole army was alive with revolutionary theories, and yet, and yet, "truly they were never beaten at all," and their iron discipline remains to this day the marvel of the world.

Independency is not anarchy, but it is liberty—it is so devoted to liberty that, if need arises, it does not shrink from consenting to submit to the severest discipline. The Independents, like their immortal leader, are at once the most idealist and the most opportunist of men. An idealism which will be content with nothing short save the establishment of the kingdom of heaven on earth, and this, if held not as a theory, but as a fixed idea, shrinks from no sacrifices in order to attain its end. To secure the liberties of England Cromwell was trammelled by no superstition as to consistency as to means. It was enough for him to be consistent as to his ultimate aim. He was a statesman, not a pedant, and to a large extent he has stamped the great features of his character upon the sect which regard him as their patron saint and great exemplar.

The Independents owe to Cromwell their imperial ideas, their conception of England's responsibility for the exercise of her power, and their belief in the grandeur of her destinies. They can never without apostasy adopt the criminal policy of non-intervention. They are as much committed to the maintenance of a powerful navy as they are to the order of the diaconate, and they are always and everywhere the sworn foes of religious intolerance, whether it is manifested against the Papists, the Atheists, or even against the intolerant orthodox. The traditions of the Commonwealth colour all their politics. Again and again in recent years the inspiration that springs perennial from the life of the Lord Protector has perceptibly deflected the course of English politics at home and abroad. Notably was this the case when Mr. Gladstone raised his protest against the Turkish alliance. No doubt High Church sympathies influenced some of those who took part in the Bulgarian agitation, just as a desire to avoid war at any cost animated others. But Mr. Gladstone would be the first to admit that the motive force of his agitation, which alone rendered its success possible, was the passionate enthusiasm for liberty and the fierce zeal against oppression, which blazed in the breasts of those who remembered Milton's sonnets and who longed for nothing so much as that England's ironclads might bear to the Sultan the haughty warning which Cromwell uttered, when that voice, which seldom threatened in vain, "declared that unless favour were shown to the people of God, the English guns should be heard in the Castle of San Angelo." And in still more recent times it was the descendants of the Puritans who destroyed in a single hour the ascendancy which Mr. Parnell had built up by the labours of many years over the people of Ireland.

By far the most brilliant study of Cromwell's character and career that has appeared of late years, is that which

Mr. Frederic Harrison has contributed to the "Twelve English Statesmen" series. I quote two paragraphs from those eloquent pages, in order to illustrate the incalculable advantage which it has been to England that in every constituency there should be found members of a sect imbued with hero-worship for a ruler of whom Mr. Harrison can write as follows:—

Apart from opposition from his Parliaments, the Protectorate was one unbroken success. Order, trade, commerce, justice, learning, culture, rest and public confidence returned, and grew ever stronger. Prosperity, wealth, harmony were restored to the nation, and with these a self-respect, a spirit of hope and expansion such as it had not felt since the defeat of the Armada. Never in the history of England has a reorganisation of its administrative machinery been known at once so thorough and so sound. No royal government had ever annihilated insurrection and cabal with such uniform success, and with moderation so great. No government—not even that of Henry VII. or of Elizabeth—had ever been more frugal, though none with its resources had effected so much. No government had ever been so tolerant in things of the mind; none so just in its dealings with classes and interests; none so eager to suppress abuses, official tyranny, waste and speculation. No government had been so distinctly modern in its spirit; so penetrated with desire for reform, honesty, capacity. For the first time in England the republican sense of social duty to the State began to replace the old spirit of personal loyalty to a Sovereign. For the first and only time in modern Europe morality and religion became the sole qualifications insisted on by a Court. In the whole modern history of Europe, Oliver is the only ruler into whose presence no vicious man could ever come, whose service no vicious man might enter.

But it was in foreign policy that the immediate splendour of Oliver's rule dazzled his contemporaries. "His greatness at home," wrote Clarendon, "was but a shadow of the glory he had abroad." Englishmen and English historians have hardly even yet taken the full measure of the stunning impression produced on Europe by the power of the Protector. It was the epoch when supremacy at sea finally passed from the Dutch to the English. It was the beginning of the maritime empire of England; and it was the first vision of a new force which was destined to exercise so great an influence, the increased power of fleets and marine artillery to destroy seaports and dominate a seaboard. Hitherto fleets had fought fleets; but Blake taught modern Europe that henceforward fleets can control kingdoms. It was the sense of this new power, so rapid, so mobile, with so long an arm and practically ubiquitous, that caused Mazarin and Louis, Spain and Portugal, Pope and Princes of Italy, to bow to the summons of Oliver. England became a European power of the first rank, as she had never been since the Plantagenets, not even in the proudest hours of Wolsey or Elizabeth. From the Baltic to the Mediterranean, from Algiers to Teneriffe, from Newfoundland to Jamaica, were heard the English cannon. And the sense of this new factor in the politics of the world produced on the minds of the age such an impression as the rise of the German Empire with the consolidation of the German military system has produced upon our own. All through his rule Oliver had laboured to found a vast Protestant League, a new Balance of Power. Had he ruled for another generation, the history of Europe might have had some different cast.

In the newer problems of social regeneration Oliver Cromwell has not left us without guidance. The very day after the battle of Dunbar he addressed to the Parliament words which those at Westminster may even this day do well to take to heart:—

"Disown yourselves; but own your authority, and improve it to curb the proud and insolent, such as would disturb the tranquillity of England, though under what specious pretence soever. Relieve the oppressed, hear the groans of poor prisoners in England. Be pleased to reform the abuses of all professions; and if there be anyone that makes many poor to make a few rich, that suits not a Commonwealth. If He that strengthens your servants to fight please to give your hearts to set upon these things, in order to His glory and the glory of your Commonwealth, then besides the benefit England shall feel thereby you shall shine forth to other nations, who shall emulate the glory of such a pattern, and through the power of God turn into the like."

England, according to Cromwell, owed it to God to take the lead. The genius of England, which Milton saw renewing her mighty youth, was ever present to his thoughts. Not to lag behind, but to lead. Alas! of late our statesmen seem to have reversed the order of this aspiration. But the leadership was to be asserted not by conquest, but by justice, by helping the people, and by curbing the oppressions of those who make many poor to make one rich.

I have dwelt so much on the hero-exemplar of Independence that I have hardly left myself space to do more than allude to the other services of the sect and its members to the cause of humanity. After Cromwell, Milton was the greatest of the Independents, as he was one of the greatest and most gifted of men. Like the Lord Protector, the Foreign Secretary of the Commonwealth stands apart; after them there is no third. But it is well to remember that this sect, poor, proscribed, and persecuted as it was in the latter part of the seventeenth century, gave England Andrew Marvell, one of the first and purest of journalists; Defoe, whose "Robinson Crusoe" is still one of the most widely read books in our literature; and John Bunyan, who from his gaol in Bedford left the "Pilgrim's Progress" as a priceless heritage to the world—for from the point of view of church order and political history, Baptists and Congregationalists are Independents. In the eighteenth century, Watts and Doddridge restored the hymn to its place of power in the Church, and Howard displayed that consuming zeal for humanity which overleapt all barriers of race and religion. In our own century the Independents in England and in America have taken a leading part in the great humanitarian movements of the day. The family of Lyman Beecher stands first among those who contributed to the emancipation of the American Republic from the stain of slavery, and in this country the movement in favour of complete religious equality has ever found in the Independents its foremost champions. They have still work to do in many directions before they can realise the Cromwellian ideal. They have to complete the union of the three kingdoms by surer means than those which alone were possible in the seventeenth century; and in place of Oliver's great Protestant League they have to secure the reunion of Christendom on a basis of humanitarian activity, and to secure an alliance of all English-speaking peoples. If they are but worthy of their ancestry, there is no limit to the beneficent influence which they will be enabled to exercise upon the world. Their numbers may not be many, but sovereignty always belongs to the few.

"You everywhere concede," said Milton to Salmasius, in his second "Defence of the People of England," "that the Independents were superior, not in numbers, but in discipline and in courage. Hence I contend that they well deserved the superiority which they acquired; for nothing is more agreeable to the order of nature or more for the interest of mankind than that the less should yield to the greater, not in numbers but in wisdom and virtue. Those who excel in prudence, in experience, in industry and courage, however few they may be, will, in my opinion, finally constitute the majority and everywhere have the ascendant."

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE MONTH.

For the convenience of subscribers any photograph in this list can be sent post free to any address on receipt of 2s. 2d.

ROYAL.

MESSRS. RICHARD STANLEY AND CO., THORNTON HEATH.
His Majesty the King of Sweden. H.R.H. the Crown Prince of Sweden. H.R.H. the Crown Princess of Sweden.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales (in Admiral's uniform). H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence and Avondale. H.I.M. the Emperor of Germany (two portraits, one in German military and the other in British Admiral's costume). H.R.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar. H.I.M. the Empress of Germany. Philippe Duc d'Orleans.

LEGAL AND POLITICAL.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Mr. Justice Collins. Mr. A. R. Jelf, Q.C. Sir Charles Russell, Q.C., M.P. Sir Thomas Sutherland, M.P. Sir Charles M. Palmer, M.P. Mr. R. W. Hanbury, M.P. Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P. Mr. Roby, M.P. Mr. T. D. Sullivan, M.P. The Hon. Evelyn Hubbard. Mr. Graham Whitelaw.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Col. C. E. Howard Vincent, M.P. Huluhulu and Umfeti (King Gungunhana's representatives). The late O'Gorman Mahon, M.P.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY.

Mr. Sutherst.

SOCIAL.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Countess Cadogan. The Duchess of St. Albans. The Duke and Duchess of Westminster. The Marchioness of Carmarthen. Lady Beaumont. Lady Wimborne. Lady Dilke. Lord Windsor. Lord Truro. Lord Halifax. Sir W. T. Lewis. Sir W. C. Leng. Sir C. Euan Smith. Sir John Astley. Sir J. B. Lawes. Sir Philip Rose.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Sir John Astley. Mrs. Grimwood. Lady Smyth. Sir Francis Knollys. Mrs. Crutchley (as Polly in the Guard's burlesque "Robinson Crusoe"). Lady Heathcote. Viscountess Downe. Viscountess Galway. Hon. Mrs. Lowther.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Admirals Jenkins, Mayne, Lord Alcester, Hallowes, Lord John Hay, Sullivan, Stephenson.

RELIGIOUS.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

The Archbishop of York. The Bishops of Peterborough, Carlisle, Truro, Southwell, Lichfield, Lahore, Tuam, Worcester. The

Dean of Peterborough. the Deans of Windsor. Perth. Norwich. Rev. Canon Stowell. Rev. Prof. Canon Browne. Rev. Canon Bright. Rev. Canon Elliot. Rev. C. S. Bassett.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

The Archbishop of York. The Bishops of Lichfield, Truro, Hull. Archdeacon Potts

LITERARY, ARTISTIC AND SCIENTIFIC.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Mr. William Archer. Professor Bain. Mr. Wyke Baylis. Sir Henry Bessemer, F.R.S. Mr. W. H. M. Christie (the Astronomer Royal). Dr. Crosskey. Mr. C. Kinloch Cooke. Mr. Onslow Ford, R.A. Dr. David Gill (of Cape Town). Miss Jean Ingelow. Mr. B. Wm. Leader, A.R.A. Sir James Linton. Sir William MacCormac. Professor Max Müller. Dr. John Rae (Arctic Explorer). Dr. Robson Roose. Miss Hesba Stretton. Mr. H. J. Thaddeus. Mr. L. M. Walford. Miss Charlotte M. Yonge.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Miss Jean Ingelow.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY.

Mr. Isaac Zangwill, Mr. George Hutchinson, Sir Morell Mackenzie.

MR. ALFRED ELLIS.

Mr. C. Haddon Chambers (Author of "The Idler," "Captain Swift," etc.)

MESSRS. BOWING AND SMALL.

Sir Frederic Leighton. Dr. B. W. Richardson.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Miss Gertrude Kingston.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Miss Florence Farr. Miss Dorothy Dorr. Miss Dorothy Dene. Miss Julia Neilson. Miss Florence Monteith. Miss Ganthony. Miss Sybil Sanderson. Miss Marie Grobel. Miss Thudichum. Mr. Carl Fuchs. Miss Adelina de Lara. MR. ALFRED ELLIS.

Miss Maggie Duggan. Miss Ella Russell (three portraits). Mr. Richard Green (in "Ivanhoe"). Mr. George Alexander.

THE STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY.

Mr. H. Beerbolm Tree. Miss Fortescue. Miss Jennie Hill. Mlle. Zelle de Lussan. Mlles. Sophia and Julia Ravogli. Madame Albani. Madame Melba. Miss Eames. Madame Palladino. Signor Abramoff.

Messrs. Eglington and Co. have sent us the July number of Menard Women of the Day (Price 2s. 6d.) containing three excellent portraits, by Barraud, of Lord Alcester, Miss Thudichum, and Mr. Justice Mathew.

INDEX OF STANDARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

THE Index of Standard Photographs which formed part of the "Annual Index of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS," has proved so far popular and successful that I have decided to continue it monthly. It will form a guide to the current issues of artistic, scientific and educational photographs, compiled by Mr. H. Snowden Ward, who undertook the compilation of the Annual Index, and to whom photographers and publishers are invited to address particulars of their latest publications, at Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

La Vieille Ville.—The reproduction given on this page is from Poulton and Son's series, and was unfortunately crowded out of the "Annual Index." Messrs. Poulton and Son's operators spent last year in photographing the south of France, the Pyrenees, and the Riviera, so that their views of these places are up to date. They are now at work on an entirely new series of negatives of Great Britain. The address is Poulton and Son, Lee, Kent. (Prices and sizes, see "Annual Index," p. 77.)

An Exhibition.—The whole series of over two hundred portraits, tableaux, and "Gavotte" groups taken at the Jubilee Ball of the Royal Institute of Painters in Water Colours, is now on exhibition at the galleries of Diadéri and Co., 4, Brook Street, Hanover Square, W. Admission on presentation of card. Series mentioned in "Annual Index" under Fancy Dresses (p. 86) and Historical Tableaux, p. 87. One of the beautiful Gavotte groups is reproduced in the "Annual," p. 86.

Athletics.—A series of instantaneous studies by Mr. Louis Meldon, including tennis, cycling, cricket, running, leaping, diving, coaching, yachting, golf, etc., sizes, etc., see "Annual Index," p. 77. G. W. Wilson and Co., Aberdeen, through trade.

British Museum.—Mansell and Co. have just reprinted the catalogue of their first series of British Museum photographs. It contains 136 pages of particulars, including many historical and antiquarian notes, and 50 pages of an introduction, which should prove of much value to students. The catalogue is arranged by the keepers of the various departments of the Museum. Sizes, etc., see "Annual Index," p. 82. Mansell and Co., Oxford Street, W., and trade.

Brontë Portraits and Hawthorne Views. 16 subjects, including Charlotte Brontë, from crayon by Richmond; Brontë group, from pencil drawing by Rev. Patrick Brontë; and Charlotte Brontë's favourite dog Floss, from a water-colour by Charlotte Brontë. Cartes 6d., Cabinets 1s. R. and F. Brown, 123, Main Street, Hawthorne, and trade.

Colonial Portraits.—Photographs of all English theatrical companies on foreign tour are now received by first mail after publication in New York, Boston, and Sydney, by Mr. William Gill, 217, Albany Street, N.W. (through trade).

Derbyshire Views, etc.—New views of Derbyshire Dales, 20; Old Infirmary Derby, 12; Denston College, 4; Tutbury Castle and Church, 10; Stafford Hotel, Stoke-upon-Trent, 4, etc. Platinotype, 8½ by 6½, 1s. 6d. Richard Keene, Derby, and trade.

Devon Views, etc.—A small new series of views of Exmouth, Teignmouth, Exeter, and Budleigh Salterton; also a dozen views of London, 8 by 6, mounted 6d., coloured 1s.; also opalines 8 by 6, 1s. Voll, Lee and Brown, Worship Street, E.C., through trade only.

Celebrities.—All the latest portraits of celebrities are stocked as issued by the photographers. Cabinets 2s. Richard Stanley and Co., Thornton Heath, through trade.

General.—A very extensive stock of views and portraits is held by D. R. Duncan, 186, Fleet Street, E.C., who is agent for almost all the publishers mentioned in the "Annual Index," and who also imports largely from the Continental publishers.

General.—Richard Stanley and Co., Thornton Heath, hold an immense wholesale stock of every class of photograph.

They are special agents for most of the Continental photographers. Through trade. See also Celebrities above.

Harriet Martineau.—A portrait that has been inquired for by publishers and collectors for some years, just obtained, and published by W. Gill, 217, Albany Street, N.W.; Richard Stanley and Co., Thornton Heath, and trade.

Mexican Views.—W. H. Jackson (W. H. Jackson and Co., Denver, Colorado) has just completed a magnificent series of 600 negatives (sizes from 6 by 4 to 80 by 17) of Mexico. Many of the subjects are now on the market, and list in preparation. Mr. Jackson has gone over a lot of ground never before photographed or described; says that the scenery is equal to the finest in the Rockies, and expects that many of his views will be a complete revelation to geologists, botanists, zoologists, geographers and ethnographers. Prices, etc., see "Annual Index," page 98.

From photo by Poulton & Son,

"LA VIEILLE VILLE," MENTONE.

[Lee, Kent.

Paintings.—160 principal pictures in present Paris Salon. Cabinet, unmounted, 1s.; 11 by 9, mounted 5s.; 18 by 14, mounted 12s. 6d. "Undine," by A. Lehman, 18½ by 14, mounted 12s. Also four subjects, printed in red carbon from coloured crayons, Simeon Salomon, viz.:—Ave Maria, 11½ by 12½; An unexpected Desire, 12½ by 10; Lust destroyeth Love, 12½ by 7½; and Love Wounded, unmounted 9s. each, and mounted 10s. 6d. each. Mansell and Co., 271 and 273, Oxford Street, W., and trade.

ART IN THE MAGAZINES.

Magazine of Art. July. 1s.

"Romance without Words." Etching after Wm. Thorne.
 Thackeray Portraits. (Illus.) F. G. Kitton.
 Lunch Artists. W. S. Hunt.
 Maddocks Collection at Bradford. (Illus.) B. Wood.
 Hokusai (concluded). S. Bing.
 The Artistic Aspects of Figure Photography. (Illus.) P. H. Emerson.
 The Metal Ornament of Bound Books. (Illus.) S. T. Prideaux.
 Henry Stormouth Leischild. (Illus.) J. Spake.

Art Journal. July. 1s. 6d.

"Guildford." Etching by Percy Robertson.
 The Summer Exhibitions at Home and Abroad. (Illus.) III. C. Phillips.
 Regimental Pets. (Illus.) Major J. P. Groves.
 The Clyde and the Western Highlands. (Illus.) II. B. Walker.
 Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen. With Portrait. J. F. Boyes.
 Photography by the Hand Camera. (Illus.) Edwin Long. With Portrait.

Portfolio. July. 2s. 6d.

"The Hayfield." Etching after Julien Dupré.
 "Head of a Lion." Etching by Herbert Dicksee.
 "Innsbruck." After Clarkson Stanfield.
 The Present State of the Fine Arts in France. VII. The Rustic School. (Illus.) P. G. Hamerton.
 The Church Plate of Leicestershire. (Illus.) Thomas Rowlandson, Humourist. (Illus.) F. G. Stephens.
 The Lago di Garda. (Illus.) E. M. Cesaresco.

Art Amateur. June. 3s. cents.

Portrait Bust by Herbert Adams.
 The Salon of the Champs Elysées. T. Child.
 The Society of American Artists.
 An Art Student Abroad. III. Holland (continued). (Illus.)
 Chicago Art Institute (continued). (Illus.) E. Knauff.

L'Art. June. 2s.

The Salon of the Champs Elysées. (Illus.) II. L. Benedite.

Atalanta. July.

A Tapestry Gallery in Florence. (Illus.) Helen Zimmern.

Atlantic Monthly. July.

Tintoret, the Shakespeare of Painters. W. R. Thayer.

Century. July.

Fra Bartolommeo Della Porta and Mariotto Albertinelli. (Illus.) W. J. Stillman.

Contemporary Review. July.

Punch and his Artists. M. H. Spielmann

Month. July.

Mr. Calderon and St. Elizabeth. Rev. S. F. Smith.

National Review. July.

After the Galleries: A Studio Talk.

Newbery House. July.

Childhood in Art. (Illus.) T. Child.

Tinsley. July.

Sculpture in the Royal Academy.

Magazine of Art.—The great feature this month is F. G. Kitton's article on the "Portraits of Thackeray." The earliest known portrait of him is to be found, says Mr. Kitton, in a delicately tinted drawing by George Chinnery. In this picture Thackeray is represented as a curly-headed boy, with large full eyes looking straight at you. The next is a bust by J. Devile, showing him as he was at eleven years of age. A replica of this was presented to the National Portrait Gallery by Mr. Leslie Stephen. At the Garrick Club there are two drawings from the life by Maclise, dated 1832 and 1833 respectively. In these Thackeray is depicted as a fashionably-dressed young man, seated in a négligé attitude, and with massive eyeglass foppishly displayed. Maclise also includes him in the group of Fraserians engraved for Fraser's Magazine, January, 1835, and a few years later again Maclise delineated him in a delicately pencilled sketch, which Thackeray himself copied so skilfully that it is scarcely possible to detect any departure from the original. This facsimile was reproduced by lithography for the frontispiece to "The Orphan of Pimlico." In 1836 Mr. Frank Stone painted a life-size bust portrait of the novelist, but Mrs. Ritchie does not consider it a very good likeness. Samuel Laurence executed two admirable drawings in chalk about 1853. Another very successful portrait was painted by Mr. E. M. Ward in 1854. This shows Thackeray in his bed-room study at Onslow Square, in dressing-gown and slippers, and sitting with a writing-desk on his knee. Sir John Millais's work, though but a memory sketch, is so life-like that Sir Edgar Boehm derived much assistance from it for his statuette begun in 1860. The last sketch of the novelist from the life was made in pen and ink by Fred. Walker. Of the posthumous portraits of Thackeray, Sir John Gilbert's painting is the best.

Art Journal.—The third paper on the Summer Exhibitions is devoted to the Royal Academy and to the New Gallery, and in it are included pictures of Mr. J. MacWhirter, Mr. H. Moore, and Mr. Alfred East at work in their studios. Major Percy Groves contributes a capital article on the four-footed favourites of the corps in Her Majesty's service, though it can scarcely be called an art subject. These pets have included goats, horses, a black ram, deer, antelopes, dogs, a bear, and an elephant, many of whose portraits are given. At Edinburgh Castle there is a cemetery for departed soldiers' pets; it is maintained by the officers and men of the different corps quartered in the Castle. Such inscriptions as the following may be found on the tombstones:—"In Memory of Pat, who followed the 72nd Highlanders in Peace and War for 10 years. Died 9th March, 1888." Sir Philip Cunliffe Owen is the subject of the biographical sketch of the Chiefs of Our National Museums. He is Director of the South Kensington Museum, but he is also known as a practical philanthropist and a promoter of temperance and thrift.

Portfolio.—Mr. Hamerton has taken the Rustic School of Painters for the subject of his article on the fine arts in France this month, and he discusses the works of Léopold Robert, Jules Breton, Troyon, Millet, Rosa Bonheur, and others who have commemorated pastoral and agricultural life in their pictures. In the noble "Head of a Lion" we have the portrait of a South African lion, named Punch, which was for some years at the Zoo. The etching is from one of the studies which Mr. Herbert Dicksee made for his picture, "The Dying Lion," exhibited at the Academy in 1888.

Of the articles on art in the other magazines, that on the Punch artists in the Contemporary Review is one of the most interesting. In the Century Magazine Mr. W. J. Stillman continues his studies of the Italian old masters with an article on "Fra Bartolommeo and Albertinelli." Miss Helen Zimmern's contribution to Atalanta is a description of the Florentine Gallery of Tapestry. She says, too, that there is some idea at the present day of resuscitating the noble art. However that may be, the collection forms a valuable mine for ladies who are skilful with their needle and those who wish to learn designing. In the Newbery House Magazine, Mr. Theodore Child begins a series of papers on "Childhood in Art," his first contribution dealing with "Boys and Girls from Old Florence." Of Tintoret we have no authentic biography, but Mr. William R. Thayer has got together a very interesting account of the Italian master in the Atlantic Monthly. The sculpture in the Royal Academy comes in for a short notice in Tinsley.

RECENT RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

A CAUSERIE BY DR. E. J. DILLON.

SOME few of the novels, stories, poems and sketches that yearly, monthly, and weekly appear in the Russian literary market in blue, white, or grey paper covers are undoubtedly worth reading, but it is exclusively for their extrinsic merits, in so far as they serve to illustrate the manners and customs, to explain the religious and social views, or throw light upon the curious psychology of the people; but they have no serious claims to a place in that select library of international literature which is of no one country and of all time. The literary guild is broken up in Russia: its members, at first forcibly dispersed, are now mostly dead, and their craft secrets seem to have died with them. The notabilities of to-day are mostly outsiders, who wear literary success as a feather in their caps; men who have no traditions to uphold, who have taken no oath of allegiance to the Muses, who have never been duly initiated in the mysteries of the calling. Having been summoned hastily from the highways and byways of life, it is only natural that many of them should have sauntered in without a wedding garment. One of them resembles Burns in nothing more than the circumstance that he is an exciseman; another renders more lasting service to a tramway company, whom he serves in the useful capacity of cashier, than to humanity, or even Russian readers, by his rapidly written, rarely remembered romances; a third is a humdrum book-keeper at a railway station; a fourth, a favourite physician, with many readers and few patients; a fifth is a half-hearted censor; a sixth is a railway comptroller and so on to the bitter end. Russian Parnassus contains no gold mines, and those who frequent that mountain are mere visitors, who live elsewhere to gain a livelihood. All of them serve two, and most of them several masters, with the lamentable results foretold in the Gospel.

One of the most gifted members of this motley corporation, the writer by whom at one time Turghenieff's mantle seemed to be dexterously caught up and gracefully donned, is a physician of great promise and not very great performance. M. Tshekoff, who is still a young man, with time enough before him to fulfil his most liberal promises, is a literary miniaturist, whose work gives one the impression of great power studiously kept in reserve; a man of considerable insight and remarkable power of combination, who courageously dives into the mysterious depths of the ocean of human life, and brings up—shreds and seaweed. His chief merits (and they are unanimously acknowledged by enemies and friends) consist in that unruffled calm and artistic objectivity in which his colleagues are so sadly deficient; in his complete exemption from that petty party bias which discolours and disfigures some of the very best productions of Russian literature, and lowers them to the level of the political philippics and pleadings of a daily newspaper; and in that wonderful fidelity to nature with which he delineates the complicated social types of modern Russia.

THE DECAY OF RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

The views of such an authority on Russian literature, and on the causes that led to its decay, cannot but be interesting; they are contained in one of his latest sketches, published in the Northern Messenger, and entitled "A Tedious Story," the hero of which, an old Russian professor of vast reading and experience, delivers himself of the following judgment:—

As for me, I while away my time in the pursuit of French books in yellow paper covers. Of course it would be more patriotic to read Russian authors; but to tell the truth, I have no particular liking for them. With the exception of the works of two or three of the older ones, I look upon Russian letters at the present day less as a literature than as a sort of subsidiary domestic handicraft which benevolent people are expected to encourage, but the products of which are not intended for use. The very best of the wares turned out cannot be termed remarkable, nor even sincerely praised without a but. The same thing holds good of all the novelties of our so-called literature that I have read during the past ten or fifteen years. There is not a single remarkable book among the lot, no tribute of praise can be discerned to any one of them without the disparaging but. They are well written, noble, but without a trace of cleverness in their composition; or they are clever and elevating, but badly put together, or else they are well written and clever, but any thing but edifying."

HOW AUTHORS ARE FETTERED—

This is not the opinion of a crochety writer clearing the ground for his own pedestal. The phenomena thus signalled are various and contradictory, but Tshekoff seems to have hit the nail on the head when he suggested the loss of liberty as the main cause. No man, whatever his craft or calling, is more completely fettered and crippled than a Russian writer. In Italy in former times a versifier often had some scores of rhymes given to him in a certain order, to which he undertook to tack on words, and turn out a "poem" with some tolerable meaning. In Russia the theme, the moral, the allusions and the omissions are all specified along with the order, and the author has to sit down and execute the command without reasoning or discussion. "I do not recollect a single new book," continues Tshekoff's garrulous professor, "the author of which did not from the very first page fetter himself with all kinds of conventions and compromises. One is bound to avoid all allusions to a naked human body; another is pinned down to psychological analysis, a third has pledged his word to treat his subject from a strictly humanitarian point of view; a fourth deliberately blotches whole pages with endless descriptions of nature, just to show that he is not didactic, and so on. . . . There is plenty of cool calculation, no end of prudence and shrewdness, but not the faintest trace of freedom or courage to write naturally, and consequently there is no motive power."

—NOT ONLY BY THE CENSURE—

The writer or writers in the Fortnightly Review who lately defended the thesis that Russian literature is being crushed by systematic oppression on the part of the authorities, drew most of their arguments from the procedure of the censure, which they describe as encircling literature like a boa-constrictor. Whether or not they succeeded in establishing their case, is not for me to determine, but it certainly seems as if they might have devoted more of their attention to a phase of the question to which they scarcely vouchsafed to do more than incidentally allude—viz. that other dangerous form of oppression which has its source in the changeable caprices of a coarse-minded public, the cupidity of uneducated editors and publishers, and the tyrannical will of self-appointed censors. The damage done to literature by this species of thralldom is perhaps worse than that of the most rigorous censure known to history, though there may be much to be said in favour of the thesis that the former is the direct outcome of the latter.

—BUT BY THE PUBLISHER.

In most countries stories, novels, and sketches are occasionally bespoken like a pair of woollen stockings, but the authors are allowed a considerable degree of latitude in the execution of the order. In Russia it is very different—so different indeed that merchants and artisans are much better off than poets, dramatists, and novelists. A merchant who receives money for tea, coffee, and wine can palm off boiled leaves, sand, various chemicals, and other unsavoury things upon his customers with practical impunity, whereas the literary man must keep strictly to the terms of the contract, and deliver not only the covenanted quantity, but likewise the stipulated quality. "One review compels its writers to eulogise the young generation and to anathematise the old; another refuses to print a single word that is unfavourable to the peasant; a third obliges its contributors to pose as Liberals," etc. etc. (The Week, p. 198, May.) The proportions assumed by this species of violence surpass anything known in countries where every opinion has a right to make itself heard, and people are correspondingly cooler and more reasonable.

COUNT TOLSTOI'S EXPERIENCE.

It may help to give an idea of the ridiculous rigour and demoralising tendency of this private censure when I say that Count Leo Tolstoi, after having published two-thirds of his novel, "Anna Karenina," in serial parts in the Russian Messenger, was informed by the editor that the third and last part would not be allowed to appear, and he was accordingly compelled to publish it in a pamphlet apart. The reason of this curious measure was that he had contrived between the end of the second and the beginning of the third part to disagree with the editor, M. Katkoff, on the Servian question. The works of another writer are excluded from several reviews because his comparisons and illustrations are occasionally taken from the Bible, and give one the impression that he is a firm believer in that book; while a third is tabooed because he is suspected of entertaining opinions favourable to the Jews. This private censorship of taste and caprice occasionally leads to very strange consequences, two of which are now the themes of conversation in Russian literary circles.

THE LETTER THAT KILLETH.

The heroes of the catastrophes in question are two writers of a limited amount of positive literary talent, M. Booraynin, and the novelist, M. Yassinsky. The charge against both of these knights of the pen is of a very grave nature, and would be classified by a lawyer as unjustifiable homicide. The former is accused of having some time ago hastened the death of a young and gifted Russian poet, Nadson, by the abominable calumnies which he published about him in his "interesting and clever sketches," and now M. Yassinsky has been solemnly and publicly reproached by a venerable scholar at a meeting of a learned society in Kieff, with having caused the death of an estimable professor of the Imperial University of Kieff by portraying him and his family in a novel published in monthly parts, which has just been concluded in the Observer (Nabliudatel). The title of the story is "The Ordinary Professor," and the hero is the erudite professor of natural sciences, whose daily life, faults, sins, and relatives, etc., were so minutely and so faithfully depicted that the gift of seeing himself as others saw him overpowered him, and he died.

THE NOVEL THAT KILLED ITS HERO.

M. Yassinsky, who writes under the pseudonym of "Max Belinsky," is an imitator of Guy de Maupassant, not devoid of certain talents of his own, which he employs to portray the externals of the people and things he sees around him. Thus he occasionally makes the acquaintance of artists or professors, whom he charms with his seductive manners, and then immortalises, à la Van Dyck, limning every member of the family, down to the dog and the cat, and noting every distinctive feature of their persons, down to the smallest wart and least noticeable pimple. This, at least, is the statement of one of his friends. ("I am a personal friend of his," one of them naively assured me, "and, believe me, I had rather cut out my sinful tongue than calumniate him. Everything I am telling you is the unvarnished truth.") It is the anthropometrical system cunningly adapted to literature, and euphemistically termed "Naturalism." This is not the first time that Yassinsky has been accused of Naturalism of a most personal kind. He once punished a critic by "immortalising" him in one of his novels; but then Turghenieff, Dostoieffsky, Shtshedreen, and nearly every celebrated littérateur among his countrymen have been taxed with giving way to the same weakness. The hero of the novel, like the professor who died since its appearance, is an elderly man suffering from consumption in an advanced stage. He is described as a confirmed morphomaniac, dull and stupid as a professor, querulous as an invalid, henpecked as a husband, and linked indissolubly with a woman as capriciously changeable in her love and as free from the prejudices of conventional ethics as a South Sea Islander. Two other professors who occupy prominent places beside the hero in the foreground of the canvas are philosophers by profession and epicurean egotists in practice. One of them, not living very happily with his young and nervous wife, abandons her for a young girl—a child almost—whom he has enticed away from the tutelage of a rich banker. The other philosopher, though his hair is as white as the snow on Mount Etna, is convulsed by passions as fierce as the fires that burn in the crater below. These three are the chief dramatis personæ.

THE IMMORALITY OF RUSSIAN PROFESSORS.

The action is varied and dramatic, vibrating between the first and the tenth commandments, violating most of them on the way, and culminating in the mysterious murder of the seduced girl and the commission by the sage-femme of that form of cruelty which Russian journalists euphemistically name the manufacture of angels (in England it is known and practised as infanticide). Considering that the hero is a real person, whom the sight of his own self projected on to the literary canvas has killed outright, that the scene is Kieff, the mother of Russian cities, and that the academic corporation is depicted as inert, stupid, avaricious, and dissolute, it is perhaps only natural that the city of Kieff should be in commotion, and certain classes of its inhabitants ready and willing to lynch the daring novelist. The critics have not yet had time to give expression to their opinions on the subject, for the concluding chapters of the story have only just been published, but one of the most fashionable of the fraternity has taken time by the forelock and sat in judgment. Living in a glass house, he has wisely refrained from casting the first stone, and having been in exactly the same position as the accused, he is not devoid of a fellow feeling for M. Yassinsky. As a specimen of the lines on which novels are noticed in the Russian Press and of the questions which generally crop up on such occasions, and of much else which does not need pointing out, the following extract from the article of the fashionable critic may prove more interesting than edifying: "I do not know to what extent M. Yassinsky is true to nature in depicting contemporary Russian philosophers as Don Juans of the basest type. I have already admitted that he may have possibly laid on the colours too thickly. But my own contribution to the question is as follows: I was once making a trip on the Volga in a steamboat, among the passengers of which were several residents of a provincial university city. They were talking about the professors of the university, with whom to all appearance they were intimately acquainted; and the things I there heard were, without contradiction, extraordinary. One of the professors, it appears, lives with two women, both of whom are the wives of his colleagues. Another philosopher set about seducing one of the actresses of the opera bouffe, and employed chantage for the purpose. A third lecturer leads a gay dissolute life in the local café chantants in company with the light women of the town; and in order to obtain the means of keeping up this rakish life, does not scorn to forge bills of exchange and such like things. And observe, all these things were narrated, not in the form of general gossip, but in luxuriant detail, and exact reference to facts well known to every inhabitant of the city, and with the names in full of the scholarly adulterers and erudite butterflies, and of the victims of their gallant exploits." (V. Booraynin, New Times, May 15, 1891.)

A RUSSIAN GUY DE MAUPASSANT.

The rigorous private censure of a depraved taste which engenders such crimes as that of which M. Yassinsky stands accused, and such judgments as that which M. Booraynin has thus delivered, is as despotic and as baneful as the censure of the authorities, and M. Tshekoff has successfully endeavoured to escape its yoke. He is as free as the March wind. Independent of editors, he can treat with publishers on terms of equality, and can afford to be courageous enough to say exactly what he thinks and to give artistic form to what he sees and hears. And he has seen much of Russian life, its bright and seamy sides, in Europe and in Asia, young though he is. His sketches, though short and fragmentary, are artistic; and as his collection of Russian types is unanimously admitted to be faithful to the life, a glance at his album cannot but interest the foreigner, who is bewildered by the contradictory accounts he reads of Russia and the Russians.

This gallery of typical portraits is remarkably complete, embracing all classes, all ages, and both sexes. Babies, youths, men and women in the flower of their age, and bald-headed ancients on the brink of the grave, are all here, with their tell-tale national traits, their characteristic expression, their specially Slavonic psychology.

The reader who peruses any one of these, apart by itself, and without reference to the rest, is conscious of keen æsthetic enjoyment, the unacknowledged source of which is, no doubt, appreciation of its high artistic merits which predominates over every other impression. But it is impossible to read five or six of them in succession without losing all traces of pleasure in a feeling of profound melancholy, such as might damp the spirits of a philanthropist who should wander over the field of slaughter the day after the battle. The precocious children of seven or eight years, who saucily discuss problems of happiness and misery, à la Marie Bashkirtseff; the citizens of seventeen who have already seen enough of life to prefer death by suicide to seeing any more; the ignorant, feather-brained, world-reforming student; the nervous fickle women whose virtue bends and plies to every gust of wind that attacks or caresses it; the dreamy, patient, fatalistic peasants, and the feeble, disenchanted, helpless old men of thirty, who are dying before they have begun to live, are revelations as sad and as striking as the sights that met the eyes of Bluebeard's wife when she crossed the threshold of the secret chamber.

MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF IN GERM.

In one masterly little sketch, which reproduces two of the commonest of Russian types, we are introduced to a father and his eight-year-old daughter, uncomfortably crouched on hard seats in the cheerless "travellers' room" of an obscure country inn on a stormy night in midwinter—the father vainly endeavouring to obtain refuge from his thoughts in sleep; the child turning uneasily from one side to the other, giving vent to her impatience or suffering in a sigh or a moan. Outside the wind is dismally howling and shaking the walls of the house, and the snow is fast causing the familiar landmarks to disappear, and proving a winding-sheet to many a belated traveller. The little child looks weak and suffering. "Her face is wan, her hair fair, her shoulders narrow, her whole body thin and slender, the only strongly-marked feature being her nose, which closely resembles the bulky, ugly protuberance that characterises her father's face." She is tired and shaken by the journey, which the weather has compelled them to break for a few hours, just as they were approaching the goal, viz. certain coal mines in the district, which the father is to superintend for the owner—a dishonest bankrupt, from whom he will never receive a copeck of the stipulated salary. The father loves his daughter with more than a mother's love; she idolises her father in turn, and neither can live a single day without the other. And yet the expression of that love in everyday life differs but little from that of deadly hatred.

"After a long pause the girl suddenly turned round and exclaimed: 'Good God! Good God! How unhappy I am! I am the most miserable being in the whole world.' Likhareff (her father) rose up and approached his daughter with a gait that was entirely out of harmony with his gigantic stature and immense beard. 'You are not asleep, dear?' he inquired apologetically, 'what is there I can do for you?' 'I don't want anything! My shoulder is aching. You, papa, are a wicked man, and God will punish you! Mark my words, God will surely punish you!' 'I know, my little dove, that your shoulder is paining you, but what can I do for you, my angel?' he replied, in that humble insinuating tone of voice in which inebriated husbands make apologies to their irate wives. 'It is paining you, Sasha, after the long journey. To-morrow we shall be there, and we shall rest and the pain will leave you and you will be yourself again.' 'To-morrow! to-morrow! Every day you say to-morrow! We have twenty days' travelling before us yet.' 'No, my angel, I give you a father's word of honour, we shall arrive to-morrow. I never lie. If the snowstorm has delayed us, it is not I, dear, who am to blame.' 'Oh, I cannot endure any more, I cannot, I cannot!' and Sasha convulsively twitched her foot and filled the room with her harsh piercing cries. Her father despairingly waved his hand and glanced hopelessly round the room."

A TYPICAL RUSSIAN FAMILY.

"This child," a Russian critic remarks, "may possibly be intelligent and good, but she should first be cured of scrofula; otherwise, in the most favourable turn of things, she will develop into a Marie Bashkirtseff, with disordered nerves, precocious development, prostration, consumption, moral degeneration, and physical death. And alas! how many such Bashkirtseffs has not each of us met with in the highways of Russian life!" (The Week, May, p. 210.) These two types, we are further assured, are alarmingly numerous. Dearly though father and daughter love each other, they will go on torturing each other till they have torn the fine web of each other's lives to pieces. "No doubt love is present, no doubt there are also sacrifices on both sides. But the love is morbid and the sacrifices needless, unavailing; an affection that finds expression only in painful sacrifices, only by fits and starts and under heavy pressure, is an illness, an affection of the nerves. Alas! it is of such materials that the contemporary Russian family is built up. For we must repeat it, this is a typical Russian family. Russian fathers have worn themselves out, and are engendering narrow-chested, pale-faced, thick-nosed, nervous patients." (Ibidem, 211.)

MRS. POTIPHAR.

In the sketch entitled "Volodya" we are introduced to a grammar-school boy, one of the typical Russian youths whom Count Tolstoi had in his mind when he wrote his "Kreutzer Sonata," his "Confessions," and much else that electrified his readers. Volodya, a boy of seventeen, accompanied by his mother, is paying a day's visit to distant relations in the suburbs on the eve of an examination which will determine the career of his life. His cousin, Aniuta, happened to be staying at the house at the same time—a married woman of no personal beauty, no subtle charms, no accomplishments of any kind, a person "with round shoulders, a thick round chin, and almost old enough to be his mother." Returning to the house after a refreshing plunge in the afternoon, a couple of hours before the time fixed for the departure of Volodya and his mother, it occurs to her that her visit is very dull without an intrigue of some sort to enliven it. Passing by the summer-house she spies Volodya alone, and, stealthily coming up to him, reproaches him with his taciturnity, calls him an Arctic seal, generally endeavours to inspire him with a taste for what she is pleased to term "life." The vivid account of this temptation and its outcome throws a very clear if lurid light on much that to some very virtuous souls seemed exaggerated in Count Tolstoi's writings.

Most young men, much less sensitive than Volodya was, view such things with comparative composure. His was an exceptional nature, and that same evening, half unconscious of what he was doing, he took up a revolver and blew out his brains.

Such are some of the representations of the young generation as drawn by Tshekhoff, and vouched for by his critics. The adults are even less prepossessing.

In "Cold Blood," a very interesting sketch, all the employés of a railway are represented as flourishing on bribes, which in ultimate analysis are shown to resolve themselves into human lives. These bribes are given with the same good humour with which they are taken. "The calm, almost idyllic good-nature which both sides thus display speaks volumes. The evil, when it assumes the form of an idyll, is not merely an accusation, or an abuse, it is a misfortune." (The Week, May, 1891.)

And it is thus all through the portrait gallery of Russian types painted by Tshekhoff, successor to Turghenieff—bribery, rottenness, precocious knowledge, and precocious vice, children with old men's heads on their shoulders, men and women with disordered nerves instead of hearts, and paroxysms of illness in lieu of impulses and sentiments, and human life wasting away like a candle burning at both ends. Tshekhoff plainly intimates that life in Russia has but two seasons, like the steppe—winter with its paralysing frost, before nature gives any sign of life or movement, and summer which with its fierce heat eats up everything green, leaving nought but parched drooping grass behind. "Below we behold ignorance, caprice, bribery, the living heritage of past times. Above—nervous exhaustion, and fitful, bootless efforts to struggle with the evil that is below." (The Week, 212.)

BELIEF IN RUSSIA.

It is not that the Russian people is devoid of beliefs. "Russian life," says Likhareff, one of Tshekhoff's heroes "constitutes one unbroken series of beliefs and predilections, while unbelief and negation are as yet utterly unknown. If a Russian does not believe in God, the reason is that he believes in something else. Nature endowed me with a wonderful capacity for believing. During half my life I was an Atheist and a Nihilist, but there never was a single moment during which I had ceased to believe. My mother told her children to eat well, and when she fed me used to say: 'Eat, my child; the chief thing in life is—soup.' And I believed, and ate my soup ten times a day, devouring it as a shark devours its prey, sometimes continuing till I fainted." This characteristic Russian then ran away to America, became a highwayman, then tried to become a monk—and gave vent to his piety by hiring little boys to stone him, for Christ's sake. He next fell in love with science, which became his religion, until he was surfeited and disgusted as with his soup. He then enlisted as a Nihilist and went among the common people to teach them how to live, worked first as a factory hand, then dragged barges along the Volga, adored the Russian peasants, became a Slavophile, later on an Ukrainophile, and then an archaeologist. . . . "I was carried away by ideas, peoples, events, places. . . . I was being perpetually carried away. . . . Five years ago my services were enlisted in the cause of the abolition of property; and the very last doctrine to which I have pinned my faith is that of non-resistance to evil."

COUNT TOLSTOI'S RELIGIOUS TALES.

Religion and morality, one is glad to think, are much more deeply rooted in Russia than M. Tshekhoff or his heroes would lead one to imagine, and, what is far more important, the Orthodox Church is believed to possess within itself all the elements necessary for the further development and sustenance of both. This, at least, is the conclusion which one is naturally disposed to draw from the stern refusal of the Church and the secular power to avail themselves of Count L. Tolstoi's charming sketches as instruments for raising the moral and religious standard of the people. These short stories, which to an ordinary European seem saturated with genuine Christianity and moulded by genuine art, were heretofore issued in cheap editions for the people, and sold in tens of thousands among the peasants. The censure is now refusing permission for their re-issue.

THE REPENTANT SINNER. BY COUNT TOLSTOI.

"And he said, Jesus, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And He said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise" (Luke xxiii. 42, 43).

There was a man who, having lived wickedly for seventy years, at last fell ill and did not repent. But at the very last hour of his ebbing life he wept, and cried, "Lord, forgive me, even as thou forgavest the thief upon the cross;" whereupon he died.

And his soul, drawn by love of God and belief in His mercy, came to the gate of heaven; and the sinner knocked at the gate, praying to be allowed to pass the threshold. And he heard a voice from within crying, "Who is it that knocketh, and with what deeds doth he come hither?" And the voice of the accuser made answer, telling all the sinner's evil deeds, and speaking nought of the good that he had done. Thereupon the voice from within the gate made answer, saying, "Begone from hence, for no sinner may enter the kingdom of heaven."

And the man said: "Sir, who art thou? for thy voice I hear, but thy face I cannot see." And the voice replied: "I am the Apostle Peter." The sinner then said, with a sigh: "Take pity on me, Peter, and remember the weakness of man and the goodness of God. For wert thou not thyself a disciple of Christ? Heard'st thou not from His own lips the words of His teaching? Sawest thou not with thine own eyes the examples of His life? And yet when suffering overwhelmed Him and His soul was sorrowful unto death, was it not thou whom He found slumbering, heavy-eyed, though He had three times asked thee to watch and to pray? Peter, it was even so with me. And remember also how thou didst promise never to deny Him, and didst yet deny Him thrice, when He was led before Caiaphas. Even so have I done. And remember, too, how when the cock crowed thou didst go out and weep bitterly. This likewise have I done. Canst thou, then, shut me out?"

And silence fell upon the voice behind the portals of paradise, and it was heard no more.

And having waited awhile, the sinner knocked again. And behold another voice made itself heard, saying: "Who knocketh without, and with what manner of deeds doth he come hither?" And the accuser once again made answer, passing in review the evil deeds of the sinner. And the voice within the portals said: "Depart hence! Sinners such as thou may not dwell together with us in paradise." And the man said: "Sir, who art thou? for I hear thy voice, but thy face I see not." And he replied: "I am David, the king and prophet." And taking courage, the sinner cried aloud: "Have pity on me, King David, remembering man's weakness and God's mercy. For God loved thee and exalted thee, giving thee power and glory, and riches, and wives, and children, and yet thou didst take to thyself the wife of a poor man, and didst slay Uriah with the sword of the Ammonites. Thou, the possessor of many flocks, didst rob this poor man of his only lamb, and likewise of his life, killing him cruelly. Even so, David, have I done. And remember also how thou didst repent and cry, 'I confess my transgressions, and my sin is ever before me.' This, too, have I done. Surely, then, thou canst not keep me out of paradise?" And the voice behind the portals said never a word.

And having waited another while, the sinner knocked again. And a third voice asked: "Who knocketh without, and with what deeds is he come hither?" And the accuser once more made known the evil life of the sinner and of his good deeds spake no word. And the voice exclaimed: "Get thee hence! for no sinner may enter paradise." And the man said: "Who, sir, art thou? for I do but hear thy voice." And he answered: "I am John, the beloved disciple of Christ." Hearing which, gladness filled the sinner's heart, and he said: "Now in truth it is impossible to shut me out any longer. Peter and David could not bar the gate, because they had known the weakness of man and the mercy of God; but thou must even open it, for thou knowest His love. Didst not thou, John, the best beloved of Christ's disciples, write in thy book that God was love, and that whoso loveth not, knoweth not God? Was it not thou who in thine old age didst so often say: "Little children, love one another!" Canst thou, then, hate me and drive me forth from here? Nay, thou must take back thine own words, or else love me and let me in!"

And thereupon the portals of paradise opened wide, and John fell upon the sinner's neck and kissed him, and led him into the kingdom of heaven.

The immorality and irreligion in the other sketches are less obvious than in this, but are presumably visible enough to the authorities, who refuse to countenance their circulation in a cheap form among the people.

E. J. DILLON.*

THE MATTEI COMMITTEE.

It was reported in the June number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS that five patients were under the observation of the Committee of Investigation of the Mattei Remedies, of whom two were being treated only for alleviation. This statement was slightly inaccurate, as the Mattei Committee do not keep under observation any but test cases, i.e., cases which are to undergo treatment in order to determine whether the Mattei remedies can or can not cure persons suffering from cancer. The question of alleviation introduces the subjective element, which, as it might open the door to wrong interpretations, the Committee of Investigation have thought desirable to exclude from consideration.

At the time of the issue of the June number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS the facts were as follows:—One patient was under treatment as a test case, another was about to undergo observation, and others were in preparation to be placed under treatment as early as possible. There has been no lack of cases, but a considerable number have been rejected by the Mattei specialists as unsuitable. At the present time there are two patients under observation as in-patients in St. Saviour's Hospital, and one person as an out-patient. One other person will be placed under treatment and observation in the course of a few days.

*The cross-headings in this article are editorial.

THE FRENCH REVIEWS.

THE REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

How many among the readers of M. Fritz Dubois will know, until he has told them, where the island of Bali is? And even when they have learnt its latitude and longitude, and transported themselves in thought to the Dutch Archipelago of the Pacific Ocean, how much the wiser are they as to its geology, climate, native inhabitants, and history? So little, indeed, do most of us know that we are hardly aware of the desire to know any more. Nevertheless, in a page or two M. Dubois awakens interest, and the charm of being introduced to a world new to their experience will probably constrain most of the readers who begin to read his paper to continue to the end. Bali's fertile shores lie to the south-east of Java, and the Dutch Government spread to them no longer ago than 1846. Of nine settlements into which the island is divided, seven remained independent under native administrators, two fell under Dutch jurisdiction. So successful and sympathetic has Dutch treatment of natives been, according to M. Dubois' account, that there is no need to maintain their power over the gentle people by armed force. A resident's umbrella is the only sign that is needed of executive authority, and the Landraad or Dutch tribunal provides for the judicial administration of the affairs of foreigners. These affairs are considerable, for the island is not without a certain commercial importance. It is said to supply, amongst other things, almost the whole of the Mocha coffee consumed in the world. The seed was introduced by Arabs, and the coffee trade is entirely in their hands. Contraband opium trade is largely conducted by Chinese. Armenians, scattered all over the world, have also a commercial colony here. The inhabitants are chiefly addicted to agricultural pursuits. Their principal amusement consists in very elaborate dancing. Their only vice is a love of cock-fighting. The most civilised native religion is Hinduism, which was introduced originally from the island of Java, but they have also the worship and fear of demons, in relation to which the Dutch officials carefully abstain from interfering with their harmless rites. The terms on which the Dutch officials live with the priests and sultans of the island are so friendly and simple that in 1832 some of the sultans proposed to hand over their sultanates to the Dutch Government, opining that it was on the whole better than their own. The Dutch Government declined to consider the proposal until all seven sultans were of one mind upon the matter. The Federation of Bali is therefore still to be accomplished, but the scheme is not abandoned. It is only left like other Federation schemes to reform itself peacefully into fruition.

Other interesting articles in a very interesting number are the "Poor in England," by M. Julien Decrais, in which he dwells chiefly with horror for the need, but with great sympathy and admiration for the exertions, of the Society for the Protection of Children. M. Brunetière, in the number for June 1st, has an analytical article upon the probable novel of M. Maral Prévost, M. Roeny, and M. Paul Marguerite, whose names as novelists of the latest schools are now prominently before the Parisian public.

THE GAZETTE DES BEAUX ARTS.

THE other articles of the Gazette des Beaux Arts are a sculptural study, beautifully illustrated, of the Subiaco, "Niobide," and a notice of the Lithographical Exhibition, which is also well and fully illustrated. There is also an article upon the Exhibition of Arts at the beginning of the century, which is chiefly illustrated by specimens of furniture. The series of miniaturists is continued by a paper on a Book of Hours illuminated for Pope Alexander VI. by one of the same brilliant Flemish School to which Alexandre Benning belonged. The work is a very beautiful specimen of Flemish work, and it seems to be clearly indicated by the detail of the work that it was designed for the famous Pope. History, which has to some extent removed the weight of the monstrous accusations which lay against him, has proved against him the lesser crime that he had no love for books or art. It is a little difficult, therefore, to account for so magnificent an order given by him, and M. Paubrouski suggests that it may have been a well intentioned present from the young Cardinal Germani who owed much to the Pope, and was himself so passionate a lover of fine manuscripts.

THE PORTUGUESE MAGAZINES.

THE Revista de Portugal (No. 17) contains the first part of an article on Marie Bashkirtseff's journal, by Tzabul Leite. "Ideas e Factos" contains translated extracts from articles in the Forum, the Contemporary Review, Black and White and the REVIEW OF REVIEWS. Augusto Sarmento continues his article, "Three Days at Jeddah." It would scarcely be expected that the following incident would serve as a text for the inevitable attack on England:

I was about to retire with my purchases, when I felt a hand seize my overcoat. I turned round in haste, thinking that it might have occurred to the practical English nation, while engaged in the extension of a well-known national industry, to take advantage of the concourse of pilgrims to Mecca. . . . Instead, however, of the blonde pickpocket I had expected to see, I was confronted by a black face and woolly head, whose possessor, so far from being put out of countenance when caught in flagrante delicto, held out his arms as if to embrace me, while uttering some words, which, though perfectly unintelligible to me, seemed to express deep gratification. I asked Ismail what he was saying.

"He says he is a brother," replied my dragoman. Ismail, I suppose, seeing in my face the consternation into which I was thrown by the proclamation of this unexpected relationship, hastened to add:

"A brother in faith—an Abyssinian Christian."

The author, it appears, took this recognition of a common faith as a compliment to his Portuguese nationality, and "a sincere homage rendered to the memory of a handful of Portuguese who, surpassing in the audacity and the results of their enterprise the expedition of Yom and the labours of Hercules, defied the superstitious terrors of the Middle Ages, to snatch from the mountains of the Dark Continent the secret of the legendary Prester John."

This refers to the little known Abyssinian expedition of Don João Peres da Covilhã, and Don Christovão de Gama in 1541—a gallant enterprise no doubt, but one which Senhor Sarmento finds it impossible to mention without contrasting it at some length with Lord Napier of Magdala's, to the great disadvantage of the latter.

THE GERMAN MAGAZINES.

Deutsche Revue. Breslau. 2 Marks. June.
Bancroft as a Pedagogue and as a Politician.
G. von Bunsen.
The Vienna School of Medicine. I. A.
Kronfeld.
Unpublished Correspondence of Ludwig von
Knebel. III. K. T. Gaedertz.
A German Sappho—Frau Hilve Tufenbacher.
(Concluded.) Bertha von Suttner.
July.
The Vienna School of Medicine. (Continued.)
Victoria, Queen and Empress. II. Duchess of Rutland.
Ludwig von Koebel. (Continued.)

Deutsche Rundschau. Berlin. 2 Marks. June.
Scenic Epilogue for the Festival Performance at the Weimar Theatre on May 7th. Ernst von Wildenbruch.
Niels W. Gade. F. Spitta.
Letters by Darwin. Prof. W. Freyer.
Political—May Day Demonstrations.

Die Gesellschaft. Leipzig. June. 1 Mark.
Social Democracy and the Modern (Age). II.
M. G. Conrad.
Politics of Force and Politics of Fear.
General Booth. With Portrait. M. Goldstein.
Tolstoi becomes—tedious. M. Wellesseff.
The Protestants of Monteynard. C. R. Stan.

Nord und Süd. Breslau. 2 Marks.
June.
Prince Bishop Dr. Georg Kopp, of Breslau.
With Portrait.
Ferdinand Lassalle's Diary. (Concluded.) Dr.
Paul Lindau.
Pen Pictures of Holstein. I. L. Siegfried.
"Sea Birds." Story. Ola Hansson.
July.
Julius Rodenberg. (With Portrait.) L.
Ziemssen.
Robert Blum in the Diary of Count von Hübner. H. Blum.
A Forgotten Poet.—Georg S. von Hauen-schild. R. von Gottschall.
Carl Gottlieb Svarez. B. Schwartz.
Th. City of Mexico. Paul Lindau.

Preussische Jahrbücher. Berlin. 1 Mark
50 Pf. June.
Othilde Harold. H. Balz.
The Berlin Dwelling Question. R. Hessen.
Political Correspondence—The House of Rothschild and the Russian Loan, the German Emperor's Love of Peace, etc.

Unsere Zeit. Leipzig. 1 Mark. June.
North Sea Sketches of a Naturalist. F.
Heincke.
Art in France. F. C. Petersen.
Impressions of Travel in Turkey.
Politics in Denmark. H. Mertens.
Count von Moltke. Joseph Schott.
Ferdinand Gregorovius. K. Krumbacher.
July.
Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens. A.
Brieger.
The German Possessions in East Africa. With Map. B. Förster.
Robert Hamerling. Dr. B. Münz.
The Refugees in Switzerland. L. Fu'd.

Velhagen und Klasing's Neue Monatshefte.
Berlin. 1 Mk. 25 Pf. June.
Master Friedrich of Vienna. With Portrait and other Illustrations. C. von Vincenti.
The Queen of Great Britain and her Court.
Dr. G. Horn.
Gladstones. (Illus.) Hans von Zobeltitz.
Mecanism. Prof. A. Eulenberg.
The "European Emperor" in Caricature.
(Illus.) E. Schubert.

Westermann's Illustrierte Deutsche Monatshfte. Brunswick. 4 Marks quarterly.
June.
Hugon Oros. (Illus.) (Concluded.) T. Harten.

Deutsche Rundschau.—There is nothing of particular interest in the leading reviews this month. In the Rundschau the only readable article is one by Philipp Spitta on Danish Music and Niels Gade, the Danish composer who died last December. Many of the most important years of Gade's life were spent in Germany. He was intimately acquainted with all the great German musicians of his day. It was from Leipzig that his fame went out into the wide world, and it was there that he created many of his best works. His vocal compositions were mostly settings of German songs, and he preferred his works to be published by Germans. Herr Spitta, therefore, thinks the Germans have great claims on him; indeed, he lived under the same roof with them and went in and out among them as a brother. Yet Gade loved his country passionately, and the political events of 1848, together with the war of 1864, were not without their influence on his conduct in Germany. For several years he avoided the country till the Beethoven festival at Bonn in 1871, when his presence was the subject of remark. By degrees, however, the political irritation diminished, and in 1881 Gade attended the Lower Rhine music festival at Düsseldorf; but he always remained faithful to his German musical friends. His first published work was an overture, "Echoes of Ossian," which gained a prize at the Copenhagen Music Society. After this it was his first symphony which next directed the eyes of the world to Gade, and Mendelssohn's enthusiasm for it drew the composer into the circle of Leipzig artists. The first movement of this symphony Herr Spitta describes as a musical picture in a symphonic frame. In his second symphony the pictures are lively; the national dance of the north is its ruling characteristic, a new feature of the symphony. In "Ossian" it is the song of the bards and the music of the harp, a solo leading and a powerful chorus responding, then a battle tumult, followed by the sweet voice of Colma sitting alone on the hill-top.—The book notices, which are rather late in appearing, include "Letters of David Hume to William Strahan, edited by G. Birkbeck Hill, 1888;" and "Essays by the late Mark Pattison, collected and arranged by H. Nettleship, 1889."

Die Gesellschaft.—Herr Goldstein's view of General Booth may be summed up in his concluding paragraph:—All in all, the General is a good, honourable man, a great heart, a pious character. The Radical Socialists may mock him, the Manchester people may laugh at him, the method of the clericals may clash with his religious method, but he does not let them turn him from his work and his ways. That he, the man with the best and purest will, works and must work as a destructive force in the social confusion of to-day, is not his fault.—Among the reviews are the "Colonial Year Book, 1891," and Karl Knortz's "History of North American Literature." Herr Knortz, a German, went to America in his twenty-second year, was a teacher at several places, then edited a German paper at Indianapolis, and since 1882 has been engaged in literary work at New York, his aim being to make Germany and the Germans acquainted with American literature. With this object in view he has written "Tales and Sagas of the North American Indians," "Longfellow, a Study," etc.

Nord und Süd.—Ferdinand Lassalle's Diary is brought to a conclusion. The biographical article is devoted to Bishop Kopp of Breslau and his political activity. Herr L. Siegfried, in his first pen-picture of Holstein life, describes with some humour a sea-voyage under the title of "The Watermouse." Following this comes a poem by the well-known Detlev Freiherr von Liliencron; while Ola Hansson, a Swede, who seems to write in German as much as in his native tongue, has contributed a beautiful sea-idyll, entitled "Sea-Birds." The June number completes the 57th quarterly volume of the magazine. The July number has three biographical studies; and Paul Lindau's article on Mexico City is very interesting.

Preussische Jahrbücher.—The question of dwellings for the working classes seems as pressing in Berlin as it is in London; but now that Parliaments are showing some concern about the way in which the people work, there is some hope that they will be equally anxious as to how the people live, and not leave the subject of dwellings to be dealt with by philanthropic societies.

Octave Feuillet. With Portrait. Ferdinand Gross.
 I. Castelli Romani. (Illus.) II. Therese Höpfer.
 The Weimar Court Theatre under Goethe's Management. With Portraits and other Illustrations. Dr. J. Wable.
 A Pilgrimage through the Kingdom of Music. A. Tottmann.

July.
 I Castelli Romani. (Illus.) (Concluded.)
 Naturalism and the Theatre. O. Brahm.
 Ottoburen. (Illus.) C. Gurlitt.
 Palermo. (Illus.) L. Salomon.

Literarisches Jahrbuch. Eger. 1 Mark
 80 Pf. Band 1.
 Margar. the Halm. With Portrait.
 Goethe's Relations to German Bohemia.
 New Dialect Writings.

Litterarischer Merkur. Weimar. 1 Mark
 60 Pf. Quarterly. May 16.
 Stakespear as a Religious Poet. G. Schirlitz.

Das Magazin für Literatur. Berlin, 40 Pf.
 June 13.
 Tolstoi and Modern Culture. C. Grotteswitz.
 June 20.
 How One may become an Author. L. Pietsch.
 Woman in Literature. O. Hansson.

Moderne Rundschau. Vienna. 50 Pf. May 15.
 Italy's Latest Lyrics. G. von Freiberg.
 "The Balcony." Charles Baudelaire.
 June 15.
 Our Idealists. F. M. Fels.
 August Strindberg. With Portrait. E. Holm.
 Samum. Drama in One Act. A. Strindberg.
 The La est Bahr. E. M. Kafka.

Wiener Literatur Zeitung. Vienna. Yearly.
 2 Marks.
 June 15.
 Books which are most read. Marie Herzfeld.
 Zola's Next Book—"War."

Der Zeitgenosse. Dresden. 50 Pf.
 June 1.
 Lyrics by Josef Zeitler and others.
 Lyrics of To-day. L. Jacobowski.

Das Zwanzigste Jahrhundert. Berlin.
 1 Mark. Hft 9.
 Poems by W. Arent and others.
 Our Age and Our Art. W. Wauer.
 Literary Berlin. (Continued.)

Frauenberuf. Weimar. Yearly, 5 Marks.
 June.
 Woman as Inventor. E. Rosevalle.
 Woman in Literature. Dr. Clara Kühnast.
 The Woman Movement in Sweden, Russia, and Switzerland.

Kritische Revue aus Oesterreich. Vienna.
 June 10.
 Before the Budget. Debate.
 Woman and Socialism. Dr. Maurus.
 Carmen Sylva's "Meister Manolo." F. Gross.
 June 15.
 Procedure in the House of Deputies. Dr. G.
 J. Guttman.
 The New Russian Literature. I. N.
 Golant.

Romanische Revue. Vienna. 12 Marks yearly. May 15.
 The Tenth of May (May 22), 1891. With Portraits of the King, Queen, and Crown
 Prince of Roumania.

Sphinx. Gera. (Reuss.) 6 Marks half-yearly.
 July.
 Franz Anton Mesmer. III. C. Klesewetter.
 Occult Philosophy. Carl Du Prel.

Aus Allen Welttheilen. Leipzig. 80 Pf. May.
 The Tenth German Geographers' Day at Vienna.
 June.
 Travel in Bosnia. G. Pauli.

Unsere Zeit.—There is a good deal of solid matter in the June number. F. C. Petersen reviews very carefully modern art in France—religious art, landscape painting, portrait painting, mythological subjects, historical painting, animal painting, sculpture, etc. Heinrich Martens gives an outline sketch of political life in Denmark since 1863. Major Schott endeavours to show how much Germany and the German Army have lost by the death of Count von Moltke; while Herr Krumbacher writes with appreciation of the late historian, Ferdinand Gregorovius, author of a "History of Rome," a "History of Athens," "Corsica," "Werdomar and Wladislaw" (novel), a "Life of the Emperor Adrian," "Poland," "Polish and Magyar Songs," "Socialistic Elements in Wilhelm Meister," "The Death of Tiberius" (drama), "Travels in Italy," etc. etc. Everything is readable in the July number.

Velhagen.—Over the motto "Saxa loquuntur," which was also Friedrich Schmidt's motto, Carl von Vicenti supplies a most interesting account of the work of the great Vienna architect, more generally spoken of as Meister Friedrich. Hanns von Zobeltitz (Hanns von Spielberg) describes at considerable length the foundry of Meister Gladenbecks, and his article is supplemented by numerous illustrations of well-known bronze monuments in Germany. The Napoleon caricatures are also very interesting; they are selected from Max Gruner's collection of contemporary artists.

Westermann maintains its reputation as a high-class monthly. It is long since anything so interesting has been written as Herr Harten's description of Hagion Oros or Mount Athos. It is also well illustrated, and in addition there was a capital map of the peninsula last month. This is followed by a short study of the late Octave Feuillet, by the well-known critic, Ferdinand Gross. Therese Höpfer's paper has an illustration of the Abbey Grotta Ferrata. The centenary of the first performance at the Weimar Theatre, under Goethe's management, has called to life some welcome Goethe copy, and Westermann celebrates the anniversary by a lengthy article on the history of the Weimar Theatre during the past hundred years, supplemented by a fac-simile of the playbill in circulation for that memorable performance, portraits of Goethe and Schiller, and of some of the chief actors, and views of the old and the new theatre. Albert Tottmann gives a brief history of the rise and development of our musical system, and a few book notices and some fiction make up the remaining pages of the number.

Literarisches Jahrbuch.—The central organ for the scientific, literary, and artistic interests of North-west Bohemia and the adjacent German territory, founded and edited by Herr Alois John, and published at Eger, Bohemia. Herr John is known as the author of several works on Richard Wagner, Goethe and German Bohemia, the Literature of the Eger Country, etc.

Moderne Rundschau.—Heft 4 has a notice on the cover to the effect that the editor was obliged to give short measure on May 15th, because of the strike of compositors at Vienna, but that the quantity of matter should be made up in the next number. Another Vienna editor apologised that his paper could not appear at all for the same reason.—The chief Italian lyric writer, whose productions are noticed by G. von Freiberg, is Annie Vivanti. Baudelaire's poem "At the Balcony" is given both in French and German. As was promised, the June 15th issue is a double number. Among other interesting things, it contains a biographical and critical sketch of the famous Swedish writer August Strindberg, author of "Mäster Olof," 1872, an historical drama; "Röda Rummet" (The Red Room), a novel; "The Father," a tragedy; poems, etc. The notice is followed by a short drama by Strindberg. Hermann Bahr, who has just published some new essays on Naturalism, as a second series to his "Criticism of the Modern," is also reviewed. In his book he has much to say about nerves, for the modern man, according to him, is nothing but nerves, just as the classical man was a man of reason, and the mediæval man a man of feeling.

Der Zeitgenosse.—A small bi-monthly for the criticism of contemporary literature. Special attention is given to new lyric poets, and many specimens of the lyrics of the day are given. The editors are Richard Zozmann and Ludwig Jacobowski, and the publisher E. Pierson, Dresden.

Kritische Revue.—The publication of this Vienna magazine was also somewhat disorganised by the recent strike of compositors, and the number for June was not issued till June 10th. It is an impartial critic of Austrian Dahelm. Leipzig. Quarterly, 2 Marks. June 13.

The Friedenskirche at Sanssouci and the Emperor Frederick's Tomb. (Illus.)

Die Gartenlaube. Leipzig. 50 Pf. Heft 6.
Bacteria of the Eye. (Illus.) Dr. H. Cohn
The Graves of Great Musicians at Vienna.
Heft 7.
The Planet Mars. (Illus.) Dr. C. Cranz.
Elizabeth Lelainger. (With Portrait.) H.
Ehrlich.

Schorer's Familienblatt. (Salon Ausgabe.)
Berlin. 75 Pf. Heft 11.
Count von Moltke. (Illus.)
National Historical Education. H. Frisch.
Stage Carriages of Former Centuries. (Illus.)
P. T. Barnum. (With Portrait.) G. Reklam.
The Centenary at Weimar.

Städtebilder. Zürich. 80 Pf. Heft 4.
Düsseldorf. (Illus.) Dr. Bone.
Meran. (Illus.) C. Wolf.
Trieste. (Illus.) J. Fischer.

Ueber Land und Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mark.
Heft 12.
The Goethe Centenary at Weimar. (Illus.)
Liszt's Homes at Weimar. (Illus.) A. M. rus.
The Jubilee in Roumania. (Illus.)
Heft 13.
Julius Rosenberg. With Portrait.
The Emperor Frederick Mausoleum. (Illus.)
Lausanne University, Old and New. (Illus.)

Vom Fels zum Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mark.
Heft 10.
"Der Meistertrunk" in Rotenburg. (Illus.)
E. Schmidt-Weissenfels.
From Rousseau to Tolstoi. J. Proelss.
The Tarpon Fishery of Florida. (Illus.)
W. Willy.
Morocco. O. Lenz.
Swiss Houses. (Illus.) F. Luthmer.
The Goethe Centenary at Weimar. (Illus.)
War Balloons. (Illus.) J. Castner.
Heft 11.
The London Season. (Illus.) L. Katscher.
The House in which Beethoven was born.
(Illus.) E. Pasqué.
Cromwell and Parliament. (Illus.) E.
Schmidt-Weissenfels.
The History of Travelling in Switzerland. E.
Sturm.
Algäu. (Illus.) A. Achleitner.

Alte und Neue Welt. Binsfeld and New York. 50 Pf. or 80 Cents. Heft 9.
The Beginnings of the Swiss Confederacy. I.
(Illus.) W. Sidler.
St. Aloysius. (Luigi Gonzaga.) II. (Illus.)
Heft 10.
The Swiss Confederacy. (Continued.)
The North American Secret Police. M. Stein.
The Westinghouse Brake. (Illus.) C. Fries.

Deutscher Hausschatz. Regensburg and
New York. 40 Pf. Heft 12.
Assisi. (Illus.)
Heft 13.
Stuttgart. (Illus.) J. Arndt.
Catholic Journalists of To-day. (Continued.)
With Portraits.
Annette von Droste. Dr. M. Krass.

Die Katholischen Missionen. Freiburg
(Baden.) 4 Marks. Quarterly June.
The Missionary Bishops who died in 1890.
I. With Portraits.
July.
Missionary Bishops who died in 1890. II.
With Portraits.

Litterarische Rundschau für das Katholische Deutschland. Freiburg. 9 Marks.
Yearly. June.
The Catholic Literature of England in the year 1890. (Concluded.) A. Bellesheim.

Zeitschrift für Katholische Theologie.
(Quarterly.) Innsbruck. 6 Marks yearly.
Part III.
Döllinger: a Character Study. E. Michael.

politics. When a man, it says, is dissatisfied with his way of life, he resolves to mend his ways, but seldom gets beyond making good resolutions. But it is not only the way to hell that is paved with good intentions. The same holds good of the Austrian House of Deputies; and Dr. Guttman shows it no quarter in his able criticism of the "Parliamentary Club" and its manner of procedure.

Römänische Revue.—The May issue is a Roumanian number. In connection with the silver jubilee of the young kingdom the history of Roumania from 1866 to 1891 is carefully reviewed. Indeed, the 10th of May (May 22) is a triple festival for Roumania, for on that day not only does the nation celebrate the glorious entry of King Charles I. into the capital, but on the same day fourteen years ago, Roumania acquired its independence, and again, on the same day, ten years ago, the king was honoured with a crown, cast from the trophies of Plevna.

Sphinx.—The Sphinx may be called the German monthly for Psychical Research. Its aim is to discuss and examine all supernatural occurrences and forces in men and nature. The editor is Dr. Hübner-Schleiden, and the magazine may be obtained from Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co., and from the International News Co., New York.

Städtebilder.—As the title indicates, this magazine gives landscapes and pictures of towns of the whole world. It is edited by Ernst Brausewetter, and important towns and watering-places are described by pen and picture by well-known writers and artists.

Ueber Land und Meer.—Both parts to hand contain many timely articles. To the Weimar Centenary is added a charming description of the houses in which Liszt stayed during his visits to Weimar. The Roumanian Jubilee is also supplemented by descriptions of the different homes of the Queen at Altwied, Neuwied, Runkel, Sinaia, etc. Heft 13 completes the volume.

Vom Fels zum Meer.—It will be remembered that Harper of last November gave an account of the Rotenburg Festival Play, "Der Meistertrunk," so there is no need to describe it again here. The illustrations in Vom Fels zum Meer are from Harper. The Goethe centenary is well observed by almost every magazine. Not less interesting is the article by Ernst Pasqué in Heft 11 on the eight residences of the Beethoven family at Bonn, and the house in which the great composer was born.

Alte und Neue Welt.—In Heft 9 Wilhelm Sidler begins an interesting historical study of the Swiss Confederacy in connection with its four hundredth anniversary, for it was on August 1st, 1291, that the men of Uri, Schwyz, and Unterwalden first stood together, and solemnly formed themselves into a Bund, thus laying the foundation of the unique Confederacy which has triumphed over all the storms of time. On the 1st of August, at seven o'clock in the evening, bells will be rung throughout Switzerland, and at nine bonfires will be lighted; while on the next day, Sunday, a thanksgiving service will be held in all the churches.—The Catholic magazines are also commemorating the death of St. Aloysius (Luigi Gonzaga), who died at Rome on June 21st, 1591, having been stricken by the plague which at that time visited the city, while ministering to the sufferers.

Litterarische Rundschau.—The concluding article on the Catholic literature of England during the past year notices the Month, the Irish Ecclesiastical Record, the English Historical Review, and the Dublin Review, "Manuals of Catholic Philosophy," and many other books and articles which appeared during the year. A notable omission from this otherwise excellent summary, however, is the character sketch of Cardinal Manning published in the June number of the Review of Reviews.

Zeitschrift für Katholische Theologie.—This magazine gives one of the most exhaustive of critical sketches of Dr. Döllinger, reviewing at great length his development as indicated in his writings during the last thirty years of his life, and coming to the conclusion that he was a character full of contradictions, and more of a scholar than a theologian.

Encyclopædic English-German and German-English Dictionary. by Professor E. Muret. Part 1 of Volume I. of this work, uniform in plan and arrangement with Sachs-Villatte's French-German and German-French Dictionary, and giving the pronunciation according to the phonetic system used by Toussaint-Langenscheidt. The second volume, German-English, has been entrusted to Professor Daniel Sanders. The whole work will comprise about 33 numbers at 1 Mk. 50 Pf. each, and five parts will be issued in a year, or the whole in about six years. Publisher: Professor G. Langenscheidt, Berlin.

THE ITALIAN MAGAZINES.

La Nuova Antologia.

June 1st.

Leo XIII. and Socialism. R. Bonghi.
Leopardi as a Philologist. G. Setti.
Italy and her African Colonies. L. Franchetti.
Gessi and Casati: Fifteen Years in the Soudan.
F. Cardon.
Lynch-Law and the Italo-American Conflict.
P. Nocito.

June 16th.

Mystical and Pagan Italy. G. Barzellotti.
The Talleyrand Memoirs. B. Masi.
The First Falsehood (comedy in three acts).
Leo di Castelnuovo.
Future Literature. A. Graf.
An Unexplored World. F. Foreno.
The Workmen's School-teacher (novette). B. de Amicis.
Maritime Conventions. M. Ferraris.

The Rassegna Nazionale.

June 1st.

Silvio Pellico in Relation to Women. G. B.
Ghirardi.
The Poet's Villa. S. Rumor.
The Homestead applied to the Colonisation of Sardinia. S. Santangelo-Spoto.
Gabriele d'Annunzio. G. Fortebracci.
Commentators on the Creation (continued.) A.
Stoppani.
A Posthumous Work by Major Bartelot. G.
Grabinski.

June 16th.

On the Labour Question—Encyclical of Leo
XIII.
London Life, V. Grouse-Shooting. Roberto-Stuart.
Secondary Classical Schools. F. Bonatelli.
The Three Bulgarias. G. Marcotti.
Fra Bartolommeo. Granfrancesco da Venezia.
Darkest Africa. F. Gallo.

La Scuola Positiva.

June 1st.

The Amplification of Evidence in Criminal Cases.
L. Carelli.
The First of May. F. S. Nitti.
The Classical Idea of Theft. G. Fioretti.

June 16th.

The Competence of Penal Sentences. R.
Garofalo.
Criminality in Italy. E. Ferri.
Anomalies in Penalties for Assault. S. Sighele.

The Civiltà Cattolica

June 6th.

The Papal Encyclical (Latin).
The Third Centenary of S. Louis Gonzaga.

June 20th.

The Papal Encyclical (Latin).
The Migrations of the Hittites.
Natural Science.

Italian Views of the Papal Encyclical.—The subject par excellence of the Italian reviews this month is naturally the Papal Encyclical on the Labour Question. The most important pronouncement is contributed by the Liberal Nuova Antologia which deals really effectively with the subject in an appreciative article from the prolific pen of Signor Bonghi. He begins with the remark that "the Encyclical bears no sign of haste. It possesses clear proof of slow, calm and careful consideration. Modern legislation, as a rule, is carried through in a hurry. . . . No one speaks with authority, and no one expects to be listened to as an authority. The Pope, on the other hand, speaks like a man who does not doubt that a large number of persons will believe what he says." It is a sign of "the noble soul and high intellect of Leo XIII." that he should have spoken out so courageously on so difficult a problem, but whilst fully endorsing the view of the Pontiff that the true remedy for our social disorders lies not in socialistic nostrums but in a return to the true teachings of Christianity and the Church, Signor Bonghi doubts whether the democracy will ever accept the intervention of the Church.

"Atheism is making way amongst the working classes, and the democracy at least of the towns is more rebellious than any one against religious and spiritual authority. The God in whose name the Church speaks is in alliance with the capitalist, than whom the working-man has in his own opinion no more bitter enemy. Thus in future, if the poor man is to enjoy life, the first necessity is to abolish God."

Signor Bonghi notes as one of the most important points of the Encyclical that it summons the State to assist in the work of social reconstruction. "But it is not surprising that Leo XIII., having called in the aid of the State, should immediately restrict its right of intervention. . . . Possibly the uncertainty existing in the mind of the Pontiff between the necessity of co-operation with the State on the one side, and on the other his repugnance to State intervention, has resulted in some of his proposals in the latter part of the Encyclical being less clear and precise than in the former." In conclusion, Bonghi is of opinion that useful as the Encyclical will be as determining the position of the Church towards socialism, it cannot bear any immediate fruit; the working classes are too much alienated from the Church, and it will be the work of years to win them back. "In the meanwhile the Holy Father will be the first to admit that the parish priest of Fourmies, who, careless of self, flung himself between the people and the soldiers in order to save the lives of men, women, and children, thereby showing practically how strong in the Catholic priesthood there is the spirit of love and of charity, has done more to inspire the working classes with faith in religion than any Encyclical is capable of doing."

The Civiltà Cattolica (the Jesuit organ) reprints the Encyclical in extenso in the two June numbers, the first time in Latin, the second in Italian. It describes it as "a word of comforting hope in the midst of desperation," and reproduces the views of the Italian press, many favourable comments having been made by Liberal and non-Catholic newspapers. The Rassegna Nazionale (Catholic and anti-clerical) also reprints the Encyclical with an introductory note from the editor expressive of profound admiration and complete agreement, so also does the little Cultura (Signor Bonghi's organ), together with an appreciative notice from Professor Graziani, who, however, accuses the Holy Father of historical inaccuracy in defining the rights of private property as an eternal law, whereas, in reality, it was preceded in the early ages by collective ownership, and exists even now in certain uncivilised communities. He concludes, "it is a matter for rejoicing that the Holy Father should have grasped the urgent importance of the labour question, and that his voice, which has so often been raised in violent and unjust invective against liberal institutions, should to-day pronounce words of peace and harmony full of aspiration towards a better social condition. Thus alone can the Church become more human, and at the same time more divine."

THE SCANDINAVIAN MAGAZINES.

Ur Dagen's Krönika.

Stockholm. Verner Landgren. May. Yearly subscription, 12 kr.
 Art and Politics. Hardi.
 A Danger-fraught Dream. Novel by Kolon.
 A Swedish Helper at the Construction of the German Navy. Otto Sjogren.
 From Charles Baudelaire. Karl Benzon.
 Politics of the Day. A. O. C.
 A Danish Pamphlet on Wagner.
 The Literary Spring Mart. A. Haraldson.

Dagny.

Published by the Fredrika Bremer Society.
 Stockholm. Yearly subscription, 12 kr.
 A Few Words on "Baby-Farming." R. Wawrinsky.
 Country Life in Sweden. Clarinda.
 Comments on Gösta Berling's saga. Esselde.
 Letter from America. Cecile Gohl.
 The Parliament of 1891. M. C.
 Communications from the Fredrika Bremer Society.

Nordisk Tidskrift.

Published by the Letterstedt Society, Stockholm. Yearly subscription, 10 kr.
 F. W. Schulander, 1815-1881. Georg Nordensvan.
 The Gothenburg System of the Spirit-sale in Norway. H. Berner.
 A Temple of Ancient Egypt. Karl Piehl.
 Present-day "Ballads of the People" in Norway. Richard Steffen.
Biologische Untersuchungen von G. Retzius. Reviewed by W. Leche.
 The Swedish Antiquarian Society's Magazine.
 Painting in Holland. George Göthe.

Svensk Tidskrift.

Published by Frans von Shéele, Upsala. Yearly subscription, 10 kr.
 An Apology for our Times. Per Trygg.
 Everyday Town Life in Italy. Cecilia Waern.
 August Blanchet's Author. Nils Erdmann.
 Poems by Axel Karfeldt.
 A Journey from Teheran to Kashgar. Sven Hedén.

Tilskueren.

Copenhagen. Published by N. Neergaard.
 C. F. Tietgen. Yearly Subscription, 12 kr.
 The Tendency of the nineteenth century Literature. Dr. Schandorph.
 Reminiscences of Macedonia. Dr. K. F. Kinoh.
 Talleyrand's Memoirs. II. N. Neergaard.
 The Theatres. Vilhelm Möller.

Samtiden.

Bergen, Published by J. Brunchorst and Gerhard Gran. Yearly subscription, 5 kr. post free.
 The Struggle for Existence. Chr. Collin.
 Hermann Sudermann and "The Last of So-om." Ola Hansson.
 Petit Poèmes en Prose, par Baudelaire. Translated by G. G.
 Aristotle on The Constitution of Athens. Th. Gomperz.

Nordisk Tidskrift contains an interesting and admirably written article on "The Sale of Spirits in Norway on the Gothenburg System." The Gothenburg system might with advantage be introduced into England. If, to begin with, tavern-keepers were bound to supply their customers with bread and cheese along with their drink, instead of merely filling them with alcoholic poison, a change for the better would probably be seen before long. A good thing, too, may be learnt from Christiania, where the taverns are only opened at about 9 a.m. in order to prevent an influx of the workmen going off to their respective labours; and in Kongsvinger, Tönsberg, etc., the taverns are closed on fête days, when the towns are crowded. Alas! in England it is the sorry custom to apply for an extension of hours that the tavern tills may swallow as much as possible of the hard-earned savings of the working-man who, having been rendered sufficiently swinish, is finally disgorged from the vile-smelling, flaring, overheated bars into the cold night air.

Per Trygg's "Apology for our Times," in Svensk Tidskrift, is a brightly written, optimistic little paper that is genuinely refreshing after the growls and grumbings of latter-day philosophers. Per Trygg doesn't exactly make an apology for our times, for the simple reason that he thinks our times have behaved very well and progressed very favourably indeed; and, altogether, he pats the present on the back most affectionately, and gives it a genial and encouraging "well done!" People have so petted the "good old times," and are so jubilantly welcoming the "good time coming," that the present, which really, all things considered, deserves a little better treatment, has been bespat by the one and ignored by the other.

In Samtiden, Chr. Collin has a similarly fine and healthily toned article on the "Struggle for Existence," in which he satirises the gloomy Schopenhauer dead and the gloomy Schopenhauers living who preach that the struggle best for oneself and for all humanity is the struggle, not for existence, but for death, and who desire universal celibacy to rot out the race and lay this grand old world of ours waste.

The May number of Ur Dagen's Krönika contains the conclusion of the novelette by Kolon, "A Danger-fraught Dream," which was commenced in the previous issue. The story is written with a daring, Zola-like realism and brusqueness of style, and treats of the love-passions of an innocently souled girl and a young, fine-voiced, fine-faced, intensely poetic pastor, who has unfortunately married a plain prosaic woman and is the father of several children. It is written by an unmistakably brilliant writer, for, in spite of verging audaciously near the unwholesome realism that has hitherto been monopolised by the French school of littérateurs, there is such a touch of sympathetic purity, toning down even the description of the guilt of man and woman, that the sternest moralist might, for a while at least, be hypnotised into uncritical acquiescence. This effect is, in a large measure, brought about by the halo of heroism and self-sacrifice thrown round the pastor who, to keep the girl's reputation pure and unsullied, asserts her innocence of any passion for him and goes off to prison as a criminal, self-confessed, of the lowest and most repulsive kind. The character of the girl is a little contradictory. Could even such a love as hers transform the spoilt, light-tongued little Gothenburg beauty, who previously is apparently of a very commonplace mind, into the deep-souled, intensely passionate girl whose purity of thought almost blots out her sin, and who writes on her deathbed thus to her mother, "I know one word of mine will set him free, but I will not say it. . . . He could not return to his work—his wife, his children. It would torture him to death. The punishment would be greater than the crime. . . . The knowledge that he has saved my reputation is the only little spark that keeps him to life. Should I extinguish it? Gladly, gladly. Might they say of me 'The loose-lived wench'! I would smile at it, but—what of him?" And what, one's prosaic self is prompted to ask, of the wife grown faded and old with household cares and frequent child-bearing? Perhaps Kolon, whose clever pen has conjured so beautiful and thrilling a story out of a guilty and selfish passion, may some day use his talents on behalf of the ordinary faced weary housemother, whose troubles and resigned soul-warping grubbing about amongst the children she has brought into the world with pain might sanctify her and vest her with sufficient beauty to retain the affections of the man who has sworn to love and cherish her till death.

THE DUTCH MAGAZINES.

J. HOONER in De Gids for June has an article on Tolstoi's comedy, "The Fruits of Civilisation," of which a very complete abstract is given:—

The piece has come as a surprise to the European public, which no longer expected any such lighter work from Tolstoi's hand. The figure of the famous poet had, in recent times, been more or less lost sight of. It had been merged in that of the prophet, the gloomy latter-day Saint, a second John the Baptist, with a leathern girdle round his loins. Tolstoi's latest philosophico-social development, the "Kreutzer Sonata," seemed decisive in this respect. Both his own countrymen and foreigners began to be seriously uneasy lest the balance of this wonderful mind should finally have been destroyed by his perpetual and obstinate brooding over the "state of salvation" for mankind. Tolstoi's reasoning began to partake of the nervous harping on one overmastering thought, the endless revolving in one circle of ideas, which characterise the sufferer from mania. All his creations became grey, bizarre, melancholy. . . . In this comedy, however, we see that the artistic instinct is still alive, though the apostle still stands in the background with uplifted hand, ready to begin preaching. This is an encouraging sign, for I believe that Count Tolstoi's true vocation lies primarily where he has of late years been unwilling to seek it, in his artistic and creative faculty. . . . "The Fruits of Civilisation," is not, strictly speaking, a comedy so much as a dramatic sketch, a fierce satire, in four acts, on the society of the present day. . . . Whether Tolstoi is right in calling some acts of folly on the part of St. Petersburg notabilities—some morbid phenomena and accidental excrescences connected with human progress—the fruits of civilisation, we need not inquire. The comedy in itself is characteristic enough to excite interest as a picture of social life in Russia. The scenes sparkle with vivid colour, and every figure is alive. The characters are as real as those in "Anna Karenina," or "War and Peace."

Max Rooses contributes an article on the "New Museum at Antwerp," opened last August on the site of the Duke of Alba's palace. The Museum which older visitors to Antwerp will remember was the former church of the Minorite Friars, and its narrow escape from destruction in 1873, when the old "Stadsvaag" was burnt down, induced the authorities to take measures for transferring the collection elsewhere. The 666 pictures of 1873 (including, however, the best-known masterpieces of Flemish painting which have escaped the all-devouring Louvre) have now increased to 1,200. Max Rooses' article would form an excellent guide to the Museum; and he gives some interesting information about modern Belgian artists. Louis Couperus, author of "Noodlot" (recently published in English by Mr. Heinemann as "Footsteps of Fate"), contributes a rather morbid fin-de-siècle sketch called "A Longing;" Prof. A. G. van Hamel, writes on "French Versification;" and Dr. H. J. Polak on "Cobet's Correspondence," which has recently been published. Dr. Joh. Dyserinck discusses Van der Helst's picture of the "Archers' Banquet," of which a reproduction is given in photogravure.

The first article in Vragen des Tijds is political, and of no great interest to outsiders. The others are "The Beetroot Sugar Industry in Holland," by Dr. G. W. Bruinsma, and the first of a series in "Religion and Science," by Dr. H. W. Waalewijn. The latter contains nothing particularly noteworthy, though the concluding remark may be quoted:—"The would-be free-thinker is of opinion that any one can accept a new theory of life (by preference, his own) at a moment's notice, as easily as he would put on another coat; but he thus shows that he does not even know what a theory of life is."

THE SPANISH MAGAZINES.

In the Revista Contemporanea for May 30th, Don Melchior de Palau concludes his notes on the "Literary Events of 1890." The Marquis de Nadaillac contributes the first part of a paper (continued in the number for June 15th) on "The Progress of Anthropology," and Don Carlos Soler Arques continues a story which has been running for some months under the title of "Here and There." The most important feature of the mid-monthly number is the first half of the Character Sketch of Pope Leo XIII. translated from the May REVIEW OF REVIEWS by Don R. Alvarez Sereix. Señor Canovas contributes the first part of a story of child-life, called "Rosarito," and Don Damian Isern his fourth article on "Forms of Government." From the "Political Summary," it would appear, Sunday labour and banking questions are the subjects which just now most occupy the attention of the Spanish Opposition. The "Foreign Summary" contains the following paragraph relating to the Pope's Encyclical:—

Though at first the papers of the extreme Italian party (Italianissimi) appeared to receive with a certain indifference the admirable Encyclical of Leo XIII. on the Labour Question, the profound sensation which this notable document has created, both in Europe and America, has forced them to turn their attention to it, and the more weighty ones have joined in the universal applause called forth by the lofty ideas and the moderation of this utterance, coinciding with the practical application of the remedies required by the social problem.

It would be difficult to find anything more beautiful than the passages in which Leo XIII. describes the life of the early Christians, or more cogent examples for imitation than those which he drew from the efforts made by the Christian labour corporations, and by so many eminent men who, inspired by the Gospel, and making themselves, as it were, companions of the workers, are consecrating their fortunes and their talents to the solution of the social problem. A very fine passage, also, is that in which the Pontiff describes true charity, invoking the definition of the Apostle Paul. It is not strange that His Holiness's Encyclical should have made in all directions so deep an impression.

España Moderna for June contains the Bishop of Oviedo's third and last article on the "Ancient Civilisation of the Philippine Islands." Señor Castelar, in his "Cronica Internacional," discusses, among other subjects, the Pope's Encyclical and its bearing on social questions, religious intolerance in Russia, and the position of the Jews. The foreign section contains translations of short stories by Turgenieff and Baxbey d'Aureville, Zola's article on Chateaubriand, and a paper on Ibsen's plays by a writer who gives only his initials—A. V.

THE NEW ENGLAND MAGAZINE

THE best article, if by best we mean the one containing the soundest sense and the most timely words of counsel and of exhortation, in the New England Magazine for June is Mr. Edward D. Mead's article, "The Message of Puritanism for this Time." It is an excellent sermon, which may be read with profit both by politicians and parsons. There is an interesting account of the early days of the first telegraph line. An article which will attract many Wagnerians is Mr. Edward H. House's "Wagner and Tannhäuser in Paris in 1861." Mr. Sidney H. Morse tells us about an almost forgotten hero of the anti-slavery time. Edwin A. Start describes the city of Lynn, a New England town which has arisen like a phoenix from its ashes after having been burned down.

SOME FOREIGN MILITARY PERIODICALS.

FRENCH.

Journal des Sciences Militaires.

Marshal Moltke, Organiser and Strategist.
General Lewal.
France in Tunis. General Cosseron de Villenois.
War in Mountainous Countries. Colonel Jayet.
The Great Questions of the Day (concluded).
Commandant Nigote.
The New Armament and Smokeless Powder.
Colonel Crouzet.
The Campaign of 1814: The Cavalry of the Allied Armies. From documents in the Imperial Archives at Vienna (continued).
Commandant Well.
Remounts: French and Foreign. Quality, Quantity, and Endurance of the Horses in the Armies of Europe (continued).

Revue du Génie Militaire.

The Armoured Cupolas for the Forts at Liège and Namur (37 figs.). Captain L. Bertrand.
On the Possibility of Long Aerial Voyages (3 figs.). Lieutenant E. Deburau.
On the method of the employment of Portland Cement in the Fortification Works of Austria-Hungary (6 figs.).
Artificial production of Sand by the Loiseau Crusher (1 fig.). Captain Allard.
On the Influence which the size of the Sand has on the Resistancy of Cement Work.

Revue Maritime et Coloniale.

On English "Sailors' Homes." Report by Captain Richard, French Naval Attaché to the Minister of Marine.
Memorandum on a Novel Rifle Rest (9 figs.).
Sub-Lieut. G. Voltoux.
The War Navies of Antiquity and of the Middle Ages (continued); 6 plates, 12 figs.
Rear-Admiral Serre.
The English Naval Estimates, 1891-2; Memorandum of the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Revue Militaire de l'Etranger.

The Anglo-Russian Question in Asia and the Defence of India.
The Spanish Colonial Forces.

La Marine Française.

The Gerville-Réache Incident in the Chamber on the question of smokeless powder and the purchase of Armstrong q. f. guns.
Debate on M. Lockroy's question on the accident to the Amiral Baudin.
Report of the Committee on the credits for the Navy.
Short distance Signals and Counter torpedoes.
Naval Don Quixotism.
The Composition of the Fleet. Rear-Admiral Réveillère.
The Fleets of the Quadruple Alliance.

GERMAN.

Internationale Revue über die gesamten Armeen und Flotten.

Moltke Dead! Otto Wachs.
Germany—The Organisation, Distribution, and Employment of Field Artillery belonging to the Army Corps. Lieut.-Colonel Nienstaedt.
On Flanking Positions.
Austria—Historical Sketch of Home and Foreign Military Schools.
Russia—Miscellaneous from the Russian Archives and Historical Prints. I. The Part played by Serbia in the War of 1877-8.
France—The Present Condition of the French Armoured Fleet.
The Defence of States and Fortification of the Capitals (after General Brialmont).

Neue Militärische Blätter.

Sea-going Torpedo Boats and the New English Torpedo Depot Ship Ulcana.
Two Years' Service?
The Construction of the New Paste-board Figure Targets.
The Army of the United States (N. America).

THE Journal des Sciences Militaires opens with a striking article on Moltke, by General Lewal. The French military press has, for the most part, acted with great dignity and self-restraint on the first portion of the adage, De mortuis nil nisi bonum. But, as General Lewal very truly says, it would be puerile and useless to be silent before Moltke's tomb. His value was great and his rôle considerable. It is necessary, therefore, to seek the cause, to study his methods of procedure, in order to derive profit from the lesson. Of a nature essentially positive, he launched into none of those vague speculations and complicated systems which have such a seductive fascination for ardent imaginations. He dealt only with the real, and his method was one of extreme simplicity. Defined in his own words, here it is, "The principal task of strategy," he writes, "is to prepare its means for the combat, and to thoroughly arrange beforehand the first deployment of the army. A single fault committed in the concentration of armies is never reparable during the whole of the campaign." . . . "All these dispositions can be weighed and matured long in advance; for, given a sufficient preparation of troops and a good organisation of transports, they lead infallibly to the end desired." What he said he accomplished. These few lines contain the whole of his programme—simple in its conception, but immense in its details of execution. "Mobilisation, instruction of troops, concentration"—this trilogy constitutes the preparation for war, and on the excellence of this preparation success depends. General Lewal, according to his own appreciation of his monograph, presents us with the picture of a silent, unsympathetic man, devoured with hatred of France, and firmly believes that to the impartial observer, after reading his account, Moltke will pass down to posterity deprived of the halo which surrounds the head of great soldiers. But with the frankness of a gallant and honourable soldier, he does not fail to bring into prominence the untiring watchfulness and unceasing devotion to duty displayed by his adversary. Altogether his monograph on Moltke will probably be recognised as the most eloquent epitaph ever written on the great German strategist. Commandant Nigote, before concluding his valuable series of article on "The Great Questions of the Day," takes occasion to lay special stress on the absolute necessity for largely increasing the totally insufficient quantity of ammunition allowed for the musketry training of the infantry soldier. As he puts it, the enormous expenditure in feeding, clothing, and maintaining an army is incurred so that the soldier may be able, at the proper moment, to put a bullet in the target; it is really this bullet which justifies the sacrifices imposed on the country. But what would be said of an architect who, after incurring the expense of laying deep and massive foundations, capable of supporting a vast and imposing structure, finally, on the plea of economy, put up nothing but a house of boards? Why spend millions in raising an army and in equipping it with weapons of precision if, after all, the comparatively small sum of money required to teach the men to utilise their weapons properly is to be grudged? Surely, of all expenditure that incurred for ranges and ammunition is that which should be least cavilled over; for it represents the crowning of the edifice which has been so laboriously and expensively built up. In summing up the conclusions to be derived from a study of the preceding articles, Commandant Nigote lays it down that the only rational mode of attack must be one which proceeds on defensive principles, i.e. that an attacking force must march under the shelter of curtains, which hide it from the view of the enemy. By curtains he means not only fieldworks, but the undulations and natural features of the ground, and still more especially night. The artillery, in order to conceal the flash of the guns, will largely make use of indirect fire, and the cavalry will for the most part be employed in fighting on foot against the enemy's flanks. Armies, when on the march, will move forward practically deployed, covered by their protective troops, formed of autonomous detachments. The roads will be left almost exclusively to the artillery and convoys, the infantry and cavalry mostly marching across country. The sight, therefore, of long columns of troops painfully toiling along the roads, with their flanks imperfectly guarded, mixed up and followed by interminable trains of convoys will no longer be seen. The most striking feature in future wars will, however, probably be the large use made of partisans, numerous groups of which, comprising all the three arms, will push on ahead of the

The Amazons of Dahomey.
 Russian Jäger Detachments.
 The 14th Division of Russian Infantry at the Schipka Pass.
 General Macdonald's March over the Splügen Pass in December, 1800.
 The French and English Rivalry in Reaching Timbuctoo. III.

Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und Marine.

The History of Military Law. V. Military Law in the Eighteenth Century. Dr. D'Angelmaier.
 A Contribution to the Study of the War on the Upper Rhine, 1733-4. Freiherr von der Wenz.
 The Performances and Employment of Cavalry in the War of 1866: The Cavalry Fights at Königgratz (continued). Major Kunz.
 Tactical Retrospects on the Fights of the Franco-German War, especially in Regard to the Employment of Artillery (continued).
 The Development of the Russian Army under Alexander III.
 The Debate on the German Naval Budget.

AUSTRIAN.

Mittheilungen aus dem Gebiete des Seewesens.

Yacht Sailing (concluded). Freiherr von Preusschen.
 On the Arrangement of Boilers for forced draught. (Translation of Mr. A. F. Yarrow's paper).
 The International Maritime Conference at Washington in 1889.
 The Hotchkiss 12 c.m. quick-firing gun.
 The Italian Naval Estimates 1891-2.
 Annual Report of Meteorological and Magnetic Observations of the Hydrographic Department at Pola for 1890; numerous tables and plates.

ITALIAN.

Rivista Marittima.

Drinking-water on Board Ships of the Royal Navy (continued), five plates. N. Sollani, Naval Constructor.
 The German Mercantile Marine. VI. Ports, Rivers, and Canals. Salvatore Raineri.
 The Electric Light on Board Ships of the Italian Navy. III. Lieutenant Pouchain.
 Two Naval Orders issued by Amadeus VI.—"the Green Count"—in 1366. Captain E. Frasca.

Rivista di Artiglieria e Genio.

On the Conditions of Stability of the Retaining Walls of the Caesons of Dry Rocks (3 plates). Major Cavaglia, R.E.
 Considerations on the 7-centimetre Field Batteries. Major Gonella, R.A.
 Some Documents on the Origin of Bastioned Fortifications (3 plates). Captain Rocchi, R.E.
 Smokeless Powder, from a Technical and Chemical Point of View.
 Considerations on the Ranging of the Fire of Field Guns.
 Construction of the Belgian Forte on the Meuse (2 plates).
 The New Material for Constructions, Xylolite.
 Major Mauceron's Apparatus for Examining the Interior of Shells and the Bores of Guns.

SPANISH.

Revista General de Marina.

Gunnery Instruction on Board Ship. Lieut. J. le Carranza y Reguera.
 The action of Oil and Lycopodium on waves. Lieutenant Loira.
 Regulations of the Order of Naval merit, 1st April, 1891.
 The Carvels of Co'on. A study on Naval Architecture. (Illus). Rafael Monleon.
 Organisation and working of Foreign Ministries of Marine, from the Annual of the Office of Naval Intelligence, Washington.

frequently engage in serious actions. Indeed, who can predict but what this war of partisans may not be the only one possible? Perhaps after all, the war of masses, of which we have heard so much lately, will prove impracticable, and the masses, after one or two protracted engagements, will split up into small units, and prolong the state of war to a length at present deemed impossible.

The Revue du Genie Militaire and the Rivista di Artiglieria e Genio for May both contain accounts of the forts and iron cupolas being erected for the defence of the Meuse in accordance with the plans prepared by General Brialmont. The forts in all number twenty-one, twelve of them being for the defence of the valley of the Meuse at Liège, and nine for the defence of the valleys of the Sambre and Meuse at Namur. The amount of concrete to be used in their construction equals 1,150,000 cubic metres, whilst the cement required to incorporate this mass of concrete amounts to 300,000 tons. The forts will be provided with 147—or, according to some accounts, 171—iron cupolas on the principle advocated by Brialmont. Sixty-three of these cupolas are to carry quick-firing guns of 57 millimetres, twenty-one will be armed with 21 c.m. howitzers, twenty-one will each carry two guns of 15 c.m., and the remaining forty-two will each contain one or two guns of 12 c.m. The article in the Revue gives full details of the construction of these cupolas, whilst the Rivista explains the construction of the forts themselves and the method adopted in mixing and employing the concrete. The article "On the Possibility of Long Aerial Voyages," by Lieut. Deburaux, is one which should not escape the attention of those who are contemplating the attempt to reach the North Pole by means of balloons.

The Revue Militaire de l'Etranger, in discussing "The Anglo-Russian Question in Asia and the Defence of India," holds to the opinion that India cannot be successfully defended from the Indus. Altogether apart from the disturbing effect which the presence of a Russian Army would have on the native races of India, the Revue insists on the fact that what Napoleon wrote to Prince Eugène in 1813 as to the weak defensive value of a river, is as applicable now as ever. "It must be taken," Napoleon then wrote, "as an axiom that a river, however wide it may be, has never been accepted as being an obstacle which could delay the passage of an enemy for more than a few days. . . . If the defensive must perforce be adopted there is no other course which can be taken except to dispose of one's forces in such a manner as to be able to unite them en masse so as to fall on the enemy before he has completed his passage. . . . Nothing is more dangerous than to attempt to seriously defend a river by lining the opposite bank; for once the enemy has effected a passage, and he always does so, he finds the army in too extended an order for defence, and he easily prevents it from concentrating." The occupation of Cabul, Ghuznee, and Kandahar seems, therefore, an indispensable preliminary to any hostilities between Russia and England. The entry of the English, however, into these towns would not have half the same moral effect on the populations of India, Afghanistan, and Central Asia as would the occupation of Herat and Balkh by Russian troops. In order to strengthen the English defensive position in Afghanistan, railway communication should be pushed on to Kandahar and Cabul.

La Marine Francaise of June 14th reproduces a remarkable study by Admiral Reviellère "On the Composition of the Fleet," showing the important rôle likely to be played by medium and quick-firing guns firing melinite shells. The same number also publishes some instructive details comparing the strengths of the French and Russian fleets against those of the Triple Alliance and of the Quadruple Alliance (England thrown in) respectively.

The Rivista Marittima contains some capital plates illustrating various types of condensers for distilling water in use on board ship, and the commencement of a vocabulary of powders and explosives by Lieutenant Salvati, which promises to give a very full account of the multitudinous explosives now more or less in use.

In the Revista General de Marina there is a long article on Naval Gunnery by Lieutenant Reguera, and a novel suggestion made by Lieutenant Loira that experiments should be made to try the effect of the pollen of Lycopodium—vegetable brimstone—in calming the waves of the sea. The writer considers that Lycopodium would have some advantages over oil, and that it would be decidedly cheaper.

THE MUSICAL MAGAZINES.

Church Musician. (2d.)

- Congregational Singing. G. B. Lyle.
The Training of Boys' Voices. Stocks Hammond.
Guilds, Ancient and Modern. Dr. J. H. Lewis.
On Studying the History of Music and on Musical Form. Dr. F. J. Karn.

The Strad. (2d.)

- Hints for Violin Players—the "Bridge." J. B. Sweet.
Celebrated Violinists—Tartini. (Illustrated.)
How to make a Violin. John Broadhouse.
Ole Bull, Violinist (Biography).

Musical Times. (4d.)

- Jenny Lind.
The Great Composers—Wagner, Joseph Bennett.
Gounod on Mozart's "Don Giovanni."
First Performances—Spohr's "Last Judgment." F. G. Edwards.
Music—"Sleep, Baby, Sleep." Four-part song by Elizabeth Stirling.

Musical Opinion. (2d.)

- Church Organists: Their Status and Duties. Rev. J. Allan Pride.
Are we making Musicians? Dr. Henry Hiles.
Electrical Aid to the Organist. Robert Hope-Jones.
Making of Sound in Organ and Orchestra. Hermann Smith.
Victoria University and Degrees in Music.
A Day with Schubert. J. F. Rowbotham.

Nonconformist Musical Journal. (2d.)

- Music at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Bournemouth.
Tonic Sol-fa, its Origin and Founders. G. H. Lawrence.
The Hymn-Tune as a Vehicle for Modulation. O. A. Mansfield.

Musical Record. (2d.)

- French Music. Herr Niecks.
Frauz's "Messiah." Andrew Deakin. With Reply by Ebenezer Prout.
Bach's Organ Works. S. S. Stratton.
The Pianoforte Teacher. Herr Pauer.

Magazine of Music. (6d.)

- Mr. Clifford Harrison (Reciter). Portrait.
The Handel Festival. Portrait and Autographs.
Loewe's Ballads and their Place in Musical History.
Bülow's Reading of Beethoven.
Music—Songs by E. Roger and Ferris Tozer; Danes Allemandes, by Franz Schubert.

Musical Age. (2d.)

- The Study of Various Instruments. R. Mac-hardy.
Mr. Henry Brinkine Allon, B.A. Biography.
Musical Sands in Many Lands. Dr. H. Carrington Bolton.
Music—"The Spinning Wheel," for Piano, by R. Mac-hardy.

THE question of the organist's duties and prospects and his relations to the clergy seems to be growing in importance, judging from the attention being given to it in the musical press.

The Church Musician, an admirable little magazine, which grows in interest and usefulness, is inclined to blame the Clergy for the friction which too often arises between the minister and the organist. Through want of tact and consideration, from deficient musical knowledge and practical experience in church music, and the management of choirs, the clergy often expect certain music to be performed or omitted, and wish "to undo prepared arrangements in an instant, which is enough to try the patience of any human being, let alone a musician, who by temperament and training, generally becomes abnormally sensitive." The authority of the organist, it is contended, should extend to a complete control of the music, but, in any case, the limits of his power should be stated at the time of his appointment, so that he may know upon what ground he stands. The paper in the Church Musician on the training of boys' voices is good so far as it goes; but Nonconformists will hardly agree with the writer in declaring that female choristers are undesirable in church on the score of decorum and propriety. The reasons must be weighty which could justify the inhibition of one-half the human race using to the glory of their Creator the gifts with which they have been endowed, and it is arrant humbug to say that because St. Paul wrote "I suffer not a woman to teach," he would have forbidden the sex from taking part in leading the church praise. There is, in truth, nothing more serious than traditional prejudice against the employment of women in the choir, and that prejudice is happily breaking down.

The Earl of Dysart is a bold man who has the courage of his convictions. In a recent letter to the leading daily he contended that German singers should be exclusively engaged for the Richter concerts, it being "unjust and altogether wrong to employ inferior talent because it is English, when good German artistes are to be had." The Earl further urged that the works of Beethoven and Wagner should be sung in German. Such views were not likely to escape the notice of the musical press, and the Musical Times has an answer to the Earl in the following terms: It would be more to the purpose if, instead of indulging in this general disparagement of native talent, Lord Dysart would give the names of German singers in London whose claims Dr. Richter has disregarded, and then let us hear what concert tenor there is who sings better than Mr. Lloyd, what baritone better than Mr. Santley? A glance at Richter's band shows that he does not forget the claims of his compatriots. The leader and upwards of thirty performers bear foreign, and in almost every case unmistakably German names. But the best and most conclusive answer to Lord Dysart's strange protest is the significant fact that at Bayreuth, the very Mecca of German music, the vocal superiority of non-German singers has of late seasons been strikingly recognised by the engagement, among others, of Mdlle. Van Dyck and Blauwaert, both Belgians. If the Germans, in their own country, cannot get on without foreigners, why should not Richter be allowed to have English singers in England? Lord Dysart is carrying his adherence to the Wagnerian cult just a little too far, but he is not likely to disturb the susceptibilities of the musical public, who care nothing about the nationality of performers so long as they are efficient. In connection with the Lancet's advocacy of music as a therapeutic agent, the Musical Times hardly needs to remind us that there is a reverse to the medal, and that while music may sometimes soothe the insane, as it soothed Saul, it often exasperates those who are not in the least afflicted, either mentally or bodily. An energetic organ-grinder can disintegrate the composure of the most amiable men; and in the majority of illnesses all sounds, musical or otherwise, are anathema to the sufferer.

London, which threatens to swallow up all the literary talent of the country, has this month drawn the Musical Age from Hull to Chancery Lane. The paper has an interesting article on "Musical Lands." Dr. Bolton concludes, after much experiment and collecting of samples from every quarter of the globe, that musical sand is not a distinct variety sand, but a condition into which the sand gets. Various theories have been propounded as to the cause of the sound; but Dr. Bolton's explanation is that it arises from the fact that each individual particle of sand contains an air-cushion round its surface, which causes it to give off a note when disturbed by friction.

THE BOOK OF THE MONTH.

LABOUR AND LIFE OF THE PEOPLE OF LONDON.* BY CHARLES BOOTH.

THIS is the second volume embodying the results and painstaking inquiries instituted by Mr. Charles Booth into the actual condition of the labour and life of the people of the Metropolis. It is a wonderful book, a monument of work, which fills us with pride at the patience, energy, and ability of its author, and, at the same time, with shame at the facts which it reveals. For the detailed examination of the actual facts I know nothing like it in our literature. Mr. Booth, in this second volume, gives us a description of the whole of London—not a bird's-eye view, but taking it street by street, describing the people who live in each street, and giving the percentage of the poverty in each district in London, together with a mass of other information which has hitherto been unattainable. All the facts which he has obtained are illustrated by a series of coloured maps, which show, by an effective contrast of colours, the respective character of each section of population in each district. He uses seven shades of colour in order to indicate seven different classes. The black is the lowest grade, composed chiefly of elements of disorder. Of these there are 376,000, or 9 per cent., in London. Dark blue represents poor, chiefly consisting of casual labourers and others, who live from hand to mouth in a condition of chronic want, and number 310,000, or 7·5 per cent. of the whole population. The light blue shows classes earning from eighteen to twenty-one shillings a week. Of these there are 938,000. The great bulk of the working classes live in the district marked purple or pink; they number 2,166,000, or 51·5 per cent. Well-to-do families, who keep one or two servants, are marked red, while the wealthy are marked yellow. The problem, therefore, which confronts the social reformer in London is made visible. It is enough to glance at the map to see the need of something being done. As Mr. Rhodes regards it as the mission of British statesmen to paint the world red, so the mission of the social reformer is to paint Mr. Booth's map purple or pink. Mr. Booth is more than ever convinced that the great crux in dealing with the social problem in London is the existence of the 316,000 persons whose houses are coloured dark blue, that is to say, casual labourers and those who are in chronic want. This class is three times as numerous as all those provided for in public institutions, of whom there are 90,000 in London, excluding soldiers in barracks. It is impossible, however, in the compass of a single page to give an idea of the wealth of material with which this book abounds. Mr. Booth divides his book into four parts: first, London street by street, which contains statistics of poverty, with classification and description of streets and discussion of model dwellings, to which Miss Octavia Hill and others contribute. The second part is devoted to central London, and contains chapters on tailoring and bootmaking, Covent Garden, common lodging-houses, and homeless men. The third part is devoted to South-lying London. South London is much poorer than East London. This section contains chapters on migration, and one on outlying London north of the Thames. The fourth part is devoted to London children, and discusses elementary and secondary education for boys and girls. Mr. Booth has been assisted by several writers whose papers appear in the book, as well as by many able and zealous associates whose names do not appear, for they are too numerous. It would be a mistake to regard the book as merely depressing. It is something to have the human wilderness mapped out and surveyed so that we can at least know where we are, and what kind of work lies before us. Mr. Booth, I am glad to see, is going on; he promises us a new volume, in which he will attempt to take stock of all the agencies which at present are at work endeavouring to improve the existing state of need. He will compare the principles by which they are guided, one with another; he will contrast those districts which are left to themselves with those in which religious or philanthropic work is active, and so form an estimate as to the comparative value of methods employed to ameliorate the condition of the poor. I heartily wish him and his assistants success in the arduous enterprise upon which they have entered. The work which they have undertaken is that which in almost any other country would have been done, if done at all, by a State department with a national treasury at its back. That it should have been undertaken by a handful of private individuals is one more illustration of the indomitable energy of the private Englishman.

"Chicago's Dark Places" is a volume of another order, dealing with the moral side of the problem of great cities. It is published by the Craig Press, 77-9, Jackson Street, Chicago, and is the report of investigations in underground Chicago by a specially appointed Commission. If the statements of the book are correct, there seems to be great and urgent need for the establishment of a National Vigilance Association in Chicago. It is difficult to believe that side by side with the headquarters of the W.C.T.U. public incentives to debauchery can be allowed which would not be tolerated in Paris, and which, if displayed in London, would lead to instant prosecution; but the writer speaks positively and with detail. A writer in the book quotes the following little anecdote, which very aptly hits off the kind of religion which tolerates such evils. "A little girl was heard to finish her evening prayer with these words: 'And I saw a poor little girl on the streets to-day, cold and barefooted; but it's none of our business, is it, God?'" The book is a very terrible little volume, but to Londoners it carries one poor consolation: we are bad enough in Modern Babylon, but vice with us of this order is at least compelled to skulk concealed. If it came out into the open in this Chicagan fashion it would promptly be run in.

* "Labour and Life of the People of London," continued. By Charles Booth. With Maps and Summaries under separate cover. Williams and Norgate.

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

NOTICE.—For the convenience of such of our readers as may live at a distance from any bookseller, any Book they may require, whether or not it is mentioned in the following List, will be forwarded post free to any part of the United Kingdom, from the Office of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, on receipt of Postal Order for the published price of the Book ordered.

ART.

ANON. Letters to Living Artists. (Elkin Mathews.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 168. Price 3s. 6d.

A collection of critiques, written in the very offensive epistolary form, which has of late become so common. Among the artists "addressed" are: Sir Frederic Leighton, Sir John Millais, Mr. Burne Jones, the late Mr. Edwin Long, Mr. Watts, Mr. Alma Tadema, Mr. Frith, Mr. Whistler, and Mr. George du Maurier. The book is said to be by a well-known art critic; but this is a very common method of giving a fictitious interest to an anonymous work.

RUSKIN, JOHN. Lectures on Architecture and Painting, delivered at Edinburgh in November, 1883. (George Allen.) 8vo. Cloth. Price 7s. 6d.

A reprint (with the much-needed addition of an index) of a very interesting and characteristic work. The illustrations are printed from the original plates, and the book is uniform with the cheap re-issue of the "Seven Lamps of Architecture," etc.

BIOGRAPHY.

DAVIDSON, RANDALL THOMAS, D.D., AND WILLIAM BENHAM, D.D. Life of Archibald Campbell Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury. (Macmillan and Co.) 8vo. 30s.

The most important biography of the month. Tait was successively Head Master of Rugby (where he succeeded Arnold in 1842), Dean of Carlisle, Bishop of London, and Archbishop of Canterbury. He always took an active interest in all matters connected with ecclesiastical polity and with the Church of England, as well as in politics and social questions in general. The book is practically a history of the Church of England during the period with which it deals.

JEFFERIES, RICHARD. The Story of My Heart: My Autobiography. (Longmans, Green and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xii. 208. Price 3s. 6d.

A new edition in the "Silver Series." Mr. Charles Longman contributes a pleasantly written introduction, and there is also a portrait.

PAGE, JESSE. David Brainerd. (S. W. Partridge.) Cloth. Pp. 160. 1s. 6d.

Brainerd was missionary to the North American Indies, this interesting and well-written story of his life forming one of the "Popular Missionary Biographies."

REDGRAVE, F. M. (Editor). Richard Redgrave, C.B., R.A. (Cassell.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 399. Price 10s. 6d.

No more interesting volume of artistic reminiscences and of anecdotes has appeared since Mr. Frith published his popular "Autobiography." Mr. Redgrave was a particularly energetic man, for besides being a successful painter, he was one of the most active members of the Academy concerned in the Art movements of fifty years ago, working with the Prince Consort, of whom he tells many interesting anecdotes, in the formation of the South Kensington Museum, and doing much to build up our system of Art education. He was a universal favourite, he went everywhere and saw every one in the artistic, literary, and political worlds, and his interesting anecdotes and stories make his book undoubtedly one of the most important of the month.

STEAD, W. T. General Booth: A Biographical Sketch (Isbister and Co.) 8vo. Paper covers. Pp. 94. Portrait. Price 1s.

ESSAYS, CRITICISMS, AND BELLES LETTRES.

BLATCHFORD, ROBERT. The Nunquam Papers. (London: 68, Fleet Street.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 207. Price 1s.

A series of remarkably clever essays on various subjects, showing a wonderful knowledge of the world, and a keen insight into human nature. The papers which deal with our army and navy, and with the Indian Mutiny, give one a better and a more vivid idea of all the horrors and the farseness of war than any number of military treatises or romances.

CHURCH, A. J. The Greek Gulliver. (Seeley.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 110. Price 1s.

Professor Church is well known as a skilful adaptor of the old classics for nursery needs, and these stories rendered into English, with some liberty of change, from the "Vera Historia" of Lucian, are translated with all his usual skill. The illustrations are by Mr. C. O. Murray.

COLVIN, SIDNEY. (Editor.) Letters of John Keats to his Family and Friends. (Macmillan and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 6s.

This is an important work, although it contains nothing that is new. Its object is to supply the want of a separate and convenient edition of the letters of Keats to his family and friends. Mr. Colvin tells us that he has in all cases given in full the verse and other quotations which occur in the correspondence, but that he has deliberately omitted the poet's love letters to Fanny Brawne, not feeling it right that they should find a place in what he hopes may become the standard edition of the correspondence.

LANDOR, WALTER SAVAGE. Imaginary Conversations. Vol. I. (J. M. Dent.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 383. Price 3s. 6d. net.

Beautifully bound and printed, this work, which when completed will be in six volumes, certainly deserves to be the standard edition of the "Imaginary Conversations." Mr. Charles G. Crump's bibliographical and explanatory notes are full and complete, and to the reader who is not steeped in classical allusion, will prove of the greatest value.

VAN DE VELDE, MADAME M. S. French Fiction of To-day. (Trischler.) Two volumes. 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 240. Price 21s.

This book supplies a long-felt want, and gives a capital all-round view of the leading French novelists at home and their methods of work, accompanied by a somewhat amateurish criticism and analysis of their books, together with excellent portraits and biographical sketches.

FICTION.

The fiction published during June includes novels by Mr. Walter Besant and Mr. William Black. The following list does not profess to be even in the remotest degree exhaustive, it merely catalogues some of the more important works which have come under our notice.

ARNOLD, EDWIN LESTER. Phra the Phoenician. (Chatto and Windus.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 347. Price 3s. 6d.

A new edition of one of the most deservedly successful of last season's novels. The author is a son of Sir Edwin Arnold, who contributes an introduction to the work. The doctrine of re-incarnation is in some sense the groundwork of the story, for Phra spreads his life over more than a thousand years, dying constantly, and then, after a long lapse, waking again, picking up the lost thread of his life where he had left it.

THE REV. A. J. CHURCH.

(From a photo by Elliott and Fry.)

BESANT, WALTER. St. Katherine's By the Tower. (Chatto and Windus.) Three volumes.

BLACK, WILLIAM. Donald Ross of Heimra. (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.) Three volumes.

CAMBRIDGE, ADA. The Three Miss Kings. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 314. Price 3s. 6d.

"CAPTAIN COE." The Coroner's Understudy. (Arrow-smith.) 8vo. Paper covers. Price 1s.

The writer who here adopts the pseudonym of "Cap't'n Coe" possesses at least two of the first qualifications of a successful novelist. He can observe carefully, and he has also a certain grasp of the difficult art of characterisation. But he does not seem to be sufficiently painstaking. "The Coroner's Understudy" might have been a work of art had more care been taken in planning it and in laying the foundations beforehand. As it stands it is interesting; but the interest is not sustained. We shall probably hear of "Captain Coe" again.

COUPERUS, LOUIS. Footsteps of Fate. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 272. Price 2s. 6d.

A volume of Heinemann's International Library, translated from the Dutch by Miss Clara Bell.

DAVIS, RICHARD HARDING. Gallegher. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 236. Price 3s. 6d.

These stories have earned Mr. Davis the reputation of being "the Rudyard Kipling of the United States." They are certainly very clever, full of human interest and of a certain quality of sensation which is yet not sensation. They are uneven, but they are all readable.

ELLIOTT, SARAH B. Jerry. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Cr. 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 470. Price 6s.

A reprint of the novel which has been running in Harper's Magazine. Clever and readable, but somewhat spoilt by a superfluity of obscure dialogue in dialect.

MR. RICHARD HARDING DAVIS.

FALCONER, LANOE. The Hotel D'Angleterre. (Fisher Unwin.) Long post 8vo. Paper. Pp. 196. Price 1s. 6d.

A volume of the "Pseudonym Library," containing a number of short stories by the authoress of "Mademoiselle Ixe."

FLEMING, KEITH. At the Eleventh Hour. (Routledge.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 312. Price 2s.

FRANCE, ANATOLE. The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 269. Price 3s. 6d.

One of the few modern French novels which can be placed without fear in the hands of our sisters and our daughters. M. Anatole France is a distinguished literary critic, this being his first work of fiction—a charming single figure study, and not, as the title implies, a sensational romance. The quite admirable translation is by Mr. Lafcadio Hearn.

GOODMAN, E. J. The Only Witness. (Trischler.) Paper covers. Pp. 232. Price 1s.

A sensational novel which breaks off in mid-career, a prize of £20 being offered to the reader first successful in solving the mystery of the plot.

GUNTER, ARCHIBALD C. Miss Nobody of Nowhere. (Routledge.) Crown 8vo. Boards. Pp. 294. Price 2s.

A clever sensational novel by the author of "Mr. Barn's of New York."

HARDY, THOMAS. A Group of Noble Dames. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 271. Price 6s.

The rustic note is for once wanting in Mr. Hardy's work, and in its stead we have a number of kaleidoscopic views of the "better-class," in the form of tales, which are supposed to be told by the members of the Wessex Field and Antiquarian Society, in lieu of the usual dry dissertations on geology or paleontology. Each and all of the stories are decidedly readable, while Mrs. Grundy is not too much in evidence.

HARRIS, JOEL CHANDLER. Balaam and his Master. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.)

Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 293. Price 3s. 6d.

A volume of short American stories by the author of "Uncle Remus."

JANVIER, THOMAS A. Stories of Old and New Spain. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 326. Price 5s.

LE QUEUX, WILLIAM. Guilty Bonds. (Routledge.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 318. Price 2s.

MAARTENS, MAARTEN. An Old Mald's Love. (Bentley.) Three volumes. Price 31s. 6d.

PAGE, THOMAS NELSON. On Newfound River. (Osgood and McIlvaine.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 240. Price .

A pretty American story, full of the local colour which makes all studies of New England life interesting to English readers.

PHILIPS, F. C. Extenuating Circumstances. (F. V. White.) Paper cover. Pp. 102. Price 1s.

A new novel by the author of "As in a Looking Glass."

SHORTHOUSE, J. H. John Inglesant. (Macmillan.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 445. Price 3s. 6d.

A new edition (making the twenty-first since 1881, when the book was first published) of Mr. Shorthouse's popular philosophical novel.

SMITH, F. HOPKINSON. Colonel Carter of Cartersville. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 208. Price 3s. 6d.

A charming story of Virginian life.

The summer numbers of the Graphic and the Illustrated London News (Price 1s. each.) are even better than usual this year. The Graphic relies chiefly upon its illustrations, reproducing in colour Mr. Blair Leighton's "Olivia" and Rowlandson's "Tour in a Postchaise in 1782." For fiction it has an interesting Canadian story by Mr. Grant Allen, and a story by Mr. T. W. Speight. The Illustrated, as usual, relies on one story, which this year is by Mr. Henry Herman. It is a romance of Wild West, entitled "Eagle Joe," and is admirably illustrated by Mr. R. Caton Woodville. A beautiful plate, "The Terrace Walk," by V. Corcos, is also presented.

MR. THOMAS HARDY.
(From a photo by Barraud.)

MR. ISAAC ZANGWILL.

(From a photo by the Stereoscopic Co.)

ful plate, "The Terrace Walk," by V. Corcos, is also presented.

ZANGWILL, ISAAC. The Bachelor's Club. (Henry.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 338. Price 3s. 6d.

Much that is genuinely funny and novel in this volume is spoilt by a too obvious straining after effect—an attempt to raise a laugh where laugh there cannot be. The motive of the plot is, however, original, and the author has worked it out very well, making his book readable and laughable. Mr. Zangwill is the editor of Ariel, a new and excellent comic paper, from which we have often reproduced cartoons, while the really clever illustrations are by the caricaturist of that paper, Mr. George Hutchinson.

GEOGRAPHY, TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

BARTHOLOMEW, J. G. Reduced Survey Map of India. (Thacker and Spink.) 8vo. Cloth. Price 8s. 6d.

An excellent map, folded in case containing 10,000 names, reduced to the scale of six-and-a-half miles to the inch.

BISLAND, ELIZABETH. A Flying Trip around the World. (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 203. Price 2s. 6d.

The authoress, who is a well-known New York journalist, started off, with scarce a day's notice, in emulation of Jules Verne's hero, to see in how few days she can put a belt round the world. Seventy-six days it takes her, and the record of her travel makes very agreeable reading, although lacking in the sensational incidents evolved from M. Jules Verne's brain.

Epping Forest. (2d. G. W. Bacon.) The Environs of London. (1s.) Sixty Miles North of London. (1s.) The Safety Cycling Map of England. Sheet II.—South-Eastern Division. (1s.) London to the Kent and Sussex Watering Places. (1s.) (Gall and Inglis.) Each of these maps is admirably adapted for the purpose for which it is intended.

LEYLAND, JOHN. The Peak of Derbyshire. (Seeley.) 8vo. cloth. Pp. 340. Price 7s. 6d.

In describing the beauties, antiquities, and the physical characteristics of the Peak, Mr. Leyland has been admirably seconded by Mr. Herbert Raitton and Mr. Alfred Dawson, to whose illustrations it would be impossible to give too high praise.

LOFTIE, W. J., B.A., F.S.A., and W. LUKE, JR. London City: Its History—Streets—Traffic—Buildings—People. (The Leadenhall Press.) 4to. Pp. xvi. 378. Profusely illustrated. Price 42s.

The raison d'être of this sumptuous quarto is to be found in Mr. Luke's illustrations. Mr. Loftie's chapters are interesting and trustworthy, but the pictures make the book. There are several hundreds of them —all vigorously drawn and all admirably reproduced. Taken as a whole, they give as complete a picture of the "live" London of to-day as has ever been issued from the press. Those who were wise enough to subscribe have got their book for a guinea. It is, however, well worth the two guineas now asked for it.

MATHERS, E. P. Zambesia, England's El Dorado. (King, Sell and Raitton.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 480. Price 5s.

The author of this work, who is also editor of that excellent weekly, South Africa, has here given us an exhaustive and concise account (illustrated with maps, plans, portraits and sketches) of Matabele, Mashaland, and the South African goldfields. Mr. Mathers is a believer in the future of the country, and what is more he makes his readers believe with him.

PENNELL, JOSEPH AND ELIZABETH. The Stream of Pleasure. (Seeley.) Small square cloth. Pp. 159. Price 5s.

Many books have been written about the Thames, but none more charming and more readable than the one now before us. Mr. and Mrs. Pennell describe its beauties from Oxford to Richmond, both with pen and pencil, the illustrations being of particular merit. For those unaccustomed to boating, Mr. J. G. Legge adds a practical chapter of advice and counsel.

WHITMAN, SIDNEY. Imperial Germany. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 304. Price 2s.

A reprint of a work which, when first published some years ago, achieved the greatest success, and was hailed as the standard work on modern Germany. The author has not attempted comprehensiveness, but he has examined some of the leading characteristics of the country, probing them to their sources, and drawing his own conclusions in a masterly manner.

HISTORY.

HARTSHORNE, ALBERT. Hanging in Chains. (T. Fisher Unwin.) Large post 8vo. Parchment. Pp. 120. Price 4s. 6d. Illustrated.

The history, the manners, and the customs of the gibbet are hardly entertaining subjects, but the author has made them interesting, if only on account of their gruesomeness, although that quality has certainly not been made unduly prominent.

LOFTIE, W. J. Westminster Abbey. (Seeley.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 319. Price 7s. 6d. New edition, revised.

"The Centre of England and of the British Empire," as this book calls Westminster Abbey, could certainly find a better historian than Mr. Loftie, and no artist more capable of illustrating its many beauties than Mr. Herbert Raitton, whose architectural drawings it would be impossible to excel. Mr. Loftie writes on the Abbey from both the historical and the modern point of view, and has reproduced, the better to bring before his readers the Westminster of the past, a number of curious old prints and paintings.

STONE, PERCY G. The Architectural Antiquities of the Isle of Wight. Part I. (Stone, 16, Great Marlborough Street, W.) Folio. Pp. 48. Price £3 3s. for four parts.

A marvel of research, which will, when completed, be illustrated by over one hundred plates of drawings of the most interesting buildings and monuments in the island.

TAYLOR, T. S. First Principles of Modern History, 1815-1891, from the English Point of View. (Relfe Brothers.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 148. Price 1s.

We can cordially recommend this little volume, which we are glad to meet in a revised form. It is written ostensibly for the young, but there are plenty of grown-up people who would profit by a perusal of it. The facts are stated clearly and without bias, and the interest of the story is maintained throughout.

POETRY AND THE DRAMA.

CRANE, WALTER. Renascence. (Elkin Mathews.) Crown 8vo. Half parchment. Pp. 162. Price 7s. 6d.

This charmingly bound and printed volume deserves and will gain success, if only on account of the dainty little head and tail pieces, in Mr. Crane's best style, with which the book is embellished. And the poems, too, are well worth reading—charming, some of them—full of artistic feeling, and of hopes both for the future of art and of our race.

HENDERSON, FRED. By the Sea, and other Poems. (Fisher Unwin.) Royal 16mo. Paper covers. Pp. 48. Price 1s. 6d.

The poem which gives this little volume its title is curiously reminiscent of Swinburne, both in matter and in metre. Most of the poems breathe the ardent spirit of aggressive socialism, but this does not altogether detract from their artistic interest and value. Some of the pieces are most carefully wrought, and show a technical skill and promise which are as rare as they are hopeful in the writings of a young poet.

HICKEY, EMILY H. Michael Villiers, Idealist. (Smith and Elder.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 192. Price 6s.

Miss Hickey, who was a co-founder with Dr. F. J. Furnivall of the Browning Society, has given us in the poem which gives this volume its name, and which reminds us somewhat of Tennyson's "Princess," some really beautiful passages; but surely such a phrase as "urine clasp" is badly conceived, and is calculated to mar the otherwise beautiful effect. Less ambitious are the other pieces, but some of them are very pretty.

PALGRAVE, FRANCIS T. The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics. (Macmillan.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 381. Price 2s. 6d. net.

A new, revised, and enlarged edition, issued in a very neat and tasteful binding.

WITHER, GEORGE. Poems. (Routledge.) Long post. 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 191. Price 1s.

A volume of the "Companion Poets" series. Wither was a Roundhead poet, contemporary with Milton and with Andrew Marvell.

REFERENCE BOOKS.

ACLAND, M.P., ARTHUR H. D. A Guide to the Choice of Books. (Stanford.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 128. Price 3s. 6d.

The author has attempted, not so much to give the titles of the best books on different subjects, as to give a list of standard works in every department of literature which shall prove useful to those who are forming parish libraries, etc.

BRASSEY, T. A. (Editor). The Naval Annual, 1891. (Griffin, Portsmouth.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 484. Price 10s. 6d.

This work is too well known among, and is sufficiently appreciated by, all who are in any way connected with the navy to need any commendation. Suffice it to say that Lord Brassey has brought his part of the work up to date, reviewing the naval events of the past year, and describing the ships, both British and foreign, which have recently been put into commission; that Mr. F. K. Barnes gives tables and plans of British and foreign armoured and unarmoured ships; and that Captain Orde Browne has a remarkably interesting section on armour and ordnance.

Chambers's Encyclopædia. Volume VII. (W. and R. Chambers.) Imperial 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 828. Price 10s.

The new volume, including Maltbrun to Pearson, of this excellent work shows no signs of falling off. Among the more noticeable articles we may mention Orchard, Pear and Peach, by R. D. Blackmore; Marlow and Marston, by A. H. Bullen; Melbourne, by J. F. Hogan; Milton, by Richard Garnett; Mollère by George Sanisbury; and Nilhilism, by Prince Krapotkin.

SARGANT, E. B., and WHISHAW, BERNHARD. A Guide Book to Books. (Frowde.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 340. Price 5s.

Over one hundred and fifty specialists have contributed to this volume, which, as far as we can judge from frequent reference, should prove of the greatest value both to the student and to the general reader. The literature of every subject is treated in a not too profuse manner, the editor's aim being rather to select only what is essential to a proper understanding of the subject.

SEYFFERT, OSCAR. A Dictionary of Classical Antiquities. (Sonnenschein.) Royal 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 706. Price 21s.

Evolutionists tell us that as soon as a vacant place is found in the economy of nature, some organism is developed to fill it, and now that the familiar Smith's "Dictionary of Antiquities" is enlarged, there is room for a handy one-volume dictionary of the subject. Seyffert's "Lexicon" is concise; it nevertheless embraces many more subjects than Dr. Smith's work. It has a great reputation in Germany, and the names of Professor Nettleship and Mr. Sandys are guarantees for its careful and scholarly editing in English. The articles on Apollo, Architecture, Commerce, Homer, Literature and Painting are remarkable examples of much said in little space. The illustrations, much more numerous than in the German edition, are drawn from the best sources, and are real aids to the understanding of their subjects.

The Sitzings of the House of Commons for Eleven Years, 1880-1890. (Harrison and Sons.) 1s.

From this table one can see at a glance the days on which the House sat, the length of sessions, the periods of recesses, and other valuable information.

The Australian Handbook. (Gordon and Gotch.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 613. Price 10s. 6d.

This voluminous work, professing to be a shippers' and importers' directory and business guide, contains matter not only relating to Australia, but also to New Zealand, Fiji, and New Guinea, excellent maps being given whenever needed, together with photographic illustrations of a number of the more important towns. The work also takes the place of an Australian gazetteer, each town and village being described at length, and its products and chief peculiarities noted, making in all the most useful and the most complete of Colonial handbooks.

RELIGION AND PHILOSOPHY.

AN AGNOSTIC. A Plain Commentary on the First Gospel. (Williams and Norgate.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 652. Price 10s. 6d.

The author of this uncompromisingly iconoclastic work hopes that it may be of "some service even to Christians themselves to read the thoughts and impressions produced in the mind of a non-believer by a detailed study of the Gospel narrative."

SCIENCE, MEDICINE, AND EDUCATION.

COATES, JAMES, PH.D. How to Read Faces; or, Practical Physiognomy made Easy. (Glasgow: Hay Nisbet and Co.) 8vo. Boards. Pp. 128. Price 1s.

An interesting and practical little work from the pen of a well-known physiognomist. It contains "the science and art of reading character, briefly outlined, illustrated, and explained."

GRASBY, W. CATTON. Teaching in Three Continents. (Cassell.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 334. Price 6s.

A comparative study of the educational systems of Europe, America, and Australia.

HENSLOW, GEORGE. The Making of Flowers. (S.P.C.K.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 168. Price 2s. 6d.

If any one wishes to know why plants have coloured blossoms, why the pansy-flower grows upside down, and why horse chestnuts have here four and there five petals, let him come to Professor Henslow. When a master of a science condescends to write a popular sketch, the result is not always encouraging; but the present volume, with its spice of botanical unorthodoxy, shows that its author can not only pursue original research but also set forth his views with all clearness.

KENNEDY, A. S. Notes on Count Mattel's Electro-Homœopathic Remedies. (96, Addison Road, W.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 147. Price 1s. Fifth edition.

Dr. Kennedy, who has studied and used the Mattel remedies for some eight years with the greatest success, gives instructions for their proper administration, a description of the various sorts, and adds notes on a number of cases which have come under his personal supervision.

NISBET, J. F. The Insanity of Genius. (Ward and Downey.) 8vo. Pp. 340. Price 14s.

The author, who is a well-known journalist and the dramatic critic of the Times, has written a book which is interesting and readable, but no one can for a moment pretend to think that it is scientific. Mr. Nisbet's theory is built up on Shakespeare's oft-quoted lines about genius, and in its support he brings up incidents in the lives of the great men of the past, nearly all of whom he proves to have been insane in some particular.

PHILPOTS, J. R. Oysters, and All About Them. (Richardson, 6, Great Russell Street, W.C.) Two volumes. Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 1,370. Price 16s.

After describing in almost confusing detail the various properties and life history of the oyster, the author instructs his reader in the technical knowledge necessary to rear the bivalve, which he says would prove an exceedingly paying investment to any one who would scientifically plant a bed in almost any part of our English shores.

SWAN, H. Colloquial French for Travellers. (Nutt.) 18mo. Cloth. Pp. 128. Price 1s.

Intending tourists will find this little book useful for acquiring the French pronunciation and ordinary colloquialisms.

THOMPSON, SIR H. Modern Cremation: Its History and Practice. (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xii. 164. Price 2s.

A new edition, revised and greatly enlarged. It contains full information relating to the recently improved arrangements made by the Cremation Society of England. An edition in paper covers is published at a shilling.

VERNON-HARCOURT, L. F. Achievements in Engineering. (Seeley.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 311. Price 5s.

Avoiding technical phraseology as far as possible, the author has endeavoured with great success to describe briefly the chief engineering work carried out during the last half century both at home and abroad. Railways, bridges, tunnels, canals, and towers, all are described in an interesting way; the description in many cases being accompanied by diagrams, illustrations, and portraits.

WILSON, ANDREW, F.R.S.E. Glimpses of Nature. (Chatto and Windus.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. viii. 248. Price 3s. 6d.

Pleasantly written and popular papers on scientific subjects, reprinted from the Illustrated London News.

WOODHEAD, G. SIMS. Bacteria and their Products. (Walter Scott.) Crown 8vo. Pp. 459. Price 3s. 6d.

A volume of the Contemporary Science Series, in which Dr. Woodhead gives some account of the main facts of bacteriology in its relation to disease.

SOME FRENCH BOOKS.

GONCOURT, DE EDMOND. Outamaro. (Bibliothèque Charpentier, Paris.) 8vo. Price 3f. 50c.

Life of a famous Japanese artist and designer, by the well-known historical writer and novelist.

LACROIX, OCTAVE. Quelques Maîtres Etrangers et Français. (Hachette et Cie., Paris-London.) 16mo. Price 3fr. 50c.

Literary essays on some timely European writers, including Boccaccio, Rabelais, Thomas Moore, Cervantes, Madame de Sévigné, etc. etc. Forms part of the Bibliothèque Varior.

LAIGLE, ALPHONSE. L'Education. (Lecour, Oudin et Cie., Paris.) 8vo. Price 3f. 50c.

Exhaustive work on education, comprising a study of heredity, habits, etc. Full of practical suggestions.

La Duchesse de Gontaut Mémoires. (Plon, Nourrit et Cie.) 8vo. Price 7f.

Memoirs of the gouvernante of the children belonging to the Royal Family during the Restoration. Interesting and curious from an historical point of view. Fine portrait.

NIGOTE, COMMANDANT. Les Grandes Questions du Jour. (Librairie Militaires.) 8vo. Price 2f.

Pamphlet dealing with the leading military questions of the hour.

PITRAY, DE VICOMTESSE. Lettres de la Comtesse de Ségur. (Hachette et Cie., Paris-London.) 16mo. Price 4fr.

Very interesting addition to the social and religious history of the nineteenth century. Edited by the daughter of the writer, née Princess Rostopchine.

PRESSENSE, E. DE La Famille Chrétienne. (Librairie Fischbacher, Paris.) 8vo. Price 3f. 50c.

Last work written by the well-known Huguenot pastor. Portrait and fac-simile autograph.

SAROLEA, CHARLES. Henrik Ibsen. (Lecour, Oudin et Cie., Paris.) 8vo. Price 2fr.

Interesting account of Ibsen as man and dramatist. Fine portrait.

SOME BLUE BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

The following list comprises all the more important Blue Books issued during the month of June. A complete list may be obtained of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Queen's Printers, East Harding Street, E.C.

I.—COLONIAL POSSESSIONS.

EAST INDIA. Financial Statement.

A Return, giving, in the first part, the Imperial Revenue and Expenditure for the financial year 1891-2, and dealing in the second part with Imperial, Provincial, and Local Finance. There is an appendix showing the course of prices and wages in 1890: another dealing in accounts and estimates; and a third giving commercial and financial statistics. (Pp. 94. Price 10d.)

II.—COMMERCIAL.

WORKING CARGOES ON SUNDAYS. Reports.

Reports from Her Majesty's Consuls respecting the working of cargoes on Sundays in foreign ports. (Part I. Europe). Replies to a circular letter sent by Sir James Ferguson to Her Majesty's Consular officers in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, Spain, Sweden, and Norway and Turkey. (Pp. 38. Price 2½d.)

III.—DOMESTIC.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN SPIRITS. Report.

Report from the Select Committee on British and Foreign Spirits, together with the proceedings of the Committee, Minutes of Evidence, Appendix and Index. This Committee—which was appointed to consider whether on grounds of public health it is desirable that certain classes of spirits, British and foreign, should be kept in bond for a definite period before they are allowed to pass into consumption—have collected a good deal of valuable evidence, to which they have prefixed a brief but interesting report. The report deals (1) with the production and consumption of spirits; (2) with the distillation of spirits; (3) with the definition and classification of spirits; (4) with the character and purity of spirits; (5) with the blending of spirits; (6) with the bonding of spirits; (7) with ether and methylated spirit; (8) with the effect of spirits on public health; and (9) with the suggested application of the Foods and Drugs Act, and the Merchandise Marks Act to British and foreign spirits. On the whole the Committee recommends very little. (Pp. xxix. 150. Price 1s. 5½d.)

MINES AND MINERALS. Statistics for 1890.

Mineral Statistics of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, with the Isle of Man, for the year 1890, prepared by H.M. Inspectors of Mines, by the direction of the Home Secretary, gives statistics as to the value of the minerals wrought in mines or obtained from open works, and shows the production of minerals in the British Colonies and possessions. According to the general summary, coal, iron-ore, and stone are the most important minerals worked in the United Kingdom. (Pp. 122. Price 1s. 4½d.)

MINES. Reports from District Inspectors, 1890.

Fourteen Reports from various Inspectors in various districts to the Home Secretary under (1) the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1877, (2) the Metalliferous Mines Regulation Acts, 1872 and 1875, and (3) the Salt Mines (Gunpowder) Act, 1882, gives information concerning accidents, output of minerals, number of persons employed, etc. A complete list of these reports is subjoined:—

District.	Pages.	Price.
East Scotland .....	46	8d.
West Scotland .....	32	3d.
Newcastle .....	22	2½d.
Durham .....	32	3d.
Yorkshire and Lancashire.....	42	4½d.
Manchester and Ireland.....	58	9d.
Liverpool .....	38	7d.
Midland District .....	46	6½d.
South Wales etc., and Isle of Man (Metal and Slate Mines only).....	26	3d.
North Staffordshire.....	24	2½d.
South Staffordshire.....	24	2½d.
South-Western District .....	40	9d.
South Wales District .....	48	5d.
Cornwall and Devon (Metal and Slate Mines only).....	38	4d.

IV.—EDUCATION.

IRELAND. Annual report.

Annual Report of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland for the year 1890-91. Tables of attendance, balance-sheets, etc., for schools under the control of the Commissioners of Education for Royal schools, private schools and Diocesan schools. (Pp. 12. Price 1½d.)

V.—FOREIGN.

ANGLO-PORTUGUESE CONVENTION. Papers.

Papers relating to the Anglo-Portuguese Convention signed at Lisbon, June 11th and 12th, 1891; being a summary of the fifteen articles of which the Convention consists. (Pp. 6. Price 1d.)

CRETE (AFFAIRS OF). Correspondence.

Further Correspondence respecting the affairs of Crete; being numerous letters to and from Sir William White, Consul Bilotti, Lord Salisbury, and others. Many of these relate to the violation of Maria Damianopoula—a Christian—by Major Rifaat Bey, a Turkish officer, and to other outrages upon Christians by the Mussulmans. (Pp. x. 128. Price 1½d.)

VI.—TRADE AND FINANCE REPORTS.

UNITED STATES. Behring Sea Fisheries.

Further correspondence respecting the Behring Sea Seal Fisheries—letters to and from the Marquis of Salisbury and Sir John Pauncefoot. (Pp. 62. Price 6d.)

VII.—THE NAVY.

NAVIGATION AND SHIPPING. Annual Statement.

The Annual Statement of the Navigation and Shipping of the United Kingdom for the year 1890. Nine abstract tables, followed by general tables, giving the number, tonnage, and nationality of the sailing and steam vessels that have taken part in our foreign, colonial, and coasting trade during the past year; and comparative tables for the years 1886 and 1890. (Pp. x. 382. Price 3s. 1d.)

R.N. ARTILLERY VOLUNTEERS. Report.

Report of the Committee presided over by Vice-Admiral Sir George Tryon, K.C.B. The Committee are of opinion that there is no good reason for maintaining two corps of Royal Naval Volunteers; and that there is no sufficient reason for maintaining the corps raised on the system established under the Act 36 and 37 Vic., cap. 77, and recommend that it should be no longer maintained. The Committee are further of opinion that if a second volunteer force is required, it should be established on the lines of the Royal Marine Artillery, to which force it should be connected in the same manner as the Volunteer Artillery are associated with the Royal Artillery in the Army. (Pp. 20. Price 2½d.)

ROYAL NAVY. Ships Available.

Return of the vessels in the Channel and home waters (exclusive of the Channel Squadron) available at very short notice on April 1st, 1891. These include (1) four armour-clads in commission as flagships at home ports, ready at a few hours' notice; (2) nine armour-clads in commission, connected with the coastguard, ready for sea in forty-eight hours; and (3) vessels in first-class steam reserve in home ports, comprising six iron-clads, two belted cruisers, and sixteen cruisers, besides coast-defence vessels and gun and torpedo boats—ready at five days or less. Full particulars of these vessels—name, displacement, tonnage, armaments, speed, etc.—are given, as also is similar information concerning the Channel Squadron. (Pp. 8. Price 1½d.)

CONTENTS OF THE LEADING REVIEWS.

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW. July.

- 2s. 6d.
The Union of the Australias
Sir HENRY PARKES, G.C.M.G.
"The Finest Story in the World."
RUDYARD KIPLING.
Philaethes.
WILFRED WARD.
Punch and his Artists. M. H. SPIELMANN.
Mr. Robert Browning. ANDREW LANG.
Wanted: A Statesman.
Professor CYRIL RANSOME.
The Jubilee of the Tonic S.I.-Fa System.
J. SPENCER CURWEN.
The "Apology" of Aristides.
Professor G. T. STOKES.
The Last English Home of the Bearded Tit.
T. DICBY PIGOTT.
The Chilean Revolution.
AN OLD RESIDENT IN CHILE.
The Free Education Bill.
Hon. E. LYULPH STANLEY.
A Plea for Continuation Schools.
SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.

FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. July.

- Love's Lady; a Poem.
PHILIP BOURKE MARSTON.
The Credit of Australia.
Sir GEORGE BADEN-POWELL, K.C.M.G., M.P.
Punitive Expeditions on our Indian Border.
E. B. OLIVER.
Sir John Macdonald.
J. G. COLMER, C.M.G.
Cardsharpping in Paris.
E. DELILLE.
Stray Thoughts on South Africa.
By a SOUTH AFRICAN.
Cycling.
R. J. MCKENRY.
Poignant Pauper Immigration. S. H. JEVES.
A Note on Affairs in Chile.
EDWARD MANBY.
The Rediscovery of the Unique.
H. G. WELLS.
With King Gungunhana. DENNIS DOYLE.
Montes: the Matador. (Story).
The EDITOR

FORUM. June.

- A System of Physical Training.
President W. DE W. HYDE.
The Census of 1890.
President FRANCIS A. WALKER.
Silver: The Need for More Money.
Senator W. M. STEWART.
The Glories of the New North-West.
Senator J. N. DOLPH.
Internal Copyright Law.
HENRY HOLT.
The Commonwealth of Australia.
Sir CHARLES DILKE.
Pauper Immigration. Hon. WM. MACDONALD.
The Future of the American Republic.
MYLES D. EDDY.

HELP. July. 1d.

- S.I.H.E. and a Poor-Law Reform: Interview with Mr. Albert Pell.
Twelve Hours a Day for 'Busmen. Interview with Mr. Sutherland.
Saturday Evenings for the People.
Recreational Clubs for Young Men and Women.
Boarding Houses and the Training of Young Servants.
"The Children of the Lost." With Portrait of Miss Rye.
The House Association.
LADY ABERDEEN.
The Wheelbarrow Workers.
Helpers' Service.

NATIONAL REVIEW. July. 2s. 6d.

- Five Years of Resolute Government.
The Eton Jubilee. ARTHUR C. BENSON.
After the Galleries: A Studio Talk.
Police Work in Ceylon.
Miss GORDON CLIMMING.
The First Handel Festival.
Hon. R. EDGECOMBE.
To-day in Morocco.
Capt. ROLLESTON.
The Farmer Monk.
N. E. RAYMOND DOWLING.
Mr. Harris and Mrs. Oliphant.
Mrs. A. PHILLIPS.
The Diet of Great Men. A. J. H. CRISP.

NEW REVIEW. July. 9d.

- Two Aspects of the Free Education Bill:
1. By the Very Rev. the DEAN of ST. PAUL'S.
2. By the Hon. E. LYULPH STANLEY.
The "Spiritual Essence in Man."
ELWARD CLODD.
White Slavery in Turkey.
Hon. CHARLES K. TUCKERMAN.
A Model City; or, Reformed London. IV.
Lighting
1. Electricity.
The Right Hon. LORD RAYLEIGH.
2. Gas.
E. VINCENT.
Hyperboreans of To-day. FRANCIS PREVOST.
On the Right of Revolution.
COUNT TOLSTOI.
Guy de Maupassant: a Sketch.
Mlle. BLAZE DE BURY.
Photography of the Heavens.
CAMILLE FLAMMARION.
The Science of the Drama:
1. HENRY A. JONES.
2. SYDNEY GRUNDY.

NINETEENTH CENTURY. July. 2s.

- Gambling and the Law.
Sir JAMES F. STEPHEN, Bart.
The Army as a Public Department.
Gen. Sir GEORGE CHESNEY.
Woodlands. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, M.P.
A Fair Taxation of Ground-Rents.
ROBERT HUNTER.
Pasquale de Paoli: A Study.
WALTER FREWEN LORD.
The Industries of Ancient India.
RAJAH MURLI MANOHAR.
The Wild Women. No. I. As Politicians.
Mrs. LYNN LINTON.
A Labor Inquiry. H. H. CHAMBERLAIN.
1799: A Rustic Retrospect.
Rev. Dr. JESSOPP.
How to Utilise the Naval Volunteers.
H. O. ARNOLD FORSTER.
The Congregationalist Council.
Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.
The Poet of the Khepts. RENNELL RODD.
The "Commonwealth of Australia."
G. H. REID (M.P. of New South Wales).
Sir John Macdonald on Imperial Federation.
S. B. BOUTTON.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

- June. 50 cents.
Our New War Ships. Hon. B. F. TRACY.
Secrecy of the Navy.
Butchery and Avarice Triumphant.
Col. RUSH C. HAWKINS.
Is Avarice Triumphant?
Col. R. G. INGERSOLL.
Compulsory Physical Education.
THE EARL OF MEATH.
The Law and the Lynchers.
GEORGE TICKNOR CURTIS.
A Trip Abroad.
P. T. BARNUM.
Another View of Gettysburg.
Gen. JOHN GIBBON.
A Chat about Newfoundland.
LADY BLAKE.
The A.B.C. of Money. ANDREW CARNEGIE.
Secretary Rusk and the Farmers.
Geo. E. WARING, jun.
Changes in the Billot Law.
CHAS. T. SEXTON.
The Contagion of Leprosy.
Dr. CYRUS EDSON.
Flora and Forests. Dr. FELIX OSWALD.

UNITED SERVICE MAGAZINE. July. 1s.

- General Sherman.—III. Conclusion.
By General Viscount Wolsley, K.P.
(Commanding the Forces in Ireland).
Cavalry on the Battle Field. By Captain F. N. MAUDE, R.R.
Naval Prize in War.—I. By Captain C. E. JOHNSTONE, R.N.
Suggestions for Improving Volunteer Infantry.—III.
The Clerical Establishment of the War Office.
The War Training of the Navy.
(A reply to Captain Fitzgerald, R.N.) By Captain Gerard Noel, R.N.
The Recruiting Question.—IV.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

- Abraham Lincoln. II.
THEODORE STANTON.
The New Darwinism. J. T. CUNNINGHAM.
London: Past and Present. F. R. C. I.
Theological Evolution. W. M. W. CALL.
Domestic Servants in Australia. A Rejoinder.
MARY SANGER EVANS.
Is Imperial Federation a Chimera?
WILLIAM LOBBAN.
Plain Words about Dancing.
JAMES OLIPHANT.
The Jews and the Bible. JULIAN COHEN.

NOUVELLE REVUE.

- June 1s.
The Three Talleyrands.
TH. FANCK BRENTANO.
Round the Peloponnese.
CHARLES DE MOURY.
The Future of the Bench.
ADOLPHE QUILLLOT.
Algeria before the Senate.
CHARLES ROUSSEL.
The Romance of Mont St. Michel.
Mme. STANISLAS MEUNIER.
The Future of the Contemporary Novel.
ANTOINETTE ALBALAT.
An Authentic Tale from the Thousand and One Nights.
HENRI DE NIMAL.
On Duels.
G. SENECHAL.
The University Fêtes at Lausanne.
A. GUEST.
June 15 h.
A Sick Cat. M. PIERRE LOTTI.
Foreign Society of the last Half Century in Paris.
Comte PAUL VASSILI.
The Future of the Bench.
M. ADOLPHE GUILLLOT.
Germs and Dust. (A Dialogue).
M. LEON DAUDET.
General Grunne and Austria in 1889.
M. HENRI WELSCHEBER.
The Romance of Mont St. Michel.
Mme. STANISLAS MEUNIER.
Persian Society. AHMED BEY.
Blind. Mme. JEANNE MAIRET.
The Origin of the Name of Napoleon.
RODOCANACHI.
A New Form of Revolution in Belgium.
M. EDGAR MONTEILL.

REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

- June 1st.
The Reconstruction of France in 1800.
M. TAINÉ.
Modern.
M. H. RABUSSON.
The Tradition of Latin in France.
M. MICHEL BREAL.
A Week in the Island of Bali. M. DUBOIS.
An Eighteenth Century Young Lady.
M. P. GODET.
The Rivalry of Industrial Arts in Europe.
M. E. PLANCHET.
The Exhibitions of 1891.
M. GEORGE LAFENESTRE.
A German Explorer in Africa.
M. G. VALBERT.
The Novel of the Future. M. BRUNETIERE.
June 15th.
Modern. (Last Part.)
M. HENRI RABUSSON.
St. Francis of Assisi. M. ARVEDE BARINE.
Minae. M. MEYERER.
Literary and Historic Curiosities. (The Duchess and the Duke of Newcastle.)
M. EMILE MONTEGUT.
The Idea of Culpability. M. G. TAINÉ.
The Poor in England. M. JULIEN DECAIS.
The Civil War in Chili.

GAZETTE DES BEAUX ARTS.

- The Salons of the Champs Elysées and Champs de Mars. (First article).
M. EDOUARD ROD.
The Sublano Nibide. MARCEL REYMOND.
Lithographical Exhibition.
HENRI BERALDI.
Exhibition of Early Century Art.
M. DE CHAMPEAUX.
Pope Alexander Borghese's Book of Hours.
M. GUSTAVE PATYONSKI.

THE MORE NOTABLE ARTICLES IN THE MAGAZINES.

- Antiquary. July. 1s.
Notes on Recent Explorations in Egypt. (Continued.) Alfred E. Hudd.
Holy Wells: Their Legends and Superstitions. (Continued.) R. C. Hop.
- Argosy. July. 6d.
The Bretons at Home. (Illus.) Charles W. Wood.
- Atlanta. July. 6d.
A Tapestry Gallery in Florence. (Illus.) Helen Zimmern.
Illustrations from Wagner's Operas. I. The Flying Dutchman. Reginald Savage.
- Atlantic Monthly. July. 1s.
Underground Christian Rome. Rodolfo Lanciani.
The Old Rome and the New. W. J. Stillman.
Plantation Life in Arkansas. Octave Thuret.
English Railway Fiction. Agnes Repplier.
The Neutrality of Switzerland. W. D. McCrackan.
Tintoret, the Shakespeare of Painters. William R. Thayer.
- Author. June. 6s.
1. Official Directions for Securing American Copyright.
2. The American International Copyright Act.
3. Reviews and Reviewers.
4. Library Secrets.
5. Lord Monckswell's Bill.
- Bankers' Magazine. July.
Reserves of Banks.
- Blackwood's Magazine. July. 2s. 6d.
Lurence Oliphant.
The Eve of St. John in a Deserted Chalet. A Day's Raid into Northumberland. By Professor Veitch.
Studies in Tactical Progress during the last Twenty-five Years.
A Roadside Naturalist. By a Son of the Marshes.
Telepathy. By Bishop Courtenay, D.D. Peel. By Herbert Cowell.
- Board of Trade Journal. June. 6d.
The Co-operative Congress of 1891.
Cotton Cultivation in Turkestan.
Labour Legislation in Germany.
Railway Enterprise in Turkey.
Textile Industries in Roumania and Serbia.
- Boy's Own Paper. June. 6d.
The Boy's Own Angler. By the First Hen. Sec.
Seaside Birds and their Haunts. (Illus.) W. T. Greene.
Some Toys worked by Electricity. R. A. R. Bennett. (Illus.)
The Professions in the Colonies.
- Cassell's Family Magazine. July. 6d.
About London Cabs. (Illus.) F. M. Holmes.
The Home of the Conqueror. (Illus.) M. Betham-Edwards.
- Cassell's Saturday Journal. July. 6d.
Mr. Henry Arthur Jones at Home. (Illus.)
At the Admiralty. (Illus.)
Sir Edmund F. du Cane at South Kensington. (Illus.)
- Century Magazine. July. 1s. 4d.
Provecal Bull-fights. (Illus.) Joseph Pennell.
Italian Old Masters: Fra Bartolommeo and Albertinelli. (Illus.) W. J. Stillman.
General Miles' Indian Campaigns. (Illus.) Major G. W. Baird.
Greeley's Estimate of Lincoln, an Unpublished Address by Horace Greeley. Across the Plains in the Donner Party (1846). (Illus.) Virginia Redd Murphy.
Paris, the Typical Modern City. Albert Shaw.
- Chambers's Journal. July. 7d.
Small Holdings.
The Westmoreland Statesmen.
- Church Missionary Intelligencer. July. 6d.
The Greatness of God shown in the slow Christianising of the Barth. Rev. Canon D. D. Stewart.
Our Attitude towards the Churches of the Orient. Rev. G. Emsor.
Missionary Thought Suggested at Rome. S. M. Monier-Williams.
- Clergyman's Magazine. July. 6d.
"To My Younger Brethren." VII. Pastor in Parish. Rev. H. C. G. Moule.
Christian Solidarity. Very Rev. G. A. Chadwick.
- College. The. June. 6d.
Mr. Andrew Lang.
- Coming Day. The. July. 3s.
Mr. Gladstone's Specimen "Messianic" Psalms.
- Education. July. 6d.
Forsyth Technical College, with Portrait of Miss Forsyth.
Ethical Aspects of Higher Education. Miss E. E. C. Jones, Gilton.
- English Illustrated Magazine. July.
On the Wane: A Sentimental Correspondence. Mrs. W. K. Clifford.
Cookham and Round About It. Robert Mackenzie.
A July Day on Dartmoor. (Illus.) R. H. McCarthy.
A Thousand Games at Monte Carlo. W. Duppa-Crotch.
Nymegen, an Old Town in Holland. (Illus.) Reginald Blomfield.
- Expositor. July. 1s.
The Resurrection of the Dead. Rev. Prof. W. Milligan.
On Some Fragments of a Pre-Hieronymian Latin Version of the Bible. Fred. C. Conybeare.
- Fireside. July. 6d.
The New Forest from a Char-a-Banc. (Illus.) Eleanor F. Cobby.
The Mothers of Distinguished Men. (Mrs. Garfield.) Edith C. Kenyon.
Arthur M. Kavanagh. (The Irish Patriot.) The Editor.
- Gentleman's Magazine. July. 1s.
The Pleasures of Farming. Rev. M. G. Watkins.
The Folk Tales of Sardinia. E. Sidney Hartland.
A Complete Utopia. Arthur Ransome.
From a Country Parsonage. (Natural History Article.) A Country Parson.
"The Incident." James Hutton.
Life in the North Sea. Alexander Gordon.
Old Items in Old Churches. Sarah Wilson.
- Girl's Own Paper. July. 6d.
Elizabeth Tudor. Sarah Tytler.
How we Managed Our Girls' Guild. By One who Helped.
St. Ol-ball and How to Play It.
- Good Words. July. 6d.
Meran. Margaret Howitt.
Religion and Art. Archdeacon Farrar.
A Musical Jubilee. J. Spencer Curwen.
Psychical Research. Professor W. F. Barrett.
Miss Linskill. John Hutcheon.
Some Illustrations of English Thrift. Rev. Canon Blackley.
- Greater Britain. June. 6d.
A Common Sense View of England's Imperial Destiny. James Stanley Little.
- Great Thoughts. July. 6d.
Interview with Professor Shuttleworth.
A Day's Outing in the Sunny South. The Countess of Meath.
Life and its Varieties. Grant Allen.
- Harper's Magazine. July.
Christianity and Socialism. Rev. J. M. Buckley.
An Imperative Duty. A Novel. Part I. (Illus.) William D. Howells.
Some American Riders. III. (Illus.) Col. Theodore A. Dodge.
Briticisms and Americanisms. Brander Mathews.
The Republic of Paraguay. (Illus.) Theodore Child.
The Warwickshire Avon. III. (Illus.) A. T. Quiller Couch.
Over Wendell Holmes. George William Curtis.
London—Saxon and Norman. (Illus.) Walter Besant.
- Indian Appeal. June. 1d.
The Anti-Opium Crisis.
- Irish Monthly. July. 6d.
Dear Old Mayo's. III. Dr. P. A. Murray.
The Primate's First Confession. Wanted, an Irish Novelist. K. M., and others.
- Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society. June. 3s. 6d.
Methods of Preventing and Checking the Attacks of Insects and Fungi. (Illus.) Charles Whitehead.
Experiences of the Severe Winter of 1890-91. Gilbert Murray.
The Canker of the Larch. (Illus.) J. B. Carruthers.
Sugar-Beet Cultivation in Austria. (Illus.) Ernest Clarke.
- King's Own. July. 6d.
The Lepers of India. Levi Palmer.
Profit Sharing. Rev. J. Temperley Grey.
- Knowledge. July. 6s.
Gnats, Midges, Mosquitoes. E. A. Butler.
On the Plan of the Sidereal System. J. R. Sutton.
The Experimental Method in Geology. Vaughan Cornish.
Astronomy, as Taught by Academy Pictures. A. C. Ranjard.
Birds and Berries. Alex. S. Wilson.
The Potato Fungus. J. Pentland Smith.
- Ladies' Treasury. July. 7d.
Our Search for Apartments in the Jura Mountains.
- Lamp. July. 6d.
Slavery under the Union Jack. C. Doyle.
Life in the Streets—The Street Vocalist. M. S. Warren.
Tommy Atkins' Missis. Mary S. Warren.
Insects and the Sounds they Produce.
Three White Daisies. Poem. Mary Furlong.
The Country of Quentin Durward. Bessie Parkes Bellou.
- Letsure Hour. July. 6d.
The Recovered Aristotle. Adam Rankine.
Statesmen of Europe-Austria. With Portraits.
Two London Prisons. G. Millin.
The Handwriting of our Kings and Queens. With Facsimiles. W. J. Hardy.
The Burdens of Life. Mr. Mayo.
Sea Pearl's in Instance and Percentage. W. J. Gordon.
Field-Marshal von Moltke. (Illus.)
- Lippincott's Magazine. July. 1s.
A Rose of a Hundred Leaves. Complete Novel. Amelia E. Barr.
Physical Culture. Edwin Checkley.
The Future of Cuba. Frank A. Burr.
English and American Newspapers. Alfred Bache.
Some American Chang's. James W. Gerrard.
- Little Folks. July. 6d.
Four on an Island. New Serial. L. T. Meade.

- London Phonographer. June. 31.
Shortband and Typewriting for Women.
Miss Reynolds.
- Longman's Magazine. July. 6d.
On Autographs. III. Miss I. A. Taylor.
A New Port for Mexico. (Vera Cruz.)
Collecting from Nature. P. Anderson
Graham.
- Lucifer. June. 1s. 6d.
Madame Blavatsky. Annie Besant, Chas.
M. Oliver, Laura Cooper, G. R. S. Mead,
Isabel Cooper-Oakley, Constance Wach-meister, Mr. Sinnett, Charles Johnston,
William Q. Judge, W. R. Old, J. D.
Buck, Rai B. K. Laheri, "Saladin."
- Macmillan's Magazine. July. 1s.
Laurence Oliphant. L. J. Jennings, M.P.
The Story of a False Prophet. (Sabbathal.)
Mirabeau.
Chalfont St. Giles. (Milton's Retreat.)
Some Unpublished Letters of Charlotte
Brontë. Mrs. Williams.
- Month. July. 2s.
The Encyclical and the Economists. Rev.
Herbert Lucas.
Mr. Calieron and St. Elizabeth. Rev.
Sydney F. Smith.
Among the Slaves in Africa.
A Contribution on Hypnotism. Rev.
Henry Marchant.
Irish Worthies of the Sixteenth Century.
Father Henry Fitzsimon. Rev. Edmund
Hagan.
- Monthly Chronicle of North Country
Lore and Legend. July. 6d.
Dorothy Wordsworth. M. S. Hardcastle.
Men of Mark 'Twist Tweed and Tyne.
George Grey; Robert Grey, D.D.;
Gilbert and George Grey. Richard Welford.
- Monthly Packet. July. 1s.
Work and Workers. Women's Work
Amongst the Poor. Sophia Lonsdale.
Finger Posts in Faery Land. Christabel
E. Coleridge.
- Murray's Magazine. July. 1s.
Some Thoughts on Modern Poetry. Lewis
Morris.
Personal Recollections of Four Russians (Constantin, Nicholas, Skobelev, Ignatieff). Hon. Charles K. Tuckerman.
A Winter Jaunt to Norway. Mrs. Alec
Tweedie.
Social Bath in the Last Century. Mrs. A.
Phillips.
The Poet of the Australian Bush (Adam Lindsay Gordon), Arthur Patchett
Martin.
- Nature Notes. June. 2d.
On the Increase and Decrease of Certain Birds. O. V. Apelin.
- Newbery House Magazine. July. 1s.
Discent at the May Meetings. Rev. G. S.
Heaney.
The Art of Reading as Applied to the Clergy. Alex. J. D. O'Reay.
S. Gilbert of Sempringham and His Order.
Maurice Hewlett.
Childhood in Art. (Illus.) I.—Boys and Girls from Old Florence. Theodore Child.
- Outing. July.
Rowing as a Recreation for Women.
Chase Mellen.
Boating Life on the Upper Thames.
(Illus.) F. Campbell Moller.
Photographing Foliage. (Illus.) J.
Farmy Paret.
- People's Friend. July. 6d.
Some Nicknacks in Wood and how to make them.
Norway in Spring. III.
- Phrenological Magazine. July. 6d.
Mr. W. S. Caine. With Portrait. L. N.
Powler.
Faces.
- Practical Teacher. July. 6d.
Common-sense Lessons in Everyday
Housework. Mrs. E. A. Sharman.
- Quiver. July. 6d.
A Sunday in Norway. (Illus.) A. E.
Bonner.
Through the Closed Gates. Laura Bridgman. (Illus.)
- Scribner's Magazine. July. 1s.
Speed in Ocean Steamers. (Illus.) A.
B. Seaton.
Starting a Parliament in Japan. (Illus.)
John H. Wigmore.
Izard Hunting in the Spanish Pyrenees.
(Illus.) Paul Van Dyke.
Outlawry on the Mexican Border. James
B. Pilcher.
An Old Danish Town—Ribe. (Illus.) Jacob
A. Riis.
The Haunts of the Black Sea-Bass.
(Illus.) Charles Frederick Holder.
Trainings a Tropic Torrent: An Engineer's
Glimpse of Hayti. Foster Crowell.
Lander Once More. W. B. Shubrick
Clymer.
- Strand Magazine. June. 6d.
How the Blind are Educated. (Illus.)
Edward Salmon.
Portraits of Celebrities.
Humours of the Post Office. II. With Facsimiles.
Celebrated Beauties. (Illus.)
A Night in an Opium Den. (Illus.) By the Author of "A Dead Man's Diary."
The State of the Law Courts. III. The Bar. (Illus.)
The Home for Lost Dogs. (Illus.)
- Sun Magazine. July. 6d.
Advancement of the Modern Jews in Europe. Richard O. A. Dawson.
"Makers of Music"—Berlioz. R. Farquharsen Sharp.
Thackeray: The Man and the Novelist.
G. Barnett Smith.
The Public Records of Great Britain.
Andrew T. Sibbald.
Three Representative Heroines in Fiction.
G. Mount.
- Sunday at Home. July. 6d.
The Heavenly Foot Society. (Anti-foot Binding Society in China.) Rev. John Macgowan, Amoy.
Black America. Dr. Aubrey.
Religious Life and Thought in France. V.
—Protestant Progress. VI.—Protestantism in Relation to the Nation.
John A'Lasco: The Reformer of Poland.
The Devotional Poems of John Greenleaf
Whittier. Lily Watson.
- Sunday Magazine. July. 6d.
Some Impressions of Florence. Mrs.
Charles Garnett.
Opportunities in Life. By the late Archbishop of York.
Reminiscences of Dr. Magee. Rev. Benjamin Waugh.
The Shadwell Hospital for Children. Hon.
Mrs. James Stuart Wortley.
- Temple Bar. July. 1s.
Reminiscences of Sir Richard Burton.
R.S.V.P. Poem.
Wayfaring by the Upper Dordogne.
Iftar in a Harem.
- Theatre. July.
Some Stage Frights. A. J. Daniels.
Photographs: Miss Marion Terry and
Mr. John Mason in "The Idler."
The Chevalier Scovel.
- Tinsley's Magazine. July. 6d.
Sculpture in the Royal Academy. By Stylus.
The Meteorological Office in London: Is it worth £15,000 a-year? Hugh Clements.
Lorenzo Niles Fowler (Phrenologist).
- United Service. July. 1s.
General Sherman. (Conclusion.) Gen.
Viscount Wolseley.
Cavalry on the Battle Field. Captain F.
N. Maude.
Naval Prize in War. I. Captain C. E.
Johnstone, R.N.
Suggestions for Improving Volunteer Infantry. III.
The Clerical Establishment of the War Office.
The War Training of the Navy. Captain
Gerard Noel.
The Recruiting Question.
- University Correspondent. June. 4d.
Plato Posthumous. (Translation of a hitherto unknown Plato MS.)
- Work. July. 6d.
Photographic Tents.
Wire-Work in all its Branches.
A Porch for a Cottage or Small Villa.
Bar-rings and other Ornaments for the Bar.
How to make a Thermometer.
- Young Man. July. 3d.
Dr. Phillips Brooks. (With Portrait.)
Archdeacon Farrar, D.D.

AMERICAN.

- Andover Review. June. 3s. cents.
The Present Religious Crisis in Japan.
Mr. Nobuta Kishimoto.
"The Gospel of Wealth." Professor Tucker.
The Outline of an Elective Course of Study. III. Pauperism.
- Arena. June. 50 cents.
The New Columbus. Julian Hawthorne.
The Unknown. I. Camille Flammarion.
The Chivalry of the Press. Julius Chambers.
Society's Exiles. B. O. Flower.
Evolution and Christianity. Prof. Jas. T.
Bixby.
The Irrigation Problem in the North-
West. James Reelf, jun.
Revolutionary Measures and Neglected
Crimes. Prof. Joseph Rodas Buchanan.
Spencer's Doctrine of Inconceivability.
Rev. T. Ernest Allen.
The Better Part. Story. William Allen
Dromgoole.
The Helms of the Ridge. Story. No-
Name Paper.
The Brook. Poem. P. H. S.
Optimism, Real and False. The Editor.
The Pessimistic Cast of Modern Thought.
The Editor.
- Chautauquan. July.
A Symposium—Where Should a College be Located?
The Disagreeable Truth about Politics.
George Hepworth.
Horace Greeley's Boyhood. Theodore Temple.
English-Speaking Caricaturists. C. M.
Fairbanks.

Modern Methods of Treating Inebriety. H. R. Chamberlain.
The Swans at Raglan. Poetry. Clinton Scollard.
The Woman's World of London. Elizabeth R. bins Pennell.
Elizabeth Thompson, the Philanthropist. Frances E. Willard.

Commonwealth. June. 35 cents.
Is Revolution Imminent? J. W. Deane.
Land and Money. Charles Hayden.
Thomas Jefferson. J. R. Alphin.
A Second Phase of the Tariff. Davis H. Waite.

Cosmopolitan. July. 25 cents.
London Charities. Elizabeth Bland.
A Modern Crusade. (The W. C. T. U.) (Illus.) C. O. Waddle.
Trout Fishing in the Laurentides. (Illus.) Kit Clarke.
The Diamond Fields of South Africa. (Illus.) E. J. Lawler.
Two Modern Knights Errant—Cushing and Custer. (Illus.) James Grant Wilson.
Submarine Boats for Coast Defence. (Illus.) W. S. Hughes.
The Art of Embroidery. (Illus.) Alida G. Radcliffe.
Ostrich Farming in California. (Illus.) Emma G. Paul.
Country Life in Honduras. (Illus.) Gertrude G. de Aguirre.

Educational Review. June. 35 cents.
Applications of Psychology in Education. Mary Putnam Jacobi.
The Present Condition of the German Universities.
The American High Schools. I. Ray Greene Huling.
The Education of the Will. J. Clark Murray.

Home-Maker. June. 20 cents.
Indian Girls in India Schools (Illus.) Elaine Goodale.
The Little Wives of India. (Illus.) Emma Brainerd Ryder.
A Woman Architect. (Illus.)
Bathing for Women. (Illus.) Ellen Legarde.

Homiletic Review. June. 30 cents.
Caron Liddon. II. Prof. William C. Wilkinson.
Cynewulf's Trilogy of Christian Song. Prof. T. W. Hunt.
Women in the Church—A Symposium.

Kindergarten. June. 20 cents.
The Relation of the Kindergarten to the Primary School. Emma A. Beebe.
Gift Play—II. First Gift. Annie Moore.

Magazine of American History. June.
Portrait of Columbus. (From a Rare Painting.) Frontispiece.
Glimpses of the Railroad in History. (Illus.) Mrs. Martha Lamb.
Slave Insurrection in Virginia, 1831. Known as "Old Nat's War." Professor Stephen B. Weeks.
Distinguished Germans in American Affairs. Dr. Oscar Braun.
Washington a Promoter of Inventions. Dr. Joseph M. Toner.

New England Magazine. June. 25 cents.
Wagner and Tannhäuser in Paris, 1861. Edward H. House.
Benjamin Penhallow Shillaber. ("Mrs. Partington.") Elizabeth Akers Allen.
Early Days of the First Telegraph Line. Stephen Vail.
The Message of Puritanism for This Time. Edwin D. Mead.
An Anti-Slavery Hero. (Stanton.) Sidney H. Morse.
The City of Lynn. Edwin A. Start.

Our Day. June. 25 cents.
Anti-American Canadian Catholic Conventions. President C. E. U. Amaron.
Unmixed Self-Rule for Cities. Senator Fassett.
American Municipal Reform. President C. C. Bonney.
Are Americans Becoming Ambitious? London S. ectator.
Fruitful Faith as Held by Our Lord and Saviour.

Phrenological Magazine. June. 15 cents.
William Black, the Novelist.
Wilson's Photographic Magazine. June. 30 cents.
Heads and Faces.
Photographic Decoration of Glass. Abbé Alessandro Subacchi.

Writer. June. 10 cents.
Michigan Woman's Press Association. Hattie C. Sleeper.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL.

Australian Critic. May. 6d.
Two New Australian Poets—G. Essex Evans and Mr. Heney.
Australian Independent. May. 6d.
Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. (Illus.) Fred. Hastings.

Australasian Pastoralists' Review. May.
The New Utopia. Satire. Jerome K. Jerome.

Parthenon. April. 6d.
Realism and Literature.
Southern Cross. May. 3d.

QUARTERLIES.

Asclepiad. May. 2s. 6d.
On Peroxide of Hydrogen.
National Main Drainage.
Opuscula Practica.
William Hewson, F.R.S. With Portrait.
Influenza as an Organic Nervous Process.

Asiatic Quarterly Review.
The Progress of Persia under the Present Shah. "A Persian Minister."
Our Relations with Manipur. "Authenticity."
Recruiting the Anglo-Indian Army.
Surgeon-General Sir W. Moore.
A Colonial Policy for India. R. A. Stern-dale.
British Interests and European Action. M. L. Silva White.
Natives Africans, and the Degeneracy of Europeans in Africa. Dr. Max Nordau.
France in her Colonies. Dutilleul de la Tuque.
The Truth about Morocco. The Editor of the Morocco Times.
Tasmania and Her Prospects. Sir E. N. C. Braddon.
Notes on the late Sir Walter Elliot. R. Sewell.
The Pelasgi and their Modern Descendants. Wassa Pasha and the late Sir Patrick Colquhoun.
The Dignity of Labour in the Talmud. Rev. Rabbi H. Gollancz.

London Quarterly Review. July. 4s.
The Oxford Movement.
Unearned Increment.
Jenny Lind.
Dr. Luthardt's Recollections.
The Field Naturalist. The Rev. J. G. Wood.
The Present State of Old Testament Study.
Port Royal.
John Murray.

Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review. July. 2s.

Charles Bradlaugh. Thomas Burt, M.P.
"The Light of the World." H. S. Foster.
Reverence: Its Nature and Culture. W. Johnson, F.L.S.
The Province and Value of Doubt. W. Ralstrick.
Thomas Binney. Albert A. Birchenough.
Browning's Attitude towards Christianity. John Forster.
Modern Hinduism. II. J. Ashworth.
Some Elements of Pulpit Power. Benjamin D. Thomas.
St. John's Gospel in Relation to the Synoptic Gospels. M. Johnson.
The Joyancy of Jesus. Thomas Parsons.
The Natural History of the English Bible.

POETRY.

Argosy. Summer Number.
The Defence of Rorke's Drift. Emma Rhodes.

Atalanta. July.
The Wind that kissed the Roses. Helen M. Burnside.
The Brook. From the German of Goethe. C. R. Haines.

Atlantic Monthly. July.
When with thy life thou didst encompass mine. Philip Bourke Marston.

Century. July.
Restraint. M. Crosby.
Chatterton in Holborn. Ernest Rhys.
The Drummer. H. A. Blood.

Chautauquan. July.
The Swans at Raglan. C. Scollard.
Balled of Swain the Sea King. K. L. Bates.

English Illustrated. July.
The Old Rocking Horse. Violet Vane.

Fortnightly. July.
Love's Lady. P. B. Marston.
Gentleman's Magazine. July.

A Pauper's Burial. G. Holmes.
Girl's Own Paper. July.

Song of the Workers.
Home-Maker. June.
In a Rose Jar. Virginia W. Clouli.
A Tale of a Rose. Agnes L. Mitchell.
Love is Recompense. Carlotta Perry.

Lippincott. July.
Rosebud and Rose. H. Collins.
Overthrown. C. M. Packard.

Longman. July.
A Kiss. W. H. Pollock.

Monthly Packet. July.
Lines Written by Dorothy Wordsworth.

Murray. July.
Francesca da Rimini. Maxwell Gray.

New England Magazine. June.
Blossom Time. W. Larrimore.
At Andersonville. F. L. Stanton.
When Dreams are best. Dora R. Goodale.
Priscilla. Hetta L. H. Ward.
Harvard Memorial Poems.

Temple Bar. July.
R. S. V. P.
Nightingales.
To Lebia.

Tinsley's Magazine. July. 6d.
In July. Ellen T. Fowler.
Euthanasia. J. J. Beresford.
She Won the Game. H. S. England.
Morning. Chas. Hampton.
A Wood Sista. J. O. Rankin.

INDEX.

Abbreviations of Magazine Titles used in this Index.

- |  |  |  |  |
|--|--|--|--|
| All W. All the World  | Econ. R. Economic Review                            | L. T. Ladies' Treasury                                  | Phren. M. Phrenological Magazine                          |
| A.C.Q. American Catholic Quarterly Review                               | E.R. Edinburgh Review                               | Lamp Lamp   | Pion Pioneer  |
| A.R. Andover Review   | Ed. Education                                       | Law M. Law Magazine & Review                            | P.L. Poet Lore  |
| A.A. Anglo-Austria  | Ed. R. Educational Review                           | Law Q. Law Quarterly Review                             | P. Portfolio  |
| A.A.P.S. Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science | E.H. English Historical Review                      | L.H. Leisure Hour                                       | P.R.R. Presbyterian and Reformed Review                   |
| Ant. Antiquary  | E.I. English Illustrated Magazine                   | L.W. Life and Work                                      | P.M.M. Primitive Methodist Magazine                       |
| A. Arena  | Esq. Esquiline                                      | Lipp. Lippincott's Monthly                              | P.M.Q. Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review               |
| Arg. Argosy   | Ex. Expositor                                       | L.F. Little Folks                                       | P.R.G.S. Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society    |
| Art J. Art Journal  | Fl. Fireside  | L. Q. London Quarterly Review                           | Psy. R. Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research |
| As. Asclepiad   | F.R. Fortnightly Review                             | Long. Longman's Magazine                                | Q J.Econ. Quarterly Journal of Economics                  |
| A.Q. Asiatic Quarterly  | F. Forum  | Luc. Lucifer  | Q J.Geol.S. Quarterly Journal of the Geological Society   |
| Ata. Atlanta  | G.M. Gentleman's Magazine                           | Lud. M. Ludgate Monthly                                 | Q.R. Quarterly Review                                     |
| A.M. Atlantic Monthly   | G.O.P. Girl's Own Paper                             | Ly. Lyceum  | Q. Quiver   |
| Au. Author  | Gold. G. Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine        | Mac. Macmillan's Magazine                               | Scots Scots Magazine                                      |
| Bank. Bankers' Magazine   | G.W. Good Words                                     | M.A.H. Magazine of American History                     | Scot. R. Scottish Review                                  |
| Black. Blackwood's Magazine   | G.B. Great Britain                                  | Man. Art. Magazine of Art                               | Scrib. Scribner's Magazine                                |
| B.T.J. Board of Trade Journal   | G.T. Great Thoughts                                 | M. Art. M. Q. Manchester Quarterly                      | Shake. Shakespeariana                                     |
| Bk-wm. Bookworm   | Harp. Harper's Magazine                             | M.E. Merry England                                      | State. Statesman  |
| B.O.P. Boy's Own Paper  | Help. Help  | M.N.C. Methodist New Connexion Magazine                 | Str. Strand   |
| Cal. R. Calcutta Review   | High M. Highland Monthly                            | Mind. Mind  | S.D. Subjects of the Day                                  |
| Cape I. M. Cape Illustrated Magazine                                    | H.C. Home Chimes                                    | Mis. R. Missionary Review of the World                  | S. Sun  |
| C.F.M. Cassell's Family Magazine  | H.F. Home Friend                                    | Mon. Monist   | Sun. H. Sunday at Home                                    |
| C.S.J. Cassell's Saturday Journal                                       | H.M. Homemaker                                      | M. Month  | Sun. M. Sunday Magazine                                   |
| C.W. Catholic World   | H.R. Homiletic Review                               | M.C. Monthly Chronicle of North Country Lore and Legend | Sun. R. Sunday Review                                     |
| C.M. Century Magazine   | H. Housewife  | M. P. Monthly Packet                                    | S.T. Sword and Trowel                                     |
| C.J. Chambers's Journal   | Hy. Hygiene   | Mur. Murray's Magazine                                  | Syd. Q. Sydney Quarterly                                  |
| Chaut. Chautauquan  | Ig. Igitasil  | Nat. R. Nature Review                                   | T.B. Temple Bar   |
| Chman. Churchman  | In. M. Indian Magazine and Review                   | N.N. Nature Notes                                       | Th. Theatre   |
| Ch. Mis. I. Church Missionary Intelligence and Record                   | I.J.E. International Journal of Ethics              | N.H. Newbery House Magazine                             | Theol. M. Theological Monthly                             |
| Ch. M. Church Monthly   | Ir. E.R. Irish Ecclesiastical Record                | N.E.M. New England Magazine                             | T. Time   |
| Ch. Q. Church Quarterly Review  | Ir. M. Irish Monthly                                | New R. New Review                                       | Tim. Timelri  |
| Ch. R. Church Review  | Jew. Q. Jewish Quarterly                            | N.C. Nineteenth Century                                 | Tin. Tinsley's Magazine                                   |
| Cl. R. Classical Review   | J. Ed. Journal of Education                         | N.A.R. North American Review                            | U.S.M. United Service Magazine                            |
| Clgy. Clergyman's Magazine  | J. Micro. Journal of Microscopy and Natural Science | O.D. Our Day  | U South University of the South                           |
| Com. Commonwealth   | J.R.A.S. Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society  | O. Outing   | W.R. Westminster Review                                   |
| C.D. Coming Day   | J.R.C.I. Journal of the Royal Colonial Institute    | Pac. Q. Pacific Quarterly                               | W. Photo. Wilson's Photographic Magazine                  |
| Cong. R. Congressional Review   | J.R.S.S. Journal of the Royal Statistical Society   | P.E.F. Palestine Exploration Fund                       | Y.E. Young England  |
| C.R. Contemporary Review  | Jur. R. Juridical Review                            | P.R. Parents' Review                                    | Y.M. Young Man  |
| C. Cornhill   | Kg. Kindergarten                                    | Path. Path  |  |
| Cos. Cosmopolitan   | K.O. King's Own                                     | P.F. People's Friend                                    |  |
| Crit. R. Critical Review  | K. Knowledge  | Photo. Q. Photographic Quarterly                        |  |
| Down. R. Downside Review  | Lad. Ladder   | Photo. R. Photographic Report                           |  |
| D.R. Dublin Review  |  | Phren. J. Phrenological Journal                         |  |
| Econ. J. Economic Journal   |  |  |  |
- Africa: Rab's, Africana, A Q, July
 Stray Thoughts on South Africa, F R, July
 With King Gungunhana, by D. Doyle, F R, July
 The Diamond Fields of South Africa, E. J. Lawler on, Cos, July
 Among the Slaves in Africa, M. July
 A Lasco, John, Sun, H, July
 Albani, Mme., Portraits of, Str. June
 American Changes, J. W. Gerard on, Lipp, July
 Aristides, The "Apology" of, Prof. G. T. Stokes on, C R, July
 Aristotle Papyrus, A. Rankine on, L H, July
 Arkansas Plantation Life, Octave Thant on, A M, July Armies:
 Studies in Tactical Progress during the last Twenty-five Years, Black, July
 The Army as a Public Department, by Gen. Sir G. Chesney, N C, July
 Cavalry on the Battle-field, U S M, July
Astronomy:
 A Lunar Landscape, E. S. Holden on, C M, July
 Astronomy, as taught by Academy Pictures, K, July Photographs of the Heavens, C. Flammarion on, New R, July
- Australia: Sir Henry Parkes on the Union of the Australias, C R, July
 The Credit of Australia, by Sir George Baden Powell, F R, July
 The Commonwealth of Australia: G. H. Reid on, N C, July; Sir C. Dilke on, F, June
 Austrian Statesmen, L H, July
 Autographs: Miss J. A. Taylor on, Long, July
 Avarice: Is it triumphant? by Colonel E. G. Ingersoll, N A R, June
 Baksheesh: A. Gaze on, Mac, July
 Barnum, P. T., on his Last Visit to Europe (A Trip Abroad), N A R, June
 Berlioz, R. F. Sharp on, S, July
 Binney, Thos, P M Q, July
 Birds: The Last English Home of the Bearded Tit, by F. D. Pigott, C R, July
 On the Increase and Decrease of Certain Birds, N N, June
 Black, William, Phren J, June
 Blackley, Canon, on English Thrift, G W, July
 Blavatsky, Mme., Mrs. A. Besant and others on, Luc, June
 Blind, The, How they are Educated, by E. Salmon, Str, June Boating:
 Boating Life on the Upper Thames, O, July
 Boating for Women, H M, June; O, July
- Bradlaugh, Chas. S.
 Thomas Hurt on, P M Q, July
 Bretons at Home, C. W. Wood on, Arg, July
 Briticisms and Americanisms, B. Matthews on, Harp, July
 Brontë, Charlotte, Unpublished Letters of, Mrs. Williams on, Mac, July Browning, Robert, Andrew Lang on, C R, July
 Browning and Christianity, John Forster on, P M Q, July
 Brutality and Avarice Triumphant, by Gen. R. C. Hawkins, N A R, June
 Bull-fights in Provençal, Jos Pennell on, C M, July
 Burton, Sir Richard, T B, July
- Cabs of London, C F M, July
 Calne, W. S., Phren, M, July
 Calderon, Mr., and St. Elizabeth, M, July
 California: Arrival of Overland Trains in '49, by A. C. Ferris, C M, July Card-sharping in Paris, E. Delilleon, F R, July Catholic Church: Anti-Canadian Catholic Conventions, O D, June
 Ceylon:
 Police Work, Miss Gordon Cumming on, Nat R, July
 Chalfont St. Giles, Milton's Retreat, Mac, July

Charities of London, Elizabeth Bialand on, Cos. July

Chill: E. Manby on, F. R. July

The Revolution, C. R. July

Christianity:

Evolution and Christianity, by J. T. Bixby, A. June

Christianity and Socialism, by Rev. J. M. Buckley, Harp. July

Christianity, a Religion of Hope, by Dr. P. S. Moxon, A. R. June

Clarence, Duke of, Portraits of, Str. June

Colonies:

Imperial Federation, Sir John Macdonald on, by S. B. Boulton, N. C. July

England's Imperial Destiny, by J. Stanley Little, G. B. June

The Professions in the Colonies, B. O. P. July

Columbus, New, by Julian Hawthorne, A. June

Condition of the People, see also under Society's Exiles, by B. O. Flower, A. June

Congregationalist Council, Rev. J. Guinness Rogers on, N. C. July

Cookham, R. Mackenzie on, E. I. July

Co-operative Congress of 1891, B. T. J. June

Copyright: The American Copyright Act, Au. June; F. June

Cuba, F. A. Barr on, Lipp. July

Cushing, W. B., Modern Knight Errant, Cos. July

Custer, G. A., Modern Knight Errant, Cos. July

Cycling, R. J. McCreedy on, F. R. July

Cynwulf's Trilogy of Christian Song, Prof. J. T. W. Hunt on, Hom R. June

Dancing, Plain Words on, W. R. July

Dartmoor, R. H. M. Carthy on, E. I. J. July

Darwinism, New, W. R. July

Dissent at the May Meetings, Rev. G. S. Reaney on, N. H. July

Dogs: Home for Lost Dogs, Str. June

Drogon, Upper, T. B. July

Dub, W. Raistrick on, P. M. Q. July

Drama, Science of, H. A. Jones and S. Grundy on, New R. July

Da Cane, Sir E. F., C. S. J. July

Education, see also under Unive sites:

Applications of Psychology in Education, by Mary P. Jacobi, Ed R. June

The American High School, by R. G. Huloag, Ed R. June

The Education of the Will, J. Clark Murray on, Ed R. June

Free Education: Dean Gregory on, New R. July; Hon. Lyulph Stanley on, C. R. July

New R. July

Plans for Continuation Schools, by S. Smith, C. R. July

Where should a College be Located? Symposium on, Chaut. July

Egypt: Recent Exploration, Ant. July

Embroidery, A. G. Rediffe on, Cos. July

Encyclical on Labour, Rev. H. Lucas on, M. July

Eton Jubilee, A. C. Benson on, Nat R. July

Evolution and Christianity, by J. T. Bixby, A. June

Farmer Mook, N. E. R. Dowling on, Nat R. July

Farmington, Pleasures of, by R. V. M. G. Watkins, G. M. July

Fiction:

Three Representative Heroines of Fiction, S. July

English Railway Fiction, Agnes Popplier on, A. M. July

Recent French Novels, Black. July

Finance, see also contents of Bankers' Magazine

Silver and the Need for more Money, F. June

The ABC of Money, by Andrew Carnegie, N. A. R. June

Finger-prints in Faery Land, by C. R. Coleridge, M. P. July

Flammarion, Camille, on the Unknown, A. June

Florence: Mrs. Charles Garnett on, Sun M. July

Forayth Technical College, Ed. July

Fowler, L. N., Tin. July

France: Religious Life and Thought, Sun H. July

France in her Colonies, A. Q. July

French, Bishop, Ch. Mis I, July

Gambling and the Law, Sir J. F. Stephen on, N. C. July

Germans in American Affairs, Dr. O. Braun on, M. A. H. June

Gettysburg, John Gibbon on, N. A. R. June

Gilbert, S., of Sempringham, and his Order, M. Hewlett on, N. H. July

Gordon, Adam Lindsay, the Poet of the Australian Bush, A. P. Martin on, Mur. July

Great Men, Diet of, A. J. H. Crespi on, Nat R. July

Greeley, Horace, Boyhood of, T. Temple on, Chaut. July

Ground Rents, Fair Taxation of, R. Hunter on, N. C. July

Gungunhama, King, D. Doyle on, F. R. July

Gymnastics:

Compulsory Physical Education, Earl of Meath on, N. A. R. June

Handel Festival, First, Hon. R. Edgecumbe on, Nat R. July

Handwritings of our Kings and Queens, W. J. Hardy on, L. H. July

Heavenly Foot Society, Sun H. July

Hertzka, Dr., and a Competitive Utopia, by A. Ransom, G. M. July

Hewson, William, A. S. May

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, G. W. Curtis on, Harp. July

Holy Wells, Ant. July

Honduras Country Life, Cos. July

Hyperboreans of To-day, F. Prevost on, New R. July

Iftar in a Harem, T. B. July

India: Primitive Expeditions on the Border, E. E. Oliver on, F. R. July

The Little Wives of India, by Dr. Emma B. Ryder, H. M. June

The Industries of Ancient India, N. C. July

A Colonial Policy for India, A. Q. July

Ingersoll, Colonel R. G., on Is Avarice Triumphant? N. A. R. June

International Arbitration, 93

Irrigation Problem of the North-West (America), by J. Realf, Jun., A. June

Izard-hunting in the Spanish Pyrenees, P. van Dyke on, Scrib., July

Japan:

The Present Religious Crisis, A. R. June

Starting a Parliament, J. H. Wigmore on, Scrib., July

Jews:

Advancement of the Modern Jews in Europe, R. O. A. Dawson on, S. July

The Jews in the Bible, W. R. J. Jones, Henry Arthur, C. S. J. July

Journalism:

The Chivalry of the Press, by J. Chambers, A. June

English and American Newspapers, A. Balch on, Lipp. July

Kipling, Rudyard, "The Finest Story in the World," C. R. July

Labour: Profit-sharing, K. O. July

A Labour Inquiry, H. H. Champion on, N. C. July

The Encyclical, M. July

Law and the Lawyers:

The Bar, Str. June

Lepers of India, K. O. July

Liddon, Canon:

Professor W. C. Wilkinson on, Hom R. June

Lincoln, Abraham, W. R. July

Horace Greeley on, C. M. July

Linskill, Miss, John Hutton on, G. W. July

London:

The Lighting of London, Lord Rayleigh and E. Vincen on, New R. July

London—Past and Present, W. R. July

London—Saxon and Norman, W. Besant on, Harp. July

Lynchers in America, The Law and, by G. T. Curtis, N. A. R. June

Lynn City, E. A. Sart on, N. E. M. June

Macdonald, Sir John, J. G. C. Palmer on, F. R. July

On Imperial Federation, by S. B. Boulton, N. C. July

Magee, Archbishop, Rev. B. Waugh on, Sun M. July

Manipur, A. Q. July

Marriage and the Marriage Laws

Child Marriages, see under India

Maupasant, Guy de, Mdle. B'aze de Bury on, New R. July

Meran, M. Howitt on, G. W. July

Metological Office, London, H. Clements on, Tin. July

Mexico:

Outlawry on the Border, J. E. Pitcher on, Scrib. July

Miles, Gen. and his Indian Campaigns, by Major G. W. Baird, C. M. July

Mirabeau, Mac. July

Missions:

The Greatness of God in the Slow Christianizing of the Earth, by Canon Stewart, Ch. Mis I, July

Moltke, Count von, L. H. July

Monte Carlo Games, E. I. July

Morocco, A. Q. July

Captain Rolleston on, Nat. R. July

Musac:

The First Handel Festival, by Hon. R. Edgecumbe, Nat. R. July

Jubiles of the Tonic Sol-fa System, by J. Spencer Curwen, C. R. July; G. W. July

Natural History: Collecting from Nature, by P. A. Graham, Long. July

Navies, British and Foreign:

New War Ships for the American Navy, B. F. Tracy on, N. A. R. June

The Admiralty, C. S. J. July

Submarine Boats for Coast Defence, by W. S. Hughes, Cos. July

Naval Prize in War, U. S. M. July

Newfoundland, Lady Blake on, N. A. R. June

Newman, Cardinal:

Philaethes, by W. Ward, C. R. July

North Sea Life, Alex. Gordon on, G. M. July

Northumberland: A Day's Raid into Northumberland, by Prof. Veitch, Black. July

Norway: A Winter Jaunt to Norway, by Mrs. A. Tweede, Mur. July

A Sunday in Norway, Q. June

Nymegen: R. Blomfield on, E. I. July

Oliphant, Laurence, Black. July

L. J. Jennings on, Mac. July

M. Harris and Mrs. Oliphant, by Mrs. A. Phillip, Nat. R. July

Opium: A Night in an Opium Den, Str. June

Ostrich-farming in California, E. G. Paul on, Cos. July

Paoli, Pa quale de, W. F. Lord on, N. C. July

Paraguay, T. Child on, Harp. July

Paris: The Typical Modern City, by Albert Shaw, C. M. July

Parker, Minerva, Architect, H. M. June

Parke, Sir Henry, on the Union of the Australias, C. R. July

Parliamentary:

Five Years of Resolute Government, Nat. R. July

Pauper Immigration, Sir H. Jeyes on, F. R. July

Pauperism and the Poor Law: Self-Help and Poor Law Reform, A. Pell on, Help. July

Peel, Sir Robert, Black. July

Peroxide of Hydrogen, As. May

Persia: Progress under the Present Shah, A. Q. July

Philathes (Cardinal Newman), by W. Ward, C. R. July

Photographing Foliage, O. July

Physical Culture: E. Checkley on, Lipp. July

Compulsory Physical Education, Earl of Meath on, N. A. R. June; a Rational System of Physical Training, F. June

Poetry: Some Thoughts on Modern Poetry, by Lewis Morris, Mur. July

Population: Census of 1890 in America, F. June

Portraits of Celebrities, Str. June

Post Office, Humours of, Str. June

Press, see under Journalism

Prisons:

Two London Prisons, by G. Millia, L. H. July

Profit Sharing, K. O. July

Psychical Research, Prof. W. F. Barrett on, G. W. July

Public Records of Great Britain, S. Ju'y

Punch and his Artists, by M. H. Spielmann, C. R. July

Purit-nism Mess-ge of, for this Time, by E. D. Mead, N. E. M. June

Race Problems of America:

Indian Girls in Indian Schools, by Elaine Goodale, H. M. June

Race Problems of America—continued.

Black America, by Dr. Aubrey, Sun H, July
A Southern Study, by Lillie B. C. Wyman,
N E M, June

Railways:

Glimpses of the Railroad in History, by Mrs.
M. J. Lamb, M A H, June

Reading, Art of, as applied to the Clergy, by
A. J. D. D'Orsey, N H, July

Reverence, W. Johnson on, P M Q, July

Revolution, Right of. Count Tolstoi on, New R,
July

Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crim. s.,
by Prof. J. R. Buchanan, A, June

Ribe, Denmark, Scrib, July

Rome:

Underground Christian Rome, by R. Lanciani,
A M, July

The Old Home and the New, by W. J. Stillman, A M, July

Rowing for Women, O, July

Russia: Personal Recollections of Four Russians, by Hon. C. K. Tuckerman, Mur, July

Sabbath, False Prophet, Mac, July

Sanitation:

National Main Drainage, As, May

City Sanitation and Health Officials, Com,
June

Sardinia, Folk Tales of, E. S. Hartland on,
G M, July

Sea Perils, W. J. Gordon on, L H, July

Servants in Australia, W R, July

Shadwell Hospital for Children, Hon. Mrs.
J. S. Wortley on, Sun M, July

Shaw, Albert, on Paris, C M, July

Sherman, Gen., Lord Walseley on, U S M, July

Shillaber, B. P., Eliz. A. Allan on, N E M,
June

Shipping:

Speed in Ocean Steamers, by A. E. Seaton, Scrib, July

Shuttleworth, Prof., G F, July

Slavery:

G. L. Stearns, Anti-Slavery Hero, S. H.
Morse on, N E M, June

Slave Insurrection in Virginia, 1831, Prof.
S. B. Weeks on, M A H, June

Small Holdings, C J, July

Society's Exiles, B. O. Flower on, A, June

Spencer, Herbert, and his Doctrine of Incon-ceivability, by Rev. T. E. Allen, A, June

Spiritual Essence in Man, E. W. Clodd on, New R, July

Statesman Wanted, by Prof. C. Ransome, C R,
July

Stearns, Geo. L., Anti-Slavery Hero, S. H.
Morse on, N E M, June

Stool Ball and How to Play it, G O P, July

Switzerland:

The Neutrality of Switzerland, by W. D.
McCracken, A M, July

Talleyrand and Posterity, by C. R. Corson, Lipp,
July

Tasmania, A Q, July

Telegraph:

Early Days of the First Telegraph Line, by
S. Vall, N E M, June

Telegraphy, by Bishop R. Courtenay, Black,
July

Temperance: A Modern Crusade, C. C. Waddle on, Cos, July

Thackeray, W. M., G. Barnett Smith on, S,
July

Theological Evolution: W. M. W. Call on, W R,
July

Thompson, Elizabeth, Philanthropist, Chaut,
July

Thrift in England, Canon Blackley on, G W,
July

Tintoret, W. R. Thayer on, A M, July

Tolstoi, Count, on the Right of Revolution,
New R, July

Toole, J. L., Portraits of, Str, June

Trout-fishing in the Laurentides, Cos, July

Tudor, Elizabeth, Sarah Tytler on, G O P, July

Turkey:

White Slavery in Turkey, Hon. C. K. Tuckerman on, New R, July

Unconscious, Philosophy of, by Rev. F. H. Johnson, A R, June

United States:

Race Problems, see under Race

United States—continued.

Brutality and Avarice Triumphant, by Geo.
R. C. Hawkins, N A R, June

Irrigation Problem of the North-West, L. J.
Realf, jun., A, June

Some American Changes, J. W. Gerard on,
Lipp, July

The Law and the Lynchers, by G. T. Curtis,
N A R, June

Glories of the New North-West, F, June

Universities:

The Present Condition of the German Universities, M. M. Curtis on, Ed R, June

Vera Cruz, a New Port for Mexico, H. Hutchinson on, Long, July

Volunteer Militia of Massachusetts, O, July

Volunteers: How to utilize the Naval Volunteers, by H. O. Arnold Forster, N C, July

Wagner and Tannhäuser in Paris, 1861, E. H.
Hulse on, N E M, June

Warwickshire Avon, A. T. Q. Couch on, Harp,
July

Washington a Promoter of Inventions, by Dr.
J. M. Toner, M A H, June

Wealth, Gospel of, Prof. Tucker on, A R, June

Westmorland Statesmen, C J, July

Whittier, J. G.,
Devotional Poems of, Lily Watson on, Sun H,
July

Wild Women, M. S. Lynn Linton on, N C, July

Willard, E. S., Portraits of, Str, June

Women:
A Woman Architect, H M, June

Boating for Women, H M, June

Rowing for Women, O, July

Women in the Church, Symposium on, Hom,
R, June

Women's Work amongst the Poor, M P, July

Women Politicians, Mrs. Lynn Linton on,
N C, July

Woodlands, Sir H. Maxwell on, N C, July

Wordsworth, Dorothy, M. S. Hardcastle on,
M C, July

E. HETHERINGTON.

PUBLISHER'S NOTE.

THE THIRD HALF-YEARLY VOLUME

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON JULY 20TH.

Price 4s. 6d. Post Free.

Cases for Binding, including Title Page and Index, 1s. 6d., post free. The Title Page and Index will be sent separate on receipt of 1d. stamp.

Volumes 1 and 2 are still obtainable, and can be obtained from any Bookseller, or from the Office, "Review of Reviews."

THE THREE VOLUMES CAN NOW BE HAD, POST FREE, 12s. 6d.

These books are handsomely bound and form in themselves a complete library of current thought, and the most complete history of contemporary politics published.

CONTENTS OF THE LEADING REVIEWS.

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW. August, 2s. 6d.

Italy, France and The Papacy. Signor CRISPI
The Story of an Indian Child-Wife.
Professor MAX MULLER.
Pictor Sacrilegus: A.D. 1483. VERNON LEE.
Labour and Life in London.
CLEMMENTINA BLACK.
The Ethics of Gambling.
W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE.
Morality in Fiction. Canon MACCOLL.
The American Tramp. JOSHUA FLYNT.
Souls and Faces. NORA GRIBBLE.
Rembrandt's Lesson in Anatomy.
W. HASTIE, B.D.
St. Paul and the Roman Law.
W. H. BALL, LL.D.
The Antipodeans. I. D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.

FORUM. July. 2s. 6d.

The Emperor William II.—His Character
and His Policy.
Prof. F. HEINRICH GEFFCKEN.
The Census and the Coloured Race.
President FRANCIS A. WALKER.
University Extension in America.
Prof. HERBERT B. ADAMS.
The Operation of the Interstate Commerce
Law. ALDACE F. WALKER.
Are Our Immigrants to Blame?
OSWALD OTTENDORFER.
The United States and Silver.
Ex-Secretary CHARLES S. FAIRCHILD.
Why We Need Cuba.
General THOMAS JORDAN.
Home Life in France.
PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.
The American Copyright Act: Its Policy
and Probable Results. F. R. DALDY, Sec.
English Copyright Litigation.
The Need of an Elastic Currency.
DAVID M. STONE.
National Bank Embezzlements.
J. SELWIN TAIT.

FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. August.

The Future of Portugal.
OSWALD CRAWFORD, C.M.G.
Goethe's Friendship with Schiller.
Professor DOWDEN.
The Labour Movement in Australia.
FRANCIS ADAMS.
Note on a New Poet.
GRANT ALLEN.
The New Yachting.
Sir MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.
The Education of Military Officers.
WALTER WREN.
Painter's "Palace of Pleasure."
J. A. SYMONDS.
Private Life in France in the Fourteenth
Century. MARY F. ROBINSON.
(Madame Darnesteter).
Marriage and Free Thought. M.
The Old Economy and the New.
Professor W. SMART.

HELP. August. 1d.

Democratizing the Universities. With Portrait of Arnold Toynbee.
For the Citizenship of Women and the
Sanctity of the Home. By W. T. STREAD.
A Professional View of the Magic Lantern
Mission.
The Normal Standard of Social Necessaries.
By Professor EBERL.
The Good Work of the G. and Duchess of Baden. By Lady MEATH.
The Darkest Corner of Darkest England.
Country Holidays for Child. en.

NATIONAL REVIEW. August. 2s. 6d.

The Session: Its Domestic Questions.
Historical Drama and the Teaching of History. H. B. HIRSTON.
Rousseau's Ideal Household.
Mrs. ANDREW LANG.
A Plea for the Triple Alliance. KARL BLIND.
The Degradation of British Sports.
W. EARL HODGSON.
Some Famous Pirates. TIGHE HOPKINS.
The Anglo-Indians.
Mrs. JAMES C. ROBERTSON.
A Materialist's Paradise.
MAURICE HEWLETT.
The Persecuted Russian Jews.
C. B. RAYLANE KENT.

NEW REVIEW. August. 9d.

Jewish Colonisation and the Russian Persecution. 1. ARNOLD WHITE.
2. E. B. LAMIN.
Love and Fiction. PAUL BOURGET.
Nathan Brown. Professor MAX MULLER.
A Remembrance. GEORGE MOORE.
Theatre Fires: Their Causes and Remedies. Capt. BYRE M. SHAW, C.B.
Reminiscences of Elk Hunting.
EDWARD NORTH BUXTON.
From the Maid's Point of View. M. Y.
A Model City: or, Reformed London.—V.
Trees and Flowers.
Professor H. MARSHALL WARD.

NINETEENTH CENTURY. August. 2s. 6d.

Our Dealings with the Poor.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
The Next Parliament. EDWARD DICKY.
A War Correspondent's Reminiscences.
ARCHIBALD FORBES.
The Future of Landscape Art.
JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.
Demography. Capt. SIR DOUGLAS GALTON.
On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles.
Rev. Father RYDER.
The "Confusion Worries Confounded" at the War Office. General Sir GEORGE CHESNEY.
The Drama of the Moment.
H. A. KENNEDY.
Théodore de Banville.
HOWLAND B. PROTHERO.
The French in Tonquin.
Right Hon. Lord LAMINGTON.
"The Seamy Side of Australia": A Reply from the Colonies.
HOWARD WILLOUGHBY.
Identification by Finger-prints. (With Plate.)
FRANCIS GALTON.
Frontiers and Protectorates.
Sir ALFRED LYALL.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

July. 50 cents.
My Views on Philanthropy.
By Baron DE HIRSCH.
The Farmers' Discontent.
THE PRESIDENT OF THE FARMERS'
ALLIANCE.
The Farmer on Top. ERASTUS WIMAN.
Domestic Service in England.
EMILY FAITHFULL.
Loading and Labouring.
The late H. P. WHIPPLE.
A New Variety of Mugwump.
The Hon. DORMAN B. HATON, Ex-President of the Civil Service Commission.
The Inheritance of Property.
RICHARD T. ELY.
English Universities and Colleges.
Prof. EDWARD A. FREEMAN.
Industrial and Financial Co-operation.
F. B. THURBER.
The Relations of Literature to Society.
AMELIA B. BARR.
The Art of Magic.
Chevalier HERRMANN.
The Theological Crisis.
By the Rev. CHARLES A. BRIGGS, D.D.
Can Lying be Justified?
ELLA S. CUMMINS.
To Women not Dumb.
R. IRVINEUS STEVENSON.
Selfishness as a Preservative.
JUNIOUS HENRI BROWNE.
Middle-Aged Women.
KATE GANNETT WELLS.
Weeping Pugilists.
EDWARD P. JACKSON.
The Future of Marriage.
JOHN L. HEATON.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

August.
Federation and Free Trade.
Abraham Lincoln. III.
JOSEPH J. DAVIES.
Persecution of the Jews in Russia.
O. N. BARHAM.
Village Education under Popular Control.
T. J. MACNAMARA.
The Recent Audience at Peking.
R. S. GUNDY.
Complements and Compliments.
MARY STEADMAN ALDIS.
The Politician as Historian.

UNITED SERVICE MAGAZINE.

August. 1s.
India, the Gift of Sea Power.
Cap. and S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N.
Military Criticism and Modern Tactics. By the Author of "The Campaign of Fredericksburg."
Disappearing Guns for Battleships.
W. LAIRD CLOWES.
An English Reply to "A German View of the Defence of India."
Major J. WOLFE MURRAY, R.A.
The Truth About the Yeomanry Cavalry.
Major W. A. BAILLIE HAMILTON, C.M.G.
Molke on the Battle of Königgrätz (Translated from the German).
SPENSER WILKINSON.
Naval Prize in War—II.
Captain CHARLES JOHNSTONE, R.N.
The War in Chili. From the Diary of an Eye-Witness.
CONSTANCE EAGLESTONE.
The Recruiting Question—V. (Bank and File Opinion). ONE OF THEM.

GAZETTE DES BEAUX ARTS.

The Salons of 1891. M. EDOUARD ROD.
Arab Art in Maghreb. ARY REWAN.
Alexandre Benning. PAUL DURRIEU.
Antoine Fosse. PAUL SIEDEL.
Theodore Deck. MAURICE HENRY BERGER.
Belgian Correspondence. HENRY HYMANS.

NOUVELLE REVUE. July 1st.

The Part of Passion in Revolts and Revolutions. DON CESARE LOMBROSO.
Foreign Century in Paris in the Early Part of the Century. COMTE PAUL VASILI.
Fête de Sicle Penal Servitude. ***
Germes and Dult. M. LEON DAUDET.
Nowadays (1st part). J. DU TILLAT.
Roumanian Superstitions. JULES BRUN.
The Romance of Mont St. Michel.
MME. STANISLAS MEUNIER.
Night of Anguish. (Poem.) M. E. VITTA.
The Ardeche. PAUL VIBERT.
In China. PHILIPPE LEHAULT.
July 15th.
The Reform of Secondary Instruction in Russia. MICHEL KATKOP.
An Imperial Marriage in 1852.
LEONEL DE BROTONNE.
The Projected Reform in the Organisation
of the Council of State.
M. HENRI PENSA.
The Progress of State Communism.
CHARLES M. LIMOUSIN.
"Nowadays." Second Part. J. DU TILLAT.
A Novel by Sienkiewicz. COMTE WODZINSKI.
Joseph Mary. M. CAMAN.
The City of Happiness. LEON MICHAUD.
William Tell and the Men of Rudi. M. C. S.
The United States in 1890. M. E. MASSERAS.
At Lake Tobad. G. DE WAILLY.

REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

July 1st.
Art and Nature (1st part)
VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.
A Girl's Love. MME. PAULINE CARO.
The McKinley Bills. M. A. MOIREAU.
The Spanish War. COLONEL VIGO ROUSSILLON.
Agricultural Credit. HENRI BANDRILLART.
The Salons of 1891. GEORGE LAFENESTRE.
The Memoirs of a Happy Man. F. BRUNETIERE.
July 15.
Art and Nature, Second Part.
VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.
A Girl's Love. MME. PAULINE CARO.
Tuberculosis. M. JULES ROCHARD.
The Jews and Anti-Semitism.
ANATOLE LEROY BEAULIEU.
The Historic Landscape of France. II.
EDOUARD SCHURE.
Vulgar Latin. PAUL MONCEAU.
A Tour in England. MAX LECLERC.

CONTENTS OF THE CURRENT QUARTERLIES.

- American Catholic Quarterly Review. July.
The Idea of a Parochial School. Rev. John Murphy.
Proofs of the Existence of a God, Drawn from the Metaphysical or Ideal Order. Rev. L. F. Kearney.
Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII.
The Prospect for Irish Home Rule. Bryan J. Clinch.
The Popes and the Temporal Power—1823-1846. John A. Mooney.
The Encyclical Rerum Novarum. Rt. Rev. John J. Keane.
The Mystery of Christian Marriage. Rev. James F. Loughlin.
The Failure of Native Clergy. P. S. J.
- Church Quarterly Review. July. 6s.
Didon's "Life of Christ."
The Oxford Movement. (Review of Book by Dean Church and Letters of Cardinal Newman.)
Royal Edinburgh. (Review of Mrs. Oliphant's Book.)
Scartazzini's Prolegomena on Dante, Christ or Plato? (Dr. Hatch's Hibbert Lectures.)
Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens. The Colonial Episcopate.
Lord Houghton. (T. Wemyss Reid's Biography.)
The Original Manuscript of the Prayer Book.
The Government Educational Bill.
- Dublin Review. July. 6s.
The Penal Laws: an Historical Retrospect. W. S. Lilly.
John MacHale, Archbishop of Tuam. Rev. F. Plus Devine.
Trades Unionism among Women in Ireland. Henry Abraham.
The Augustinian System. By the author of "St. Augustine, a Historical Study."
A New System of Biblical History: The Age of the Patriarchs. Prof. Ch. de Harlez.
Catholic Theology in England. Rev. W. H. Kent.
The Internuncio at Paris during the Revolution. Rev. T. B. Scannell.
Independent National Churches. Rev. Luke Rivington.
Lc. XIII. on "The Condition of Labour." Cardinal Manning.
- Economic Journal. June. 5s. (To be continued quarterly).
The Probable Effects of an Eight Hours Day on the Production of Coal and the Wages of Miners. Prof. J. B. C. Munro.
Richard Cantillon. Henry Higgs.
The Increase in Industrial Remuneration under Profit-Sharing. David F. Schloss.
The Gresham Law. Robert Giffen.
Taxation through Monopoly. Prof. C. F. Bastable.
The McKinley Tariff. F. W. Taussig.
Some English Railway Problems of the Next Decade. T. C. Farrer.
The Difficulties of Individualism. Sidney Webb.
The Baring Financial Crisis. A. Crump.
Reports of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labour on Working Woman. Miss C. Collett.
- Economic Review. July. 3s.
Why Working Men Dislike Piecework. David Schloss.
Henrik Ibsen. C. E. Maurice.
The Destruction of the Village Community. Prof. W. J. Ashley.
An Artisan's View of the Eight Hours Question. James Naylor.
Some Aspects of Game Preserving. Rev. Canon Furse.
Working Class Insurance. Rev. J. Frome Wilkison.
- Edinburgh Review.
Memoirs of Prince Talleyrand.
The System of the Stars.
The Beatrice of Dante.
Rawlinson's History of Phœnicia.
The Correspondence of John Murray.
- The Tales of Rudyard Kipling.
London Architecture in the Nineteenth Century.
The Revival of Quakerism.
Colonial Independence.
The Melville and Leven Memoirs.
The Individual and the State.
- English Historical Review. July. 5s.
The Introduction of Knight Service into England: Accepted Views Criticized and New Theory to be Propounded. J. H. Round.
Did Henry VII. Murder the Princes? No. Reply to Clements Markham's Recent Article on "Doubtful Verdicts." James Gairdner.
The Royal Merchant Navy under Elizabeth. M. Oppenheim.
Count Lally: The Story of the General whom the French Accused of Treason in India, and executed. S. J. Owen.
- Englishwoman's Review. July. 1s.
Barbara Leigh Smith Bodichon. Madame Parkes Bell.
Industries in Ireland. Mrs. Power Lalor.
Women's Suffrage.
- International Journal of Ethics. July. 2s. 6d.
The Modern Conception of the Science of Religion. Prof. Edward Caird.
The Functions of Ethical Theory. Prof. James H. Hyslop.
The Morality of Nations. Prof. W. R. Sorley.
J. S. Mill's Science of Ethology. James Ward.
Vice and Immorality. R. W. Black.
The Progress of Political Economy since Adam Smith. F. W. Newman.
Programme of School of Applied Ethics.
- Jewish Quarterly. July. 3s.
Critical Problems of the Second Part of Isaiah. I. A Further Study on the Date of the Unity of the Second Part of Isaiah. Rev. Prof. T. K. Oheyne.
The Literature of the Jews in Yemen. After the Letter of Maimonides to Jacob at Fayyumi. Dr. A. Neubauer.
The Sabbath Light. Discussion of the Custom of Husband and Wife kindling Lights and Praising God at the Arrival and Departure of the Weekly Festival. M. Friedmann.
What is the Original Language of the Wisdom of Solomon? Review of Prof. D. S. Margolouth's Book. Prof. J. Freudenthal.
The Law and Recent Criticism. Review of Prof. C. H. Toy's "Judaism and Christianity." S. Schechter.
- Juridical Review. July.
Portrait of Professor Rivier. Frontispiece.
The Archives of the High Court of Judiciary. I. Charles Scott.
Lynch. (Article on Lynch Law in General and the New Orleans incident in particular). N. J. D. Kennedy.
The French Bar. I. (Of To-day.) G. W. Wilton.
A Forgotten Chapter in the History of Law. ("Fees of Conquest" in Scotland.) George Law.
The Administration of Justice in the Levant. II. D. Démétriadès.
- London Quarterly. July. 4s.
The Oxford Movement. (Dean Church's Book and Cardinal Newman's Correspondence.)
Unearned Increment. Jenny Lind.
Dr. Luthardt's Recollections. Rev. J. G. Wood.
The Present State of Old Testament Study.
Port Royal.
- Mind. July. 3s.
The Problem of Psychology. E. W. Scripture.
The Physical Basis of Pleasure and Pain. I. H. R. Marshall.
Schopenhauer's Criticism of Kant. W. Calwell.
On the Origin of Music. R. Wallaschek and Prof. J. McK. Cattell.
The Co-efficient of External Reality. Prof. J. Mark Baldwin.
- Monist. July. 2s. 6d.
Psychology of Conception. James Sully.
The Right of Evolution. M. D. Conway.
A Convicted Anarchist's Reply to Professor Lombroso. Michael Schwab.
The Principle of Welfare. Prof. Harald Häffling.
The Criterion of Ethics an Objective Reality. Editor.
On Thought and Language. Prof. F. Max Müller.
Pedagogics in Germany. Christian Uffer.
- Palestine Exploration Fund. July. 2s. 6d.
Notes on Hebrew and Jewish Inscriptions. Professor Cle-mont-Ganneau.
Ruins of a Church on the Skull Hill, Jerusalem. Prof. T. H. Lewis.
- Photographic Quarterly. July. 2s.
Shall we Renounce? George Davison.
What to Photograph. P. H. Newman.
Toning of Images. Clement J. Leaper.
Auto-type Printing in Pigments. G. H. James.
In Holland with a Camera. Edwin H. Jeffrey.
Composition. John Andrews.
The Optical Lantern as an Aid in Teaching—The Lantern and the Manipulation of It. C. H. Bothamley.
- Presbyterian and Reformed Review. July. 80 cents.
Calvinism and Confessional Revision. A. Kuiper.
The "Chambre Ardente" under Henry II. Henry M. Bird.
The Ethical Antecedents of the English Drama. Theodore W. Hunt.
Mr. George Adam Smith's Isaiah. George C. M. Douglas.
Recent Dogmatic thought in Germany. Adolph Zahn.
Tolstoy as a Reformer. John H. Worcester, jun.
The Barrier Act of the Church of Scotland. William Henry Roberts.
The Inaugural Address of Professor Briggs. Talbot W. Chambers.
The Presbyterian General Assembly. Benjamin B. Wrafield.
- Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research. July. 2s. 6d.
On Alleged Movements of Objects without Contact, Occurring not in the Presence of a Paid Medium. F. W. H. Myers.
Experiments in Clairvoyance. Dr. Alfred Buckman.
A Case of Double Consciousness. Richard Hodgson.
On Spirit Photographs: A Reply to Mr. A. R. Wallace. Mrs. Henry Sidgwick.
- Quarterly Review. July.
Memoir of John Murray.
Plautus and His Imitators.
Sir Robert Peel's Correspondence. Lincolnshire.
Talleyrand.
The Making of Germany.
Medieval Athens.
The Later Jansenists.
Giovanni Morelli.
Conflict between Capital and Labour.

Reliquary July. 2s. 6d.
 Village Antiquities. Rev. P. H. Ditchfield.
 Notes on the Smaller Cathedral Churches of Ireland. (Illus.) II.
Scottish Review. July. 4s.
 The Oriental Jews. Major C. R. Conder. A Publisher and His Friends.
 Philosophy of Religion. R. M. Wenley.
 The Legend of Archangel Leslie. T. G. Law.
 Mineral Leases and Royalties. Ben Taylor.
 Certain National Names of the Aborigines of the British Isles. Professor John Rhys.
 Goethe's Faust and Modern Thought. M. Kaufmann.
 Laurence Oliphant.
 The Scotch Ploughmen's Union and Its Reforms. J. G. Dow.
Shakespeareana. 50 cents. July.
 The Shakespearean Entourage. (Illus.) Horace P. Harman.
 The Editors of Shakespeare. XX. Alexander Dyer. Wm. H. Fleming.
 Shakespeare Societies in New York City.

AMERICAN.

Andover Review. July. 35 cents.
 The Relation of the Church to Modern Scientific Thought. Professor Joseph Le Conte.
 John Williamson Nevin. Rev. William F. Faber.
 The Sun's Song. Professor Charles Sprague Smith.
 "Christian Ethics" and "The Simple Gospel." Rev. Charles F. Carter.
 Socialism and Spiritual Progress—A Speculation. Miss Vina D. Scudder.
 The Proceedings against Professor Briggs. The Editor.
 A General View of Missions. Second Series. India. Rev. Charles C. Starbuck.
Arena. July. 50 cents.
 Oliver Wendell Holmes. Frontispiece.
 Oliver Wendell Holmes. George Stewart, D.C.L., LL.D.
 Plutocracy and Sabbery in New York. Edgar Fawcett.
 Should the Government Control the Railways? C. Wood Davis.
 The Unknown. II. Camille Flammarion.
 The Science and American Constitutions. W. D. McCrackan.
 The Tyranny of All the People. Rev. Francis Bellamy.
 Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes. II. Prof. Joseph R. Des Buchanan.
 Aonian Punishment. Rev. W. E. Manley, D.D.
 The Negro Question. Prof. W. S. Scarborough.
Chautauquan. August.
 Old Chautauqua Days. (Illus.) Theodor L. Flood.
 Flying by Means of Electricity. Prof. John Trowbridge.
 Illustration and Our Illustrators. C. M. Fairbanks.
 What Shall be Taxed? Edward W. Bemis.
 American Sporting on the Seas. J. H. Mandigo.
 African Myths and Legends. Heli C. Stealin.
 The Physical and the Mental in Hypnotism. Alfred Fouillée.
 Travelling in Provincial France. Elizabeth Robins Pennell.
 England in the Eighteenth Century. Edward A. Freeman.
 A Debate in Germany; the Woman's Petition in the Reichstag at Weimar.
Cosmopolitan. August.
 According to St. John. Story. (Illus.) Amélie Rives.

The Ducal town of D'Uzé's. (Illus.) Thomas A. Janvier.
 The Dukeries. (Illus.) C. S. Pelham-Clinton.
 The Court Jesters of England. (Illus.) The Woman's Press Club of New York. (Illus.) Jannie Aym r Mattew.
 The John Hopkins University. (Illus.) Daniel Coit Gilman.
 Pictorial Journalism. (Illus.) Valerian Gribayéloff.
 Gambling in High Life. (Illus.) Adam Badoeu.
 Prince Bismarck. (Illus.) Murat Halstead.
Educational Review. July. 1s. 6d.
 Religious Instruction in State Schools. J. L. Spalding.
 The American High Schools. II. Ray Greene Huling.
 The Function of Literature in Elementary Schools.
 Recent School Legislation in the United States. W. B. Shaw.
 Contemporary Educational Thought in France.
 A Proposed Training College for Teachers at Oxford.
Homiletic Review. July. 1s.
 Culture in its Relation to Preaching. Professor J. O. Murray.
 The Present Status of the Divorce Question. Rev. Samuel Wike.
 Action and Acting. J. Spencer Kennedy.
 The Kingship of Jesus. R. W. Dale.
 European Department. J. W. H. Stucken-berg.
Magazine of American History. July. 50 cents.
 The Royal Society of Canada. Its Congress in Historic Montreal, May 27-30, 1891. (Illus.) Mrs. Martha Lamb.
 The Fairy Isle of Mackinac (Illus.) Rev. William C. Richards.
 The Monroe Doctrine. Hon. William L. Scruggs.
 To my Books. Sonnet. Caroline Elizabeth Norton.
Missionary Review of the World. July. 25 cents.
 Missionary Money—Quality and Quantity. Rev. A. J. Gordon.
 Letters from Abroad. II. Herrnhut: The Home of Moravian Missions. Delevan L. Pierson.
 The Relation of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour to the Church. Rev. F. E. Clark.
 The Miracle of Mission. Hawaiian Islands.
 The Political Check in Japan. Rev. D. S. Spencer.
 Shall Islam Rule Africa. Rev. Samuel C. Barnes.
 The Proposed Exposition of Mission. The Editor.
New England Magazine. July. 25 cents.
 The State of Maine. Hon. Nelson Dingley, junr.
 The Municipal Threat in National Politics. John Coleman Adams.
 Her in all things. Poem. Philip Bourke Marston.
 The Natural Bridge of Virginia. Katherine Loomis Parsons.
 The Daisies. Poem. C. Gordon Rogers.
 The City of the Dead. Laurens Maenara.
 A Brief for Continental Unity. Walter Blackourn Hart.
 Schliemann's Discoveries in Hellas. J. L. Ewell.
 Emerson's Views on Reform. Wm. M. Salter.
Our Day. July. 25 cents.
 The Expulsion of the Jews from Russia.
 The Manifest WORTH of the Sabbath. Rev. Willbur F. Crafts.
 The Wickedness of Licensing the Liquor Traffic. Joseph Cook.
 Unsolved Southern Problems. Joseph Cook.
 General Sherman's Death. Joseph Cook.

Wilson's Photographic Magazine July. 30 cents.
 Notes on Landscapes. F. L. Piher.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL.

National Magazine. May 1 rupee.
 Outlines of Hindu Celebrities. By Anil Kumar.
 Sir Charles Elliott: Hostangabad Settlement.

POLISH.

Polish Review (Cracow).
 After Twenty-five; Reflections upon the Past and Present. Count Stan. Tarnowski.
The Universal Review (Cracow).
 The Hindoos and their Religion. II. Rev. Ladslas Zaborski.
 The Historical Development of Nihilism in Russia. Rev. Stan. Zaenski.
The Literary and Scientific Guide (Lemberg).
 Geographical Sketches of the Karpathians. A. Rehman.
 An Englishman's (Eynes Morrison's, 1853.) Notes of his Travels in Poland. A. Kraushar.
 Andrew Edward Kosmian's Letters, 1830-1864.
 On Church Organisation in Poland until the 18th. Dr. W. Kentreyanski.
The Warran Library.
 English Opinion on Fr. Chopin's Life and Work. L. Zelenaki.
 The Mortgaged Lands in Russian Poland. John Bloch.
 English Writers and their Critics. E. S. Naganowski.

FRENCH.

L'Initiation. July. 1 fr.
 A Profound State of Hypnotism and Cerebral Localisation. A. de Rochas.
 Psych. Force. Lemele.
 Death. Dr. Carl Du Prel.
 The Life of a Dead Man.
Revue d'Art Dramatique. July 15. 1 fr. 25 c.
 Don Juan and Done Elviri. E. Thier.y.
 M. le Saint-Val, 1743-1830. P. Pour.t.
 The Art Orphanage. (For the orphan daughters of artists.)
 Summer Performances. P. Vébar.
Revue Encyclopedique. July 15. 1 fr.
 The Anti-Slavery Conference at Brussels, with Map of Africa.
 Guns in the Armies of Europe. (Illus.)
Revue Generale. July.
 The French Catholic Economists and the Social Question. C. Clement.
 Anti-Slavery in Africa. Comte H. d'Ursel.
Revue de l'Hypnotisme. July. 75c.
 The Society of Hypnology.
 Hypnotic Treatment of Dipsomania. Dr. H. Neilson.
 Hypnotism and Hysterics. Dr. Babinski.
 Hypnotism from the Médico-Legal Point of View. Dr. G. Ballet.
Revue des Revues. July. 1 fr.
 The Art Orphanage. Marie Laurent.
L'Universite Catholique. July 15.
 Religious Instruction in Secondary Education. C. Dementhon.
 The Administration of the French Colonies. C. Chabaud-Arnult.
 On the Teaching or History in the Free Colleges. F. Robiou.
 The Discovery of America and the Etymology of the Name.

THE MORE NOTABLE ARTICLES IN THE MAGAZINES.

- Advance. August. 1d.
The Polytechnic Trip to Norway. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes.
Liturgical Service. Mrs. Sheldon Amos.
- All the World. August. 6d.
Help: The Cry of a Troubled Soul. General Booth.
On the Farm Colony. Eileen Douglas.
Getting into Italy. Major Whitmore.
Social Salvation in Sweden. By the Commandant.
- Amateur Work. August. 41.
A Drawing-Room Overmantel. (Illus.) Colour Photography. R. A. R. Bennett.
- Argosy. August.
The Bretons at Home. Charles W. Wood.
- Astrologers' Magazine. August. 4d.
On Pre-Natal and Post-Natal Directions.
- Atlanta. August. 6d.
Illustrations from Wagner's Operas. No. II. Taubhauser. R. ginald Savage.
Edge Hill and Compton Wintfates. Julia Cartwright. With many illustrations.
In the Sunny South of France. C. J. Willis. Illustrated by P. H. Newman.
- Atlantic Monthly. August. 1s.
A Disputed Correspondence. (St. Paul and Seneca.) Harriet Waters and Louise Doige.
Two Little Drummers. (Natural History Article.) Olive Thorne Miller.
General Sherman. John C. Hopes.
The Queen's Closet Opened. (A Recapt-Book of the Seventeenth Century.) Alice Morse Earle.
The Reform of the Senate. Wendell P. Garrison.
Six Centuries of Self-Government. W. D. McCrackan.
- Banker's Magazine. August. 3s.
Foreign Exchange.
City Editors. With Portraits.
- Blackwood's Magazine. August. 2s. 6d.
Sir John Macdonald. Martin J. Griffin.
Cookery.
Studies in Tactical Progress during the last Twenty-five Years.
Names in Novels.
Woodcock, Snipe, and Clover. A Son of the Marshes.
Mnemosyne. Sr Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.
- Boy's Own Paper. August. 6d.
Seaside Birds as Pets. (Illus.) W. T. Greene.
How to Set Butterflies and Moths. Rev. Theodore Wood.
How I became a Botanist. Rev. J. Vaughan.
- Cassell's Family Magazine. August. 6d.
That Little Woman. New Serial. Ida J. Lemon.
River Birds. (Illus.) M. G. Watkins.
Hereditary Traits. Alexander Gargill.
- Cassell's Saturday Journal. August. 6d.
A Day in Jewland. (Illus.)
A Chat with Sir Edwin Arnold, K.C.S.I. (Illus.)
Mr. George du Maurie at Home. (Illus.)
- Century Magazine. August. 1s. 4d.
The German Emperor. (Illus.) Foultny Bigelow.
Thou Reignest Still. Poem. Louise Chandler Moulton.
Thumb-nail Sketches: Mog's hen. (Illus.) George Wharton Edwards.
On the Study of Tennoys. Henry Van Dike.
The Press as a News Gatherer. William Henry Smith.
The Eleventh Hour Labourer. L. Gray Noble.
- Life on the South Shoal Lightship. (Illus.) Gus av Kobbe.
Play in Provence: The Grand Arrival of the Bulls. (Illus.) Joseph Pennell.
- Chambers's Journal. August. 7d.
Beam-Trawling.
Irrigation in India.
Musical Myths. J. F. Rowbotham.
- Church Missionary Intelligencer. August. 6d.
Miscellaneous and Civilization. Rev. G. Risor.
The Parochial Clergyman in reference to Foreign Missionary Work. Rev. Canon J. Allan Smith.
- Clergyman's Magazine. August. 6d.
Pastor in Parish. II. Rev. H. C. G. Moule.
Our Confirmation Class. Lesson IV. Rev. Canon Wynne.
Imputed Guilt. Very Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D.
- Coming Day. August. 31.
God's Saints.
Who Was Jehovah? J. Page Hoppa.
The Philistines of Handel's "Messiah."
- Cornhill Magazine. August. 6d.
Some Pagan Epitaphs.
High Life.
Sparrows Poem.
Seasonable Weather.
- English Illustrated. August. 6d.
George Wilson. (Illus.) John Todhunter.
Tewkesbury Abbey. (Illus.) Very Rev. the Dean of Gloucester.
Dickens and Punch. (Illus.) F. G. Kitton.
Old Landmarks. (Illus.) Dewey Bates.
The Russo-Jewish Immigrant. (Illus.) Rev. S. Singer.
- Expositor. August. 1s.
Interpretation of the Life of the Early Church. Rev. W. Look.
On the Moral Character of Pseudonymous Books. Rev. Prof. J. S. Candlish.
Lost or Latent Powers of the Five Senses, with Relation to II. Kings, vi. 8-17 and St. Luke xxiv. 13-35. Rev. Alex. G. Osart.
God not the Author of Evil, but of Good. Rev. Samuel Cox.
- Gentleman's Magazine. August. 1s.
Captain Kitty: a Salvationist Sketch. Story. Illus. Wassermann.
Summer Beverages for Fat People. Dr. N. E. Yorke-Davies.
Flowers and the Poets. Spenser Moore.
A Railway Centre. (Crews.) John Sansome.
Some English Expetives. Thomas H. B. Graham.
The Cry of the Saxon. Poem. M. A. Curtols.
- Girl's Own Paper. August. 6d.
The Privilege of Poverty. A Middle-Aged Woman.
Landscape Sketching.
Elizabeth Willoughby. Edward Walford.
In India with Medical Missionaries.
Hon. Emily Kinnaird.
- Good Words. August. 6d.
The Common Fate of All Things Fair. Poem. August Webster.
A Walk through Canterbury. Hon. and Rev. Canon Fremantle.
Life in Homer's Time. Andrew Lang.
Meran. II. Margaret Howitt.
Historic and Genre Pictures. A chadson Farrar.
A bishop Migs. Rev. Canon McDonnell.
Agol's Dark Companion. William Cantton.
Faded. Poem. A. H. Begbie.
- Harper's Magazine. August.
New Zealand. (Illus.) G. M. Grant.
What is Inheritance? Dr. Andrew Wilson.
- Some American Riders. (Illus.) Colonel Theodore Ayrault Dodge.
Glimpses of Western Architecture. Chicago - I. (Illus.) Montgomery Schuyler.
Luck. A Story. Mark Twain.
Lord Byron's Early School Days. Prof. W. G. Blake.
In the High Tower. Poem. Kate Putnam Osgood.
London - Plantagenet. I. Ecclesiastical. (Illus.) Walter Besant.
- Household Words. August. 6d.
Mountmellck Work.
The Music Student in Germany
- Indian Magazine and Review. August. 6d.
The National Indian Association in India.
Struggles of a Hindu Student in coming to England.
Anniversary of Pundita Ramabai's Widow's Home.
- Irish Monthly. August. 6d.
St. Aloysius. Model of Youth. Rev. W. A. Sutton.
Child Life in Shakespeare's Plays. Montagu L. Griffin.
- King's Own. August. 6d.
Tewkesbury Abbey. Rev. A. M. Nickalls.
Aged Pilgrims. C. C. A. Cooper.
Sir Henry Rawlinson. Miss K. E. Howarth.
- Knowledge. August.
Gnats, Midges, and Mosquitoes. By E. A. Butler.
Lunar and Terrestrial Volcanoes. By H. N. Hutchinson.
- Ladies' Treasury. August 7d.
Ruins of the Temple of Isis, in Pompeii, Italy. (Illus.)
- Leisure Hour. August. 6d.
Commons and Commoners. (Article on Open Spaces and "Waste Lands.") (Illus.)
A Noble Mother. (The Mother of the Strozzi.) (Illus.) Helen Zimmern.
The Handwriting of Our Kings and Queens. George IV., Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte. With Facsimiles. W. J. Hardy.
The Great Canadian Sir John Macdonald. With Portrait.
The Cricket of This Year.
Louise Scheppier and the First Creche. L. G. Séguin.
Rebecca and Her Daughters. (The "Rebecca Riots" in South Wales). James Mason.
- Lippincott's Magazine. August. 1s.
A Daughter's Heart. Complete Novel. Mrs. Lovett Cameron.
Thoreau and His Biographers. Samuel Arthur Jones.
Walt Whitman's Birthday. Horace L. Traubel.
My Adventure with Edgar Allan Poe. Julian Hawthorne.
Walt Whitman's Last. Walt Whitman.
- Little Folks. August. 6d.
My Jewel Casket Sunday Talks.
- London Phonographer. July. 3d.
Miss Ethel Dickens. Interview.
- Longman's Magazine. August. 6d.
Archbishop Taik of Canterbury. A. K. H. B. Hudson.
The Strange Instincts of Cattle. W. H. Hudson.
- Lucifer. July. 1s. 6d.
The Progress of a "Dead Delusion." H. P. B.-In Memoriam. William Q. Judge, and several others.
Theosophy and the Law of Population. Annie Besant.
The True Church of Christ (continued). J. W. Brodie Innes.
Fragments from an Indian Note Book. K. P. Mukherji.
The Esoteric Christ (continued). Edward Matland.

Ludgate Monthly. August. 31.
The Oval. (illus.) C. W. A'cock.
A Bank Holiday at the Crystal Palace.
(illus.) Percy Graham.

Macmillan's Magazine. August. 1s.
A First Family of Tasajara. New Serial.
Bret Harte.
Westminster Abbey. A. E. Street.
East Lothian Twenty Years Ago. A. G. Bradley.
The Dutchman at Home. Charles Edwards.
A Real Tartan. A. R. Hope Moncrieff.

Mellie's Magazine. July. 1d.
Life in a Casual Ward.

Monthly Packet. August. 1s.
Greek Footrunners of Christ. Rev. Peter Lilly.
Finger Posts in Faery Land. Christabel R. Coeridge.

Month. August. 2s.
Confession Victoria. C. Kegan Paul.
Free Education. Editor.
Laurence Oliphant. Rev. Sydney F. Smith.
St. William of Perth and Rochester. A Saint omitted by Butler. Rev. T. E. Bridgett, C.S.S.R.
The Apology of Aristides. Rev. Herbert Lucas.
Some recent Studies on the Solar Spectrum. Aloysius L. Cottie.
Natural and Supernatural Myths. Rev. Joseph Rickaby.
The Catholic Conference, 1891. James Britten.

Murray's Magazine. August. 1s.
Two Visits to the West Coast of Connaught. Miss Balfour.
How the Poor Live. W. Morris Colles.
Eisenach and the Wartburg. Florence Elze Norris.
Tackler's Portraits of Himself. George Somes Layard.

Nature Notes. July. 2d.
The Kew Museums. J. R. Jackson.
Some London Birds. A. Holte Macpherson.
The Imperial Destruction of Kew Ait. (illus.) Archibald Clarke.

Newbery House Magazine. August. 1s.
Bishop Byth and the Church Missionary Society. Rev. Haskett-Smith.
Babylonian Life in the Time of Nebuchadnezzar. Rev. A. H. Sayce.
Are the Planets Habitable? J. E. Gore.
"The Sinless Conception of the Mother of God."
A Buddhist Church Service in Ceylon. David Ker.

Onward and Upward. August.
The Late Lady Rosebery. Principal Donaldson.

Outing. August. 6d.
Big Game in Colorado. (illus.) Ernest Ingersoll.
Four Days' Swordfishing. (illus.) Rev. Wm. C. Gaynor.
Yacht Clubs of the East. (illus.) Capt. A. J. Kennedy.

Photographic Reporter. July. 1s.
Photography by the Magnesium Flashlight. Harvey Baron.
Eikonogen & Pyro. B. Jameaux.
Survey Work. W. J. Ridd.
Silver, Platinum, and Carbon Printing. Theoretically Considered. H. F. Lancaster, M.D.
Photo-Micrography: Its History, Development, and Application. O. V. Darbyshire.
Legitimate Photography. G. F. Blackmore.
Developing (Dry Plate). J. H. Allent.
Explosion in a Cell; Photography in Italy. G. E. Thompson.

Phrenological Magazine. August. 6d.
Suggestions towards obtaining an Improved Phrenological Nomenclature. I. R. Minneboon of L. N. Fowler.
Curiosities in Memory.

Primitive Methodist Magazine. August. 6d.
Premiers of the Victorian Age: Lord Salisbury. (illus.) Ralph Suedes.

Quiver. August. 6d.
Flowers and Flower Girls in London. G. Holden Pike.
The Homes of Some Foreign Reformers. S. W. Kershaw, F.S.A.
With the Campers-Out. F. M. Holmes.

Scottish Geographical Magazine. July. 1d.
Britannic Confederation. II. The Physical and Political Basis of National Unity. Edward A. Freeman.
Mapping and Place-Names of India. James Burgess.
The Orthography of African Names and the Principles of Nomenclature. W. A. Elmslie.

Scribner's Magazine. August. 1s.
Peculiarly. (illus.) Andrew Lang.
Singing and Sorrow. Poem. Mrs. James T. Fields.
The Wrecker. New Serial. (illus.) Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne.
In Absence. Poem. Archibald Lampman.
Dead Men's Holiday—After Shipke. Poem. Louise Chandler Moulton.
The Dunchurch Bells. Poem. Archibald Gordon.
The Great King's Dream. Poem.
Parliamentary Days in Japan. (illus.) John H. Wigmore.

Strand Magazine. July. 6d.
A Regime on Wheels. (illus.)
Portraits.—Duke of Fife, Mrs. Bechstein Tree. G. A. Sala, H. Stacy Marks, R.A., Miss Mary Moore, David James, Max O'Rill.
Illustrated Interviews.—I. Cardinal Manning. Harry How.
The State of the Law Courts. IV. The Criminal Court. (illus.)
Captain Mayne Reid: Soldier and Novelist. (illus.) M. Q. Holyoke.

Sunday at Home. August. 6d.
A cupboard full.
The Hospital of Noble Poverty. (St. Cross, Winchester). (illus.) Rev. T. B. Wilson.
Heroes of the Goodwin Sands. II. The Gargers. Rev. T. Stanley Taylor.
Rigorous Life and Thought in France. VII. Protestant Agnostics. VIII. General View.
Thirteen Months in a London Hospital. By a Lady Patient.
Jews in London. I. Refugees. Mr. Brewer.

Sunday Magazine. August. 6d.
Refugees in the East End. Rev. Harry Jones.
Gambling and Betting. Rev. Hugh P. Lee Hughes.
In Milton's Footsteps at Vallombrosa. Prof. W. Garden Blake.
A Quaker Pot. (Baron.) W. Garrett Horder.
With the Ancient Egyptians. H. M. Browne and L. V. Hodgkin.
The Supreme Love or God for His Children. Rev. Benjamin Waugh.

Temple Bar Magazine. August. 1s.
Irish Bells and Bells not Irish.
The Congress of Vienna.
The Guelph Exhibition and the Eighteenth Century.

Tinsley's Magazine. August. 6d.
Sir J. R. Somers Vane. With Portrait.
Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. 6d.
August.
The Making and the Making of Methodism. Rev. W. Nicholson.

Work. August. 6d.
Photographic Tents.
The Safety Bicycle: Its Practical Construction, etc.

Young Man. August. 3d.
Edna Lyall. Dora Jones.

POETRY.

Atlantic Monthly. August.
Notes from the Wild Garden. Edith M. Thomas.
The Pea-Fields. C. G. D. Robert's.
Harebell. E. C. Steadman.

Century. August.
Thou Reignest Still. Louise Chandler Moulton.
The Rev. n-th-Hour Labourer. L. Gray Noble.
On Eikhorn. Robert Burns Wilson.
Gray Rocks and Grayer Sea. C. G. D. Roberts.

Cornhill. August.
Sparrows.
Cosmopolitan. August.
Environment. Edgar Fawcett.
A Ballade of Lovers. Marion M. Miller.
The Bridal Dress. Isabel Gordon.
The Long Ago. J. V. Cheney.

English Illustrated. August.
Lilies. Ethel Clifford.

Girl's Own Paper. August.
Youth. Ida J. Lemon.
A Birthday Present. G. Weatherly.
The Good Doctor. Anne Beale.
Lilies. Sarah D. M. Diney.

Good Words. August.
The Common Fate of all Things Fair. Augusta Webster.
Failed. A. H. Begbie.

Harper's Magazine. August.
Answered. N. M. Fitzgough.
In the High Tower. Julia C. R. Dorr.
The War Harp. Kate P. Osgood.

Irish Monthly. August.
Wood Not. D. Bearn.
Glensmole. Mary Furlong.
A Girl's Thought. Alice Furlong.

Leisure Hour. August.
For Once. Miss E. H. Hickey.
Sea Slumber-Song. Hon. Roden Noel.

Lippincott. August.
A Diamond Bird. C. Scollard.
At a Poet's Funeral. Anne R. Aldrich.
Fancy. D. L. Dawson.

Longman. August.
The Ballad of Sir Hugh. E. Nesbit.

Magazine of American History. July.
To My Books. C. E. Norton.

Magazine of Art. August.
The Habit Does Not Make the Monk. E. F. Strange.

Monthly Packet. August.
Chess.

Murray. August.
By Leth's Banks. J. Deane.
The Shooter Poems of Robert Bridges.
Rev. H. C. Beeching.
As raea Redux. R. Warwick Bond.

National Magazine of India. May.
To My Sister. J. C. D.

New England Magazine. July.
Her in All Things. Philip Bourke Marston.
Small and Great. P. H. Savage.
The Daisies. C. Gordon Rogers.
The City of the Dead. L. Maynard.
A June Sketch and a July Sketch. Catherine Thayer.

Our Day. July.
One Flag in Four Winds. J. E. Rankin.

Outing. July.
The Sylvan Sanctuary. F. Le Roy Sargeant.

Scribner's Magazine. August.
Song and Sorrow. Anne Fields.
In Absence. A. Lampman.
Dead Men's Holiday. Louise Chandler Moulton.
The Great King's Dream.
The Dunchurch Bells. A. Gordon.

Sunday Magazine. August.
Sunshine. Clare Thwaite.
The Empty Chair. C. T. Carrisbrooke.

Tinsley's Magazine. August.
Ballade of a Bird. S. J. A. Fitzgerald.
Whispering Reeds. Maud Melton.
The Song of Hugin. C. Young.

A.C.Q.	American Catholic Quarterly Review	D.R.	Dublin Review	L.H.	Leisure Hour	P.R.R.	Presbyterian and Reformed Review
A.R.	Andover Review	Econ. J.	Economic Journal	Lipp.	Lippincott's Monthly	P.M.Q.	Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review
A.	Arena	Econ. R.	Economic Review	L. Q.	London Quarterly	Psy. R.	Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research
Arg.	Argosy	E.R.	Edinburgh Review	Long.	Longman's Magazine	Q.	Quarterly Review
Ata.	Atlanta	Ed. R.	Educational Review	Luc.	Lucifer	Q. R.	Quarterly Review
Bak.	Bankers' Magazine	E.H.	English Historical Review	Mac.	Macmillan's Magazine	Q. R.	Quarterly Review
Black.	Blackwood's Magazine			M.A.H.	Macmillan's Magazine of American History	Scot G. M.	Scottish Geographical Magazine
C.F.M.	Cassell's Family Magazine	E.I.	English Illustrated	Mind.	Mind	Scot. R.	Scottish Review
C.S.J.	Cassell's Saturday Journal	F.R.	Fortnightly Review	Mis. R.,	Missionary Review	Scrib.	Scribner's Magazine
C.M.	Century Magazine	G.	Gentleman's Magazine	Mon.	Monist	Shake.	Shakespearean
C.J.	Chambers's Journal	G.O.P.	Girl's Own Paper	M. P.	Monthly Packet	Str.	Strand
Chaut.	Chautauquan	G.W.	Good Words	Mur.	Murray's Magazine	Sun. H.	Sunday at Home
Ch. Mis. I.	Church Missionary Intelligence and Record	Harp.	Harper's Magazine	Nat. R.	National Review	Sun. M.	Sunday Magazine
Ch. Q.	Church Quarterly Review	Help.	Help	N.N.	Nature Notes	T.B.	Temple Bar
Ch. R.	Church Review	Hom. R.	Homiletic Review	N.H.	Newbury House	Tin.	Tinsley's Magazine
C.R.	Contemporary Review	In. M.	Indian Magazine	N.E.M.	New England Magazine	U.S.M.	United Service Magazine
C.	Cornhill	I.J.E.	International Journal of Ethics	New R.	New Review	W.R.	Westminster Review
Cos.	Cosmopolitan	Ir. M.	Irish Monthly	N.C.	Nineteenth Century	Y.M.	Young Man
		Jew. Q.	Jewish Quarterly	N.A.R.	North American Review
		Jur. R.	Juridical Review
		K.O.	King's Own	O.D.	Our Day
		K.	Knowledge	O.	Outing

Aborigines of the British Isles, Certain
National Names of, Scot. R. July
Action and Acting, Dr. J. S. Kennard on, Hom
R. July
Austrian Punishment, Dr. W. R. Manley on, A.
July
Africa: The Orthography of African Names,
Scot G. M. July. African Myths and Legenis,
H. Castelain on, Chaut, Aug
Aged Pilgrims, C. O. A. Coopes on, K O, Aug
Aloysius, St., Rev. W. A. Sutton on, Ir M, Aug
Aristides, Apology of, R. v. A. Lucas on, M.
Aug
Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens, Ch Q.
July
Army: Military Criticism and Modern Tactics,
U. S. M. Aug. The Truth about the Yeomanry
Cavalry, by Major W. A. B. Hamilton, U. S. M.
Aug. The Recruiting Question, U. S. M. Aug.
Studies in Tactical Progress during the last 25 years, Black, Aug. The Education of Military Officers, by W. Wren, F. R. Aug
Arnold, Sir Edwin, C. S. J. Aug
Astronomy: Are the Planets Habitable? by E.
Gore, N. H. Aug. The System of the Stars,
E. R. July. Recent Studies on the Solar
Spectrum, by A. L. Cortie, M. Aug
Athens, Medieval, Q. R. July
Augustinian System, D. R. July
Australia: The Scamy Side of Australia, reply by H. Willoughby N. C. Aug. The Antipodans, by D. C. Murray, C. R. Aug

Babylonian Life in the Time of Nebuchadnezzar, by Rev. A. H. Sage, N. H. Aug.
Baden, Grand Duchess of, Help, Aug
Barville, Théodore de, R. E. Frothron on, N. C.
 Aug
Barton, Bernard, Quaker Post, Sun. M, Aug
Beam-Trawling, C. J. Aug
Biblical Memorials, Jew Q. July
Birds: Two Little Drummers, by O. T. Miller,
 A. M., Aug. Woodcock, Salpe, and Plover,
 Black, Aug
Bismarck, Prince, Murat Halstead on, Cos.
 Aug
Blavatsky, Madame, Dr. F. Hartmann and others on, Luc. July
Blyth, Bishop, and the Church Missionary
 Society, by Rev. Hukett Sm th, N. H. Aug
Bretons at Home, by C. W. Wood, Arg, Aug
Briggs, Prof., A. R. July. Inaugural Address of,
 P. R. R. July. On the Theological Crisis,
 N. A. R. July
Brontë, Charlotte. Unpublished Letters of, Mrs.
 Williams on, Mac. Aug
Brown Nathan, Prof: Max Müller on, New R,
 Aug
Buddhist Service in Ceylon, by Dr. K. r, N. H.
 Aug
Byron, Lord, Early School Days of, Prof. W. G.
 Blake on, Harp. Aug

Calvinism and Confessional Revival, by A. Kuypcr, P R R July
Canada and the United States: A Brief for Continental Unity, by W. B. Harte, N E M July
Canterbury, Canon Fremantle on, G W, Aug
Cantillon, Richard, H. Higgs on, Econ J, June
Cape Horn and Co-operative Mining in '49, W. B. Farnell on, C M, Aug
Catholic Church: The Pope and the Temporal Power, 1823-1846, by Dr. J. A. Mooney, A C Q, July
Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C R, Aug
Catholic Theology in England, Rev. W. H. Kent on, D R, July
Cattle, Strange Instincts of, W. H. Hudson on, Long, Aug
Chautauqua: Old Chautauqua Days, Chaut, Aug
Chicago Architecture, Harp, Aug
Chilian War, Constance Egglestone on, U S M, Aug
Chins: The Recent Audience at Peking, by E. S. Gundry, W R, Aug
Christ: Greek Forerunners of, by Rev. P. Lilly, M P, Aug. Christ or Plato? Ch Q, July
Christian Ethics and the Simple Gospel, Rev. O. F. Carter on, A R, July Church, The, and Modern Scientific Thought, by Prof. J. Le Conte, A R, July
Clairvoyance Experiments, Psy R, July
Clubs: The Woman's Press Club of New York City, by Fannie A. Mathews, Cos, Aug
Colonies: Britannic Confederation, by E. A. Freeman, Scot G M, July
Federalism and Free Trade, W R, Aug
Colonial Independence, E R, July
The Colonial Episcopate, Ch Q, July
Commons and Commons, L H, Aug
Complements and Compliments, W R, Aug
Conception, Psychology of, James Sullivan on, Mon, July
Constitution of the People:
Labour and Life in London, by Miss C. Black, C R, Aug.
Continental Unity, N E M, July
Co-operative Movement: Industrial and Financial Co-operation, by F. B. Thurber, N A R, July
Copyright: The American Act, F. R. Daldy on, F, July
Cottages and Cottagers, by D. Bates, E I, Aug.
Court Jesters of England, Esther Singleton on, Cos, Aug.
Crewe, Railway Centre, G M, Aug
Crime: Michael Schwab's Reply to Prof. Lombroso, Mon, July
Crispi, Signor, on Italy, France, and the Papacy, C R, Aug.
Cuba: Why we need Cuba, by Gen. T. Jordan, F, July
Culture and Preaching, Hom R, July

Dante: The Beatrice of Dante, E R, July
 Scartazzini's Prolegomeni on Dante, Ch Q
 July
 Demography, Capt. Sir Douglas Galton on, N C, Aug.
 Dickens, Charles, and Punch, by F. G. Kitton, E I, Aug.
 Didon a Life of Christ, Ch Q, July
 Dissipated Emotions, Cos, Aug.
 Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithfull, N A R, July. And from the Maid's point of view, New R, Aug.
 Drama: The Ethical Antecedents of the English Drama, by T. W. Hunt, P R R, July Historical Drama and the Teaching of History, by Hugh E. Egerton, Nat R, Aug.
 The Drama of the Moment, by H. A. Kennedy, N C, Aug.
 Dukeries, C. H. Pelham Clinton on, Cos, Aug.

Eae: Lethian Twenty Years Ago, by A. G. Bradley, Mac, Aug.
 Edge Hill and Compton Winyates, Julia Cartwright on, Ata, Aug.
 Edinburgh, Royal, Ch Q, July
 Education, see also contents of the Educational Review
 The Government Education Bill, Ch Q, July
 The Idea of a Parochial School, by R. v. J. Murphy, A C Q, July
 The Education of Military Officers, by W. Wren, F R, Aug.
 Free Education, M, Aug.
 University Exams on in America, Prof. H. B. Adams on, F, July
 Peda-gogics in Germany, by C. Ufer, Mon, July
 Democratizing the Universities in England and America, Help, Aug.
 Education at Wintertur, by Prof. Ebertli, Help, Aug.
 Village Education and Popular Control, by T. J. Mananama, W R, Aug.
 Eisenach and the Wartburg, Florence E. Norris on, Mur, Aug.
 Elkhuur, E. N. Buxton on, New R, Aug.
 Emerson's Views of Reform, N E M, July
 Emigration and Immigration: Are our Immigrants to blame? by O. Ottenberger, F, July.
 Emigration from Cities, E. E. Dale on, Cos, A, Aug.
 Encyclical of Leo XIII., A C Q, July
 England in the Eighteenth Century, by E. A. Freeman, Chaut, Aug.
 English Expletives, G M, Aug.
 Epitaphs, Pagan, C, Aug.
 Ethics: The Functions of Ethical Theory, by Prof. Jas H. Hyslop, I J E, July
 Programme of School of Applied Ethics, I J E, July.
 The Criterion of Ethics an Objective Reality, Mon, July
 Ethnology, J. S. Mill's Science of, I J E, July

- Evolution, Right of, Moncreux D. Conway on, Mon, July
- Fiction: Names in Novels, Black, Aug
Morality in Fiction, by Canon MacColl, C R, Aug
Love and Fiction, by Paul Bourget, New R, Aug
Finance: Foreign Exchanges, Bank, Aug
Fires in Theatres, Capt. Shaw on, New R, Aug
Flammation, Camille, on the Unknown, A, July
Flowers and the Poets, by S. Moore, G. M., Aug
Forbes, Archibald, War Correspondent, Reminiscences of, N C, Aug
France: Social Legislation, C. Gide on, Econ R, July
Private Life in France in the Fourteenth Century, by Mrs. M. F. Robinson, F R, Aug
Home Life in France, by P. G. Hamerton, F, July
Traveling in Provincial France, by M. s. Bliz, R. Pennell, Chaut, Aug
Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C R, Aug
Frontiers and Protectorates, Sir A. C. Lyall on, N C, Aug
- Gambling and Betting: Rev. H. P. Hughes on, Sun M, Aug. Gambling in High Life, Adam Budean on, Cos, Aug. The Ethics of Gambling, by W. D. Mackenzie, C R, Aug.
Game Preserving, Aspects of, by Canon Forde, Econ R, July
Germany, Making of, Q R, July
Germany, Emperor William II. of
Poulney Bigelow on, C M, Aug
Prof. F. H. Geffcken on, F, July
Goethe: His Friendship with Schiller, by Dowden, F R, Aug
His Faust and Modern Thought, M. Kaufmann on, Scot R, July
Gresham Law, Sir R. Giffen on, Econ J, June.
- Henry VII.: Did he Murder the Princes? by Jas. Gairdner, E H, July Hirsch, Baron, on Philanthropy, N A R, July
History: The Politician as Historian, W R, Aug. Historical Drama and the Teaching of History, by H. E. Egerton, Nat R, Aug
Holand: The Dutchman at Home, Mac, Aug
Holmes, Dr. Oliver Wendell, A, July
Homes of the Poor: How the Poor Live, by W. M. Colles, Mur, Aug. Our Dealings with the Poor, by M. O. Hill, N C, Aug
Hospital of Noble Poverty, Sun H, Aug
Houghton, Lord, Ch Q, July
Hypnotism: The Physical and the Mental in Hypnotism, by A. Fouillée, Chaut, Aug
- Ibsen, Henrik, C. E. Maurice on, Econ R, July
Identification by Finger Tips, F. Gakoon on, N C, Aug
Independent National Churches, Rev. L. B. Vinton on, D R, July
India: The Detection of India, Major J. W. Murray on, U S M, Aug
Irrigation in India, C J, Aug
Mapping and Place Names, by J. Burgess, Scot G M, July
India, the Gift of Sea Power, by Captain S. Barclay-Wilmot, U S M, Aug
In India with Medical Missionaries, by Hon. Emily Kinnaird, G O P, Aug
The Anglo-Indians, by Mrs. James C. Robertson, Nat E, Aug
The Story of an Indian Child-Wife, by F. Max Müller, C R, Aug
Insurance: Working-class Insurance, Rev. J. F. Wilkinson on, Econ R, July
Ireland: The Prospect for Home Rule, by B. J. Clinch, A C Q, July
Two Visits to the West Coast of Connaught, by Miss Balfour, Mur, Aug
Irish Bulls and Bulls not Irish, T B, Aug
Israel: Critical problems of the Second Part, by Prof. T. K. Cheyne, Jew Q, July
Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C R, Aug.
- Jans-nists, Later, Q R, July
Japan: Parliamentary Days, by J. H. Wigmore, Scrib, Aug.
- Jews:
The Oriental Jews, by Major C. R. Conder, Scot R, July
International Aid for the Jews, O D, July
The Expulsion of the Jews from Russia, O D, July
The Russo-Jewish Immigrant, by Rev. S. Singer, E I, Aug
The Persecuted Russian Jews, O. B. R. Kent Nat R, Aug
Jewish Colonisation and the Russian Persecution, by Arnold White and S. B. Laulin, New R, Aug
Jews in London: Mrs. Brewer on, Sun H, Aug
A Day in Jewland, C S J, Aug
Persecution of the Jews in Russia, C. N. Barham on, W R, Aug
Johns Hopkins University, D. C. Gilman on, Cos, Aug
Journalism: City Editors, Bank, Aug
The Press as a News Gatherer, by W. H. Smith, C M, Aug. Pictorial Journalism, by V. Gribayedoff, Cos, Aug
- Kipling, Rudyard, Tales of, E R, July
Knight Service, Introduction of, E H, July
Königsgrätz, Battle of, Count von Moltke on, U S M, Aug
- Labour Questions:
Why Working Men Do like Piece Work, by D. F. Schloss, Econ R, July
An Artisan's View of the Eight Hours Question, by J. Naylor, Econ R, July
The Probable Effects of an Eight Hours Day on the Production of Coal and the Wages of Miners, Econ J, June
The Increase in Industrial Remuneration under Profit-Sharing, by D. F. Schloss, Econ J, June
The Conflict between Capital and Labour, Q R, July
The Scotch Ploughmen's Union and its Reforms, by J. G. Dow, Scot R, July
The Labour Movement in Australia, by F. Adams, F R, Aug
The Old Economy and the New, by Prof. W. Smart, F R, Aug
Loading and Labouring, by E. P. Whipple, N A R, July
Lally, Count, S. J. Owen on, E H, July
Law and the Lawyers, see also Contents of the Juridical Review
The Criminal Courts, Str, July
Leo XIII. on Labour, A C Q, July
Cardinal Manning on, D R, July
Lealie, Archangel, Legend of, by T. G. Law, Scot R, July
Liberty, Plea for, by S. Ball, Econ R, July
Lincoln, Abraham, T. Stanton on, W R, Aug
Lincolnshire, Q R, July
Linn, Jenny, L Q, July
London, Reformed, Trees and Flowers, by Prof. H. Marshall Ward, New R, Aug
Literature and Society, by Mrs. Amelia S. Barr, N A R, July
London Architecture in the Nineteenth Century, E R, July
London—Plantagenet, W. Besant on, Harp, Aug
Luthardt, Dr., Pectlections of, L Q, July
Lyall, Edna, Y M, Aug
- Macdonald, Sir John A., L H, Aug; M. J. Griffin on, Black, Aug
MacHale, Archbishop John, Rev. F. P. Devine on, D R, July
Mackinac Fairy Isle, Dr. W. C. Richards on, M A H, July
Magee, Archbishop, Canon McDonnell on, G W, Aug
Magic, Art of, by Chevallier Hermann, N A R, July
Magic Lantern as an Aid in Teaching, by C. H. Bothamley, Photo Q, July
Magic Lantern Mission, Mr. Riley on, Help, Aug
Maine State, N E M, July
Manning, Cardinal, Interviewed, Str, July
On the Labour Enrolment, D R, July
Marriage and the Marriage Laws:
The Present Status of the Divorce Question, by Rev. S. W. Dike, Hom, R, July
Marriage and Free Thought, F R, Aug
The Mystery of Christian Marriage, by Dr. J. F. Loughlin, A C Q, July
- Melville and Leven Memoirs, E R, July
Meran, Margaret Howitt on, G W, Aug
Mineral Leases and Royalties, B. Taylor on, Scot R, July
Miracles: On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles, by Father Ryder, N C, Aug
Missions:
Bishop Blyth and the Church Missionary Society, by Rev. Haskett Smith, N H, Aug
Morality: The Morality of Nations, by Prof. W. R. Sorley, I. J. E, July
Vice and Immorality, by R. W. Black, I. J. E, July
Morelli, Giovanni, Q R, July
Morris, Wm., and his "News from Nowhere," M. Hewlett on (a Materialist's Paradise), Nat R, Aug
Mugwump: A New Variety, by D. B. Eaton, N A R, July
Municipal Threat in National Politics, J. C. Adams on, N E M, July
Murray, John, Publisher, and his Friends, Q R, July; E R, July; Scot R, July; L Q, July
- Navies: The Royal and Merchant Navy under Elizabeth, M. Oppenheim on, E H, July Disappearing Guns for Battle-ships, W. B. Clowes on, U S M, Aug
Naval Prize in War, Capt. C. Johnstone on, U S M, Aug
Nevin, John Williamson, A R, July
New Zealand, G. M. Grant on, Harp, Aug
Nihilists in Paris, J. H. Rosny on, Harp, Aug
- Old Testament Study, L Q, July
Oliphant, Laurence, Scot, R, July
Oxford Movement, Ch. Q, July, L Q, July
- Pagan Epitaphs, C, Aug
Painter's "Palace of Pleasure," by J. A. Symonds, F R, Aug
Parliamentary: The Session and the Government, Black, Aug. The Next Parliament, by Edw. Dicey, N C, Aug. The Session: Its Domestic Questions, Nat R, Aug
Paul, C. Kegan, Autobiographical, M, Aug
Paul, St., and Seneca: A Disputed Correspondence, by H. W. Preston and L. Dodge, A M, Aug
St. Paul and the Roman Law, by W. E. Ball, C R, Aug
Peel, Sir Robert, Q R, July
Penal Laws, W. S. Lilly on, D R, July
Phonics, Rawlinson's History of, E R, July
Photography, see also Contents of the Photographic Quarterly
Photography in the White Mountains, by H. Wallace, O, Aug
Piccadilly, Andrew Lang on, Scrib, Aug
Pirates: Some Famous Pirates, by Tighe Hopkins, Nat R, Aug
Placer, Mining, Jos. P. Reed on, Cos, Aug
Plautus and his Imitators, Q R, July
Pleasure and Pain, Physical Basis of, by H. R. Marshall, Mind, July
Plutocracy and Snobbery in New York, B. Fawcett on, A, July
Poe, Edgar Allan, Julian Hawthorne's Adventure with, Lipp, Aug
Politicians as Historians, W R, Aug
Population: The United States Census and the Coloured Race, by Pres. F. A. Walker, F, July
Port-Royal, L Q, July
Portugal: The Future of Portugal, by O. Crawford, F R, Aug
Postal Congress of Vienna, T B, Aug
Prayer Book, Original Manuscript of, Ch Q, July
Property, Inheritance of, R. T. Ely on, N A R, July
Provence: Jos. Pennell on, C M, Aug
Psychology, The Problem of, by E. W. Scripture, Mind, July
- Quakerism, Revival of, W R, July.
- Race Problems of America: Unsolved Southern Problems, by Jos. Cook, O D, July. The Negro Question, by Prof. W. S. Scarborough, A, July

Railways:

Some English Railway Problems of the Next Decade, by T. C. Farrer, Econ J. June
Should the Government Control the Railways? by C. Wood Davis, A. July
Rawlinson, Sir Henry, Miss K. E. Howarth on, K. O. July. His History of Phœnicia, E. R. July
Refugees in the East End, Rev. Harry Jones on, Sun M. Aug
Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes, Prof. J. R. Buchanan on, A. July
Riders, American, Col. T. A. Dodge on, Harp Aug
Rivier, Prof., Portrait of, Jur R. July
Rousseau's Ideal Household, by Mrs. Andrew Lang, Nat R. Aug
Royal Society of Canada, M. s. Martha J. Lamb on, M. A. H. July
Rusis: The Persecuted Russian Jews, C. B. R. Kent on, Nat R. Aug
Russian Persecution, C. N. Barnham on, W. R. Aug
Jewish Colonization and the Russian Persecution, by Arnold White and E. B. Latio, New R., Aug

Sabbath Light, M. Fridmann on, Jew Q. July
St. Cross, and the Hospital of Noble Poverty, Rev. T. B. Willson on, Sun H. Aug
Sala, G. A., Portraits of, Str. July
Scartazzini's Prolegomeni on Dante, Ch. Q. July
Scheppeler, Louise, Montyon Prize Heroine, L. G. Ségur on, L. H. Aug
Schliemann's Discoveries in Hellas, J. L. Ewell on, N. E. M. July
Schopenhauer on Kant, by W. Caldwell, Mind, July
Sepulture Among the Early Christians, by Mgr. Soton, A. C. Q. July
Servants: Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithful, N. A. R. July. From the Maid's Point of View, New R., Aug
Shakespeare: The Shakespearean Encourager, by H. P. Horman, Shake, July, Shakespeare Societies in New York, Shake, July. Child Life in Shakespeare's Plays, by M. L. Griffin, Ir. M. Aug
Sherman, Gen., Jos. Cook on, O. D. July
J. C. Ropes on, A. M. Aug
Shipping: East through the Suez Canal, by Morley Roberts, Mur. Aug
Smith, Geo. Adam, on Isalah, by E. C. M. Douglas, P. R. R. July

Socialism, see also under Labour:

The Old Economy and the New, by Prof. W. Smart, F. R. Aug
The Difficulties of Individualism, by Sydney Webb, Econ J. June
The Individual and the State, E. R. July
Socialism and Spiritual Progress, by Miss V. D. Scudder, A. R. July Social Legislation in France, Prof. C. Gile on, Econ R. July
Sculls and Faces, by Norah Gribble, C. R. Aug
Sport: Big Game in Colorado, by E. Ingersoll, O. Aug
Sports: The Degradation of British Sports, W. E. Hodgson, Nat R. Aug
Stead, W. T., on the Citizenship of Women and the Sanctity of the Home, Help, Aug
Strozzi, The, and Their Mother, Helen Zimmermann on, L. H. Aug
Sun's Song, Prof. C. S. Smith on, A. R. July
Swimming Animals, R. Lydekker on, K. Aug
Switzerland: Six Centuries of Self-government, W. D. McCrackan on, A. M. Aug
Swiss and American Institutions, W. D. McCrackan on, A. July

Tait, Archbishop, Long, Aug
Talleyrand Memoirs, Q. R. July; E. R. July
Taxation through Monopoly, by Prof. C. F. Bastable, Econ J. June
Tennyson, Lord, On the Study of Tennyson, by H. Van Dyke, C. M. Aug
His Lincolnshire Farmers, J. J. Davies on, W. R. Aug
Tewkesbury Abbey, Dean Spence on, E. I. Aug
Rev. A. M. Nickalls on, K. O. Aug
Thackeray's Portraits of Himself, G. S. Layard on, Mur. Aug
Theosophy and the Law of Population, by Mrs. Annie Besant, Luc. July
Thoreau and His Biographers, Lipp. Aug
Thought and Language, Prof. Max Müller on, Mon. July
Tlatol, Count, as a Reformer, by J. H. Worcester, jr., P. R. R. July
Tonquin: The French in Tonquin, by Lord Lamington, N. C. Aug
Tramps, American, J. Flynt on, C. R. Aug
Triple Alliance, Plea for, by Karl Blind, Nat R. Aug
Turkey: The Administration of Justice in the Levant, Jur R. July
Tyranny of All the People, by Rev. F. Bellamy, A. July

Unearned Increment, L. Q. July
United States: The Reform of the Senate, W. P. Garrison on, A. M. Aug. The McKinley Tariff, Prof. F. W. Taussig, Econ J. June. The United States and Silver, by C. S. Fairchild, F. July. The Operation of the Interstate Commerce Law, by A. F. Walker, F. July. The Census, see under Population. The Farmers' Discontent, by L. L. Polk, N. A. R. July. The Farmer on Top, by E. Wiman, N. A. R. July
Universities: The Johns Hopkins University, by D. C. Gilman, Cos. Aug
English Universities and Colleges, by E. A. Freeman, N. A. R. July Unknown, The, by C. F. Ammarion, A. July
Uzes, Ducal Town of, T. A. Jauvier on, Cos. Aug

Village Community, Destruction of, Prof. W. J. Ashley on, Econ R. July
Vine, Sir J. R. Somers, Tin, Aug
Virginia's Natural Bridge, K. L. Parsons on, N. E. M. July

War Office: Confusion Worse Confounded, by Gen. Sir Geo. Chesney, N. C. Aug
Watson, William, a New Poet, by Grant Allen, F. R. Aug
Welfare, Principle of, Prof. H. Höffding on, Mon. July
Westminster Abbey, A. E. Street on, Mac. Aug
Whitman, Walt, Birthday of, by H. L. Trautel, Lipp. Aug
Whittier, J. G., G. Crutchey on, M. N. C. July
Willoughby, Elizabeth, Ed. Walford on, G. O. P. Aug
Windthorst, Dr. L., Mgr. Schroeder on, A. C. Q. July

Women:

Tade Unionism among Women in Ireland, by H. Abraham, D. R. July
The Woman's Press Club of New York City, Fanny A. Mathews on, Cos. Aug
St. Paul and His Lady Helps, by Mrs. James Martin, Sun M. Aug
Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithful, N. A. R. July; and from the Maid's Point of View, New R. Aug
Wood, Rev. J. G., Field Naturalist, L. Q. July

Yachting:

The New Yachting, by Sir M. Mackenzie, F. R. Aug
Yacht Clubs of the East, Capt. A. J. Kenealy on, O. Aug.

COL. GEO. B. DAVIS.
(Director-General.)

HON. THOMAS W. PALMER, OF MICHIGAN
(President of the World's Fair Commission.)

MAJOR MOSES P. HANDY.
(Chief of the Department of Publicity and Promotion.)

HON. BENJAMIN BUTTERWORTH, OHIO.
(Solicitor-General of the Exhibition.)

THE WORLD'S FAIR AT CHICAGO.—PORTRAITS OF THE EXECUTIVE.

VOL. IV. NO. 20.]

AUGUST, 1891.

[PRICE SIXPENCE.]

A EUROPEAN EDITION OF THE "REVIEW OF REVIEWS."

I AM glad to be able to state that I have entered into arrangements with Messrs. Heinemann and Balestier to publish a special European Edition of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS in connection with "The English Library" which they are establishing on the Continent. The REVIEW OF REVIEWS will, therefore, be published every month simultaneously in London, Paris, and Leipzig, and will be for sale on all the booksellers' and news stalls on the railways of the Continent. The cover of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS will be identical with the cover of the other publications of "The English Library," and I venture to hope that the arrangements which have been entered into will enable Englishmen on the Continent to feel that they will be more closely connected with the life and thought of their own country.

In connection with the European Edition it may be mentioned that the English colonies on the Continent are much more numerous than English people imagine. There are many foreigners in London, but the contrast of the publications which they require to supply them with literary pabulum and the number of English publications on the Continent is very marked. A recent number of Anglo-Austria contained two lists of periodicals, one mentioning all the English publications on the Continent, and the other all the European publications issued in London in a foreign language. This suggestive return will be found reproduced in our advertising pages. It is a striking illustration of the extent to which the English speakers have permeated the Continent with their speech, their literature, and their journals.

Arrangements are also in course of progress for the publication of an Australian Edition which, owing to the distance which divides the Antipodes from London, cannot be published simultaneously. It is proposed to appoint an editor in Australia, who will bring the REVIEW up to date so far as the chronicle of events is concerned, and also include articles from Australian pens, so as to localise the REVIEW, and make it at the same time an Australian Magazine and an organ of International Communication between the old country and the other sections of the English-speaking race.

Concerning this suggestion I have received the following letter from Lord Carrington :—

WYCOMBE ABBEY,
HIGH WYCOMBE, BUCKS,
July 18, 1891.

SIR,

An Australian Edition of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, composed of the sheets of the English edition, with a certain number of pages added by an Australian editor, would no doubt be widely read, and it would supply valuable information up to date, which would be of great service in Australia.

Your obedient servant,
(Signed) CARRINGTON.

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

August 1, 1891.

The United States of Europe.

THERE has been only one event last month in England, and that was the visit of the German Emperor. The reception of William II. in London has made a deep impression upon the Continent, where it is regarded as equivalent to the adhesion of the British Empire to the Triple Alliance. That has not taken place, but unquestionably the Central European Powers regard the future with a greater sense of security than they did before the Kaiser's visit. If only the Emperor could follow up his success in England by a serious effort to secure the support of the Tzar, the future would be secure indeed. Whether or not the Kaiser has adequately realised the drift of his policy, there is little doubt that, wisely directed, the Triple Alliance will lead ultimately, and perhaps before very many years are over, to the establishment of the Federal United States of Europe. The three Allied Powers constitute a nucleus which, by mere force of gravitation, will attract other Powers. Already Germany, Austria, and Italy have established a Kriegsverein, or union for war, which virtually places under a single command every fighting man in a great belt spanning Europe from Scandinavia in the north to Sicily in the south. After the Kriegsverein the Zollverein. And the area within which there is free trade will tend to absorb within itself States which would never have come within the Kriegsverein. The Central European Zollverein will in time include Switzerland, Servia, Roumania, Holland, Belgium, and Denmark. We shall have the Central United States of Europe before all Europe is federated. But the good work will go on. Whether it will go fast or go slow depends upon whether some simple, practical central authority can be established by delegation for settling questions which must necessarily arise in a Customs Union, and whether a wise and far-seeing policy prepares in advance for those changes which must necessarily result from the natural growth of population and the development of the intelligence and prosperity of the peoples.

The Position of Lord Salisbury.

Lord Salisbury's action in supporting the League of Peace is more generally approved to-day than it has ever been approved before. The Emperor felt, and rightly felt, when he was at Hatfield, that, he was the guest of one who was not the mere chief of a party but the genuine representative of the British Empire. There was a time when the fantastic theatricalities of Lord Beaconsfield compelled the Liberals to carry their opposition into the field of foreign policy; but Lord Beaconsfield is dead, and the evil precedent which he established is buried in his grave. Lord Salisbury has reverted to the earlier and sounder traditions of our Foreign Office. He has purged his party from that perilous frenzy of Russophobic Jingoism; he has during these last years governed soberly and sensibly the great federation of colonies, kingdoms, and empires committed to his care; and, on the whole, he has extorted from his political opponents the reluctant admission that his administration of our foreign affairs has been singularly fortunate, and that he bids fair to be remembered in history as one of four great Prime Ministers of the Victorian era. When in the course of a year or two he is succeeded by Mr. Gladstone or by Lord Rosebery—for no other successor is practically possible—the Home Rule Administration will take over and carry on the same general policy that Lord Salisbury is now pursuing.

MARQUIS OF SALISBURY.

The True
Policy of Peace.

If Lord Salisbury, through Sir Robert Morier, could help to bring about a good understanding between Kaiser and Tzar, he would render European peace the greatest service in his power. For it is the quasi-antagonistic attitude which the Triple Alliance assumes towards Russia which alone stands in the way of the acceptance of that league as solely a League of Peace. The Tzar is the real peace-keeper of Europe. It is folly, and worse than folly, not to recognise his anxiety for peace. One of his deepest convictions is that the natural and most desirable grouping of the Powers is that Germany in the Centre, supported by Russia in the East, and England in the West, should maintain the peace of the world. This being the case—and I am not speaking without book on this matter—there is no reason why the Triple Alliance should not include Russia and England as buttresses from the outside. If that were done the Liberals would be even more enthusiastic than the Conservatives in supporting the League of Peace. All the ideals of the British democracy point in the direction of the United States of Europe. These ideals will be realised, not by disarmament, but by the overwhelming force which can be wielded against the peace-breaker. Not by the voluntary forswearing of force has peace ever got itself established among men, but by the judicious use of force, by the concentration of overwhelming force in one central authority. That authority cannot be established by conquest. It can be established by alliance, by federation. It is being established in Europe to-day. Why should we not bid it Godspeed? To protect the peaceful development of the Central United States of Europe is a policy which every British Government can undertake and every British elector understand.

The Isolation of France.

This, it will be said, will isolate France. No doubt. But the problem of maintaining the peace of Europe is in reality this and no other—how to maintain the isolation of France. This is not because of any desire on the part of any of the Powers to injure France. On the contrary, it is the truest kindness to France to render it practically impossible for her to break the peace. No greater misfortune could occur to France than anything that would encourage her to attack Germany. She will certainly not receive that encouragement from the Tzar, who only the other day peremptorily vetoed any such enterprise. Neither would she receive it from England. The United States of Europe will not, of course, in so many terms guarantee the Treaty of Frankfort. But they must necessarily guarantee the status quo—that is to say, the territorial arrangements based upon that Treaty. The arrival of the French fleet at Cronstadt, and the welcome accorded it by the Russian Government and people, should not be allowed to mislead any one as to the real attitude of Russia. The Tzar is for peace by a good understanding with Germany and England. He recognises the French overtures with the measure of politeness possible under the circumstances.

Marrying and giving in Marriage. The reception of the German Emperor was characterised by more than usual ceremony. The popular demonstration in honour of the convener of the Labour Parliament was hearty, but not so overwhelming as some courtly scribes would make it out to be. Pageants always attract crowds, and crowds cheer as a kind of payment for the spectacle. "I don't know who the devil you are," shouted one cheering mortal on Wimbledon Common; "but whoever you are, here's a cheer all the same. Hurrah!" The Emperor's most important family function was to assist at the marriage of his cousin, the daughter of Princess Christian, to Prince Aribert of Anhalt; his most important popular function the visit to the City, where he was royally entertained by the Lord Mayor and the City Fathers. He was well pleased with his reception. Germany was satisfied, and France was piqued. What more could mortal have by way of satisfaction to Imperial pride and national security? If more were wanted, it was surely supplied by the publication of the French census returns, which showed that in the five years ending 1891, the increase of the population had only been 208,584, as against an increase of 280,000 in the previous quinquennium. The population of France, at this rate, will begin to decrease in the next five affair, but when it became known, Roumanian Society erupted in indignation. "What, the future King of PRINCE ARIBERT OF ANHALT.

From a photo by A. Bassano.

PRINCESS LOUISE.

From a photo by A. Bassano.

years. The increase of the German population in the last five years showed a greater increase each year than France can show in five.

A Royal Love Affair.

The race that fills the cradle rules the world. Marriages de convenance, tested by the Imperial standard, are condemned. Yet love marriages are still at a discount among Royal personages. Of this a notable illustration has been supplied by the commotion occasioned in Roumania by the fact that the Crown Prince has fallen desperately in love with Princess Vacaresco, the favourite maid of honour of Carmen Sylva, the Queen of Roumania. Carmen Sylva, being a sentimentalist of the finest German type, encouraged the love

CARMEN SYLVA AND HELENE VACARESCO.

From an illustration in the volume "Elizabeth of Roumania," by Blanche Roosevelt.

Roumania to marry a subject's daughter! Perish the thought! Have we not all got daughters every whit as good as Princess Vacaresco? If he chooses to make her his wife we shall look out for another successor to the throne." Hence many tears, much passionate protestation—quite a noble little romance in South-Eastern Europe. The commonalty—and nine out of ten Roumanians are peasants—rather sympathised with the Prince and the Queen. But Roumanian personages were sternly opposed to the match, which at present is said to be abandoned. Carmen Sylva, however, still hopes, and Europe looks on with amused interest not without sympathy for the young lovers. Meanwhile, the unfortunate offspring of an unhappy marriage, the boy-king Alexander of Serbia, makes his pilgrimage to St. Petersburg, not even deigning to call on poor Queen Nathalie—his mother—on his way!

The Italian
Crown Prince.

The Prince of Naples, following in the wake of the German Emperor, has spent some time in London, where he has been received with the sympathy always extended to Italy by Englishmen, which at present is accentuated by the desire of the English Ministry to encourage Italy to abide by the Triple Alliance. Mr. Labouchere has been attacking the policy of supporting the League of Peace; but as it is impossible to conceive of a Liberal Ministry in which Lord Rosebery will not be Foreign Secretary or Prime Minister, Mr. Labouchere's outpourings need not be taken seriously. So far as the League of Peace goes, Lord Rosebery's policy will be the same as Lord Salisbury's.

The Significance of Wisbech Election.

In the June number of the REVIEW I pointed out that the by-elections since Mr. Gladstone had repudiated the clause which expelled the Irish members from the Imperial Parliament had been so uniform in their reversion to the polls of 1885 as to render it impossible for anyone to doubt the result of the next General Election. Since then three opposed elections—one in each country—have afforded conclusive testimony to the soundness of this contention. Paisley in Scotland, Carlow in Ireland, and Wisbech in England, each in its own way afford incontrovertible testimony to the disappearance of the wave of reaction on the crest of which the Unionists were swept into power in 1886. Of the three, that at Wisbech was the more remarkable. A Liberal majority of 323 in 1885, converted into a Unionist majority of 1,087 in 1886, was last month re-established in almost its original strength—the majority was 260, as against 323 in 1885. The significance of this is unmistakable. The German Emperor is under no delusion as to what it means. At Berlin, as at Paris and St. Petersburg, it is quite understood that in less than two years the Liberals will be in office, with a Home Rule programme as the order of the day.

Mr. Gladstone's Victory.

There is only one accident which might prevent the return of the Liberals to power. Since Mr. Parnell was repudiated by Mr. Gladstone there have been ten English and Scotch constituencies contested, which were also contested both in 1885 and 1886. The following is a comparative statement of the votes polled on each contest in these ten constituencies in 1885, 1886, and 1891:—

	1885.	1886.	1891 to July 26.
Liberal .....	39,887	31,819	40,179
Tory .....	32,977	36,153	38,736

THE PRINCE OF NAPLES.

From a photo by Mauri Achille, Naples.

As in the period between the sacrifice of the Jonah clause and the Divorce Case, forty-four constituencies, which in 1885 had a Liberal plurality of 25,141, and a Liberal minority in 1886 of 776, registered a Liberal plurality of 22,642 at the by-elections. The reversion of the country to the balance of strength that existed in 1885—when the Liberals and Home Rulers had a majority of 170 in the House of Commons—cannot be gainsaid even in Printing House Square.

Unionist Consolation. The calculations and consolations of the Unionists are more curious than conclusive. The vacancy at Walsall, where Sir Charles Forster's death has given them an opportunity of winning a seat, will come at an opportune moment. The Liberal candidate is not as fortunate as Mr. Brand in possessing a wife who can charm the electors by her singing while he devotes himself to

MR. BRAND, M.P.

From a photo by Jno. Edwards.

MRS. BRAND.

From a photo by J. K. nnerall.

their political education. If things continue to go on at the present rate, the candidate who cannot put a capable woman into the field may as well retire from the contest before it begins. Seeing that Mrs. Brand played so important a part in the Wisbech election, her portrait is here given with that of her husband. Mrs. Brand sang to the electors in the open air by the river side as well as in the political meetings, and she afterwards stated that the labourers liked old ballads best, especially Irish songs like "The Wearing of the Green," "Thady O'Flynn," and "Off to Philadelphia." The only chance the Unionists have is the off chance of Mr. Gladstone no longer being able to take the field. The calculations based upon the shock occasioned by the death of his eldest son have fortunately been falsified. Mr. Gladstone's extraordinary resilience has never been more remarkably demonstrated than in the vigour and energy with which he has risen superior to this last grievous affliction. Humanly speaking, few things appear more certain than that he will once more lead the Liberal host to victory.

It is well that it should be so, as otherwise it is not difficult to see that confusion would inevitably break out in the camp of the Home Rulers. Rumour has it that at a recent Liberal conclave it was decided that Sir William Harcourt should, in the event of Mr. Gladstone's retirement or apotheosis, be the next Liberal Prime Minister. The fact that such a decision would render it impossible for us to have a Liberal Prime Minister during the lifetime of Sir W. Harcourt can hardly have been present to the minds of those who put the rumour in circulation. The Liberal party is a party of enthusiasm and of conviction. Sir W. Harcourt has neither the one nor the other. The men who alone can be depended upon to carry the constituencies are those to whom politics are a religion. To Sir W. Harcourt politics are a mere game. The other day I was talking in this strain to one of Sir William's colleagues, when he gravely reproved me. "I am quite sure," said my friend, "that there are some things about which Sir William is quite sincere." "Name, name," I cried. "Well, for instance," replied his apologist, "I am quite sure that no one could possibly be more sincere than is Sir William in disliking the Colonies!" The day on which the Liberal party entrusts its destinies to a leader whose one sincere conviction is a hatred of Great Britain will rightly seal its exclusion from office for the rest of the century. Whoever else may be possible, Sir W. Harcourt is not.

The Leadership of the House.

It is a curious fact that the leadership of all the three parties is more or less an open question at this moment. Mr. W. H. Smith, who has led the House of Commons with much good humour and business capacity, has now probably seen his last session. His health is much impaired, and he is no longer capable of facing the labours of another year's leadership. There can be no doubt as to his successor. The Conservative party has long ago made up its mind on that point. There is only one member of the Unionist party in the House who is not convinced that when Mr. Smith goes to the House of Lords his place as leader must be taken by Mr. Balfour. The solitary dissentient is Mr. Balfour himself. Mr. Balfour, if he had his own way, would instal Mr. Goschen in the vacant place. He is almost, if not quite, the only Goschenite in the House. Mr. Goschen has many great qualities. He is one of the ablest, and in many respects quite one of the best men in politics. Yet somehow or other the House gets out of hand when he leads it for ever so short a time, and it is the universal opinion on both sides that his leadership would simply mean chaos come again. Mr. Balfour has deservedly great influence in the House; but not even he can induce his party to follow Mr. Goschen. We may depend upon it, therefore, that if Mr. Smith is not in his accustomed place next February, Mr. Balfour will lead the House, and that Mr. Ritchie will be at the Irish Office, in order to attempt to frame the Irish Local Government Bill, which still figures in the Ministerial programme.

MR. W. H. SMITH, M.P.

From a photo by Elliott & Fry.

The leadership of the Home Rulers is also open. Mr. Justin McCarthy's has never been more than a stop-gap appointment. Mr. Parnell has made himself absolutely impossible. There are only three men in the party who have capacity for leadership. They are Mr. Dillon, Mr. Sexton, and Mr. Healy. The last-named is, for rough-and-tumble fighting, the most capable of the three. He has energy, courage, and any amount of coarse but effective wit. Many years ago I had the misfortune to excite his indignation by a remark that if he would but be at some pains to civilise himself he might go free. The advice was well meant. If it had been taken, Mr. Healy's right to the leadership would have been unquestioned. As it is, he is practically out of it. It is universally believed that Mr. Dillon will occupy the vacant seat. Yet, if parliamentary capacity were to settle the matter, there is no one who could be named beside Mr. Sexton. Mr. Sexton is the ablest parliamentarian in the Home Rule ranks. No one can discern more swiftly the exact significance of the points raised by either side, and no one can express more lucidly, or with greater ease, exactly what he wants to say, without preparation or apparent effort. There are not six men in the House his equals, take what party you please, and as a debater Mr. Gladstone alone is his superior. Nevertheless, Mr. Dillon will probably be elected to succeed Mr. Justin McCarthy, and the democracy of the two countries will at least have the satisfaction of having an Irish leader of high character, of intense sincerity, and a certain romantic melancholy which is not without its uses in impressing the imagination of the people.

Mr. Balfour has declared that the next appeal to the country will be fought on the register which is now being made up. The whole attention of parliamentarians, therefore, will be concentrated for the next twelve months upon preparing for the dissolution. Ministers have not much left to try beyond Local Government for Ireland. If they were greatly to venture, they might bid for the Temperance vote; they might do a stroke of business by passing a Local Option Bill for Sunday closing, which, if teetotallers were reasonable, would be invaluable as an educational measure; rouse the Imperial sentiment by appointing a Royal Commission to consider the question of Federation; and dish the Liberals by going in for the repeal of all disabilities in sex. But the probability is they will do none of these things. The perversity of Mr. Raikes, and the lack of imagination on the part of Mr. Goschen, which led them to throw away the Imperial opportunity of making Penny Postage universal throughout the Empire, bodes ill for their adopting any "taking" policy before the General Election. In any case they are doomed; but they might fall in style! The probability is they will be electrocuted as tamely as the criminals in Sing Sing.

Lord Salisbury last month made a notable declaration, which practically commits the Conservative party to woman's suffrage. He said that whenever the question of the franchise is brought up, the question of relaxing the restraints which are now imposed on the voting of women will have to be reconsidered. It seems not improbable that the party which abolished Catholic Disabilities, repealed the Corn Laws, established Household Suffrage, and introduced Free Education, will yet crown the edifice of their achievements by repealing the disabilities which are imposed upon women because of their sex. The Liberal leaders are hopelessly at sea upon this question. The Liberal rank and file, however, have a firmer grasp of the fundamental principles of the democratic creed. The only sound, logical principle—that of repealing all legal disabilities, whether inflicted as penalties upon differences of sex, or differences of sect—which was affirmed at the public Conference in the City Temple, is destined to universal acceptance. Capacity should have no artificial barriers imposed to prevent its utilisation by the State. Let Government be in the hands of the capable, that is the only formula, and it is as much a mistake to rule out capable women as it is to rule out capable Quakers, capable plebeians, or capable men with red hair.

The Leadership of the Home Rulers.

The Disabilities in Sex.

An English-speaking Council.

Last month there assembled in London a notable assembly, representing all branches of the English-speaking world. The International Congregational Council was one of those gatherings which, if our race were ever self-conscious enough to perceive the significance of events until they have become blue-mouldy with age, would have been made the occasion for political recognition. The leaders of the sect which founded two Republics, one of which is the most gigantic and growing States of our time, ought not to have been allowed to assemble and to depart without some recognition by statesmen of their presence in our midst. But neither Royalty, nor Churchmen, nor statesmen as much as noticed their existence, and the proceedings of the Council were reported much more briefly in the morning papers than if they had been a glove-fight between two ruffians, or a divorce case in high life. This, of course, would be natural enough if these Independents had been mere English Dissenters. They were much more than this. They represented all the Colonies and the United States of America. In their capacity as delegates from the Greater Britain beyond the sea, they had a claim to recognition, which, however, they do not seem to have cared about even sufficiently to feel conscious that it had been ignored.

English-speaking Unity.

The brotherhood of the English-speaking race was never more enthusiastically affirmed than at this Council, which responded to no sentiment more warmly than the assertion of the unity of the English-speaking realm. Whatever others may think, the Council of Congregationalists went solid for Federation, and that not only between Britain and the Colonies, but between the Empire and the Republic. As for the work of the Council, it is thus summarised in the Independent, which appeared daily during the meeting of the Council:—

The Council has articulated a programme which will keep our most progressive forces hard at work for generations. To grant reverent criticism the fullest freedom, to Christianise our economic system, to bring the Temperance movement to triumphant issue, to federate all English-speaking States, to establish a code of international law with a view to permanent international peace, to exclude all immoral men from public life, to win civic liberty and justice for woman, to secure the fraternal federation of all Christian bodies, to set about the saving of the heathen world with oecumenical unity of energy and aim, are objects which, to put it very mildly, will take some time to realise; yet they are only a few items of the new Congregational programme.

If the Council has done nothing else, it has broken finally with the extraordinary idea which possessed some of the wirepullers in high places that Congregationalism existed primarily to carry the next Election for Mr. Gladstone, and, secondly, to disestablish the English Church. These things are very important, no doubt, but they are hardly "all the Law and the Prophets."

Mr. Spurgeon.

One of the great names which are familiar throughout the whole English-speaking world has figured conspicuously in the morning papers during the month of July. Mr. Spurgeon is probably one of the half-dozen famous Englishmen whom any American or Colonial, taken at random, would wish to hear and to see before he died. For the lifetime of a generation this Baptist evangelist has been one of the perennial sources of spiritual stimulus to a wider congregation than any preacher of our times. No other living man has achieved the almost impossible task of not only attracting thousands to hear him preach twice every Sunday, but of inducing many more thousands to buy and read the printed reports of his sermons. When, therefore, it was announced that he lay at the door of death, it was but natural that there should be more inquiries and more bulletins than if he had been an Archbishop of Canterbury. The Prince of Wales sent to ask after his health, Mr. Gladstone wrote a sympathetic letter, representatives of all the Churches telegraphed daily their anxiety for his recovery. The bulletins from Norwood had precedence in the papers over the latest betting, and when the eminent preacher began slowly to recover, the good news was warmly welcomed far beyond the pale of the somewhat narrow section of the sect of which he is the sole conspicuous figure.

Those who calculated so confidently upon the disappearance of Sir Henry Parkes as the result of his failure to secure the return of a majority of his pledged supporters, reckoned without their host. The New South Wales Parliament, by a majority of eighty to fifty-seven, has rejected the vote of want of confidence brought forward by the Opposition, and Sir Henry remains in office, having secured sufficient support from the labour members to command a substantial, although perhaps a somewhat precarious, majority. He is have refused to allow Australasia to be called a commonwealth, and the New Zealanders have sent home a despatch in which they set forth their objections to federation, chiefly on financial and fiscal grounds.

At the Antipodes.

The worst railway accident in July occurred near Paris, on July 25th, when a collision between two excursion trains caused the death of fifty passengers, while 100 others were injured. Scenes of great horror were occasioned by the burning of the carriages, and some passengers were literally drowned by the water poured upon the

Railway Accidents.

From a photo by]

MR. SPURGEON IN HIS STUDY AT WESTWOOD.

[Elliott & Fry.

going on with his Parliamentary Reform Bill, which is not surprising, considering that the Opposition, which only numbered 62,000 votes at the polls, as against 87,000 of Sir Henry Parkes's supporters, actually returned fifty-six members as against forty-eight Ministerialists. Sir Henry Parkes's proposal to establish woman suffrage was opposed by Mr. Dibbs, on the ground that, with occasional rare exceptions, "women have not the brains to vote." In Victoria, the Government is also committed to the principle that on franchise questions "man" shall in future mean person without regard to sex. The Victorians blazing train to extinguish the flames. More serious, however, than any single accident is the report of Sir John Fowler on the condition of the bridges on the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway. The bridge at Norwood having given way, by which a serious accident was averted as it were by a miracle, an inquiry was instituted, with the result that eighty bridges on that line alone were condemned as being below the margin of safety. As there are 1,000 bridges on other lines in the same condition, a great deal of work and expenditure will be needed before the travelling public feels at ease again.

DIARY FOR JULY.

EVENTS OF THE MONTH.

- July 1. Visit of the German Emperor and Empress to Amsterdam.
Annual Meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association.
2. French Senate votes a million and a half francs for relief of sufferers from locust plague in Algeria.
London School Board rejects amendment to reduce estimated expenditure for next year by £100,000, and adopts Sir R. Temple's Budget Estimate.
3. German Emperor and Empress leave Holland.
Bill drawn up by a Special Committee of French Chamber to place Directors of Railways and Railway Servants under Government supervision.
Annual Meeting of National Association for Promotion of Technical and Secondary Education.
4. Arrival of the German Emperor and Empress at Windsor.
Portuguese Chamber passes Treaty with Congo State for delimitation of the Lunda territory.
Royal Warrant issued ordering the formation of a Militia Medical Staff Corps.
Meeting of Omnibus and Tramcar Men pass resolution requesting the Trades Council to assist in organising a Union for Omnibus and Tramway Employees.
6. The Kaiser visits Eton.
Marriage of Princess Louise of Schleswig-Holstein to Prince Arbert.
Sir G. Baden-Powell leaves New York for Canada to consult with Dominion Ministers on the Behring Sea Difficulty.
7. State Banquet given by the Queen in St. George's Hall, Windsor.
Execution of four murderers by electricity in New York.
Telegram from Newfoundland announcing closing of sixty British lobster factories on French shore.
London County Council authorises expenditure of £1,500 on bands to play in certain parks for the rest of the season.
Meeting of general practitioners in Exeter Hall to consider the question of hospital management in London.
Libel action by Mr. Healy, M.P., against the Freeman's Journal commenced at Limerick Assizes. Jury disagree.
8. Garden Party at Cumberland House.
German Emperor and Empress leave Windsor and come to London.
State performance at the Royal Italian Opera.
9. Deputations to the German Emperor.
Garden Party at Marlborough House.
State Concert in the Albert Hall.
First meeting of the French Commission for the Prevention of Betting on Racecourses.
Telegram received from Iquique at Washington reporting defeat of President Balmaceda's army by the Congressional forces.
10. German Emperor's visit to the City.
11. Wimbledon Review. Inspection of Fire Brigades by the Kaiser at the Crystal Palace.
Eton and Harrow Cricket Match at Lords.
Harrow wins by seven wickets.
Amnesty Law passed by the Spanish Cortes.
12. Emperor and Empress of Germany visit the Prime Minister at Hatfield.
13. French Naval Manoeuvres close at Toulon.
International Congressional Council opened at Memorial Hall.
Orange Celebrations in Ireland.
Bisley Shooting Competition begins.
Lords of the Privy Council grant petition for creation of a new teaching University in London.
14. The Kaiser embarks from Leith for Norway.
French National Fête celebrated.
German Empress with her sons visits the Queen at Windsor.
15. Meeting of French railway men in Paris resolves to order a general strike.
New South Wales Parliament opened.
Mozart's Centenary celebrated at Salzburg.
Northern Fleet sails for the North.
16. Review of the Troops at Aldershot by the Queen.
Society of Authors' Dinner in Celebration of the Passing of the International Copyright Act.
Interpellation by M. Laur in the French Chamber on the subject of the difficulties made for French commercial travellers in Alsace and Lorraine.
17. Debate in French Chamber on M. Laur's Interpellation postponed sine die by 319 to 103.
Railway Directors in Paris apply to the Government for police and military protection.
18. Queen leaves Windsor for Osborne.
French Chamber closes.
Primrose League demonstration at Hatfield.
Metropolitan Fire Brigade inspected by Sir J. Lubbock in Victoria Park.
20. Prince of Wales lays foundation of Battersea Technical and Recreative Institute.
Conference at City Temple on Moral Questions.
21. Prince and Princess of Wales visit Birmingham to open new Victoria Law Courts.
Discussion in County Council on Captain Shaw's resignation. Amendment expressing a hope that the resignation would be withdrawn, adopted by 43 to 36.
22. Prince of Naples arrives in London.
Reception given to the African Envoys at Birmingham.
Lady Salisbury launches H.M.S. Endymion at Hull.
23. French Squadron arrives at Cronstadt.
Organising Committee of Imperial Institute dissolved. First meeting of new permanent Governing Body, the Prince of Wales in the Chair.
Parcel of explosives sent through the post from Toulon to M. Constant.
Motion of want of confidence in Sir Henry Parkes's Ministry results in a victory for the Government. Mr. Dibb's amendment being defeated by 80 votes to 57.
24. Discussion in County Council on Strand Improvements. Resolution that the work was too expensive for a moribund Council carried by 42 to 41.
Prize Distribution at Bisley by the Marchioness of Salisbury.
25. Prince of Naples visits Lord Salisbury at Hatfield.
Visit of the Tsar and Tsarina to the French fleet at Cronstadt.
Reception of second thousand nurses who have joined Royal National Pension Fund at Marlborough House.
26. Great Railway Collision at St. Mandé, near Paris. 50 killed and over 100 injured.
27. Public meeting passes resolution as to the urgent necessity for new street from Holborn to Strand and for the widening of the Strand.
28. Prince of Naples dines at the Mansion House with the Lord Mayor.
Letter from Captain Shaw, declining to withdraw his resignation, read at the meeting of the County Council.
Return to England of 2nd Bat. Grenadier Guards from Bermuda.
29. Completion of Cable between Denmark and France.
Queen Christina receives the envoys from the Sultan of Morocco at San Sebastian.
30. Serious Rioting of Omnibus Men on Strike at Toulouse. Charges of artillerymen and gendarmes.
French Chamber of Indictments decides that no case had been made out to justify proceedings against Captain Tripone and M. Canet on the charge of supplying smokeless powder to foreign firms.
Release of Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien from Galway Gaol.

30. Debate at meeting of the School Board on the Triennial Election of the Board. Motion by Rev. S. Headlam that the election take place on Sunday, Nov. 22nd, rejected on division by 24 votes to 4. Thursday, Nov. 28, finally agreed to as date of the election.
Largest Turret Ship ever constructed undocked at Chatham by Viscountess Hood.

UTTERANCES, NOTABLE AND OTHERWISE.

- July 1. The Archbishop of Canterbury at the Mansion House on the Education Bill.
3. Lord Hartington on the Development of Technical Education.
Mr. Goschen to his constituents on the work of the Session.
Mr. Ben Tillet on the state of labour at the docks.
8. Mr. Chamberlain at the anniversary festival of the Gardeners' Royal Benevolent Institution on National Insurance.
10. The Kaiser at the Guildhall.
13. Mr. H. Russell at the London Chamber of Commerce on British trade prospects in the Soudan.
15. Lord Salisbury at St. James's Hall on the revision of the electorate and the suffrage for women.
Lord Jersey on new electoral laws for New South Wales.
16. Mr. Balfour on opening Town Hall in St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the absence of municipal activity in London.
Mr. Ritchie at St. Martin-in-the-Fields on the forthcoming introduction of a Bill to regulate the building laws.
Mr. Lincoln, American Minister, at a dinner, on the International Copyright Act.
17. Mr. Laws, general manager of the Shipping Federation, before the Labour Commission on the formation of the Federation.
M. Ribot in the French Chamber on the Passport question.
19. Mr. Balfour to the Primrose League Demonstration at Hatfield.
Mr. Parnell at Newcastle on Mr. Gladstone's Home Rule scheme.
Mr. T. B. Potter at the annual meeting of the Cobden Club on the progress of Free Trade.
22. Mr. Chamberlain at Birmingham on British influence in Africa.
The Duke of Cambridge at the jubilee dinner of Messrs. Cook and Sons.
23. Mr. Parnell at the Irish National League Convention in Dublin on National and Local Self-Government.
24. The Marquis of Ripon at the annual meeting of the Allotments and Small Holdings Association.
29. Lord Salisbury at the Mansion House Ministerial banquet.
30. Mr. Dillon and Mr. O'Brien at Galway to deputations repudiate Mr. Parnell's leadership, and declare their intention to assist the Gladstonians until a Home Rule Bill has been introduced.
Sir William Harcourt at the National Liberal Club on the results of the by-elections.

PARLIAMENTARY RECORD.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

- July 1. Irish Land Purchase Bill in Committee.
6. Allotments Rating Exemption Bill through Committee.
7. Bill to amend the Lunacy Act of 1890 introduced by the Lord Chancellor, and read a first time.
Public Health (London) Bill read a second time.
9. Elementary Education Bill read a first time.
10. Consideration of Land Bill as Amended.
Amendment leaving the appointment of permanent staff of the Land Commission to the Lord Lieutenant and the Treasury, carried after speech by Lord Spencer by 74 to 31.

10. Factory and Workshops Bill through Committee.
14. Debate on motion for third reading of Irish Land Bill. Lord Denman, Lord Spencer. Bill read a third time and passed.
16. Debate on motion for second reading of Education Bill. Lord Cranbrook, Lord Spencer, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Argyll, Lord Herschell, Lord Elton, and the Bishop of London. Bill read a second time.
17. Discussion on the purchase of Calderon's "St. Elizabeth of Hungary" for the Chantry Bequest.
20. Elementary Education Bill through Committee.
- Slander of Women Bill read a third time and passed.
22. Lunacy Bill, passed Report stage.
23. Factories and Workshops Bill considered as amended. Clause transferring sanitary inspection of workshops from factory inspectors to sanitary authorities replaced. Elementary Education Bill considered.
21. Discussion on Imperial Defence. Factory and Workshops Bill, Elementary Education Bill, read a third time and passed.
28. Nine Railway Rates Bills read a second time. Housing of the Working Classes Bill read a third time and passed.
30. London County Council (General Powers) Bill and a Post Office Acts Amendment Bill read a third time and passed.

MR. W. H. GLADSTONE.
From a photo by Russell and Sons.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

- July 1. In Committee on Education Bill, Amendment by Mr. S. Smith to make evening schools free, rejected on division by 99 to 81. Amendment by Mr. Sumners prohibiting the teaching of any religious catechism or formula in schools receiving fee grant rejected by 195 to 90.
2. Education Bill in Committee.
3. Education Bill in Committee. Sir R. Temple's motion to omit sub-section authorising creation of a Board school in districts where sufficient opportunities for free education were not supplied by the voluntary schools rejected by 269 to 30. Bill through Committee.
6. Bill admitting long leaseholders to the benefit of Irish Land Purchase Act read a second time. Bill to postpone County Council elections from November to March through Committee after rejection of Amendment by 172 to 104 for the exemption of London from the proposal. Bill for the Amendment of Post Office Acts through Committee.
7. Education Bill in Report stage. Clause empowering managers of a group of schools to pay the fee grant into a common fund added to the Bill. Clause requiring devotion of surplus of grant over

- previous year's fees to educational purposes rejected by 143 to 93.
8. Education Bill read a third time. Mr. Bryce, Sir W. Harcourt, Sir W. Hart Dyke. Second reading of Bill for redemption of light gold in circulation moved by Mr. Goschen. Debate adjourned.
9. Committee of Supply on Civil Service Estimates.
- Discussion on England's attitude in relation to the Triple Alliance.
10. Civil Service Estimates.
13. Motion by the Chancellor of the Exchequer with reference to charges against Mr. De Cobain, for his attendance agreed to without debate. Committee of Supply.
14. Civil Service Estimates.
15. Civil Service Estimates.
16. Committee of Supply on Civil Service Estimates.
17. The Postmaster-General in reply to Mr. Henniker Heaton on the work of the Postal Union Convention at Vienna. Civil Service Estimates.
20. Statutory declaration from Mr. De Cobain read by the Speaker. Irish Estimates.
21. Irish Estimates.
22. Irish Estimates. Mr. Balfour explains Government measures to relieve distress in Ireland.
23. Motion by the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the discharge of the order for Mr. De Cobain's attendance agreed to. Lords' Amendments to Land Bill considered.
24. Railway Rates Bill read a third time. Supply.
27. Penal Servitude Bill read a third time. Suspension of Mr. Atkinson for a week. Supply.
28. Lord George Hamilton makes statement as to the visit of the French Fleet to Portsmouth. Scotch and Irish Votes.
29. Debate on Vote for the Irish Constabulary, and Irish Prisons Votes. Votes agreed to. Debate on second reading Clergy Discipline (Immorality) Bill adjourned.
30. Lords' Amendments to Education Bill considered. Motion by Mr. Mundella to replace Amendment struck out by Lords, that Free School accommodation should be suitable. Discussion on Lords' amendment. Sir W. Hart Dyke, Sir W. Harcourt. On a division, Lords' amendment sustained. Debate on the Lords' new clause to increase the grant adjourned, on Mr. H. Fowler's motion, in order that the Government might consider their position in reference to what was an infringement of the privileges of the Commons. Committee of Supply. Sir W. Hart Dyke's annual educational statement.

BY-ELECTIONS.

July 7. Carlow County:
J. Hammond (Anti-Parnellite) ...	3,755
A. Kettle (Parnellite) ...	1,599
Anti-Parnellite Majority		2,216
In 1885:			In 1886:
(P) 4,801		J. A. Blake (Parnellite) was returned unopposed, and on the death of Mr. Blake in August, 1887, The O'Gorman Mahon (Parnellite) was also returned unopposed.
(C) 751
Par-Majority: 4,050
July 23. Cambridgeshire, North (Wisbech):
Hon. Arthur Brand (Gladstonian) ...	3,979
S. W. Duncan (C) ...	3,719
Gladstonian majority		200
In 1885:			In 1886:
(L) 3,919		(C) 4,169
(C) 3,598		(L) 3,052
Lib. majority 323		Con. majority 1,087

OBITUARY.

- June 26. Henry Farmer, musician and composer, 72.
29. Canon Madan, 83.
30. Dr. Beaney, M.P., of Melbourne.
- Father Francis Clough, S.J., ex-President of Stonyhurst College, Lancashire, 81.
- Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew, musician, 80.
- July 1. Prince Vladimir A. Dolgoroukoff, Aide-de-Camp General to the Tsar, 80.
- Major-General Henry William Parke, 84.
3. General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., 71.
4. Cardinal Haynald of Kalocsa, 75.
- Hannibal Hamlin, ex-Vice-President of the United States, 82.
- Mme. Janet Macintosh Waddington, 91.
- Gwilym Gwent, Welsh composer.
- Charles Stewart, ex-M.P. for Penryn, 88.
- Frau Aders, the German Florence Nightingale.
5. M. Kogalniceanu, Roumanian statesman, 78.
6. James Runciman, journalist, 38.
- Father Felix, 81.
7. Samuel O'bourn, Mayor of Sheffield.
- C. W. Blake ("Augur"), editor of Sporting Life, 49.
- Baron Oscar von Redwitz, Bavarian poet, 68.
- Professor Haupt, organ composer, 81.
8. Robert Reece, writer of burlesques, 63.
- Dr. Chronough, manager of the Court Theatre at Meiningen.
9. Ja Ja, ex-King of Opobo.
11. Dr. Frédéric Louis R'tter, composer, 57.
13. Alderman T. P. Barkas, of Newcastle, 73.

MR. JAMES RUNCIMAN.

14. Dr. John Sutherland, leading sanitarian.
- Hon. Algernon Fulke Egerton, 66.
- Alexander Sellar, of Zermatt, 70.
17. Mme. de Bonnemain, supporter of General Boulanger.
19. Lewis Loyd, formerly partner in Jones-Loyd's bank in Lothbury.
- Pedro Antonio de Alarcon, Spanish author and politician.
- Canon Miles.
20. Sir William Fettes Douglas, President of the Royal Scottish Academy, 69.
- Sir Frederick A. Weld, G.C.M.G., 68.
24. Frank Miles, artist.
- Daniel Mackintosh, F.G.S.
- R.v. Charles Smith, B.D., 93.
- Earl of Wicklow, 49.
25. Charles Luillier, Communist.
- Augustus Baker, British Consul at Vera Cruz.
26. Sir Charles Forster, M.P. for Walsall, 76.
- Charles Elphinstone-Dalrymple, J.P., F.S.A., 74.
- Rajah Rajendra Lal Mitra, LL.D., Sanscrit scholar.
29. Captain Saunders, of the Whaleback steamer, C. W. Whetmore.
- The death is also announced of the Rev. John A. Robinson, M.A., missionary on the Niger.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CHOIR.

THERE is at present in this country a remarkable band of men and women, who seem likely to leave a definite mark in the mind of the British public. They are Christians from various tribes in South Africa, who stand sorely in need at the present moment of intelligent training in practical industry. The South African Choir promise to create even more sensation than the Fisk Jubilee Singers. They are, politically, of much more importance. Their singing is like nothing to which the civilised man has been accustomed, and they constitute a living band of witnesses to the power of Christian civilisation on the raw material of African humanity. They have already sung before Her Majesty, and before the country I hope they will have succeeded in securing the necessary endowment for a great native Industrial College which ought to be in Cape Colony. The address of their conductor is Mr. W. E. Litty, 1, Eadsleigh Gardens, London, N.W., with whom all arrangements for performances or receptions by the Choir.

THE PUNCH CARTOONISTS.

LINLEY SAMBOURNE.

HARRY FURNISS.
From a photo by Elliott & Fry.

GEORGE DU MAURIER.
From a photo by Elliott & Fry.

JOHN TENNIEL.
From a photo by Elliott & Fry.

CARICATURES OF THE MONTH.

LAST month Punch celebrated its jubilee. Though we ventured to suggest to our facetious contemporary that by way of celebrating its jubilee, it might take off the senseless dog-in-the-manger interdict which forbids, weeks after its sale has practically ceased, the reproduction in miniature of some of the cartoons which enable it still to keep the leading place in English caricature, the suggestion has not found favour with its publishers. There is not one other comic paper in the world which grudges this after-date sampling of its artistic productions. The result is that English caricature suffers by the comparison in our pages. We have the best of American, Canadian, Australian, French, Italian and German caricature, but, owing to the interdict of Punch, we cannot give specimens of some of the best caricatures of England. I am glad to see that Messrs. Bradbury and Agnew, of Punch, have granted to the English Illustrated the permission to reproduce several of the cartoons from Mr. Punch's collection, illustrating an article on "Dickens and Punch." I say this with the more satisfaction because Mr. Bradbury, in reply to an application to reproduce the jubilee cartoon in the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, informed me that the proprietors of Punch "regret very much to be obliged to decline; but in the face of so many and frequent applications, we are obliged to say No!—indiscriminately to all alike." Of course those who stickle for severe consistency may think this curious; but I rejoice to see a precedent set in the English Illustrated, the benefit of which we may all hope to reap before long.

THE FOUR EDITORS OF PUNCH.

1841—1870.

MARK LEMON.

1870—1874.

SHIRLEY BROOKS.

1874—1880.

TOM TAYLOR.

1880—

F. C. BURNAND.

FOX TO THE FINISH.

[From Funny Folks.]

MR. PARNELL'S WEDDING.

[July 4, 1891.]

[From Mo'nashine.]

[June 4, 1891.]

THE PAUPER JEW INVASION—HOW LONG IS IT TO GO ON?

THE GREATEST MAN OF THE AGE;
OR, THE MODERN GULLIVER.

From Flea.]

[July 8, 1891.

From Uk.]

[July 10, 1891.

"THE MEMBERS OF THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE KEEP PACE WITH ONE ANOTHER."
European Festal Song, with Russian-French Accompaniment.

"THIS IS THE WAY TO DO IT, GRANDMOTHER."

From Ariel.]

[July 11, 1891.

THE KAISER AT WINDSOR.

From the Pretoria Weekly News.]

[June 5, 1891.

THE OLD LION ONLY WINKS.

EDITOR OF Cape Times (loquitur).
Why does he look so confoundedly sly at me?
What have I done that contempt should prevail?
While he is lazily winking one eye at me,
Am I not prodding and twisting his tail?

An Australian view of the way to work the London Stock Exchange.

From the Melbourne Punch.]

(April 16, 1891.

AFTER THE FAILURE OF THE VICTORIAN LOAN.

From the Boomerang. May 30, 1891.

DAYS WITH CELEBRITIES. No. 489
THE POPE

A possible humiliation for Queensland.

From the Boomerang.]

[May 28, 1891.

HER MAJESTY: FROM A QUEENSLAND STANDPOINT.

From the Weekly National Press ]

[May 30, 1891.]

THE IRISH SITUATION—WOBBLING.

OLD LADY.—"I think I'd like to get down now, Mr. Parnell, if you please."

From Judge.]

THE CYCLE OF THE FUTURE.

[June 13, 1891.]

From Judge.]

[June 26, 1891.]

THE COLLEGE GRADUATES OF THE FUTURE.

WASHERWOMEN WHO NEVER STRIKE.

From La Silhouette.

[June 14, 1891.]

A FRENCH VIEW OF JOHN BULL AS THE BOGIE-MAN.

When will John Bull leave off putting his weaker brethren in his sack?

from La Grelot.

[June 28, 1891.]

THE MAN WHO PROFITS BY PROTECTION.

The Producer.

The Middleman.

The Consumer.

KING - CECIL - OF - SOUTH AFRICA -

From the Fretoria Weekly Press.

[May 2, 1891.]

THE WRITING ON THE WALL.

"I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation."—DAN. v. 17.

The Weekly Gallery of Celebrities, of which mention was made in these columns a few months ago, has been converted into a monthly, under the title of The Gallery of Celebrities, the first number of which is a very creditable production, containing tone portraits (somewhat badly printed), together with succinct biographical sketches, of the German Emperor, Miss Ellen Terry, Mr James Payn, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, Marquis of Salisbury, Mr. Frank Lockwood, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. S. Cunliffe-Lister. The magazine, in its new shape, is well worth the price asked for it—sixpence.

After a photo by]

THE GERMAN EMPEROR IN THE FAMILY CIRCLE.

[Selle & Kuntz, Potsdam.

The Emperor stands in the background with little Prince Oscar in his arms. Prince Henry is on his right, and next the Empress Augusta Victoria with Princess Helena of Schleswig-Holstein. The lady to her right is the Duchess Caroline Matilda of Schleswig-Holstein, and the baby is the Princess Louise. The lady seated in the centre of the group is Princess Frederick Leopold (with the Princess Victoria); the other is Princess Henry, holding Prince Waldemar. The two little girls holding hands are the Princesses Alexandra and Victoria of Schleswig-Holstein; and the four boys in sailor suits are the Crown Prince Frederick William (sitting alone), Prince Adalbert, Prince August William, and Prince Eitel Frederick.

CHARACTER SKETCH: AUGUST.

WILLIAM II., EMPEROR OF GERMANY.

"I believe that I have mastered the aims and impulses of this new spirit which thrills the expiring century."—From the speech of the Kaiser at the closing of the Conference on Education, December 17, 1890.

THAT phrase in the German Emperor's speech set me thinking. Where had I heard that before? Not on the lips of mortal man. But it sounded like a curious echo of something heard long ago, where, I could not at first exactly remember; but after a while I caught the clue. In the last lines of that strangest of Coleridgean fantasies, which begins—

In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure dome decree,

there seemed to be some occult allusion to our recent Imperial guests. How it fitted in it is difficult to say, but some subtle association links the confident assertion of the Education speech with the weird product of the poet's dream:—

With music loud and long
I would build that dome in air—
That sunny dome! those caves of ice!
And all who heard should see them there,
And all should cry, Beware! Beware!
His flashing eyes, his floating hair!
Weave a circle round him thrice,
And close your eyes with holy dread,
For he on honey dew hath fed,
And drunk the milk of Paradise.

Kaiser Wilhelm is not Kubla Khan, but there is about them both something fantastic and unreal. The Emperor may not have fed on honey dew and drunk the milk of Paradise, but to the average mortal he is almost as strange; and the memory of his visit is already becoming as a vision of Xanadu, where

'Mid the tumult Kubla heard from far
Ancestral voices prophesying war.

Not that the Emperor paid much heed to these ancestral voices, save to drown them by asseverations of his devotion to peace.

I. SOME ANALOGIES—FANCIFUL OR OTHERWISE.

No one for a moment doubts that the Kaiser to-day sincerely desires peace, any more than four years ago any one doubted that he was sincerely devoted to the great Bismarckian legend. In the days when "the Bismarck Dynasty" was written, William of Germany was not only a humble pupil of Otto of Pomerania, but he even seemed subservient to that Herbert who was to be Bismarck II. But a day came when the Kaiser felt his Kaisership, and the love with which he loved the famous Chancellor was nothing to the hatred with which he regarded his old master. The Emperor is like those Orientals who one day bow in adoring worship before their favourite idol, and the next drag it through the filth of the gutter and fling it into the river. The god of his idolatry last year may be the object of intensest aversion to-day. Just now he is devoted to peace. But if his mood should change!

If his mood should change, he has but to say the word, and a million soldiers stand ready arrayed for him to make practical test of his lurking conviction that if opportunity offered he could prove that he would be first in war as he is first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen. "That young man means war," said a French lady the other day, "and all his protestations about peace only reveal the secret of his heart. Who was it that vowing she would ne'er consent consented? Is it reasonable to believe that a young soldier with the finest army in the world at his back, is not sighing for a chance of showing he can use it?" Yet there is not a shadow of pretext for believing that the Emperor means war. There is every reason to believe that he means peace, means it with his whole heart—to-day. But what he will mean to-morrow knoweth no man, least of all Kaiser Wilhelm II.

THE SWITCHBACK OF THE CONTINENT.

The mercurial mobility of the Kaiser's convictions renders it impossible for any one to feel any confidence in the stability of his policy. With the Tzar it is entirely different. Alexander the Second may not be a genius, but you know where he is. There is a sense of continuity, of immobility, if you please, about his policy, which enables you at least to feel you know where you are. Like a great patient ox he stands in mid-furrow, while the Kaiser skips like a kangaroo about the plain. When you try to follow his course, it is like riding on a switchback railway. It is all ups and downs, violent alternations at a rattling speed, plenty of thrills no doubt; but on the whole the ox-waggon is safer, although much more monotonous.

In England and Russia we have Governments which are like the old matchlock, whereas in the Kaiser we have a rifle with a hair trigger always ready to go off. No doubt the latter is more scientific, but for those who wish to get out of the way of the bullet the matchlock is preferable. In an English taproom, an angry brawl may end in bloody noses and much foul language; but the mortality is less than in the bar, at which the Western miner empties his six-shooter before our country bumpkin can double his fist. It is always touch and go with the Kaiser. That, at least, is the impression which he has left upon the popular mind.

No doubt a good deal of the danger that would otherwise result from the extraordinary agility of the Kaiser's mental evolutions is minimised by the fact that much of it is on the surface merely. Not even in monarchical Germany can the whims and caprices of the Sovereign carry along with him at the same breathless speed the machinery of the Empire. Great States, like large armies, have endless impedimenta. The mere vis inertiae counts for so much. Nevertheless, so much as the personal factor counts for anything, and even if we minimise it to the uttermost it still counts for a good deal, the personality of William II. is not calculated to reassure a nervous public.

"BRAVO TORO!"

Those who have ever seen a bull fight, where a lively bull is turned loose in the arena, will understand exactly the impression produced on some observers by watching the actions of the Kaiser. There is such a lordly self-confidence in the good bull. At first he cannot quite conceive what his tormentors are after with their stinging little darts and their waving cloaks, so he begins by disdaining them. But when some matador, more daring than his fellows, forces upon the taurine mind that he means to actually insult him, then that bull goes for the matador, as the Kaiser went for Bismarck. But he does not insist in his pursuit.

He clears one off, and in another minute he is after another, now here, now there; he rushes to all parts of the arena in quick succession. Nor can any one predict whether his next charge will be east, west, north, or south. All that the spectators know is that he will charge somewhere, and that each charge for the moment preoccupies the bull to the exclusion of all that has gone before or all that may follow after. Bravo toro! bravo toro! is the cry as he makes the sand fly beneath his hoofs. It is magnificent, but it is not consecutive, and each fresh charge leaves every one as much in doubt as ever as to what will come next. It is very thrilling and very interesting, and it can be enjoyed by spectators behind barriers; but possibly if we were in the arena we might not be so lively in our appreciation of the bull. That is probably one cause why we English and Americans can take so much more critical an interest in the Kaiser's movements than the French and the Russians, to say nothing of the members of the Triple Alliance.

A LATTER-DAY JOURNALIST BORN IN THE PURPLE.

The Kaiser has been so much written about, by so many people from so many different standpoints, that I somewhat marvel that one very striking clue to his character should have escaped notice. Even Mr. Harold Frederic, in his interesting volume upon "The Young Emperor," seems to have overlooked this point of view. He has given us pen pictures, more or less vivid and realistic, of the Kaiser as emperor, soldier, sailor, reformer, socialist, hunter, athlete, and actor; but of this other sufficiently obvious characteristic he says nothing. But is it not manifest to all men, if only they reflect a little, that the note which differentiates Wilhelm II. from all the other sovereigns of Europe, is that he is au fond, first and foremost, a sensational journalist born in the purple?

No doubt his Imperial and Royal Majesty will be mightily disgusted at this discovery of his identity by journalists who are not Hohenzollerns, and there will be much indignant repudiation of any resemblance between his High Mightiness and the humbler scribes at whom he has cast many a scurvy word. Nevertheless, the Kaiser is first and foremost in his heart and soul a supreme type of the most vigorous type of latter-day journalist. He is not a sensationmonger. He is a sensationalist. And rightly so. Whatever claim he may have in other departments to have interpreted rightly the spirit of his age, in this sphere he has done so perfectly. He is par excellence the journalist. He is always endeavouring to impress his ideas upon his contemporaries, and he is never weary of trying new and striking effects. At first he blundered just like a young editor who, in order to arrest the attention of his readers, prints everything in capitals. To this day he has only imperfectly mastered the trick of being impressive without seeming to strain after effect. There is in him a great journalistic instinct. He has an eye for all the live issues of the day. He is as impatient lest any rival should outstrip him as any reporter trained in American journalism. He is never so happy as when he is able to "do a beat" which gives him the first claim to the attention of the public. He is full of the feverish restlessness of a pressman, perpetually on the qui vive for "items," "stories," or sensations. He has as many ideas as a first-class newspaper editor, and he is always striving to drive them into the heads of his readers—I beg pardon—his subjects. He cultivates a picturesque and journalistic style. He studies the great art of opportuneness, of seizing the right occasion when to launch his latest ideas, and in his straining after effect he indulges to the full the passion for headlines and illustrations. Compared with the staid and reserved sovereigns who surround him, he is as the Pall Mall Gazette or the New York World is to the Times or the New York Nation.

Since he came to the throne he has spent most of his time in special commissioning and interviewing. He has rushed round Europe like a special correspondent, and he has left no device untried to increase his circulation, or, to use the more appropriate phraseology, to keep himself and his ideas constantly before the attention of the largest possible public. The French used to say that nothing is sacred to a sapper; but the modern version is that nothing is sacred to a journalist. He meddles with everything. It is his business to interfere in everybody else's business. Prince Bismarck has noted just the same trait in the Kaiser. "I pity the young man," he said more than a year ago, "he is like a young foxhound that barks at everything, that smells at everything, that touches everything, and that ends by causing complete disorder in the room in which he is, no matter how large it may be." That is the journalist all over—not that I would say that journalists upset everything, but they do play the mischief with old-fashioned conventions, and so does the Kaiser. When he was in London last month, it was curious to note the way in which the journalistic craving for novelty and the picturesque found expression in his ceaseless change of dress and uniform. The Emperor had no newspaper to bring out, so he brought out himself in a bewildering variety of new editions. In the course of a single day he came out as a hussar, as an admiral, and as an emperor. On one famous occasion he changed his dress no fewer than five times in a single day. It was just like the specials and extra specials of the afternoon papers when there is anything of unusual interest, such as a White-chapel murder or a railway collision.

The Kaiser is the journalist also in his supreme indifference to cut-and-dried theories, and in his supreme anxiety to be always on the spot. He ignores traditional circumbendibus, and goes direct to the point, seeing all manner of men without any regard to the etiquette of the Prussian Court, excepting when it suits him to trot out that antiquated superstition to shield himself from the inroads of journalists not of the blood-royal. Every journalist of any initial energy and strong convictions habitually acts more or less as the Kaiser does, as if he had a Divine commission to put every one to rights. The only difference is that the Kaiser not only acts on this universal journalistic assumption, but bluntly proclaims it at the top of his voice whenever he gets a chance. An Imperial journalist, who is quite sure that he has special and exclusive "tips" from on high—that is The Kaiser.

A PRUSSIAN LORD RANDOLPH.

If all the world's a stage, then the Emperor William is at present the most popular actor on the European boards. He excites the same kind of interest—immensely intensified—that was formerly excited by Lord Randolph Churchill before that young man grew a beard and went to seed. Like Lord Randolph, he is full of ideas, of originality, and of energy. Like Lord Randolph, he fills all around him with a constant uneasiness, no one ever knowing exactly what he would do next, excepting that it would be something not conventional or to be expected. Lord Randolph, however, not being steadied by the constant pressure of a very heavy crown, has extinguished what at one time promised to be a very brilliant career. It is difficult to realise that the card-playing, champagne-drinking special correspondent of the Daily Graphic, now in South Africa, could at one time have been considered as a possible Prime Minister of the Crown. Politics lost their zest for Lord Randolph when, in a fit of passionate petulance, he threw away the leadership of the House rather than allow the coaling stations to be fortified. He discovered when too late that he was not indispensable, and that he never conferred a greater service upon Lord Salisbury than by ridding the Cabinet of its one insubordinate member. What the pressure of office, if it had been constantly kept up, would have done for Lord Randolph no one can say, but it could hardly have failed to steady him. Even the most volatile of gases becomes a driving force upon which we can rely if it is bottled up. It must be admitted that the traditions of the Prussian Monarchy and the duties of a German Emperor offer a sufficiently stout resistance to prevent the dissipation of the energies even of such a restless mortal as William II. Resignation is not possible to a Hohenzollern. He is chained to his throne for life, and the sense of continuity is in itself a steadying and restraining factor in the formation of character.

NAPOLEON SECUNDUS.

If the Emperor reminds some people of Lord Randolph, minus the temptation to frivolity and wilful self-indulgence, he reminds others of the first Napoleon in more ways than one. There is no doubt at least one enormous difference between them. Napoleon was a man without a conscience. William II. has a highly developed moral sense. Whether or not William has even a trace of the genius of Napoleon is a point upon which as yet there is no trustworthy information. He may, or he may not, have a genius for war.

Those who stand nearest him profess to believe that if the occasion should arise he would prove that he possessed a military genius that would do no discredit to the fame of the greatest of the Hohenzollerns. Every one must hope, however, that this latent genius may never have an opportunity for its manifestation. Let it be taken for granted, rather than demonstrated, inasmuch as its demonstration is impossible without war. But in some other respects the resemblance between the German Emperor and the first Napoleon is conspicuous. William is as much of an actor as Napoleon. In both intense self-consciousness colours their every action. Each is a poseur of the first rank. Their fundamental idea of government is identical. It is that which corresponds to the star system of the theatrical manager, where the whole programme is framed for the benefit of a single star actor. As Napoleon was the French star, William will be the star of the German troupe. In both the jealousy of those who play subordinate rôles is very marked. They brook no rivals near their throne. They will be helped rather by second-rate Ministers than by first-rate men, whose renown might obscure the Emperor. William resembles Napoleon, also, in the devouring appetite which he has for detail, and the miraculous memory he possesses for everything that concerns him. The Grand Duke Constantine, when Lord High Admiral of the Russian Fleet, at one time was able to tell you offhand the name, strength, characteristics, and the position of every warship in the navies of the world; and the German Emperor possesses the same kind of gift. M. Taine, in his fascinating sketch of Napoleon in his last published work, leaves you under the impression that the little Corsican constantly carried in his mind a complete inventory of all the artillery of Europe. William II. has just that sort of memory which stands him in good stead in his imperial and kingly activity. Like Napoleon, William finds nothing too great and nothing too small for his attention. Not only does he interfere in all his departments, but in the midst of all the affairs of State he finds time to personally superintend rehearsals of new dramas at Berlin, as Napoleon drew up regulations for the Parisian theatres when seated as a temporary conqueror in the captive Kremlin. They are like each other, also, in their jealousy and fear of clever women, and their preference for a feminine ideal that finds its complete satisfaction in the kitchen and the nursery. To fill the cradle and to spread the table—that is enough for women in the opinion alike of Hohenzollern and of Bonaparte.

ALWAYS "ON THE GO."

The feverish activity of Napoleon's irrepressible energy, which filled our grandfathers with amazement, reappears in the German Emperor. His immense vitality seems unable to exhaust itself in labours at which his relatives and neighbours stand aghast. He is always "on the go." He lives in a perfect St. Vitus's dance of political, military, and social activities. He has every strength but the strength of repose. That he lacks. He is never in repose. Even when he paces the deck of his ship on the northern seas his mind is in a whirl of thought. Even the silent stars of the midnight sky act as spurs to his straining imagination. When he visited Constantinople he scandalised the grave and stately Ottomans by riding his horse full gallop down a hill. They thought it very undignified. It was to them as unseemly as to us would seem the spectacle of the Prince of Wales running in his shirt sleeves down the Strand. But the eternal calm and the composure of the East find nothing but antithesis and contrasts in this imperial embodiment of the fever of Western life. The pace seems too great to last. But Alfieri, the Italian dramatist, who in his way lived as restless a life as the Kaiser—he even composed his plays when driving at full gallop in a postchaise—survived to be nearly ninety. It is not the most active who die soonest. Mr. Gladstone, for instance, lives in a higher state of mental tension than most men, but there is hardly a youngster in Parliament who has more energy, either of mind or of body, than the octogenarian chief.

CAN HE KEEP IT UP?

The fact seems to be that by the law of heredity the accumulating energy of generations is sometimes stored up in one individual, who may be regarded as a physiological millionaire. Do what he may he cannot spend his fortune. Such a man was Charles XII. of Sweden, and such a man also was his great rival, the Russian Peter. The Swede, the Russian, and the German seemed to have been possessed by an insatiable, all-devouring activity; from early morning till late at night they were perpetually buzzing round. Charles XII. was killed when only thirty-six by a cannon ball. But for that accident he might have lived to a hale old age, for his various adventures in cold and in heat, in war and in peace, seem to have had no effect upon his constitution. At the battle of Narva, after he had had five horses shot under him, he remarked calmly, as he mounted the sixth, "These people find me exercise." William II. is quite capable of making a similar remark under the same circumstances. Peter died at fifty-three; and the only marvel is that he lived so long, not on account of his exertions, but on account of his excesses. The Kaiser avoids the disorders which told so disastrously upon the iron constitution of Peter, and with the exception of the abscess in the ear he seems to be as healthy as a horse. The exception is a considerable one, for apart from the intense pain which it sometimes occasions him, it is a kind of death-warrant which he carries about with him continually. As long as the abscess develops outwardly, he will suffer nothing beyond an occasional inconvenience; but should it turn the other way, no power on earth can save him. No thought of this ever seems to cross his mind. In all his speeches and in all his acts there is nothing to indicate any thought of mortality. It may be that, at the back of his mind, the thought that here he has no continuing city may urge him to more intense exertions, but if so, he takes care to conceal the source of the energy from all outside observers. Although summoned to the throne by the deaths of his grandfather and his father, which occurred within the brief space of a hundred days, the fact that he, also, must die does not seem to have been realised. In a general sort of way, of course, he admits that all men are mortal, even Hohenzollerns, but he never qualifies his policies or his determinations by the possibility of his decease. There is nothing like "If I live" about his decisions; he has made up his mind that he is going to live, how long he does not know, but for a good term of years, and every one of these he means to put to good account.

It must not be forgotten, in considering the activity of the Emperor's life, that he is always before the public. The work of others—of a London physician in good practice, of a leading barrister, or of an English Prime Minister—may be equally exhausting, but it does not show. The mere fact of being looked at ceases after a time to add appreciably to the daily task. At first it is intolerable to live in a glass case, but a Prussian king is born to it. When the Emperor Frederick, then smitten with his mortal illness, went to visit the tombs of his ancestors, beside whom he was so soon to be laid, an Englishman who accompanied him halted outside the church from motives of delicacy, feeling that the Emperor would prefer to be alone. A German coming up, asked him why he did not go in. On his explaining his motive the German smiled and said, "Dear me! do you think the Emperor would even so much as notice that you existed? He would give way to his emotion just as much if the church were full of people as if he were alone by himself." The presence of others becomes like the pressure of the atmosphere, of the very existence of which we are unconscious. Then again, the Emperor finds a safety-valve in his journeys. There is a solitude where no one intrudes on the high seas, and the weeks spent in mid-ocean afford him an opportunity for recuperation, of which he stands greatly in need.

A HOHENZOLLERN GENERAL GORDON.

The Emperor reminds me neither of Lord Randolph Churchill nor of Napoleon so much as of General Gordon. There is, no doubt, an immense gulf dividing the somewhat theatrical, intensely self-conscious Kaiser from the simple, self-sacrificing hero who perished at Khartoum; but nevertheless they have much in common. Imagine a General Gordon born Hohenzollern—born, that is to say, war-lord and emperor of a million armed men in the centre of Europe, taught from his earliest boyhood to consider himself the centre of the State, and surrounded by men in whose eyes he is sovereign by Divine right, and you would find him not very far different from the German Emperor. There is in both an immense capacity for hard work, in both an original and versatile mind, intensely interested in everything that comes before them, with a great mastery of detail, and immense power of will. In both there is the lack of deliberate study and consecutive thought. Men who think slowly seem to think consecutively; but men who think rapidly and intuitively are apt to be accused of want of steady application and concentration of the mind. To talk to General Gordon was often like following a swallow in its flight. His mind darted hither and thither, doubling upon itself and darting off at a tangent, in a fashion perfectly bewildering to those whose mental evolutions were more slow and cumbrous. In this respect the Emperor is very much like General Gordon. His mind darts hither and thither much as the Numidian horsemen careered round the march of the Roman legions. In another phase of his character the Emperor reminds us of General Gordon. Since Khartoum fell there has been no man of the first rank in Europe who referred constantly and publicly to God Almighty as a real factor in the affairs of this world. In this the German Emperor is like General Gordon. William the Second regards his Maker seriously. He seldom makes a speech in which he does not affirm his conviction in the existence and the governance of the Almighty. Like General Gordon, he recognises himself as a fellow-worker, in the apostle's phrase, with the Lord of hosts. The difference between them is chiefly one of temperament. General Gordon was humble and full of self-abasing modesty, never forgetting that if he were a partner with the Eternal, he was the junior partner. The German Emperor, every now and then, seems to think that he is the senior. Still, senior or junior, the partnership was to both men the central fact of their lives. When the German Emperor was in London the Salvation Army inscribed in front of its offices the legend: "God Bless the Praying Emperor." The Emperor not only prays, but is not afraid to seem to men to pray. His devotion is like that of the Mussulman who, when the cry is heard from the minaret, unfolds his prayer carpet and performs his devotions before the sight of all men. "You know," said he to the Brandenburg Diet in February of this year, "that I regard my position as appointed for me by God, and in this consciousness I daily labour; and be assured that every morning and evening of my life I begin and end the day with prayer for my empire, my realm, and Brandenburg, which is so near to my heart." Sometimes he uses phrases which seem to imply that he claims for the Hohenzollerns a peculiar and more intimate relation with the Deity than that enjoyed by their subjects. "The Princely House," he said on that occasion, "must preserve firm trust in God, while the people must trust in their leaders." It is not only in this recognition of the Divine ordering of the affairs of men that the Emperor resembles Gordon. He resembles him also in his keen eye for the picturesque and his sense of the sublimity of nature. Some of the Emperor's shorter speeches might have been taken from General Gordon's diaries. The oft-quoted passage about his having seen the starry firmament at night on the high seas, and ever afterwards having been able to look at political questions from the outside, is very Gordonian. So, also, is the speech which he made at Bremen on the 21st of April, 1890, when he said:—

THE EMPEROR AND CROWN PRINCE.

As a friend of maritime affairs I follow the phenomena of nature. When I sailed the Baltic with a squadron for the first time, the question of the change of course arose. The change was made, but the ships were separated in the fog in consequence. Suddenly the German flag emerged from the mist high above the clouds—a surprising sight which filled us all with admiration. Later, the whole squadron, accurately steering its new course, emerged after the fog had blown off. This seemed to me a sign. Whenever dark hours may come to our Fatherland, we shall reach our goal by dint of pushing forwards, according to the grand watchword, "We Germans fear God, and nothing else in the world."

There was the same kind of ring also in the telegram which he sent to a friend after Bismarck's resignation on March 22nd:—

Many thanks for your friendly letter. I have indeed gone through bitter experiences, and have passed many painful hours. My heart is as sorrowful as if I had again lost my grandfather; but it is so appointed to me by God, and it has to be borne, even though I should fall under the burden. The post of officer of the watch on the ship of State has fallen to my lot. Her course remains the same. So now full steam ahead!

WILLIAM.

The "full steam ahead" is very much like General Gordon, whose consuming activity continually drove him through all the obstacles which encompassed him, as the steamer drives through a stormy sea. There are other touches in his character which remind us of our great English hero. The moral atmosphere is the same. There is with him, as with Gordon, a sympathy with the poor and disinherited of the world. And again, there is the spirit which revolts against the luxury of life. No doubt the Emperor can hardly be held up as an ideal of Spartan simplicity with all his uniforms and his expenses; but his rescript against luxury in the army, and his efforts to simplify his life, would have found hearty sympathy in General Gordon. Gordon, although the most sympathetic of men, and the least arrogant, was a Puritan in the inner fibre of his nature, and so is the Emperor. He has a perfect detestation for gambling, and has banished all the officers addicted to play from Berlin. He has never frequented a gaming-table in his life; and although in no way ascetic, he does all he can to diminish the vices of society. He has always been deeply interested in the Berlin City Mission, and has given emphatic support to every effort that has been made to bring practical religion into the homes of his subjects. He has taken a keen interest in what would be called the Moral Reform Party in Germany, and is believed to be pressing forward legislation to repress drunkenness in the Fatherland. One of his last acts before leaving London was to present a handsome pin with the Imperial crown and monogram in brilliants to Mr. W. A. Coote, the energetic secretary of the National Vigilance Association, as a recognition of the services which he had rendered in rescuing some unfortunate German girls from the perils of the London streets. He has taken an active part in the defending of the Sunday against the encroachments both of sport and of toil. In fact, there is no crowned head in Europe who would serve so well the purpose of a patron saint of "the Nonconformist conscience" as William the Second.

II. KING BY DIVINE RIGHT.

It is very interesting to see in Central Europe, in the last ten years of the nineteenth century, a king who not only believes that he reigns by right Divine, but who is accepted by Europe as having a fair claim to that position. A hundred years ago the French Revolution proclaimed, amid thunder and lightning and earthquake befitting the final passing away of an old era, that old kingships had come to an end, that in the future the world was to be governed on new democratic principles. A full century has passed since Louis's head fell by the guillotine, and here we have the German Emperor, not as a pale and shivering ghost apologising for its return to the haunts of men, but as the governing fact of the whole European situation. Here I am, here I remain; sic volo, sic jubeo, as I will, so I order. Nothing can be more compromising than the assertion of the Emperor of his sovereign position. He is no make-believe sovereign who reigns but does not rule; he is the man on horseback and no mistake. None of the great sovereigns of the Middle Ages could more seriously try to play the part of terrestrial Providence. It is true, as he reminded us on one occasion, that he accepts the saying of the Great Frederick that the Prussian King is the first servant of the State, but that is quite consistent with his feeling that he is its master.

"THERE IS ONLY ONE MASTER, AND I AM HE."

There is a wonderful passage in one of Heine's best-known writings, in which he describes how he saw the Emperor Napoleon at Düsseldorf. "I saw him, and on his brow was written, 'Thou shalt have no other gods but me.'" At Düsseldorf, on May 4th, the Emperor William made a speech in which he asserted his right to a prominent position in terms so characteristic that they had to be subsequently explained away in an official version. What he actually said was this, as reported at the time:—

Now, as ever, I am assured that salvation lies in co-operation. That is one of the results of Monarchy. There is only one master in this country, and I am he. I shall suffer no other beside me. In this spirit I drink to the welfare of the Province. (Prolonged cheers.)

In the official version this assertion of his mastery of his country disappears:—

That I am now, as ever, convinced that salvation lies only in the co-operation of all the parts, and that one must therefore follow the Monarch in his efforts for the welfare of the whole, I drink my glass of German wine to Rhenish Prussia. May it flourish and prosper now and to all eternity! "Rhenish Prussia. Hoch! Hoch! Hoch!"

This homage is almost the only homage which he has paid to the modern spirit.

"SUMMUS EPISCOPUS" ALSO.

When he made his second speech to the Educational Conference at the close of last year, he asserted that he was not only king, but also chief bishop of Prussia.

I hear that at the opening of this Conference it caused some surprise that I made no allusion to religion. I believed that my ideas upon the subject—that is to say, how holy and dear to me are my people's relations to God—were known and understood by all. As Prussian King as well as summus episcopus of my Church, I will make it my most sacred duty to see that the Christian spirit be cultivated and religious feeling increased in the schools. Let the school respect and honour the Church, and let the Church stand by the school and help it in its work. Thus shall we be able to educate our youth and fit them for the requirements of our modern life in the State.

This position of chief bishop, although only explicitly affirmed on this occasion, is always constantly present to his mind. "A helmeted northern Pope," as Mr. Harold Frederic calls him, he feels himself called to check the sins of the world. He told his Brandenburgers on one occasion, in terms which might have been taken from one of the Pope's encyclicals, "A spirit of disobedience now reigns over the world, and is endeavouring to unsettle men's minds." But although it might make his heart sore, it would never cause him to swerve from that path he had marked out for himself. Obedience to himself forms no small part of the practical religion which he wishes to force upon his subjects. He has told us that his object is to restore respect for the Church, for the law, and implicit obedience to the Crown and its wearers.

KINGSHIP BY THE GRACE OF GOD.

At Königsberg, in May, 1890, he referred to the fact that his grandfather had proclaimed, in a church in that city, his kingship by the grace of God. "This kingship by the grace of God," he said, "expresses the fact that we Hohenzollerns accept our mission only from Heaven, and are responsible to Heaven for the performance of its duties. I am animated by this view, and am resolved to act and govern on this principle." Not only does the Kaiser reign by Divine right, but he exercises authority by virtue of his superior capacity to see what people need to help them to get it. "The King of Prussia," he said, on the same occasion, "stands so high above party and party conflict, that, seeking the best interests of all, he is in a position of making every individual and every province in his kingdom his care. I know very well in your case where the shoe pinches, and have formed my plans accordingly." Again he said to his Brandenburgers in March last year, "I see in the people of the land which has descended unto me a talent entrusted to me by God, which, as the Bible says, it is my duty to increase, and for which I shall have to give an account. I mean with all my strength to trade so with my talent that I hope to add many to it. Those who help me be they heartily welcome; those who oppose me I will dash in pieces." In the second year of his reign he is said to have asserted in blunt terms, "All existing parties are old rubbish. I only know two parties: one for me, and the other against me." He tells us that he hopes with all his heart that he will be able to accomplish the work of raising the people's sense of religion, of Christian discipline and morals, which he has set before himself as an ideal. With all this he regards himself as a constitutional king. He told the first Prussian Diet which he opened, "I am far from aiming at the enlargement of the prerogatives of the Crown, and thus shaking confidence in the stability of the legal conditions under which we are governed. The legal status of my rights, so long as it is not called in question, is sufficient to supply to the State that measure of monarchical influence which Prussia requires in pursuance of its historical development as from the manner in which each is constituted."

III. AN ARMED APOSTLE OF PEACE.

Apart from his personality, the policy of the German Emperor naturally excites widespread interest. To Germans and non-Germans alike his foreign policy is more important than the policy which he pursues at home, for foreign policy means life or death, whereas home policy only means comfort or discomfort. Before his accession the Emperor was believed to be heart and soul a man of war, and his vehement repudiation of all war-like hankering does not altogether reassure Europe. All that men say is that they hope he will continue of the same mind, but that with a young man of such strong impulses there is no saying how soon he may change his policy and be as enthusiastic for war as he is now enthusiastic for peace. No one—outside France—has any doubt as to the sincerity of the Kaiser's anxiety for peace. Germany has dined. She only asks now for tranquillity in order to digest. Germany has nothing to gain by war and much to lose. The Kaiser would be a fool, as well as a criminal, if he were to pick a quarrel with any one. To do him justice, he has always recognised this in the frankest possible way. His declarations on the subject have never varied.

"METHINKS THE KAISER DOETH PROTEST TOO MUCH."

Yet there is a certain overstrained emphasis about the pacific protestations of the young Teutonic Mars which makes us uneasy. Methinks the Kaiser doth protest too much. Take for instance this:—

I shall be glad if, by the assistance of Heaven, I shall be able to govern my country in peace. I only wish the European peace was lying in my hand; then I would take good care that it should never be disturbed. However that may be, I shall at all events leave nothing untried, and, as far as I am concerned, labour that it may not be disturbed.

If only one were God Almighty, all would go well! No doubt. But then when one is not God Almighty! Ah then, accidents may happen even in the best regulated families. And if through any untoward event, which can be only too easily imagined, this impulsive young man were to arrive at one of his firm convictions that peace could only be attained through war, why then, who knows how soon, relying upon the assistance of Heaven, he might plunge for war as heavily as he now plunges for peace. He is the crowned plunger of the Continent, and a plunger who can carry three millions of armed fighting men with him into the abyss is a portent indeed.

THE JUSTIFICATION OF ARMAMENTS.

The ordinary sneer of the disarmament people at an apostle of peace who is armed to the teeth is silly, and due to their happy ignorance of the conditions of existence in States which were never blessed with a streak of silver sea as a natural and insuperable barrier against invasion. Apart from the absolute necessity of maintaining an armament large enough to safeguard the frontiers of Germany, it is idle to expect the heir of the Great Frederick and of the fighting Hohenzollerns to see things through the spectacles of the Peace Society. We have surely seen enough of the folly of that among our own kinsfolk. No humanitarian expressed so vigorously the Peace Society view of war as the author of the "Biglow Papers"; but it was the self-same singer who declared—

Ez fer war I call it murder, there you have it plain and flat,
And I need to go no furdur than my Testament for that—who, when the unity of the Republic was in danger, cried :

God give us peace ; not such as lulls to sleep,
But sword on thigh and brow with purpose knit !
And let our Ship of State to harbour sweep,
Her ports all up, her battle lanterns lit,
And her leashed thunders gathering for their leap.

The Emperor was born in Lowell's later phase ; he never experienced the former, nor, indeed, would disarmament make for peace. A reduction of the armaments of Europe by one half would more than double the danger of an immediate outbreak of war ; it is the very immensity of the stake that makes the possible players hold their hand.

HIS PACIFIC PLEDGES.

It may not be useless to string a few of them together, beginning with the speech he made before his accession, and winding up with his speech in the Guildhall. Addressing the Brandenburg Diet, when he was still Prince William, in February 1888, he said :—

I am well aware that the public at large, especially abroad, imputes to me a thoughtless inclination for war and a craving for glory. God preserve me from such criminal levity. I repudiate such imputations with indignation.

When he opened his first Reichsrath, June 25, 1888, he was very explicit on this point. He said :—

In foreign politics I am resolved to maintain peace with every one so far as lies in my power. My love for the German army and my position in it will never allow me to jeopardise for the country the benefits of peace unless the necessity is forced upon us by an attack upon the Empire or on its allies. Our army is intended to assure peace to us, or, if peace is broken, it will enable us to fight for peace with honour. With God's help it will be possible for the army to do this by reason of the strength which it has derived from the military law recently passed by you unanimously. To use this strength for aggressive war is far from my heart. Germany needs neither fresh military glory nor any conquests since she has finally won for herself by fighting the right to exist as a united and independent nation.

At least as emphatic was his declaration to the Reichstag on November 22, 1888 :—

Our relations with all foreign Governments are peaceful, and my efforts are constantly directed to strengthening the peace. Our alliance with Austria and Italy has no other purpose. To bring upon Germany, without necessity, the sufferings of war, even by a victorious war, I should not regard as reconcilable with my Christian faith and with my duties which, as Emperor, I have taken upon myself towards the German people. With this conviction, I considered it my duty, soon after my accession, personally to greet, not only my allies in the Empire, but also neighbouring friendly sovereigns, and to seek to come to an understanding with them in regard to the fulfilment of the task which God has given us, viz., the task of securing peace and prosperity to our respective peoples so far as this depends upon our wills. The confidence shown in me and in my policy at all the Courts I visited gives me a right to hope that I and my allies and friends shall, with God's help, succeed in preserving the peace of Europe.

Early in January, 1889, when he opened the Prussian Parliament, he told his subjects :—

You will be able to commence your work the more cheerfully, inasmuch as the relations of the Empire to all foreign States are friendly, and because from my visits to friendly rulers I gathered the conviction that we may confidently cherish the hope of the continued preservation of peace.

Twelve months later he assured the Diet that "to the joy of the Emperor and King, Germany's relations with foreign Powers are everywhere good." In April, 1890, speaking on board the Fulda, he said :—

If in the press and in public life symptoms of danger appear, one must console oneself with the thought that matters are not nearly so bad as they seem. Trust in me to preserve peace, and if the press sometimes interprets my remarks differently, think of the old saying of another Emperor—"An Emperor's words are not to be turned and twisted and quibbled over!"

Coming back to Berlin to open the Reichstag on May 6th, 1890, he said :—

To maintain peace on a durable basis is the unceasing object of my efforts. I may express the conviction that I have succeeded in inspiring all foreign Governments with confidence in the loyalty of my policy in this respect. The German people recognise, as do I and the august Princes of the Confederation, that it is the duty of the Empire to protect the peace by maintaining our defensive alliances and friendly relations with foreign Powers, and in so doing to ensure the advance of well being and civilisation. But in order to accomplish this task the Empire has need of a military power in proportion to the position it holds in Europe.

After his return from Russia in August, 1890, an Austrian ex-diplomatist published what professed to be an interview with the Kaiser, in which he used the remarkable phrase that at Friedrichsruhe Bismarck had attempted to force upon him perpetual war abroad and war at home :—

Well, I determined to have peace, and shall force peace upon the domestic foes of the Empire, as well as upon its foreign enemies. I must complete the work which my grandfather, who died too soon, had not time to accomplish—Germany united and Europe pacified, that is my grand dream.

In November he told the Prussian Parliament that—

In view of the friendly relations of the Empire to all foreign States, which have been still further strengthened in the course of the year, I can look forward with confidence to the preservation of peace.

His last notable utterance in this sense was his speech at the Guildhall, July 10th, 1891, when he said :—

My aim is above all the maintenance of peace, for peace alone can give the confidence which is necessary to the healthy development of science, art, and trade. Only as long as peace reigns are we at liberty to bestow earnest thoughts upon the great problems, the solution of which, in fairness and equity, I consider the most prominent duty of our times. You may rest assured, therefore, that I shall continue to do my best to maintain, and constantly to increase, the good relations between Germany and the other nations, and that I shall always be found ready to unite with you and them in a common labour for peaceful progress, friendly intercourse, and the advancement of civilisation.

THE SHOUTING EMPEROR.

So far, therefore, as generalities go no one can be more deeply pledged to peace. But an Emperor is judged, not only by his words, but by his deeds. And even his words, have they always been so pacific ? The Emperor has made one or two menacing speeches, it is true, but there was not much harm in them. The most alarming was that which he delivered August 16, 1889, at Frankfort on the Oder, when he was but newly come to the throne and was still under the influence of Prince Bismarck. Gossip had been asserting that the Emperor Frederick, if he had lived, would have been willing to have restored Lorraine to France. It was necessary in the interest of peace to dissipate the vain delusion which such a report might have encouraged in France. Therefore the Kaiser spoke as follows :—

There is still one thing which I want to add, gentlemen.

We all know one another far too well, and I will defend my deceased father against the shameful imputation that he desired to relinquish anything of the acquisitions won in the grand time. I believe that we know—both in the Third Army Corps and in the Army there is only one opinion about it—that we would leave our entire eighteen army corps and 42,000,000 inhabitants lying on the field rather than abandon one single stone of what we have won.

There can be no doubt about the emphasis of that speech anyhow. It was shouted through a speaking trumpet, and for a time it affected the nerves of Europe. The only other speech which he made with a similar note in it, was his speech at Königsberg on May 9th, 1890, when he said :—

May the province of East Prussia increase and flourish ; may it be saved from war and times of war. But should it be God's will that I should be called upon to defend myself and to guard my frontiers, the enemy will find the sword of East Prussia not less keen than it was in 1870.

It was also at Königsberg that he said :—

It is my duty, and I shall take care as long as I can, to preserve peace. The consciousness that all Prussians stand shoulder to shoulder by their King, and are ready to sacrifice everything, gives the Prussian king the power to speak these words of peace with confidence. He is able to maintain peace, and I feel that those who should venture to break the peace will not be spared a lesson which they will not forget for a hundred years. . . . One thing I promise you, I shall let no one touch the promise, and if it should be attempted, my sovereignty will place itself like a rock of bronze in the way.

These speeches might perhaps have been spared, but a Kaiser with a turn for eloquence may be forgiven if he should sometimes yield to the temptation of sounding too high a note on the patriotic string without regard to the way in which it jars upon the ears of his neighbours.

HIS DEALINGS WITH FRANCE.

When we turn from speeches to acts, we find little to complain of except his headiness. His one danger is France. He needlessly fluttered the susceptibilities of Paris by proposing to take the King of Italy to Strasbourg, but he dropped the scheme with commendable rapidity when he saw the stir it made in France. At the Berlin Congress he paid conspicuous attention to M. Jules Simon, the representative of France. When he subsequently endeavoured to conciliate the Parisians by sending his mother to their gay city, it did not turn out very successfully. But that was not his fault. The visit was unduly prolonged, and Count Munster ought not to have allowed the visit to St. Cloud. But the attempt was well meant, although it miscarried. It convinced the Emperor that nothing whatever could be done with a neighbour whose policy was dominated by M. Déroulède and other "howling dervishes," as they were disrespectfully entitled at Berlin, and reminded him somewhat sharply that the only hope of peace was the isolation of France.

HIS RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA.

The real test of the Kaiser's statesmanship will be found in his relations to Russia. The story goes that the old Kaiser, his grandfather, with his dying breath bade his grandson be very considerate with Russia. The young man, on coming to the throne, at once rushed off to St. Petersburg, where, however, he does not appear to have got on as well with the Tzar as might have been hoped. But this was not to be wondered at. The Kaiser was at that time the blind vassal of Prince Bismarck. The Tzar did not like Bismarck. He distrusted Lord Rosebery when he was at the Foreign Office because he was so much with the Bismarcks, and he was certainly not predisposed to welcome with open arms the young Kaiser to whose youthful enthusiasm Bismarck seemed the demigod of contemporary statecraft. The second cause for the comparative failure of his Russian visit was the difference between the initial velocity of the two minds. The Tzar is solid, and a trifle slow. The Kaiser is a light-weight, and just a trifle too fast. Until the Kaiser slows up, the Tzar will not be able to keep step with him. But of these difficulties the first has disappeared, and it is now said that his quarrel with Bismarck began with a difference about Russia. The Kaiser now regards Bismarck with an antipathy compared with which the sentiment of the Tzar is almost affection. And the Kaiser is a little older and steadier and less of a fibbertygibbet than he was in 1888. There cannot be a greater mistake than to imagine that the Tzar has the slightest particle of sympathy for French designs in Alsace and Lorraine. His one passionate desire is for peace. When the French Ambassador, the other day, ventured to ask him whether if France went to war with Germany, she could depend upon Russian support, he received a rebuff which he is not soon likely to forget. The Tzar simply loathes the idea of war. He has faithfully abided by his determination to put up with almost anything rather than permit a war in Europe. If the Kaiser would but act with ordinary circumspection, he would find little difficulty in arriving at the most satisfactory understanding with Alexander III. The recent visit of the French fleet to Cronstadt, and the reception accorded it, proves nothing. If the Kaiser refuses ostentatiously to believe the sincerity of the Tzar's desire for peace ; if he parades everywhere his devotion to Austria, without even admitting, in a parenthesis, that the Russian ruler is as much devoted to peace as any one can be, it is not surprising that at last, sorely against his will, the Tzar is induced to extend some slight token of friendship to France. But that is not his natural choice. He hates war, and he distrusts France as a possible maker of war. He hates the Revolution, and France as the representative of all the political principles he detests. He has never varied in his desire to be friends with Germany, whose frontier marches with his, and whose power can keep Austria in order. He went to Skiernewicze to cement his alliance with William I., he would be only too glad to renew it with William II. But, in order to attain that end, the Kaiser will have to avoid getting on to the nerves of the Tzar. He has an open door before him in the matter. He has only to profit by the advantage of the dismissal of Bismarck, and to moderate the velocity of his thinking and speaking when he is dealing with the Tzar, in order to secure at least as much support from Russia in maintaining the peace of Europe as he is ever likely to obtain from England. The only public references he has ever made to Russia leave him quite free to readjust his policy in this direction. He has only once referred to Russia in a speech from the throne. When he addressed his first Reichstag in June, 1888, he said :—

Our existing agreements with Austria-Hungary and with Italy permit me, to my satisfaction, to cultivate carefully my personal friendship for the Emperor of Russia, and the peaceful relations which have existed for the past hundred years with the neighbouring Russian Empire, and which are in harmony with my own feelings and with the interest of Germany. With conscientious solicitude for peace, I devote myself with equal readiness to the service of the Fatherland as to the care of the army, and I rejoice in the traditional relations to foreign Powers by which my endeavours in the cause of peace will be assisted.

During his visit to Russia he spoke as follows in proposing the health of the Tzar :—

I drink to the health of your Majesty in remembrance of the traditional friendship existing between our peoples, which I received as a precious inheritance from my ancestors, and which I wish to cultivate also in future. Long live his Majesty the Tzar! Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah!

In the interests of the general peace he cannot do better than proceed with the cultivation of "that precious inheritance." He will find in Alexander III. at least as zealous a keeper of the peace as he is himself.

IV. HIS DOMESTIC POLICY.

Of his domestic policy it is impossible to speak in detail. When he came to the throne he was under the influence of the glamour of Prince Bismarck, "the standard-bearer of the Empire." He was content for a time to allow the great Chancellor to be his Mayor of the Palace. But after awhile he began to see that even Bismarck was not indispensable. Whether it be true, as rumour asserts, and as Mr. Harold Frederic repeats, the Countess Waldersee and other fine ladies wished him to break the Bismarck dynasty, it was certain that sooner or later youth and age would part. The only wonder is that the ascendancy of Bismarck lasted so long. When at last Bismarck fell—great was the fall of him. His letter of New Year's greeting received by the Chancellor on January 1st, 1890, concluded with a prayer that "God would for many more years grant me the benefit of your approved and trusted council in my difficult and responsible post as ruler." Three months had not passed before the Emperor sent to demand Bismarck's threatened resignation, and the Colossus of Germany had fallen to rise no more.

The Emperor, in selecting General Caprivi as Bismarck's successor, followed the lead of his grandfather, who long before his death had indicated him as the Minister who was not unfit to succeed Bismarck. Less than a year after Bismarck had gone, Count Waldersee followed him, not into retreat, but into the comparative retirement of the command of an Army Corps. There are probably not a dozen men in Europe, outside Germany, who could say offhand who is the successor of Moltke and Waldersee as chief of the general staff of the German army.

HEAD OF THE ARMY.

The real head of the army, we are to understand, is the young Emperor. As the Militär Wochenblatt told us on his last birthday :—

With him has begun a new era. We see fresh vital energy working on the great achievements of the past, but, with its ever new creative force, constantly bearing fresh fruit, not only in political economy and education, but also in the army. The education of youths destined for the army has been conducted into new paths. The cadets and young officers are no longer to be led through theory to practice, but are to learn to understand theory by help of practice. "The main purpose of all education, especially military education, is the formation of character." Our weapons have been improved; new instruments of combat require new forms, and an altered style of fighting cannot but make its way into practice. The new regulations show what this new way is. From of yore, the Prussian soldier has been accustomed to be guided in his conduct by the hand of the Commander-in-Chief. Our Emperor leads us on. We follow him to fresh work and new deeds in peace as in war.

To be followed "through thick and thin" in peace and in war is the Kaiser's ideal of what should be, and those who hesitate need not expect much regard at his hands. Perhaps the most characteristic utterance that ever fell from the Emperor's lips was that in which he declared that while he would heartily welcome all who would assist him in his great task, all who attempted to oppose him he would shatter in pieces. It is this disposition to play the rôle of the general shatterer when his will is thwarted that causes the public to regard with some misgivings his protestations of devotion to peace. To secure peace it may seem to him sometimes necessary to shatter some enemy, and if so we may depend upon it the shatterer will not flinch from his task.

"MY HIGHLY HONOURED TEACHER HINZPETER."

We need not accept in its entirety the estimates of Dr. Hinzpeter's influence upon the Emperor which finds favour with Dr. Geffcken and Mr. Frederic. That it is great is undoubted. He himself has told us, in a speech which he delivered at Westphalia—

I owe all that I learned in my youth, the principles and views in which I grew up, to a Westphalian—my highly honoured teacher, Geheimrath Hinzpeter, of Bielefeld, a Westphalian of the finest water. Through him I learned to appreciate the Westphalians as a people of sterling character, a people tough and energetic, not only in dealing, but also in fidelity.

The later period of the Emperor's reign, which dates from the fall of Bismarck, has been marked hitherto by the ascendancy of Dr. Hinzpeter. It is curious to see that both Kaiser and Tzar have found in the tutors of their youth their most trusted political advisers when they came to the throne. The only pity is that the Tzar had not a tutor as liberal and as shrewd as Dr. Hinzpeter, who, by the way, was selected for the post of tutor on the recommendation of Sir Robert Morier, who had discovered his parts when he was a poor and unknown tutor in Darmstadt.

A HELPER OF THE POOR AND DISTRESSED.

The characteristic of the Hinzpeter period of the Kaiser's reign is its humanitarian activity. When the Emperor came to the throne he issued a proclamation to his people, in which he said :—

Called to the throne of my fathers, I have assumed the Government, looking up to the King of kings, and have vowed to God that, after the example of my fathers, I will be a just and clement Prince to my people, that I will foster piety and the fear of God, and that I will protect peace, promote the welfare of the country, be a helper of the poor and the distressed, and a true guardian of the right.

The first year of his reign saw tentative steps taken in the direction of social reform, but it was not till the year of Bismarck's fall that the Emperor suddenly posed as the leader of the international social movement by by summoning the Congress at Berlin, which constitutes a landmark in the history of social progress. Six months before he took the sudden plunge, the whole question of summoning such a Congress had been discussed at the Vatican. The Pope recoiled, however, from taking the initiative, but it is by no means improbable that after a time he may summon a conference to inquire how it is that so many of the recommendations of the Berlin Congress have not been carried out. There is no doubt, however, that much was gained by substituting the Emperor for the Pope as the convener of the International Labour Parliament.

THE BERLIN LABOUR CONGRESS.

The energy with which the Kaiser drove the business through almost passes belief. In twelve days the Congress met, deliberated, decided, and dispersed, having drawn up a whole code for the amelioration of the conditions of labour which in some respects was in advance of our own legislation. The Emperor won golden opinions from those who met him at the Congress. Hewasindustrious, receptive, genial, and with an absolutely omnivorous appetite for facts. That he has a shrewd eye for an honest man may be inferred from the fact that he formed the highest opinion of Mr. Burt, M.P., whose simple, retiring character might easily have escaped observation from one less vigilant and shrewd.

In dealing with industrial difficulties in Germany, the Emperor has acted much as Cardinal Manning would have done if he had been crowned Kaiser. Not that the Cardinal would have so bluntly told the union delegates that he would shoot them down in heaps if they substituted riot for reason—that was the mere effervescence of Imperial vehemence; but he would have acted just as the Kaiser did in seeing both parties, in counselling compromise and conciliation, and above all in exhorting the employers to “loosen their purse strings.” His determination to make the State a model employer is entirely in accord with the best traditions of the monarchy. It represents a sense of moral obligation which, as Sir John Gorst knows to his cost, we in England have not yet attained. He has pressed forward the construction of cheap workmen's dwellings in the suburbs of Berlin, and has laid his finger upon the vital question of cheap transit. Special workmen's trains are to be established, hours of labour are to be reduced, rest on Sunday secured, and provision made for old age. The Pope's Encyclical is so entirely in accord with all that the Emperor has said and done, that it would not surprise any one to hear that it was true that Leo XIII. has been warmly congratulated by William II. upon the little sermon which has just been addressed to Christendom from the Papal chair.

HIS ZEAL FOR THE NAVY.

The Emperor differs from his predecessors in one important respect. It was Frederick who ridiculed the idea of war between England and Prussia by asking whether any one had ever seen a fight between a dog and a fish. The German Emperor is, however, determined to give Germany such a navy as to render the comparison no longer apt. The English blood in his veins is probably answerable for his devotion to the sea. Peter the Great first gained his passion for navigation from the discovery of an English boat at Ismailovo, and William the Second learned seamanship in a little frigate given by George IV. to Frederick Wilhelm IV. If “the grandfather of the Russian fleet” was really a gift from Elizabeth to Ivan the Terrible, then these Royal gifts have been as the seed of navies with which, whether as friends or foes, we shall some day have to reckon. As a child William was very fond of ships, and he enjoyed nothing more than to run about Portsmouth Dockyard whenever his parents were staying at Osborne. Of all his honours he is proudest of being a full Admiral of the British fleet, and he is by no means inclined to regard this as a mere honorary distinction. He desires to see the German fleet equal to any of the Continental navies, and he will do what he can to attain his ideal.

AN EDUCATIONAL REFORMER.

The Emperor's most valuable contribution to the thought of his time has been his speech on Education. It displayed freshness of mind and the usual intrepidity of the young Hohenzollern. He attacked the practice of subordinating German to Latin, denounced the preposterous partiality for the classics, and advocated the thorough drilling of all German youth in German history. His speech was a thunderbolt against the onesided cramming, which rendered it impossible for scholars to develop their bodies, to enjoy their existence, or to prepare for their practical daily work in after life. It was a sensible speech by a practical man, on a live subject of supreme importance, which echoed not only through Germany, but through Europe and America.

SOME PERSONAL DETAILS.

The Emperor's personal characteristics have been so frequently described that it is unnecessary to dwell upon them at length. He has a splendid constitution. His left hand is withered owing to the blunder of a servant who posted the letter summoning the doctor instead of delivering it, thereby -occasioning an accident at birth, the effects of which will last through life. He uses a combined knife and fork with one hand at meals, in this resembling Lord Nelson. Notwithstanding this drawback, he can use his injured hand, although it is four inches shorter than the other, in riding, and his right hand is one of prodigious power and strength. He is a fearless rider, and a good boatman. He fences admirably, and is a capital swimmer. He loves mountaineering, and in the chase he is a veritable Nimrod. Nothing comes amiss to him, from whales to foxes. He is a good shot and a keen sportsman. He touches life at many points and rejoices in them all. He smokes cheap cigars, drinks German wine in moderation, and takes beer, like all Germans. Mr. Harold Frederic says that he sometimes suffers from insomnia—a serious thing for a man who always rises at five and spends the day in a whirl of incessant work.

A REAL LIVE KING.

The Emperor has made kingship more vividly palpable before the eyes of the present generation. He may not be able to keep it up, but as yet there are no signs of weakening. So far he has, on the whole, done well. He has made no war. He has given a much-needed stimulus, and a still more needed direction, to the cause of social reform. He is as yeast in the midst of monarchical Europe. His activity has excited the despair and envy of the Prince of Wales, and his example tells everywhere against sloth and self-indulgence. He is a worker who limits his labours by no eight hours' stint, a soldier who is also a statesman, a sovereign who is full of sympathies with the labourer, and a patriot who is yet destined, let us hope, to raise the level of German culture and the sentiment as to women to the English and American levels. On the whole, he is far and away the most remarkable potentate now ruling in the Old World or the New, and his acts and words lend a new interest to the drama of contemporary history.

V. THE EMPEROR AND HIS MOTHER.

The German Emperor spoke of himself as having, like his ancestors, his finger upon the pulse of time. In the same speech he boasted of having mastered the aims and impulses of the new spirit that thrilled the closing century. He intended, he said, to lead rather than oppose the working out of the new and progressive tendencies of the age. This is to some extent true. William II. is no pedant. He has a mind open to fresh impressions. He listens to all, examines all, and advocates what seems to him the most practical improvements. But the ancient leaven of semi-barbarous prejudice with which he was permeated in his youth by Prince Bismarck is still perceptible. As Dr. Geffcken puts it, there are still chips of the old shell sticking to the newly-hatched chicken. Notably is this the case in his estimate of the position of women in the world. Bismarck's ideas on that subject are well-known. “Thank God, we'll have no more petticoats meddling in politics now,” was the exclamation that burst from his lips when the Emperor Frederick died; but the word he used was drawn not from the boudoir but from the kennel. The same ideas sedulously inculcated upon the impressionable mind of the young Prince still infest the mind of the Emperor. He has not yet sloughed all his Bismarckism. But there are signs that in this respect also he is emerging from barbarism into a more civilised state of mind. I use the word civilised advisedly. "What is civilisation," said Emerson, "but the influence of good women"; and it would not be far wrong to define barbarism as a state in which the influence of a woman is reduced to a minimum. From this point of view Bismarck is a barbarian, and the Emperor, in so far as he is Bismarckian, is but semi-civilised. Still, he makes progress. At Glucksburg, September 8th, 1890, he referred to his wife as "the resplendent jewel; the type of all the virtues of the Germanic princesses. To her I owe my being able to undertake and discharge in a cheerful spirit the arduous duties of my position." And again, in his second educational speech, he referred to "the mothers of Germany" in a spirit which showed that he did not at all share Bismarck's views about the absolute unimportance of woman's views on questions of State. "I am firmly convinced that the blessings and pious wishes of thousands of mothers will be called down on the heads of every one of you who sit here." Mothers! Yes, I think I hear some impatient reader cry, "But look how he has treated his own mother!"

THE EMPRESS FREDERICK.

There is no use in blinking the fact that there has long existed a very deep prejudice against the Emperor William in this country for what has been deemed his unfilial conduct. But for that his popularity in England would be almost as great as it is in Germany. It is therefore with all the greater satisfaction that there is at last good prospect of the old sore being healed. This is due, we have heard, to two causes. First, the blessed influence of time, "the sole healer"; and, secondly, the ripening manhood of the Emperor. His early attitude towards his mother in particular, and women in general, was due largely to the cowardice which certain classes of men always display in the presence of superior women. Some men never learn to respect women because they were born of stupid mothers. Others never feel quite sure of holding their own with women because in their home their mother was exceptionally intelligent. The Emperor, at the beginning of his reign, felt very keenly his comparative ignorance and inexperience. His mother knew how little he knew. She was never deceived by the parade of superficial omniscience. He felt himself at so many points her inferior that he had to shelter himself at every point behind the Divine right of the male in order to justify his position at all. This, however, was a temporary phase. It produced a certain brutality of self-assertion which was in itself evidence of a conscious weakness and inferiority. It is only the parvenu who needs be punctilious; the noble, whose position is assured, needs never "put on side."

SIGNS OF RAPPROCHEMENT.

In proportion, however, as the Emperor felt his feet, and really became more worthy of the position to which he was called, the less he felt the need of asserting his supremacy. Within the last year or two he has taken every opportunity of extending the olive branch. He has done it clumsily, no doubt. The old Bismarckian virtus still works in his veins, especially when doctors are concerned; but there has been a visible rapprochement, slight but unmistakable. When the Art Exhibition was opened at Berlin, the Emperor placed his mother on the throne, seated himself by her side, and in a well-turned speech declared he ascribed to her the whole success of the Exhibition. The Empress, no doubt, has not entirely surmounted the bitterness of the deposition effected by death. All her life long she had believed that one day she would be Empress. For ninety-nine days she was an Empress in name, but in reality she was only the nurse by the death-bed of an Emperor. After that she was the subject of her son, without whose permission she could do nothing. No wonder that the iron entered into her soul, and that the anguish of bereavement was intensified by what appeared the unnatural conduct of her son. In reality it was natural enough. The young man had to assert himself to a position of authority over his mother, who intellectually was his superior, and in self-defence he overdid the rôle of the dominant male. Now that he is better able to hold his own on equal terms, he no longer feels it so indispensable to rely upon the arrogance of sex. A well-based confidence in himself and his capacity enables him to smile at the cowardice which at first sought shelter behind so unreal a bulwark.

AN IMPERIAL RESOURCE.

The Emperor, so far from being afraid or jealous of his mother, is now able to realise how great a resource he has in her genius for developing those departments of culture in which Germany lags sadly behind the rest of the world. His own wife is absorbed in family duties. He has neither the time nor the inclination to attend to merely woman's work. His mother can fill a great void in the political and social economy of the German Empire. If he were but strong enough to make her queen in her own sphere, and recognise as dutifully her supremacy in her section of life as she recognises his in the affairs of State, and in the regulation of war and peace, the mother and son would be able to do far more for Germany than either of them could have done apart. I can pay no higher tribute to the Emperor than to express a hope, which is almost a conviction, that in the near future he will be the best friend of the Empress Frederick, who will then be his most efficient helper.

"I BELIEVE IN THE EMPEROR."

I asked an able and impartial observer in Berlin for an estimate of the Kaiser's character. He wrote:—

I believe in him. He seems to be a man with a very good head upon his shoulders, and a desire to do what is right. He is headstrong, and has a complete confidence in himself. Whether this be a defect or an advantage depends upon his wisdom. Strange to say, being a German, he is not a doctrinaire. He has the feeling that as head of the nation it is his duty to guide it, and, as far as he can, to inflict his will upon it, but in carrying out this view he will not be guided by simple theories. He will take circumstances into account, and show judgment as well as an inflexibility of purpose. His general life is guided by a high standard. He represses as far as he can, by example, all the usual vices of society; is a good husband and father; and one of his aims is to give a healthy moral tone wherever his influence reaches. He submits to no influence, and I am not quite sure that he is not a little hard and a little hasty in his judgment about persons and their actions. His line is a little too hardly drawn. If a man is not above it he is below it, and very few are constantly above.

That is high praise. Before accepting it as the last words on the question, most people would like to see the breach healed between the mother and the son. After that the Emperor has only to go on as he has been going to make himself the popular hero of the whole English and Teutonic race.

THE WORLD'S FAIR AT CHICAGO.

THE AMERICANS AND THE WOMAN'S WORK OF THE WORLD.

ONE of the notable events of last month was the visit of the delegation from Chicago charged with completing the preliminary arrangements for the representation of the Old World at the New World's Fair. To those whose portraits we give as the frontispiece of the current number should be added that of the Hon. Thomas B. Bryan, vice-president, which exigencies of space compel us to omit. From England, even more than from all the other countries of the Continent, the delegates have received a warm welcome, and everything that can be done will be done to make the participation of the mother country and all Europe worthy of the occasion. Mr. R. McCormick, secretary of the United States Legation, has been appointed English Commissioner for the World's Fair, Chicago, and has taken chambers at the Belgravia Residential Hotel, Queen Victoria Street. Before the arrival of the Chicago delegation Mrs. Potter Palmer, the president of the Woman's Branch of the Exhibition, paid a flying visit to this country, to which she will return in September. Her object, which commands the hearty good wishes of all those who are interested in the civilisation and humanisation of the world, is to establish women's committees in every country in Europe, for the purpose of securing for the first time in the history of the race a complete and worthy collection of exhibits of woman's work. A building is to be erected at Chicago, at a cost of £40,000, for the purpose of displaying specimens of the best work which women are at the present moment turning out all over the world. The board of women managers is appointed by the Government at Washington, and is presided over by Mrs. Potter Palmer, who is eminently well qualified to represent the women of the New World in this mission to the Old. When she returns in September, I hope that all the Royal women in Europe will hasten to give their support and countenance to the women's committees which are in process of formation, and which will work in co-operation with the general official committees that are being constituted. It is true that their Majesties, Royal and Imperial, cannot, unfortunately for themselves, visit Chicago, but they can at least accept the presidency of the women's committees in their own countries, which are to be formed for securing an adequate representation of the handiwork of their own sex among their subjects in the great World's Fair that is to be. The new departure of the American Government marks a new stage in the recognition of woman's place in civilised society, and as such commands the hearty support of all friends of progress throughout the world.

MRS. POTTER PALMER.
From a photo by Steffens, Chicago.

The city of Chicago—always and proverbially expansive and energetic—is now the busiest and most buoyant place on the face of the earth. It is one of the stateliest and most beautiful of the world's chief population-centres. Considered as soil in which to plant seeds of the highest forms of civilisation and progress, Chicago is, perhaps, more promising than any other large American city. The development of the New World that Columbus discovered four hundred years ago is what must, in the nature of things, be mainly illustrated by the Fair. The financial resources of the Fair are to be unprecedented. From £4,000,000 to £5,000,000 will be invested by the Exposition Directory and the Federal and State Governments, and many millions more will be provided by foreign Governments and by private persons, firms and companies, and by the holders of various concessions. The individual States will have appropriated in the aggregate four or five times as much as they appropriated for the "Centennial" at Philadelphia, and the preparations in general are upon some such superior scale of magnitude. The group of buildings for Exposition purposes have been, in the main, designed and accepted, and work has begun upon them. They will far surpass those of any previous international exhibition. The site—Jackson Park, including about a thousand acres, and lying upon the shore of Lake Michigan, on the south side of the city—will prove an advantageous selection. It is certain that Mexico, Central America, and South America will make extraordinary efforts to be conspicuously represented at the Fair. China and Japan, whose recent activities have been so obviously a result of the advancement and influence of the United States, will quite outdo themselves. The dedicatory exercises, for the sake of the observance of the Columbian quadri-centennial anniversary, will occur on October 12th, 1892. The Exhibition will not open until May 1st, 1893.

THE SHIPS OF THE FUTURE.

THE McDougall Whaleback AT LIVERPOOL.

NAST month the first McDougall Whaleback crossed the Atlantic, and arrived safely in Liverpool with a cargo of wheat from the other side of the American lakes. If the McDougall Whaleback can do all that its inventor describes, it is the ship of the future. The hull of the ship is built like the body of a whale; the men's quarters are in a structure perched upon the deck. Sea-sickness is reduced to a minimum, there is no freeboard offering resistance to the waves or the storms which may destroy other vessels, and they are able to carry or haul cargoes across the sea at an expenditure of one-third the coal used by other steamers. One illustration shows one of the Whalebacks on the stocks ready for launching, and the other the Whaleback steamer towing the Whaleback barge. The Colgate Hoyt made the passage in twelve days. It has a draft of 15 ft., and her engines are 850 h.p. The McDougall Whaleback, at first sneered at as the dream of a crank, has come to stay. At present it is used only for freight, but a passenger Whaleback is being built that is to run 22 knots. Owing to their construction the water rushes over them, and it is said to be safer to have a Whaleback barge in tow in a storm than to be without one.

Mc Dougall has now eighteen Whale backs on the American lakes, with a total tonnage of 50,000 tons. More are being built.

WHALEBACK STEAMER WITH BARGES IN TOW.

WHALEBACK READY FOR LAUNCHING.

FOR THE CITIZENSHIP OF WOMEN AND THE SANCTITY OF THE HOME.

IN the current number of Help is published a plea for the citizenship of woman and the sanctity of the home which was the substance of an address, part of which was delivered at the meeting in the City Temple, London, on July 20th, Dr. Parker in the chair. At the close of the speech I moved the following resolution, which, after being spoken to by the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, seconded by the Rev. A. H. Bradford, D.D., of New Jersey, and supported by the Rev. J. C. Kirby, of South Australia, was carried with enthusiasm:—

That while it is desirable that a General Council of all the Churches of all English-speaking lands should be summoned as speedily as possible to consider the grave moral questions now calling urgently for decision, this assembly declares:—

- (a) That the time has come for the practical recognition of the truth that the moral law is equally binding upon men and women, and that all legal disabilities now imposed, either on account of sect or sex, should be repealed.
- (b) That the exemption hitherto accorded to immoral men from the social and political penalties at present enforced against those guilty of fraud, perjury, or criminal cruelty, should be abolished, as such exemption constitutes a veritable privilege to adulterers not extended to any other class in the community.
- (c) That all State regulation of prostitution, based as it is on the enslavement of women for the convenience of immoral men, is accursed.
- (d) That the age of consent should be raised at least to eighteen years of age, and that all attempts to gain possession of the person of a woman by false pretences should be punished more severely than are at present similar attempts to procure possession of her property.

THE PROPOSED CHRISTIAN COUNCIL.

The Rev. Herbert Stead then moved, and Mr. G. N. Ford, Chairman of the Manchester Sunday School Union, seconded, the following resolution, which was carried with only one or two dissentients:—

That a committee composed of representatives of all Christian Churches be formed for the purpose of convening a General Council, with as little delay as possible, to afford the electorate in all English-speaking lands a clear and unmistakable expression of the voice of the Christian conscience on the relation of private character to public life, and that the following be requested to serve on this committee: Rev. Dr. Parker, Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Rev. Dr. Clifford, Mrs. Josephine Butler, Rev. Canon Scott Holland, Rev. Dr. Bradford, Rev. J. C. Kirby, Mr. B. F. Costelloe, Mrs. Browne, Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, Mr. W. Norwell, Rev. R. Abercrombie, Rev. Dr. Watts, and the Rev. Dr. Bevan.

A full report of this important Conference on Moral Questions, which was held at the City Temple, appeared in the Independent of July 21st.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

IN connection with the rising protest against immorality in high places, which is making itself audible in many places, I may make the following significant extract from the address delivered by the Rev. T. Bowman Stephenson, President of the Wesleyan Conference, at Nottingham, on Monday, July 27th. Dr. Stephenson said—

There are one or two matters at which we must glance for a moment before we approach the other subjects more immediately belonging to ourselves. For, looking a little outside our own borders, two subjects have been prominently before the mind of the Christian public during the year, and I make no apology for referring to them here, for they are certainly not subjects which by general consent are excluded from the discussions of the Methodist Church Courts. Party politics have no place here. But there are some topics that arise out of political questions, and yet are essentially moral and religious questions. With these we have to do. We cannot avoid touching them, and to one or two of these I must now refer. The great question of public morality has been before the mind of the country throughout the whole year. It has been brought into prominence, as everybody knows, by questions affecting the reputation of some of our public men. It is a matter for great thankfulness that in reference to this class of questions the public conscience is much more sensitive now than it used to be. Now, I do not intend to say one word as to the merits of any particular case. I do not doubt that many of the leading men in all sections of political life are as free from sympathy with wrongdoing in the particular directions at which I am hinting as any man amongst us here is. But it may answer some useful purpose if some one, speaking on behalf of his brethren, both ministerial and lay, should say that there are tens of thousands of Methodists and other Christian men who intend to put these questions above all considerations of party interest. It would no doubt be much better that some desirable measure should wait awhile—better even that this or that party should be placed for seven years in the cold shade of opposition—than that men whose reputation is notoriously bad should be permitted to share in the councils of their party, or take high office in the service of the nation. I wish to put it plainly. There are thousands who are determined to put moral questions so high above party considerations who will, if necessary, by abstaining from voting or voting on the other side, put their party in the minority, rather than allow men of noted immorality ever to be recognised as leaders.

REV. T. BOWMAN STEPHENSON, LL.D.

From a photograph by T. C. Turner, Barnsbury Park,

Dr. Stephenson, like his predecessor, the Rev. Dr. Moulton, signed the public protest which declared that the attempt of Sir Charles Dilke to return to public life was an outrage on the public conscience.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL ON LABOUR

BY CARDINAL MANNING.

THE Dublin Review for July, which publishes the text of the Encyclical in Latin, accompanies it by a paper by Cardinal Manning, who speaks of it in terms of eloquent appreciation

FROM THE WATCHTOWER OF CHRISTENDOM.

Since the Divine words, "I have compassion on the multitude," were spoken in the wilderness, no voice has been heard throughout the world pleading for the people with such profound and loving sympathy for those that toil and suffer as the voice of Leo XIII. This is no rhetorical exaggeration, but strict truth. None but the Vicar of our Divine Lord could so speak to mankind. No Pontiff has ever so spoken. No Pontiff has ever had such an opportunity so to speak, for never till now has the world of labour been so consciously united, so dependent upon the will of the rich, so exposed to the fluctuations of adversity and to the vicissitudes of trade. Leo XIII., looking out of the watch-tower of the Christian world, as St. Leo the Great used to say, has before him what no Pontiff yet has ever seen. He sees all the kingdoms of the world and the sufferings of them.

He defends it from the accusations of vagueness and generality on the ground that it is as impossible for the Pope to offer detailed and particular solutions, remedies and schemes on occasions, as it would be to dispense a score of prescriptions for all the hospitals of Europe. It was absolutely necessary to lay down broad principles which serve as major premisses in all arguments of the social order. The Pope has lifted political economy from the low level of selfishness in profit and loss to the high, true level of social economy. He then discusses the Encyclical in all its four parts:—

The first treats of the origin and constitution of human society. The second shows the unnatural, abnormal, and subversive nature of what is called Socialism. The third treats of the intervention of the State in social questions. The fourth and last treats of the liberty, duties and co-operation of workers, both men and women. We will follow this order in commenting upon it.

THE RECOGNITION OF THE RIGHT TO STRIKE.

The Cardinal fears that many who read the Encyclical will fail to reach its depth and far-reaching annunciation of primary truths, which are the bases and constructive laws of human society. After explaining what the Pope teaches as to socialism and the remedies for the evils from which society suffers, he says: Not only does the Pope recognise the right of association, but he insists upon the right of the workman to strike against long hours.

It follows that to work sixteen or eighteen hours a day is contrary both to natural and to Christian law. It springs either from the recklessness of the employed, or the covetousness of the employer. This is a just condemnation of the state of many of our industries, under which till now our people have suffered in silence. But they are now bid to make their burdens and sufferings known.

WHAT IS A JUST WAGE?

On the question of wages the Cardinal says that the Encyclical has given a very definite answer as to what is a just wage:—

"The remuneration must be enough to support the wage-earner in reasonable and frugal comfort." This is immediately further explained as "sufficient to enable him to maintain himself, his wife, and his children."

We have here the measure of the minimum wage. It must be sufficient to maintain a man and his home. This does not mean a variable measure, or a sliding scale according to the number of children, but a fixed average sum.

The policy of the law—that is, its aim and spirit—is that homeless men be few, and that the homes of the people be the broad and solid foundation on which the commonwealth, in all its social and political life, shall repose. We may, therefore, take the maintenance of a home as the minimum of a just wage.

It follows, therefore, that an employer who should take single men without homes at lower wages would commit a social injustice, full of immoral and dangerous consequences to society.

It is well to bear in mind that the oldest free contract between landowner and labourer is the métayer system, by which the annual produce of the soil is halved between the landlord and the producer. This still exists abroad. It bears witness to a law of proportion which is just, and it is a source of contentment and goodwill. Where there is no proportion, or no known proportion, between enormous and increasing profits and scanty and stationary wages, to be contented is to be superhuman.

THE STATE AND STRIKES.

The Cardinal then points out that the Pope justifies the action of Parliament, the Committee on Sweating, and the Committee on the Hours of Labour, and emphasizes the Papal declaration that the law should interfere to prevent industrial disputes from arising.

This, as he especially urges, ought to be provided for by voluntary tribunals of arbitration, composed of employers and employed in their respective unions or associations; and when no such provisions of previous legislation exist, and Parliament is not assembled and danger is urgent, it is the right and the duty of every loyal man, who loves his country and his people, at any cost or danger to himself, to come between the parties in conflict, and to bring them, if he can, to peace.

THE ILLEGALITY OF FEMALE LABOUR.

The Cardinal then pens a sentence which, if strictly interpreted, would destroy the whole of our cotton industry, which depends largely upon female labour:—

A woman enters for life in a sacred contract with a man before God at the altar, to fulfil to him the duties of wife, mother, and head of his home. Is it lawful for her, even with his consent, to make afterwards a second contract for so many shillings a week with a millowner, whereby she becomes unable to provide her husband's food, train up her children, or do the duties of her home? It is no question of the lawfulness of gaining a few more shillings for the expenses of a family, but of the lawfulness of breaking a prior contract the most solemn between man and woman. No arguments of expediency can be admitted. It is an obligation of conscience to which all things must give way. The duties of home must first be done, then other questions may be entertained.

THE POPE AS THE LEADER OF THE MASSES.

After saying that the words of Leo XIII. will sear our rulers until we raise the minimum age for child labour to commence to at least twelve, he concludes by the following statement, which is rather prophecy than historical fact:—

For a century the civil Powers in almost all the Christian world have been separating themselves from the Church, claiming, and glorying in their separation. They have set up the State as a purely lay and secular society, and thrust the Church from them. And now of a sudden they find that the millions of the world sympathise with the Church, which has compassion on the multitude, rather than with the State or the plutocracy which has weighed so heavily upon them.

THE PRINCE OF WALES.

No article published in this Review has attracted as much attention and occasioned as much discussion as last month's Character Sketch on the Prince of Wales. With the exception of the London morning dailies, who persist in the ostrich policy of thrusting their foolish heads into the sand, and then imagining that, because they see nothing, no one else is aware of what is going on, nearly all the newspapers in the three kingdoms have called attention to the Character Sketch, and commented, more or less lengthily, upon the political and social significance of the facts which were there set forth. From the mass of correspondence which I have received upon this subject, there is only one passage which I care to quote.

Mr. Arthur Wilson writes to confirm the statement that he never objected to baccarat, but only to high baccarat, and adds, what seems to have been almost universally forgotten, namely, that so far from disapproving of the game, he himself took part in it on both occasions when it was played at Tranby Croft.

SOME AMERICAN OPINIONS.

The need for action in the direction indicated is illustrated by the communications which reach me by almost every mail. Dr. Joseph Cook, of Boston, in Our Day for July, begins an article "The Prince of Wales has been proved to be a gambler," and proceeds:—

The clear light that has been thrown by the evidence in the case on the customary recreations of the Prince of Wales must seriously prejudice his future subjects against royalty. He is heir apparent to the British throne, but he is the leader of the set in which Sir Gordon-Cumming moved, the associate of gamblers and spendthrifts, and by participation in recreations which cannot be approved by any stretch of charity, has cheapened his birthright and shocked the moral sense of all virtuous people. The representative of the British nation and the civic head of the Established Church, for whom prayers are offered every Sabbath throughout the Empire, has been brought into court and proven to be the companion of cardsharps and blacklegs, and to carry about with him the implements of the gaming table. He has been arraigned during the trial by the Queen's Solicitor-General for violation of the military code, and told in unmistakable terms that the name of a gambler and cheat could not be expunged from the army list and his own name left thereon. Reverence for royalty in England has been scant in late years, but no utterance breathing such utter contempt of it and its selfish interests has yet been made as this impeachment of the Prince by an officer of the Crown for an offence against the military code and this threat of expulsion from the service as a gambler.

This American observation may be commended to Sir Edward Clarke as one of the results which follow the indiscretion of a Solicitor-General. Mr. Anthony Comstock, of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, in the same magazine, discusses the question "What Lessons has the Prince of Wales's Baccarat Case for Americans?"

The endorsement of royalty does not make gambling any less dangerous, any more honourable, or take away from it the shame of dishonesty. Gambling notoriously breeds crime. The "three-card monte" man carries his gambling paraphernalia around with him. Whenever he can secure an audience, he spreads his tripod sticks, places a little board upon them, puts his shells and his dried pea upon his board, and opens up business. It would appear that the Prince of Wales had his lackey carry around his lay-out. Whenever the Prince could secure an audience, the game opened. Intelligent minds can draw the distinction between the two. The act of the former kind of gambler is about as respectable as that of the latter. Lately I noticed a statement in an evening paper, that "the baccarat table at one of the Long Branch gambling halls was attended with peculiar interest, because of the recent developments and patronage bestowed upon this game by the Prince of Wales."

In the Andover Review for July, the editor, writing upon "Graded Immoralities," says:—

Less important facts than the fact that the Prince of Wales gambles have produced serious and even revolutionary results in political as well as in social life. This disclosure of the highly seasoned amusements of some of the aristocracy, and especially of the heir to the throne, may prove to be the little that was wanting to organise public opinion in England in favour of more narrow restrictions of the royal power, and of large reductions in the royal revenue, even if it should not lead to serious changes in the very constitution of the governing powers of Great Britain. The "Nonconformist conscience" is so aroused that there is almost a revival of Puritanism under modern conditions. It is a pity that one in so high a station should so demean himself, and that so many of the nobility should dance to the tune he sets; but, at the same time, the disgust of the great mass of the people shows that the moral tone of England has never been healthier than it is to-day.

General Adam Badeau, in the Cosmopolitan for August, writing on "Gambling in High Life," makes some extraordinary statements. He says:—

To-day in nearly every country house in England cards are played for money. Nor is the custom confined to the aristocracy. Plenty of people of religious character in the sober middle class lose their pound or their five pounds after dinner without compunction or criticism.

Commenting on the Baccarat trial, General Badeau makes the following curiously perverse comments on Lord Coleridge's summing-up:—

The game of baccarat has been officially pronounced illegal in England, and clubs have been searched in St. James's Street for noble players violating the law; yet the Lord Chief Justice stood up in his robes and demanded: What if the Prince did play baccarat? Was he not royal? Had he not a right to his diversions? The highest legal authority in the kingdom declared in so many words that if Lord Coventry and General Williams violated military law to screen the Prince of Wales, they did it "with the best possible intention;" if they condoned cheating at cards in an officer of the army, they did right, as soldiers and gentlemen—"under a monarchy"—to screen the Prince of Wales. So long as the highest English courts pronounce such disgraceful dicta, English justice is a farce—as, indeed, it always is when social prejudice or prestige is involved. But the English judges are never born in the highest rank; they must always be raised to their position, and they never fail to merit their social advancement by their servility. The rule holds good from Coke and Bacon to the present day. Lord Coleridge had the honour of entertaining His Royal Highness at luncheon day after day during the trial, and of course he said: "What does it matter if the Prince did play baccarat"—against the law. Nevertheless, there is just as high play in private houses in Washington as in London, and among people quite as distinguished for Americans as the aristocrats are in England. Judges, senators, cabinet ministers, and of late years fashionable women often take a hand. More than one, more than two of our recent presidents were gamblers, if a gambler is one who plays at cards for money. Every one knows that Clay was embarrassed by debts incurred at cards, and Webster was fond of his game; but the honour of neither was ever impugned because of his passion for play.

Baccarat itself was introduced at Washington more than twenty years ago. It was brought out by a British secretary of legation, who found it, he said, at St. Petersburg.

MARLBOROUGH HOUSE IN THE FUTURE.

The most amusing comments upon the suggestions which I made appear in Funny Folks, which I venture to quote as follows:—

Mr. Stead is ready with his plan for the emancipation of the Prince from frivolity. He must work. Let him start on a commission for the Federation of the British Empire. Let him look after the Colonials who are now snubbed at the Colonial Office. Let him work up a Labour Commission. Let him start as a Social Reformer. All this is "very well for a beginning," and when he has executed these tasks Mr. Stead will find something else for him to do. 'Tis a delightful picture. We can imagine it.

SCENE—Mariborough House.

THE PRINCESS. What are your plans for to-day, my dear? I hope you will be able to spare two hours for Lord Salisbury's dinner-party.

H.R.H. I'm afraid not. From ten to two I preside over the Commission for Inquiring Into the Effects of the Vaccination Laws. At three I am due at Whitechapel to address the Petticoat Lane Branch of the Society for the Conversion of the Jews. That'll last about two hours, and I shall only have time to swallow a chop—I suppose there is a decent coffee-house in Whitechapel—and get back to Lisson Grove by six.

PRINCESS MAUD. Whatever are you going to do at Lisson Grove, papa? I am told it is a very bad neighbourhood.

H.R.H. (sadly). So it is. I am trying to reform it. This is part of my emancipation scheme. A tea-meeting and the magic-lantern afterwards form the programme. We shall not finish till nine o'clock, I expect.

THE PRINCESS. Then join us at the opera.

H.R.H. (horried). What! and neglect my lesson in the Umsifootty language, when the envoys from South Africa are coming to-morrow! How could you, my love? Why, two missionaries who have worked among the Umsifootty-footies for three years are coming to coach me up at nine-thirty.

ALEXANDRA. Yes, I see we must let you off for to-day; but to-morrow surely you are coming to Sandown?

H.R.H. Unfortunately, the races clash with a discussion at the Chemical Society.

DUKE OF CLARENCE. But, sir, the races take place in the daytime. Those chemical chaps won't begin talking until night.

H.R.H. I am aware of that, my son. But the subject of the discussion is very difficult and obscure—nothing less than The Suspected Affinity of the Family of the Hydrofioisboioabominaleis for certain Members of the Group Tetrasulpholambustenchoxymanes. Two professors from the Royal Institution are coming early to-morrow to work up the subject with me. By the way, there's a chance for you, Clarence, to pick up a little chemistry. You had better stay at home.

DUKE OF CLARENCE (much frightened). Thanks awfully, sir; but I know I should be dreadfully in your way. I've got no headpiece for that kind of thing, thanks awfully. Besides, I've got an 'important' pointment. Promised to call on my shirt-maker. We're going to bring out a new collar. There'll be an awful rush for it. Do trade no end of good.

H.R.H. Anything which promotes the commercial interests of this country is commendable. Go on in that direction, my son, and you will earn the approval of Mr. Stead. But no frivolity—no cards.

DUKE OF CLARENCE. Oh, no, sir! I only play at "beggarmy-neighbour" now for peppermint-drops. By the way, sir, I wish you'd spare two or three hours for the Duke of Westminster's garden-party. It will be awfully jolly.

H.R.H. On what day does that fall?

DUKE OF CLARENCE. On Friday afternoon.

H.R.H. What a pity! As it happened, I did have that afternoon free, but unfortunately I wrote yesterday to Mr. Stead asking him if he could suggest any method of spending those hours profitably, and he proposed a little study of theosophy. The believers meet on that day, and I must go. I should not like to disappoint good Mr. Stead, who has done so much for my emancipation. And now, my dears, pray leave me for a time.

OMNES. Poor pa!

[Exeunt all, leaving the Prince solus to post himself up in vaccination statistics.]

GAMBLING AND BETTING.

BY THE REV. HUGH PRICE HUGHES, M.A.

IN the Sunday Magazine for August, Mr. Hugh Price Hughes writes on Gambling and Betting. He says:—

It is somewhat difficult to distinguish between gambling and betting. Both practices spring from the same root, a vulgar greed for money.

There is no doubt that gambling and betting have enormously increased of late years. The Convocation of the Province of York has issued an interesting Report on this subject. The evidence furnished by the parochial clergy, the municipal authorities, the police, and the governors and chaplains of prisons, clearly shows that gambling and betting have increased enormously. It has been estimated that the number of professional book-makers in this country is not less than ten thousand. The mania of gambling pervades all classes of society. We have just had most painful evidence that it rules the highest classes of all. But this once aristocratic vice has now percolated through every grade of British society down to the very gutter.

Gambling not only leads to financial ruin, but it has a peculiarly deadening effect upon the soul, even before the brutal consummation is reached. It produces one of the most heartless forms of selfishness, and is fatal to delicacy and magnanimity of mind. It is peculiarly mean, sordid, and brutal.

It is time to ask what can be done to stop the ravages of this gigantic national curse. Surely the first necessity is to discover and to state the precise evil of gambling and betting. Unless we can find some ground of objection to the practice of gambling, apart altogether from the amount of the money risked, we had better abandon all attempts to arrest the vice. Unless we can create a conscience on the subject we shall do nothing.

The best definition, however, of the essential evil of gambling, is given by Mr. Herbert Spencer in his intensely interesting "Study of Sociology."

Here we have a lucid and convincing statement of the two aspects of the immorality of gambling. First, it is gain without merit; and secondly, it is gain through another's loss.

Whenever the seller and the buyer are not mutually benefited the transaction is immoral and rotten, and involves dishonesty and deceit on one side or the other. The more the conduct of the gambler is analysed and pondered, the more it will be realised that at bottom every gambler is a thief; and that the commandment which he has broken is the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not steal." Gambling stands in the same relation to stealing that duelling stands to murder. In both cases the victim takes the chance that he may be the victor. But in the case of duelling the conscience of England no longer regards that as an excuse. The successful duellist is, in the eyes of the law, a murderer. The day will come when the conscience of England will be equally enlightened in relation to gambling, and when every gambler will be branded as a thief.

Judgment must always begin with the house of God. Ministers of religion and members of Christian Churches should at once set a clean example. The early Fathers of the Christian Church universally condemned the playing of games for money, and Councils of the Church expelled those guilty of the vice from the Lord's table. When the representatives of Christianity advocate an intelligible morality upon this question, we have a foundation on which to build. Much may be done by the State to prohibit gambling as a profession, and to punish with great severity third parties who come in to promote the vice. The publication of betting odds in the newspapers, the transmission of book-makers' circulars through the post, and the use of the telegraph wire by the gamblers, should all be prohibited. But these and many other obvious reforms will come within the range of practical social politics as soon as Christian men cease to apologise for the vice by explaining it away, or by justifying it under any circumstances or in any form, whether at the Derby, at Tattersall's, on the Stock Exchange, at a church-bazaar, or in a private drawing-room.

THE GERMAN EMPEROR.

BY MR. POULTNEY BIGELOW.

THE German Emperor naturally figures conspicuously in the magazines this month. There is an admirable portrait of himself and the Empress in the mid-summer number of the Century Magazine. The article is written by Mr. Poultney Bigelow, who worships the Emperor as if he were his most loyal subject. He says that the Emperor's power with his people arises first from his courage, second from his honesty, and thirdly because he is a thorough German.

Mr. Bigelow says:—

I am sure that few Germans who have not travelled in America are better informed of our conditions, our history, our resources, and our literature than he. When "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War" appeared, it was read by him with interest; as an officer in the army he attended courses of lectures on our principal military operations; and only within the past few weeks he was discussing with an American George Kennan's work on the treatment of Siberian exiles.

After referring to the Emperor's travels and his knowledge of the industrial features of every neighbourhood which he visits, he says:—

And it is rare for him to meet a man with whom he cannot talk instructively on the country or town that he represents. He does not waste time in these travels, but has a railway train fitted somewhat after the pattern of the Chicago limited vestibule. On the way he despatches state business, and discusses, as he flies along, any proposition requiring signature. His yacht serves him when afloat as conveniently as his train ashore, and both are so well used as to be always in the best working condition.

As an after-dinner speaker the Emperor has no superior in Germany. He speaks readily without notes, expresses himself with vigour, never descends to conventional common-places, and, above all, gives the very best assurance that his words are not prepared for him. I have heard conspicuous speakers in England and in our own country, and, if comparisons are not in this case invidious, I should say that the German Emperor need not fear to meet such an audience as even a New England society dinner assembles.

In spite of the pomp that custom demands of an imperial court, the German Emperor is a man of singularly simple and healthy tastes. When he is out of office-hours his recreation is largely taken with his children in their nursery, or dropping in at the house of a personal friend and begging a cup of tea and a cosy chat. He knows the value of knowledge, and while the machinery of his Government provides him with elaborate reports on every subject and from every corner of the world, he still prefers to study his people at first hand, and never loses an opportunity of seeing for himself what is going on about him. He reads, of course, all the new books of importance; sees the good plays, and assists in bringing forward such as have merit; he takes pleasure in running into artists' workshops at unexpected hours; is ready to meet any one who has an idea of interest.

When I think of him as the business manager of a practical political corporation, I am constantly inclined to look for the key to his success and popularity in Germany by quoting the laconic opinion of him expressed by an American officer who was presented to him for the first time at the Baltic manoeuvres in 1890. He came away from his audience flushed with excitement, and I expected a vigorous report from the fact that this officer had been drawing his impressions of Germany principally from Paris and St. Petersburg.

"What do you think of him now?" I said.

"Immense; he has a genuine Yankee head on him."

It need only be added that this compliment was the highest in the court vocabulary of my fellow-countryman.

Dr. Geffcken has an excellent article on the Kaiser in the Forum for July.

THE CONFLICT BETWEEN CAPITAL AND LABOUR.

A PLEA FOR CO-OPERATION.

THE Quarterly Review for July, discussing the question of the conflict between capital and labour, laments that there are now hundreds of thousands of Englishmen who possess no interest in the soil of England. Born in the slums of our cities, and receiving the wages of precarious hired labour; transferring their service indifferently from the casual employer of to-day to another the day following; without permanence of tenure, it matters not to them who owns the soil: their lot is that of aliens and strangers in their fatherland, and patriotism is a word without meaning to them. Two nations are in our midst: the social fabric is divided against itself. For many centuries, ever since the beginning of the system of payment by wages, instead of industrial co-operation there have been competition and opposition; instead of industrial peace there has been warfare; instead of union, discord; and in place of common interest, reciprocal distrusts and class hatreds. It was not so in medieval England. In those times the serf and the tenant of the soil, though bound each to his manor, so that he could not leave it without payment of a penalty, was yet sure of a permanent possession and interest in the strips of land which he tilled. He could not be dispossessed of that heritage: it was his inalienable birthright.

If the Middle Ages come not back, the conditions of the past cannot be restored, but something can be done towards remedying the evils of modern times by restoring something of that feudal relationship.

Nothing will so readily obliterate the bitter memories of the past, allay the hostilities of the present, and lessen or prevent enormous and deplorable waste of labour force in the future, as the establishment of a community in profits, and the extension of distributive co-operation into the fields of productive industry.

After explaining various systems of profit-sharing in France and at home—there are eighty-one profit-sharing firms in France, forty-eight in England, and twenty-nine in the United States—he suggests that those employers who doubt the efficacy of profit-sharing could very easily give the scheme a limited trial by admitting a nucleus of picked workmen to a share in profits, with a view of afterwards extending the favour to others. These workmen would become, as they have been in France, a wholesome influence, leavening and quickening the rest, who, attracted by the superior advantages of their position, would seek to qualify themselves for admission into the favoured inner circle. A bonus in hand is an object-lesson that must illuminate the most obscure perceptions. Very little supervision would be necessary in a shop where there exists such a select body of workmen, having a direct interest in the profits of the firm.

Profit-sharing, however, is only a half-way house; co-operation is the means by which the end is to be obtained. The reviewer says:—

The net wages of the working class of the United Kingdom, after deducting rent, rates, etc., are estimated at 350 millions at least. The vast bulk of this passes through the hands of shopkeepers. Assuming that  $\frac{1}{4}$  per cent. only were saved by substituting co-operative stores for retail shops, the amount gained would be 26½ millions per annum. Such a saving continued for fifteen years, and invested each year at 5 per cent., would be sufficient to employ all the working men in the nation. Again, assuming one-half the annual drink bill of the working-class section of the nation were saved, that would amount to £30,000,000. A few such years of saving would render workmen their own employers.

HOW WAR WAS BANISHED FROM THE EARTH.

A PROPHETIC STORY FROM AMERICA.

THERE is a wonderful little story in the Century Magazine, for August, entitled "The White Crown," by Mr. Herbert T. D. Ward. It professes to be a manuscript found between the leaves of an old Latin folio presented to the British Museum, and reprinted in London in February, 2891. It is supposed to have been a report upon the abolition of war from the world. The story tells how the armaments of Europe increased, until Russia, Germany, and France had almost all their men under arms.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE.

But Jesus Christ came to earth again as an unknown stranger, and organised in every country associates of the "White Crown." He passed mysteriously from one country to the other, speaking the language of each, and enlisting by the magic of His divine influence officers and privates alike in the new Order of Peace. Ambassadors wore the crown, and ministers and artillerymen and infantry. The story opens with the mysterious stranger in Berlin, where he had marched one morning from Potsdam with a detachment of the Pomeranian infantry:—

His forehead was high above the eyes, and of the translucency of pallid onyx. His eyes were as deep as a coal mine and as black; but from them there came a steady flow of light, heat, and emotion. When men saw his eyes for the first time, it seemed to them as if they had lived unlighted and unwarmed until then. His mouth was fine and firm, and yet, in spite of its gravity, there played about its corners a humour that made children run after him to play; but they never touched him, they knew not why. His beard fell full to his breast, and his brown hair with virile waves clung to his shoulders. The delicacy of woman and the strength of man were revealed by the texture of his hair and the spring of his pace. As he walked, his look was inward rather than observant. He appeared entranced with a tremendous problem. People were bewildered and awed, even humbled, as they looked upon him, and then they looked again. The power that radiated from this stranger seemed to be the power of a body tingling with every function of life, whose mind was dominated by a unique idea, which the soul in turn ordered to a final expression. Yet he stooped like one who carried a crushing burden, and his cheeks and eyes paled and glowed as if his were a hopeless mission.

THE ORDER OF THE WHITE CROWN.

The scene shifts to Paris, where he appears at the headquarters of the army and makes a covert of the commander-in-chief:—

"France is mine. Germany is mine.—"

"What—Germany? Mon Dieu! Who are you? Speak!" The Frenchman clasped his hands as only a Frenchman can.

"Austria is mine," continued the terrible stranger, heedless of the interruption, "Italy is mine. Denmark and Sweden are mine. Spain totters to my arms. Russia heeds my beckonings. England has resigned to me. Behold, I hold Europe in my hand; and when I open it let her kings tremble."

"Take me!" cried the man of war. "Take me for your comrade! I am yours. Believe me"—his voice faltered in his great emotion—"I swear it on my sword."

"Not on the sword, but on this," said the stranger, smiling. He drew from his bosom a plain emblem like the one the soldiers showed, and put it softly in the General's hand. In comparison with his claim for authority, the badge seemed singularly simple and cheap. It was of silver, unchased, unjewelled. The thin plate was cut in the fashion of a crown, and the whole was polished to a curious whiteness. The trinket fascinated the eye. Was this simple emblem bewitched or blessed?

"It is only a soldier's order," said the stranger, slowly, "but its possession confers the rarest opportunity and calls forth the largest loyalty of your life. Wear it, General la Guerre, not in my name, but in the name of your people, and in a greater name than that of France. 'For Christ's sake' is the watchword of him who wears the silver crown."

ON THE EVE OF BATTLE.

He goes to St. Petersburg, where he is arrested and flung into the dungeon, where the commandant belongs to the order of the White Crown, and he promptly escapes. Then the scene shifts again to Berlin, where the Emperor in a fit of indigestion declares war against France. The armies muster by the million on either side of the frontier. On the eve of the long-expected battle the mysterious figure of the Prince of Peace moves among the tents. The generals of the French army spend the night on their knees in prayer—

And in the midst of them the solemn stranger, lifting up his hands and voice to heaven:

"And do thou, Heavenly Father, bless the work of these hands. Suffer it not to fail at the last hour. With the strength and the faith that thou hast given me, do thou anoint these. May the sublime victory of the crown be guided and blessed by thee. For Christ's sake." As the singular group rose from their knees, he who had prayed uttered a last command—

"Let every possessor of the crown wear it openly upon his breast to-morrow, from the highest to the lowest man."

"NO MURDER—FOR CHRIST'S SAKE."

The next morning, when the two armies were in battle array, the Emperor discovers, to his amazement, that his troops had white decoration—the silver crown—which, when he inquires of the men, he is told has been given them by their sweethearts as a charm to protect their lives. Every one wore it, from the Minister of War and the Commander-in-Chief to the humblest private. At nine o'clock the Emperor gave the order to fire. The gunners remained motionless by their guns, refusing to fire a single shot. He arrested the gunners and repeated his command to the fresh gunners who came; but the new-comers were equally obdurate—not a gun was fired. "What means this devilish thing?" said the Emperor, shaking a lieutenant by the coat:—

He looked at the Emperor steadily. His eyes grew stern and proud. There was a triumph in his voice, like Cromwell's, when at his spiritual height he daunted kings. He spoke with the orotund voice of a fogbell on a dangerous coast.

"It means, sire, that the armies of Germany have sworn by the silver crown you hold in your hand to commit no murder—for Christ's sake."

Then said the Minister of War:—

"Your Majesty, we will command and advance for you, we will march for you, we will suffer and die for you, but the time has passed when we can persuade these soldiers, either for you or for any other king, to fire upon a man to kill him. On this they have sworn their oath."

The generals gravely nodded their assent to this extraordinary speech, and closed together. An electric thrill, leaping from file to file unto the farthest outpost, told the countless wearers of the silver crown that the crisis was at hand.

The Emperor stood at bay and snarled at his army.

"Is this, then, the meaning of your accursed crowns?"

"It is," answered Von Eisenach, laconically.

THE END OF WAR.

At this moment a courier rushed forward with a telegraphic despatch, and handed it to the monarch. It was from the general of the German forces on the north-eastern frontier.

"We have met the enemy. The Russians refuse an engagement. Our soldiers will not fight. There can be no war here. Men desert to each other's camp by the thousand, and are carousing with joy. Foes have become brothers. Send instructions immediately. Shall we go home?"

This was signed by the general in command.

The Emperor dropped the paper listlessly.

After a few moments he raised his eyes. They had a tamed look. Then the Emperor of Germany was heard to plead:

"But, generals, soldiers, Germans, will you suffer yourselves to be cut down by the enemy? Will you not defend your lives and your homes against the cursed French?"

It was Van der Weh who answered:—

"Sire, who are our enemies? We will defend our lives and our homes when swords are at our throats. But wantonly kill we will not, for we cannot. We have sworn it, for Christ's sake."

Then the monarch bent to the blow. He trembled like a baby. He put his hands to his face, and tears trickling through his fingers told his soldiers that a great military heart was broken.

Now there hurried into camp a second courier waving a white standard of truce, and bearing a letter from the President of France to his Imperial foe.

"Read it to me, Van der Weh," said the Emperor, not looking up. The minister read it aloud, omitting all preliminary titles.

"There is a devilish conspiracy in my camp. Not a man will fight. Sacré bleu! What does this mean? I will not surrender. May I have the honour of an audience with your Majesty immediately? We are undone. All hell is loose. Pardon my lack of ceremony, your majesty. I pray that you may meet me between our entrenchments at twelve, or I go mad."

The Emperor bowed his head and merely ejaculated: "I will go alone. Let us have no witness to that meeting."

"THE MASTER OF EUROPE."

The Emperor said:—

"I would speak with the Master of Europe. What is his name?"

The General tenderly turned the stricken Emperor, and pointed before him. The Monarch dumbly followed the direction of his officer's finger. On an eminence beneath them, and between the two camps, stood a man of imposing stature. Even at so great a distance he seemed to be surrounded by a halo of dignity that lifted him above ordinary men. Von Eisenach whispered reverently to his Royal companion:—

"We do not know his name, but he is called by us the Prince of Peace."

The Emperor trembled, but did not speak. Even as he gazed, the stranger moved. He lifted up his hands above him. One hand seemed to hover over the French army, the other over the German camp. It was a benediction, and he blessed them into one. As he stood with outstretched hands, the armies knelt. They tried to shout. They could not. Only the sounds of weeping fell upon the sunlight. As he saw a million men upon their knees the stranger smiled.

But even as he blessed the kneeling armies a white mist strode down the valley. Softly, like a dream, it approached the stranger, and when it had past he had disappeared and was seen no more.

SIDNEY WEBB's paper on the "Difficulties of Individualism," in reply to Mr. Courtney's on the "Difficulties of Socialism," will be found in the Economic Journal. It differs from most of the articles in this quarterly by being very easy to read, and there is no mistaking what its writer is driving at, which is more than can be said of many of the very elaborate but dull articles of modern economists. Mr. Webb might, however, have spared us the remark that "the progress of socialism may be compared indeed to the approximation of the hyperbola to its asymptote."

BRITISH FRONTIERS AND PROTECTORATES.

BY SIR ALFRED C. LYALL.

IN Sir Alfred Lyall's thoughtful paper in the Nineteenth Century for August, entitled "Frontiers and Protectorates" there is not very much that is new, although there is much that is thoughtful and suggestive. He points out that, while we have always had protectorates and frontiers, the new factor in modern days is the delicate and multiplied responsibilities created by the close connection between the central Government and the local administrators. In old days the East Indian Company went to war on its own account with Portugal, and the whole Government was absolutely unconcerned with its proceedings beyond stipulating that the King and the Lord High Admiral should have their fair share in the loot. Sir Alfred Lyall does not like to see our frontiers going forward. He thinks, with St. Augustine, that to carry on war and to extend the rule by subduing nations, is to bad men felicity, but to good men a necessity. He says:—

I am afraid that continual expansion has become part of our national habits and modes of growth. For good or for ill, England has become what she is in the world by this kind of adventurous pioneering, by seeking her fortunes in the outlying parts of the earth, by taking a part in the unending struggle out of which the settlement of the political world is evolved, as the material world is evolved out of the jarring forces of Nature. It is this constant opening of new markets, exploration of new countries, organising of fresh enterprises, the alternate contest with and pacification of rude tribes and rulerships, the necessity of guarding our possessions and staving off our enemies, that cause the steady enlargement of our borders. And it seems to me, though the prospect is a very melancholy one, that these are the steps by which the strong nations are making a partition of the lands of the weaker races, and by which all uncivilised countries will finally be distributed under the ascendancy of the three or four powerful capitalist communities who are monopolising the world's commerce. In Europe all these States, except England, are for the present restrained, and their forces diverted, by the supreme necessity of guarding their home frontiers from each other, by mutual distrust, by the enormous standing armies, and by the system of conscription, which pursues emigrants into the farthest corner over which their State claims authority. But, if ever there came a general disarming on the Continent, leaving an immense population free to turn their energies and capital toward what is humorously called peaceful enterprise, we may expect to see the contest for mines, markets, and valuable tribal lands become much more acute; and then England will no longer have such an easy time upon her innumerable frontiers. The old continents will be parcelled out into protectorates; the inveterate feuds among the European nations will break out over new causes, and upon fresh fields, while the antique societies and the inferior races will run much risk of being trampled under foot by the inexorable progress of our latest civilisation. For although we may be sincerely endeavouring to stave off and delay this consummation by various dilatory and benevolent expedients, it is difficult to resist the conclusion from experience that the system of protectorates implies nothing less than the gradual assumption of all the risks and responsibilities of ever-growing sovereignty.

UNWITTINGLY I did a worthy man an injustice last month. It was not Mr. Bassett, of Mill Hill Farm, Naseby, who sold the gold ring that was found on the battlefield, but one of his ploughboys. If Mr. Bassett had found the ring it would still have been in his possession, but the boy did not know the value of his treasure trove.

WHAT I WISH TO DO WITH MY MONEY.

BY BARON HIRSCH.

THE North American Review for July has succeeded in extracting a brief paper of four pages from Baron Hirsch, in which he explains in a few words the practical method he has determined upon for carrying out his philanthropic ideas. He tells us that it is his inmost conviction that he considers himself only as the temporary administrator of the wealth that he has amassed, and that he must minister to mitigate the sufferings of those who are oppressed by a hard fate. He does not deny the excellence of Mr. Carnegie's way of distributing his surplus money in building libraries, parks, and churches; but these minister to the æsthetic needs of mankind, whereas his object is to bring to the Jews who, after an oppression for a thousand years are still suffering in misery, the possibility of a physical and moral regeneration. It is his aim to try to free them, to build them up into capable citizens, and thus to furnish humanity with much new and valuable material:—

What I desire to accomplish, what, after many failures, has come to be the object of my life, and that for which I am ready to stake my wealth and my intellectual powers, is to give to a portion of my companions in faith the possibility of finding a new existence, primarily as farmers, and also as handicraftsmen, in those lands where the laws and religious tolerance permit them to carry on the struggle for existence as noble and responsible subjects of a humane government.

Baron Hirsch stoutly maintains that it is a great delusion to imagine that the Jews have no inclination for manual toil. As long as they were politically independent they cared for their fields and drove their flocks and plied their handicraft. It is only necessary to give him a chance of making his living under the same conditions which he enjoyed in Palestine for the Jew to take to the plough as a duck takes to water:—

Guided by these convictions, my course for philanthropic work was clearly shown me. By establishing organisations in the Orient and in Galicia I wished to give the Jews who had remained in the faith the opportunity of becoming good farmers and craftsmen, without removing them from the land upon which they were settled, and agricultural schools and schools for manual training were to supply the means for teaching them.

It is necessary, however, to adopt some other method for aiding those Jews who are driven from their country, and are obliged to seek new homes across the ocean. The question is, then, to help the Russian Jews who have just been exiled from their homes to find new countries where they can use their powers freely, where they can bring into practice again the qualities they have inherited from their ancestors, and, finally, where they can become useful citizens of a free and secure country in which the rights of all inhabitants are equal.

Yet I was obliged to confess that to increase to any great extent the already enormous number of Jews in the United States would be of advantage neither to the country itself nor to the exiled Jews; for it is my firm conviction that this new settlement should be scattered through different lands and spread over a large space, so that there shall be no opportunity for social or religious rupture. I made a study, therefore, of different countries, and after careful examination I have become convinced that the Argentine Republic, Canada, and Australia, above all others, offer the surest guarantee for the accomplishment of the plan. I expect to begin with the Argentine Republic, and arrangements for the purchase of certain lands for the settlement are now being made.

I do not undertake the execution of so weighty a work without much preparatory study as to whether the Jewish race has or has not an inclination towards agriculture. The following example will go far to silence any doubt in this direction and to prove the capacity of the Jews for farming and colonisation.

Some years ago several hundred Jewish families were exiled from Russia to the Argentine. In spite of untold suffering, in spite of the greatest hindrances which they encountered, they succeeded in taking root in their new homes. These same families, which a few years ago, bending under heavy burdens, appeared to be only wandering tradespeople in Russia, have now become thrifty farmers, who with plough and hoe know how to farm as well as if they had never done anything else. They lay out their farms in the best manner, and build themselves such pretty little houses that every one in the vicinity employs them as carpenters in housebuilding.

The knowledge of this guides me in my work, and I am now setting out with all my strength to accomplish it.

PRESENT CONDITION OF THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

REPORT BY MR. ARNOLD WHITE.

IN the New Review for August, Mr. Arnold White, who has just returned from Russia, where he has been engaged on a special investigation of the actual condition of the Russian Jews, publishes his report of what he has seen with his own eyes and heard with his own ears. He went out on behalf of Baron Hirsch to study the capacity of the Russian Jews for agriculture and colonisation. He had exceptional advantages, having an autograph letter from Pobedonosteff, and the Minister of the Interior wrote to all the governors recommending him. He had also the best of credentials from the Jews, and he visited three agricultural Jewish colonies, and travelled about from Moscow to Odessa and from Kieff to Wilna. The chief fact that he has brought back with him is that in the agricultural colonies founded by Nicholas in the Government of Kherson there are, at the present moment, 30,000 Jews, active, muscular, industrious, with all the characteristics of a peasantry of the highest character, and almost entirely free from vice. They have been moralised by the land, and Mr. White's conclusion is that, if the other Jews are allowed the same opportunities, they will turn out as well. Taking the Russian Jews as a whole, he does not think that more than twenty per cent. of the adult males are, at present, physically strong enough to bear the strain of settling in a new country under strange conditions; but the Jews, although poor in muscle, possess a highly nervous temperament, which will enable them to stand prolonged strain better than anybody else. The Jew is habitually temperate: he rarely drinks alcohol, rarely smokes; he is a good husband, father, son; he is not addicted to the use of filthy or blasphemous language; he is patient in trouble, and is most industrious.

If moral courage, hope, patience, temperance are fine qualities, then the Jews are a fine people, who are certain, under wise direction, to make a success of any colonising scheme. He is satisfied that there is no inherent indisposition to agriculture, and the whole of his witnesses were unanimous as to the absolute elimination of the evil characteristics generally attributed to Jews when first rooted on the soil. His description of the Jewish colonies is idyllic. There is a hunger and thirst for knowledge which is almost pathetic. Their moral and physical condition is simply marvellous. When he paid surprise visits to the homes of the colonists he found their cleanliness and self-respect universal. Well led and well organised, he thinks the race is susceptible of immense development.

His paper is followed by the ubiquitous E. B. Lanin, who, for the moment, has forsaken the Fortnightly Review in order to give the New Review the benefit of his denunciation of the maltreatment of his Jewish fellow-subjects.

SHOULD THE JEWS GO BACK TO PALESTINE?

NO! THEY OUGHT NOT, CANNOT, AND WILL NOT.

In Our Day for July, Mr. Cyrus Hamlin discusses the question as to whether or not the Jews should be restored to Palestine. It seems that a large number of influential Americans—editors, preachers, lawyers, philanthropists, politicians, and some statesmen—have addressed to President Harrison the following petition:—We believe this an appropriate time for all nations, and especially the Christian nations of Europe, to show kindness to Israel. A million of exiles, by their terrible suffering, are piteously appealing to our sympathy, justice, and humanity. Let us now restore to them their land, of which they were so cruelly despoiled by our Roman ancestors. This, they think, should be done by the American Government securing the holding, at an early date, of an international conference to consider the condition of the Israelites, and their claims to Palestine as their ancient home; and to promote in all other just and proper ways the alleviation of their suffering condition.

Mr. Hamlin points out, first, that the Jews have forfeited all rightful claims to Palestine; secondly, that the statute of limitation can be pleaded against a right of property which has never been asserted for eighteen centuries; thirdly, that the people who now inhabit Palestine are its rightful owners; fourthly, that the Jews hate agriculture, and those who have been taken to Palestine will not farm the land; fifthly, that the Jews who already live in Turkish cities show no wish to move to the Holy Land; sixthly, that the sacred places of Christendom could not be entrusted in the hands of the Jews; seventhly, that the Americans could not undertake the restitution of the Jews without plunging the United States into the Eastern Question; eighthly, that the return of the Jews would imply the expulsion of the present inhabitants at the point of the bayonet, and the forcible importation of some million of unwilling colonists; and ninthly, that the Jews do not want to go back to Palestine under the present circumstances.

The re-peopling of Palestine with Jews is a moral impossibility. They will not go there as a subject people. Home rule they are not prepared for. The land cannot be purified from that which would be defilement to a free Jewish state. They cannot be imported; or, if imported, they cannot be supported. Intelligent and thrifty labour may restore the desolations of the land; but for that the race is wholly unprepared. The men of learning and of moral power might form an oligarchy; but the manufactured Jewish State thus formed would soon destroy itself.

Notwithstanding all this, we may depend upon it that the fixed idea of millions of American Christians, that the Jews must be restored to Palestine, will sooner or later compel the United States Government to make a move in that direction. It would not surprise us in the least to find the stars and stripes floating over Constantinople in the early part of next century.

YES! THEY ARE GOING BACK NOW.

Major C. R. Conder, in the Scottish Review for July, writes on the Jews in the East, and answers the question in an exactly opposite sense. The present persecution of the Jews in Russia, Major Conder thinks, will produce, by the scattering abroad of the Israelites, results in foreign countries similar to those which resulted from the Huguenot dispersion, and, while injurious to the best commercial interests of Russia, will benefit other nations at its expense. Noticing the formation of the Society of the Choverie Zion, or "Friends of Zion," he shows how the drift of emigration is setting in the direction of Palestine:—

For more than ten years this movement has been growing. Colonies at Jerusalem, Artuf, Summarin, Latakia, and in the Jordan Valley, have been initiated, which have in some cases prospered, though contending against all the difficulties which want of capital and of recognition have brought. The number of Jews in Palestine has, during that period, increased from about 8,000 to more than 100,000 souls, and already, without waiting for aid, other families are setting out for Jerusalem from Moscow and Odessa. The Jewish Chronicle, which represents the most cautious and moderate Jewish views, admits that a "Palestine-hunger" has taken hold on the Jews of the East, who have no doubt discovered that the first venturers, who fled thither in 1881, have prospered more than they were thought likely to do. The old objection so often raised that the Jew will not engage in agriculture is not only answered by the words of their memorial, but has also been disproved by the success of Jewish agriculturists in America. The advantages of a similar language, and of somewhat similar manners in Palestine, to those natural to their race, are also felt, as compared with the strangeness of speech and custom in the distant new world, which alone seems open to those about to be expelled, unless permitted a shelter in the dominions of the Sultan or in Persia. The movement, at the very least, appears certain to add greatly to the Jewish population of Syria, and if as successful as its promoters expect, may in time make Palestine once more a Jewish country.

Major Conder also describes the Karaite Jews, a distinct stock from the Rabbinical Jews; the Askenazim, who derive their name from Ashkenaz (Gen. x. 3), an Armenian people, and represented in Europe by the Jews from Poland, Austria, Germany and Russia; and the Sephardim, descendants of the exiles in Spain. It is in connection with the Askenazim that the problem of emigration has chiefly to be solved, and they, by centuries of oppression and isolation in northern climes, are generally very poor and greatly inferior in physique and culture to the Sephardim, the most influential of the Jewish people.

HOW THE RUSSIAN JEWS COME TO ENGLAND.

MRS. BREWER, in the Sunday at Home for August, begins a series of papers on the Jews in London. She says there are now 80,000 foreign Jews in London, of whom 45,000 live in the East End. Of these, 25,000 are Poles or Russians; 40 per cent. of the Jewish population are occupied in tailoring, and of these workers two-thirds are women.

These immigrants are not conveyed hither in British ships, but in German vessels trading between Hamburg and Tilbury. The people are embarked without bedding or necessities, and huddled about all over the ship. Last year one line alone, trading between these two points, brought over 4,000 passengers, most of them Polish and Russian Jews, 80 per cent. of whom were destitute.

The German ships with their freight of foreign Jews, as a rule, reach the dock in the night, and discharge their passengers very early in the morning. The opportunity of seeing for oneself the actual condition in which they arrive, or the treatment they receive from those who loaf about the landing-places, is therefore rare. Fortunately on morning we were informed by telegram that a vessel was coming in, and, starting at once, we reached the Thames in time to meet it. On being rowed to the ship, we were glad to see on board the agent from the Jewish Ladies' Association, and a gentleman on the Committee of the Jewish Board of Guardians.

The scenes witnessed by the river-side are, as I am informed, sometimes heart-breaking; nor is it easy to see how things are to improve so long as the German ships are permitted to land their passengers when and where they please. As it is, the agent of the Jewish Ladies' Association, who attends every boat that comes in, does much to mitigate the sufferings and discomfort of the immigrants. Many of the immigrants have been sent by the Jewish Board of Guardians to Australia and America, where they are doing well. In 1890 they assisted 214 immigrants to emigrate; they are doing a beneficent work among the Jewish poor; they know their wants, their struggles, and help without pauperising them. The number of inmates passing through the Jews' shelter in Leman Street in the year ending October, 1890, was 1,399; of these 91 went to the United States, 269 to their native places, and 17 to other countries, while 518 remained in the United Kingdom; there is no record of the others. If we include the help given by the Mansion House Committee in connection with the Jewish Board of Guardians, the number assisted to emigrate last year was 415.

Mr. Arnold White, it may be mentioned, has returned from Russia, where he has been received with great kindness by the authorities, who appear desirous of co-operating with Baron Hirsch in the attempt to settle the Jews abroad.

WHY THEY LEAVE RUSSIA.

Mr. C. B. Roylance Kent, writing on the subject in the National Review for July, sums up in favour of the Jews. I quote from his article the text of the May laws.

(1) As a temporary measure, and until a general revision has been made in a proper manner of the laws concerning the Jews, to forbid the Jews henceforth to settle outside the towns and townlets, the only exceptions admitted being in those Jewish colonies that have existed before, and whose inhabitants are agriculturists.

(2) To suspend temporarily the completion of instruments of purchase of real property and mortgages in the name of Jews; as also the registration of Jews as lessees of landed estates outside the precincts of towns and townlets, and also the issue of power of attorney to enable Jews to manage and dispose of such property.

(3) To forbid Jews to carry on business on Sundays and on the principal Christian holidays, and that the same laws in force about the closing on such days of places of business belonging to Christians shall, in the same way, apply to places of business owned by Jews.

(4) That the measures laid down in paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 apply only to the Governments within the pale of Jewish Settlement.

ARE THEY A BLESSING TO ENGLAND?

The Rev. S. Singer stoutly maintains in the English Illustrated Magazine for August that the Jewish paupers, whose arrival fills Mr. Arnold White with such dread, are a very desirable class of emigrants. He says:—

The bulk of foreign Jews enter into no manner of competition with the British labourer on his own field. Among a thousand dockers, for instance, there may be one or two Jews, and they are English-born. The coal porters may be in favour of anti-Semitic legislation, but it is doubtful whether a single Russian Jew is to be found among coal porters. What the Russo-Jewish immigrant has done is to enormously develop one branch of industry—the cheap boot trade, and to create another—the cheap clothing trade. Time was when the British workman hardly ever dreamt of wearing any garments that had not first done duty to a more aristocratic body, and did not come to him with faded or “renovated” glories. Now he can attire himself in a new suit of clothes at a lower price than he had to pay for an old clothes outfit. There may not be quite so much style about the new and cheap article; but working men feel as keenly as others that there is a certain homely dignity in being the original and sole possessors of such raiment as they can afford. Who is it shall say them nay? If England to-morrow copied Russian methods and expelled her Jewish cheap tailor hands, the whole of the trade would pass to German manufacturers, already keen competitors with English houses in this branch. As it is, the Jewish labourer who earns his wages here spends them here. As to driving the native workman into pauperism, this flimsy charge vanishes before a couple of solid facts. At the moment when these words are being penned, two interesting pieces of information lie at hand. The one is a return of statistics of pauperism, issued 25th June, which points to this noteworthy circumstance, that the very lowest rate of pauperism ever yet recorded, whether in England and Wales or in the metropolis, was reached in the fifth week of April last. The other is a comparative statement of the number of paupers, indoor and outdoor, for the second week of June, during the last four years. The figures show a constant decrease, being 92,502 in 1888, 89,632 in 1889, 88,559 in 1890, and 88,231 in 1891—an increasing population with a diminishing rate of pauperism. What becomes of the contention that the Jewish immigrant is driving the native workman into the workhouse?

His paper is illustrated with sketches of one or two lovely Jewish women, who would be a desirable addition to any community.

PHYSIOLOGY AND PSYCHOLOGY OF THE JEWS.

M. LEROY BEAULIEU, in the Revue des Deux Mondes for July, adds an extremely interesting chapter on Jewish physiology and psychology to his series of articles on “Anti-Semitism.” Jews generally, he tells us, are longer lived than their Christian compeers. According to an American census, which he quotes, the expectation of life of a Jewish infant is fifty-seven years, while that of a Christian infant, born under the same conditions, is only forty-one years. Also, contrary to the usual Christian experience, the chances of life of Jewish men are greater than that of women. The race is often described in figurative language as a “masculine” race. It appears from the statistics quoted by M. Anatole Leroy Beaulieu that the epithet is literally applicable. Not only have Jewish men better chances of life than Jewish women, but the number of male infants born is greatly in excess of the number of female infants. It is also interesting to learn that though the actual number of children born is rather less in proportion to Jewish than to Christian parents, the number of Jewish children reared is much greater. Thus the Jewish population of the world is steadily increasing, not only actually like all others, but relatively to Christian races. There are also fewer still-born infants among Jews than among Christians. These facts are supposed to be directly traceable to hygienic and other customs which form part of the Jewish law, but with those that have been mentioned and a few others that are less notable, the physiological advantages of the Jewish race come to an end. Jews are usually undersized and ugly; they have an unusually high proportion of deformed people; and if they have few still-born children they have, on the other hand, a larger than average proportion of idiots. This set of facts is again to be traced to known physical causes. Psychologically it is to be observed that the Jews are among the most nervous people in the world. They have suffered for generations from the neurotic maladies with which the contemporary Christian world is afflicted. Probably the cause has been the same. They have for many generations lived principally by the brain, and though their abstinence from alcoholic liquor is a point in their favour, deranged intelligence is a frequent curse. That Jews are clever is one of the few facts which is universally known about them. Another interesting statement which seems to throw special light on the question of the political treatment of the Israelitish people is that in order to find the distinctive characteristics of the race most thoroughly marked, it is necessary to go East, where they are kept in the position of a separate people. As they travel Westward and become one politically with the other races of the countries they inhabit, the physiological and psychological peculiarities disappear.

THE LUCK OF LORD ARTHUR SCORESBY.

ONE OF MARK TWAIN'S STORIES.

IN Harper for August there is a brief paper, entitled "Luck," by Mark Twain, with the note, "This is not a fancy sketch: I got it from a clergyman who was an instructor at Woolwich forty years ago, and he vouched for its truth." The story tells how one of the two or three conspicuously illustrious English military heroes of this generation, whom he calls Lord Arthur Scoresby, was an absolute fool who owed all his success in life to having been born lucky. The reverend gentleman who is made responsible for this story told Mark Twain that forty years ago, when young Scoresby went up for his preliminary examination he was so stupid that the clergyman's heart was filled with compassion for his miraculous stupidity and ignorance. Thinking that he was certain to be plucked, he coached him in Caesar in order to give him a chance of falling easy. To his amazement, he went through with flying colours, by a strange lucky accident having been asked no questions outside the narrow limits of his drill. The same thing followed with mathematics, when, thanks to lucky coaching, he took a first prize. The same luck followed him on the outbreak of the Crimean War; he was appointed to a captaincy in a marching regiment. His instructor followed him, feeling sure that his blunders would ruin him, so he followed the simpleton to the seat of war.

And there—oh dear, it was awful! Blunders?—why, he never did anything but blunder. But, you see, nobody was in the fellow's secret—everybody had him focussed wrong, and necessarily misinterpreted his performance every time—consequently they took his idiotic blunders for inspirations of genius; they did, honestly! His mildest blunders were enough to make a man in his right mind cry; and they did make me cry—and rage and rave too, privately. And the thing that kept me always in a sweat of apprehension was the fact that every fresh blunder he made increased the lustre of his reputation! I kept saying to myself, he'll get so high, that when discovery does finally come, it will be like the sun falling out of the sky.

He went right along up, from grade to grade, over the dead bodies of his superiors, until at last, in the hottest moment of the battle of —, down went our colonel, and my heart jumped into my mouth, for Scoresby was next in rank! Now for it, said I; we'll all land in Sheol in ten minutes, sure.

The battle was awfully hot; the allies were steadily giving way all over the field. Our regiment occupied a position that was vital; a blunder now must be destruction. At this crucial moment, what does this immortal fool do but detach the regiment from its place and order a charge over a neighbouring hill where there wasn't a suggestion of an enemy! "There you go!" I said to myself; "this is the end at last."

And away we did go, and were over the shoulder of the hill before the insane movement could be discovered and stopped. And what did we find? An entire and unsuspected Russian Army in reserve! And what happened? We were eaten up! That is necessarily what would have happened in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. But no; those Russians argued that no single regiment would come browsing around there at such a time. It must be the entire English army, and that the sly Russian game was detected and blocked; so they turned tail and away they went, pell-mell, over the hill and down into the field, in wild confusion, and we after them; they themselves broke the solid Russian centre in the field, and tore through, and in no time there was the most tremendous rout you ever saw, and the defeat of the allies was turned into a sweeping and splendid victory! Marshal Canrobert looked on, dizzy with astonishment, admiration, and delight, and sent right off for Scoresby, and hugged him, and decorated him on the field in presence of all the armies!

And what was Scoresby's blunder that time? Merely the mistaking his right hand for his left—that was all. And order had come to him to fall back and support our right; and, instead, he fell forward and went over the hill to the left. But the name he won that day as a marvellous military genius filled the world with his glory, and that glory will never fade while history books last.

He is just as good and sweet and unpretending as a man can be, but he doesn't know enough to come in when it rains. Now that is absolutely true. He is the supremest ass in the universe; and until half an hour ago nobody knew it but himself and me. He has been pursued, day by day and year by year, by a most phenomenal and astonishing luckiness. He has been a shining soldier in all our wars for a generation; he has littered his whole military life with blunders, and yet has never committed one that didn't make him a knight or a baronet or a lord or something. Look at his breast; why, he is just clothed in domestic and foreign decorations. Well, sir, every one of them is the record of some shouting stupidity or other; and, taken together, they are proof that the very best thing in all this world that can befall a man is to be born lucky. I say again, as I said at the banquet, Scoresby's an absolute fool.

HOME LIFE IN FRANCE.

BY MR. P. G. HAMERTON.

MR. HAMERTON has one of his charming pictures of French life in the Forum for July. After describing the life of the aristocracy and of the wealthy classes, he proceeds to discuss the life of the middle classes:—

An Englishman who begins to know France is struck at first by the small number of servants in the middle classes. The incomes are usually limited, and the French bourgeois has long since come to the conclusion that a small house, few servants, and few children are the practical solution of the question how to save money out of a small income. The private dwellings of shopkeepers are often ill-arranged, badly lighted, and insufficiently ventilated. Some are so dark, so confined and malodorous, that one hardly knows how children can be brought up in them.

The following observations concerning the position of women in French households will be read with interest:—

French politeness to women and French kindness to children have placed men at a disadvantage in home life since the old paternal authority has died away. There is a clatter of small talk, and unless the father can take a share in it, he may sometimes feel solitary at his own table. He is but one of the members of a little democratic home parliament that receives or rejects his opinions without deference. Again, in French families, particularly of the middle classes, the preponderance of the mother is very strongly marked. It is easily explicable by very evident causes. She rules the house in detail, she gives orders to children and servants, so that the father appears infrequently as an acting authority. She wins power by her activity and attention to detail, and by her presence. The father is away during the daytime, and is considered to have but two duties in life, regularity in monthly payments for household expenses and regularity at meal times. The monthly payments are not seen by the children, still less the labour and intelligence that go to the earning of them, but they feel the maternal power. The servants are usually women, and man cannot command women; he may ask for services, gently—he does not give orders as he would to a man servant.

Rather overpowered at home by the feminine and infantine, or puerile, majority, the Frenchman often, though not always, seeks refuge in the café, where he goes for a little intercourse with mature minds of the male sex. Taking French life as it is, with the predominance in home life of the feminine and the immature, and the rarity—in comparison with England—of hospitality in the house, the café seems to be a necessary institution. The explanation of it is not the need of drink, which might be had at home, but the want of masculine society.

DO THE AUSTRALIANS HATE ENGLAND?

ALAS ! YES. BY MR. D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.

THERE is an article, melancholy though brightly written, in the Contemporary Review for August, which embodies a half-truth which would be very serious if it were really the whole truth. It is unpleasant enough as it is, but it is well not to exaggerate its importance. Mr. Christie Murray, an English journalist who has been on a lecturing tour through Australia, has spent two years among its people, and has come back with the Sydney Bulletin on his brain.

"THE MOST MISCHIEVOUS JOURNAL IN THE WORLD."

He says :—

The journal just named is very capably written and edited. The brightest Australian verse and the best Australian stories find their way into its columns. Its illustrations are sometimes brilliant, though the high standard is not always maintained. And having thus spoken an honest mind in its favour, I leave myself at liberty to say that it is probably the wrongest-headed and most mischievous journal in the world. People try to treat it as a neglectable quantity when they disagree with it. But I have seen as much of the surface of the country, and as much of its people as most men, and I have found the pestilent print everywhere, and everywhere have found it influential. It loses no opportunity of degrading all things English as English. England and the Englishman are as red rags to its bull-headed rage. There is a class of working-men who take its absurdities for gospel, and it is one of the factors in the growing contempt for the Mother Country which is noticeable amongst uninstructed Australians.

No doubt there is an element of truth in this, but to regard the Thersites of the Australian press as if it in any real way represented the coming conviction of the Australian democracy is to pay Thersites a compliment at the expense of the democracy which will be bitterly and rightly resented at the Antipodes.

THE WHITE AUSTRALIAN NATIVES.

The Australian Natives' Association, which so many people in this country persistently confound with a society devoted to the interests of the black fellows—for with us a native never means a colonist, but the coloured man whom the colonist dispossesses—oppresses Mr. Murray's imagination. He says :—

The Association is large and powerful. It includes within its ranks a great number of the most capable of the rising men, and of the younger of those already risen. Speaking broadly, its aspiration is for a separate national life. It will "cut the painter"—that is the phrase—which ties it to the old ship of state. There are many of its members, and growing in numbers, who hate England and all things English. There are men, not stigmatised as dullards or as fools, who publicly oppose the teaching of English history in the State schools. The feeling against England is not a fantastical crank: it is a movement growing yearly in strength. The strongest current of Australian feeling is setting with a tide of growing power against the Mother Country. That this statement will excite anger and derision in the minds of many Australians is certain.

The Australians who will be excited to anger and derision by this statement will have a good deal to say for themselves. At the same time it is well to recognise that those Anglophobists of the Antipodes have some reason to complain of the Mother Country. Mr. Murray specifies these reasons, one of the chief of which is a dread of immigration.

AUSTRALIAN ANTIPATHY TO IMMIGRATION.

England is the one country in the world which could, under existing circumstances, or under circumstances easily conceivable, seek to send any appreciable number of new people into the colony. Therefore England is to be feared and hated, and any scheme which may be promulgated in favour of further emigration is to be resisted to the uttermost. Men talk of war as the answer to an attempt to deplete by emigration the overcrowded labour markets of the home country. Australia will never, except under compulsion, allow any large body of Englishmen to enter into possession of any portion of her territories. The ports for emigration on a large scale are finally and definitively closed.

That Australians object to undesirable immigrants or to a mass of newcomers landed on their shores in quantities too great to digest is no doubt true, but it is the height of fantastic absurdity to imagine that three million people seated round the rim of a continent which is capable of carrying at least a hundred million can ever close their gates against the overflow of the population of an overcrowded world.

THE GASCONS OF AUSTRALIA.

Of the characteristics of the Australians Mr. Murray has a good deal to say, and says it very well. The Victorians, he maintains, are the Gascons of Australia; and he tells the following characteristic story of a Victorian at Westminster Abbey :—

An old friend of his father's was his cicerone in London and took him, amongst other places, to Westminster Abbey. "There, my young friend," said the Englishman, when they had explored the noble old building, "you have nothing like that in Australia." "My word," said the Colonial export, "no fear! You should just see the Scotch Church at Ballarat!"

AUSTRALIAN CHARACTERISTICS.

Mr. Murray questions the English character of the Australians, although nothing more strikes most people, including Americans, than the fact that the Australians are really Englishmen under a milder sky. Mr. Murray says :—

The first unescapable belief of the English traveller is that the Australian is a transplanted Englishman, pure and simple. A residence of only a few months kills that opinion outright. Many new characteristics present themselves. To arrest one of the most noticeable—there is perhaps no such pleasure-loving and pleasure-seeking people in the world. Again, there are more theatres and more theatre-goers to the population than can probably be found elsewhere.

Although he does not assert it in so many words, Mr. Murray implies that the real religion of the Australians is a worship of athletics. The worship that is accorded to successful athletes is in excess even of the popularity enjoyed by Bob Chambers, of Tyneside, in days gone by, or by Archer, the jockey, in more recent times in our own country. Yet the Australians, although given to the worship of athletes, are not themselves an athletic people.

The worship of athleticism breeds a professional or semi-professional class, but it is surprising to note how little an effect it has upon the crowd of city people who join in all the rites of adoration.

Mr. Murray believes in Federation—that is federation of the Australians; but if, as he seems to believe, the Sydney Bulletin represents the inner convictions of the Australian people, federation of the Australians is by no means likely to result in a wider system of federation with the English-speaking people throughout the world.

Mr. Murray is to follow this paper by another, which will be read with the interest naturally excited by any one who is fresh from the scenes which he describes, even although we do not altogether accept his sweeping assertions as to the trend of events. Mr. Adams in the Fortnightly takes the same view, but much more strongly.

JENNY LIND AND THE STAGE.

A METHODIST VIEW OF THE THEATRE.

THE London Quarterly Review, the organ of the Wesleyan Methodists, reviewing Jenny Lind's Life, devotes some space to the wider question of the moral atmosphere of the stage. The reviewer says:—

Jenny Lind's generous hope and aim was "to elevate the whole tone and character of her profession." And if any one person could attain that aim, surely it was this high-souled and royally-gifted being. But the enfranchisement of the operatic stage from its baseness is unaccomplished yet; not even Jenny Lind sufficed for such a deliverance, though she herself came forth unscathed from the fiery furnace, "nor had the smell of fire passed on her."

A recent critic has ascribed to Mdlle. Lind's "innate Puritanism" that deep inner repulsion for the stage which grew on the great vocalist amid all her dramatic triumphs, and led her at last to forswear those triumphs for ever, just when they were most dazzling. Her letters from Paris show that, not her Puritanism, but her purity, revolted from certain methods in vogue there to secure success for actress or singer, when they appeared before what she candidly called "the first audience in the world."

It was no preconceived Puritanic aversion for the theatre which made Jenny Lind, an actress from childhood, recoil from the system prevalent in the dramatic world of Paris—which bred in her the fixed resolve never to appear on that stage. Nor was it any mere prejudice of an inbred Puritanism, but only her own uprightness, simplicity, and spirituality, which revolted against the envyings, jealousies, and back-bitings inseparable from a theatric existence—crawling basenesses which the sun of her prosperity quickened into reptile life about her, till the very splendour of her great success in London helped to intensify and render immutable her resolve to have done with these things once and for ever.

And none can now say she did not well. Her greatness as an artist really gained when she left opera and devoted herself to oratorio. The delight she gave was not less, the power for beneficent utility was not inferior, the pure joy of the artist in her lovely art and its elevating influence was far greater than when she had worked amid the detestable tracasseries of the theatre. Never once did she repent or look back, longing, to the actress parts of which she had once felt the full fascination.

It is well to take note that though Jenny Lind, with her poetic spirituality, affords the most striking instance of a very successful actress becoming imbued with a deep abhorrence of the stage, she does not stand alone in it. Macready's "Reminiscences" testifies as strongly to the writer's aversion for his own profession, and the almost morbid dread he felt lest any of his own children should be drawn to embrace it—a dread which made him deprecate for them such shadows of acting as charades and tableaux vivants. This curious loathing for an occupation that brought both fame, and profit, and social success, is even more vividly expressed in Fanny Kemble's delightful "Record of a Girlhood," where that brilliant popular favourite, whose dramatic genius was a direct heritage from player-parents of stainless character, and who herself was sedulously guarded from the common perils of actress-life, bears, notwithstanding, her strong testimony against the calling in which she and her family had earned only distinction and esteem.

No one will attribute to "innate Puritanism" these instinctive feelings of the child of the Kembles, or ascribe to inherited prejudice the apprehensions which made her add to her daily prayers an earnest entreaty for protection against the "subtle evils" of her profession. What injury it might work to its most blameless members the girl had early perceived, in the "vapid vacuity" of Mrs. Siddons's latest years, in the "deadness and indifference" of a soul whose higher powers had shrivelled and perished in the stifling artificial atmosphere of the stage. That melancholy wreck of a fine intelligence and a noble womanhood was itself the most convincing argument against the life that, under the most favourable conditions, could produce such results. The vital difference between Jenny Lind and the two distinguished artists just cited is, that her testimony assumed the shape of a resolute act, and is therefore far more impressive than theirs, limited to eloquent words: her heaven-born wings of song enabling her to soar out of the prison in which they still had to drag their chains for years.

THE AFRICAN MADNESS.

IS IT A POLITICAL EPIDEMIC? BY MAX NORDAU.

In the Asiatic Quarterly for July Max Nordau has an article entitled "Rabies Africana: The Degeneration of Europeans in Africa." Nordau declares that the zeal for annexing African territory is a veritable epidemic, which is most deadly in those from whom mental health, wisdom, and self-control might have been expected. He attributes this mental curse to two sets of people: the hypocrites and the cynics. The hypocrites say they take Africa for the benefit of the natives, and the cynics say that we pocket Africa for our own profit. Nordau declares that the only European culture which we bring to the African is rum, and if its importation was forbidden half the interest in African culture would disappear. In order to enable the natives to buy strong drink they have to work. Why should the negro work harder than he does at present? Why give him a taste for intoxicants and cotton rags, which increases labour, from which he is at present enviably free? As for the preaching of Christianity to the Africans, Nordau thinks that many of them are capable of giving lessons in patience and toleration to more than one of the European nations who want to civilise them. As for the slave trade, that is largely due to the European greed for ivory, and its suppression is rendered impossible by European jealousies. Leaving the hypocrites he then turns to the cynics, and asks what hope they have of ever making money out of their possessions. So far as they have gone at present it would be cheaper for the taxpayer to pay the salaries of the African soldiers and officials and keep them in Europe:—

The inter-tropical countries of Africa do not allow of permanent European settlements, industrial operations, and the establishment of families. A German traveller has graphically said: "Where there is water in Africa, and something can grow, there the climate is murderous. Where the climate is healthy, there is no water, and nothing can grow."

The most virile white people degenerate in hot regions in a few generations, until they become scarcely more than the shadows of their ancestors, if they do not die out entirely from barrenness and disease. The settlers between the tropics not only fail to advance the civilisation which they have brought, but they soon have nothing left of their birthright except a debased language and the self-conceit of caste, none of the distinctive physical or intellectual features of which have been retained. The Equator will become (in case of European immigration) a fearful caldron for human flesh to melt and evaporate in. It will be a revival of the ancient Moloch-worship. The nations of the temperate zone will cast a portion of their children into the jaws of the fiery furnace, and thus manage to retain room for the remainder. Of the selected, healthy, robust, and cheerful Europeans in Dar-es-Salaam two out of three were ill. Those who preach to Europeans the advisability of settling in Africa can only have one object in view: to rid Europe of people who are in their way; but in that case it would be more honest and hardly more cruel to embark the wretches of whom it is desired to clear Europe, and to scuttle the ships on the high seas. Colonisation of the inter-tropical regions of Africa by the white man can never be carried into effect. If the schemes should succeed in enticing Europeans, the lot of the victims cannot be doubtful.

A FRENCH VIEW OF THE McKINLEY BILL.

IN an article upon the genesis, nature, and probable effect of the "almighty dollar" Bill, M. A. Moireau makes an interesting contribution to the very excellent series of articles upon America which is from time to time continued in the Revue des Deux Mondes.

ALMIGHTY DOLLAR POLITICS.

M. Moireau treats the bill as an immense exemplification of the "almighty dollar" politics of the United States, and speaks of it frankly as a measure purchased by the manufacturers of the country in the belief that by destroying external trade they would develop internal industry. That it was intended, not only to tax, but to destroy external trade is, he thinks, proved by the previous and less famous bill for the recovery of customs duties, which stands also on the American Statute Book in the name of Mr. William McKinley. Speaking of the first bill, in which it will be remembered that penalties of unprecedented severity, including fines amounting to 5,000 dollars and imprisonment for a term of two years, are decreed against exporters and importers convicted of cheating the customs revenue of its due, he says: "The bill might have had for its epigraph, All European manufacturers who send goods to the United States are malefactors; all agents and consignees who aid in the introduction of these goods through the ports of the United States are scoundrels."

THE MANUFACTURERS' BARGAIN.

After describing the measures of truly Russian autocracy by which alone the energetic speaker, Mr. Reed, was able to force the bill through the Lower House, and the important and again extraordinarily autocratic modifications which were imposed in the Senate, M. Moireau assigns the following justification for the light in which he himself persists in regarding the Act:—

If we seek for the causes of the singular animosity against the importation of foreign goods which is revealed by the entire course of this legislation we find, to begin with, one which is far from honourable; the contract, namely, which was concluded at the time of the Presidential election in 1888 between the leaders of the Republican Party and the phalanx of great manufacturers who were ready to furnish the sinews of war. The manufacturers gave millions for the electoral campaign; the Republican chiefs promised in return uncompromising protection in order that the manufacturers might recover from the mass of the consumers the sums advanced to the party. The McKinley Act was thus the payment of the bill drawn upon the great manufacturers in the name of the Republican Party.

This was the view of the Democratic Party, and this will, M. Moireau thinks, have to be reckoned with when the next Presidential election comes in 1892.

THE EFFECT OF THE BILL ON FOREIGN COMMERCE.

As for the always interesting question of the effect which the bill is likely to have upon the commerce of other countries, M. Moireau draws the following parallel between France and England:—

France exported in 1889, 400 millions of francs' worth to the United States, but the exports consisted chiefly of silks, trimmings, ribbons, woollen and cotton stuffs, knick-knacks and wine. Of all these, some of the woollen and cotton stuffs have, under the new tariff, been weighted by a very high extra tax. It is not the case for silks, which make up the greater part of our exports to America, not for knick-knacks, nor for wine.

It is therefore possible, M. Moireau concludes, to regard the Bill with quiet philosophy in France, but in England the situation changes:—

Out of 750 millions of francs' worth exported by England to America in 1889, 500 millions is made up of liens, cottons, woollens, silks and jute, iron and machines. On almost all these products the customs duty has been considerably raised. If the new tariff were rigorously to close the markets of the United States it would be a very serious blow to the prosperity of Bradford, Manchester, Birmingham, Sheffield, and Leeds. At least half the exportation from England to the United States is affected by the new tariff.

On the other hand, M. Moireau perceives, as so many other authorities on the subject have perceived before him, that to close one market to a commerce so vigorous as that of England, is not to destroy trade but to drive it to seek fresh outlets, which may afterwards prove to be a source of immense benefit. He instances with admiration the case of Canada, and the change in her position in this respect which has been brought about by the construction of the Canadian Pacific line. The effect of the bill upon other foreign nations is passed under review, and then he returns to its effect at home. Here the consumer has found out that the rise in wages, which was promised as one of its results, does not take place so rapidly as the rise in prices of which the masses had forgotten to take count. Woollen stuffs which used to cost 10d. a yard are now at 2s. 4d., buttons which were 1d. a dozen have risen to 4d. and 5d. a dozen. The taxed articles are not luxuries, they are objects of daily consumption; and the oratory of the electioneering platform has fallen flat under the practical blows of domestic experience. "After all then the consumer pays" is the lesson which America has learnt.

CONVICTS IN NEW CALEDONIA.

THE worst fears of Australians with regard to the spread of the French convict system through the Pacific are fully justified by the facts recorded in the Nouvelle Revue for July in an anonymous article on fin de siècle penal servitude. The result of the law of 1854, by which the conditions of convict settlement in New Caledonia were settled, seems to have been a most dangerous failure. Men and women coming from the criminal and brutal classes are allowed and even encouraged to take up the best land of the colony. They marry and reproduce their degraded types. They are subject to a mere mockery of supervision. Those who have not the liberty of independent settlement escape at a rate which cannot be otherwise than profoundly disquieting for their respectable neighbours, even with so large an area of disturbance as the Pacific Ocean before them.

In 1881 the Minister of Marine complained that of 7,000 men, without counting those who have been set free, only 360 were available for the construction of roads. The whole of the remainder wander more or less where they choose, live as they please, ride and drive freely under pretext of working at concessions, or of being in private service. There is no more discipline. In 1880 there were from 600 to 700 who had permanently escaped; and in 1889 the figure had reached 800.

The most desperate characters are precisely those who most frequently escape; and if many of their deeds resemble the examples given in this article the French Colony of Noumea can only be described as a stain upon nineteenth-century civilisation. No wonder the Federal Council of Australia has thought it well to memorialise the Imperial Government on the subject of the growing French influence in the New Hebrides.

ART AND NATURE.

IN the two pleasant and sympathetic articles which M. V. Cherbuliez contributes to the successive numbers of the Revue des Deux Mondes for July he has a subject old as the hills, delightfully familiar, yet also delightfully varied. For what is there which is not included under the heading of Art and Nature? All man is there and all his works, his weakness, his strength, his achievements, and his dreams. Beyond his dreams also lies that which is not man, but which interests him by the reflections, more or less clearly, more or less vaguely, caught upon the recording mirror of his consciousness. M. Cherbuliez therefore does not want for matter, but with occasional excursions, as if for the mere pleasure of trying his hand on it, into the limitless, he confines himself mostly, in the lucid and symmetrical method to which readers of M. G. Valbert have become accustomed, to the endeavour to formulate an answer to the question with which he sets out.

WHAT IS ART GOOD FOR?

This is briefly: What are the special needs in human nature to which art responds? Man has felt the need of art so strongly that from the earliest times he has never been without it. Before Greeks could write their poets sang; the savage who has not yet learned the use of the plough has invented a tambourine; in the caves of prehistoric hunters the picture of the reindeer is found roughly sketched on the weapons with which he was killed. Why? What is it that man seeks? What is the inward hunger which these efforts of his appease? How account for the "disinterested interest" which all races and most individuals reckon amongst the elements of life? It is not the love of the beautiful, for art comprises the comic and the terrible; it is not its instructive value—where is the moral of a cannibal dance? Nor can any explanation which is assignable to one only of the fine arts be accepted, for—though music, painting, sculpture, and the rest may have each its special votaries who will give a special reason for their taste—beyond them all there is art itself. They are but individual developments of a universal truth.

FROM A SONG TO A CATHEDRAL.

The first duty then of the "aesthetician" is to find a definition of art which shall include all its manifestations and can be applied with equal justice to a comedy of Molière's, a symphony of Beethoven's, a statue by Michelangelo, or a study of still life by Snyders. The relation of a song to a cathedral must be established before we can pass to the further question of the relation of both to man. The first characteristic which M. Cherbuliez insists upon as common to all the arts is that they are sciences destined wholly and solely to give pleasure. He dwells on the hard and serious labours of the artist who must spend his life in learning, and at the end can never feel that he knows, and continues: "These sciences so painfully acquired, so laboriously exercised, do not serve to render men either wiser or better, to help them in their needs, nor to add to their comfort; they propose to themselves no other aim than to procure for us joys of a special kind which we might, it seems, easily do without, and which appear yet more necessary than daily bread to the man who is capable of feeling them. Art is a luxury. Suppress all the pictures, all the statues, all the poems, there would not be a grain less in the fields; suppress a single industry and the world would feel that its comforts had been attacked. But art is of all luxuries the most intimately bound up with civilisation. The man who does without it, whatever may be the refinement of his virtues or his views, is a barbarian.

QUALITIES COMMON TO ALL ART.

The first of the qualities which belongs in common to all arts, and separates the pleasure that is derived from them from other pleasures, is that they can be enjoyed without possession; the interest that they awaken is impersonal. The next is that they must assume the concrete form of expression. They are opposed to abstractions; intention counts for nothing, but it must have a definite form before it becomes art. Hence all arts consist of a set of signs, and the power of the artist is in proportion to his mastery of the signs with which he has to reproduce the subject-matter borrowed from nature. For another of the common properties of the fine arts is that all without exception take from nature the realities of which they offer but an image. Their image is not an imitation. It is far better a selection which implicates the personality of the artist. Several sections of the first article are devoted to the illustration of these principles in the various arts, and adds to the writer's definition of a work of art this further quality, that it is the only form of pleasure which addresses itself at once to the entire man and appeals no less to his eyes and ears than to his soul, no less to his reason than to his senses. Finally he sums up many charming and discursive pages in this sentence—

Every work of art is a composed and harmonious image of which nature or human life has furnished the original, in which there is at once both more and less than in the model, and which pleases us equally by the reality that we find in it and the reality that we miss.

WHY NOT GO STRAIGHT TO NATURE.

But if it is from nature that the artist takes his models and obtains his inspirations, why, since nature belongs to us all, and is as much at our service as at his, do we not dispense with his mediation and do for ourselves that which he does for us? It is not that we are without imagination. The second article is devoted to a study of the human imagination and the power which it has to appreciate the charms and to respond to the agitations of nature. But the answer to the question is reserved for a further paper, which is promised for the next number of the Revue. M. Cherbuliez has not disdained to use his novelist's craft, and to break the thread at a point where the continuation will be watched for with special interest.

Lord Byron as a Schoolboy.—In Harper, for August, Dr. Blaikie describes Lord Byron's early school-days at Aberdeen Grammar School.

Dr. Glennie, of Dulwich, himself a Scotchman, bears a most favourable testimony to his character when he joined his school in 1799. "I found him enter on his tasks," says the doctor, "with alacrity and success. He was playful, good-humoured, and beloved by his companions. His reading in history and poetry was far beyond the usual standard of his age, and in my study he found many books open to him, both to please his taste and gratify his curiosity; among others, a set of our poets, from Chaucer to Churchill, which, I am almost tempted to say, he had more than once perused from beginning to end. He showed at this age an intimate acquaintance with the historical parts of the Holy Scriptures, upon which he seemed delighted to converse with me, especially after our religious exercises of a Sunday evening, when he would reason upon the facts contained in the sacred volume with every appearance of belief in the divine truths which they unfold. That the impressions thus imbibed in his boyhood had sunk deep into his mind will appear, I think, to every impartial reader of his works in general."

PRIVATE MORALS AND PUBLIC LIFE.

AN IRISH CATHOLIC'S VIEW OF MR. PARNELL'S CASE.

BRYAN J. CLINCH, writing on the prospects of Irish Home Rule in the American Catholic Quarterly Review for July, declares that it would be little short of insanity to trust such a man as Mr. Parnell has shown himself to be with the leadership of the Home Rule cause. The writer thinks that the cause of Ireland has had a set back owing to Mr. Parnell's misdoings; but if the Irish people will only follow the lead of the hierarchy in repudiating Mr. Parnell, the prospect of a satisfactory measure of Home Rule will be better than last year before the split occurred. In discussing Mr. Parnell's case, Mr. Clinch says :—

As to the question whether Parnell's moral guilt in the O'Shea case called for his removal from the leadership of the Irish party, we freely admit that no absolute law can be laid down. Men of bad moral character are unfortunately only too often employed in high public office, as Lord Nelson in England, Herbert Bismarck in Germany, and Crispi in Italy. There is no moral law which compels us, either individually or in a body, never to employ the services of adulterers or thieves or murderers, provided the ends for which we employ them are themselves righteous. There are, however, two other considerations which occur in the question of such employment. The first is of a moral kind, and relates to the scandal which may be given in particular cases to the public by employing the services of notorious offenders. No Christian can conscientiously employ the services of a public sinner in a case where his employment would be naturally regarded as an endorsement of the offender's sin. To approve, or seem to approve, another's guilt is in itself an offence against morality. The same law holds good in public acts, such as the choice of a leader, as in private ones. Colonel Ingersoll is a distinguished speaker, but it would be wrong, with his well-known character as an infidel, for Catholics to employ him to champion a Catholic cause. It is not enough not to share his disbelief; it is necessary also not to appear to do so or to make light of it. Such was, we consider, the case in the question of retaining Mr. Parnell as leader after the exposure in the divorce court. Some time ago a distinguished English statesman had been branded with a similar charge, and public opinion had forced him to retire from political life. Could the Catholic people of Ireland show less sensitiveness of public feeling conscientiously? For ourselves we do not think they could, even though the services of Mr. Parnell were more important to Ireland than those of Sir Charles Dilke to England. The last and most important question in a practical point has now to be asked. How far would it be prudent for the Irish people to trust their destinies in the hands of one who had shown himself recklessly indifferent to the principles of morality? This is not a question of abstract right; it is simply one of common sense. A conscientious man may without fear of sin trust his cash box to a known thief, but common sense will tell him if he does so he runs much risk of its loss. For the Irish representatives, the question of how far Mr. Parnell could be trusted after the revelation of his moral obliquity was something of the same kind. In the gratification of his passions he had shown himself capable of gross deceit and personal dishonour. Would he be more scrupulous if the interests of the Irish people should differ from his own.

Englishmen will note—especially English Liberals and their leaders—that the action of the Irish hierarchy in repudiating Mr. Parnell is held by the American Catholics to be the inevitable corollary of the action of the English Protestants in repudiating Sir Charles Dilke. Of course there is absolutely no comparison between the guilt of the two men. Mr. Parnell is almost a saint when contrasted with Sir Charles Dilke; and if by any folly, or worse, the latter were to be allowed to come back, Mr. Parnell would naturally and properly follow in his train.

MR. N. L. FOWLER'S EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY.

PROFESSOR FOWLER, whose name is a household word throughout the English-speaking world, through which he has travelled from end to end as a kind of phrenological bishop, celebrated his eightieth birthday at the close of this midsummer. Mr. Fowler looks hail and well enough to go on lecturing on bumps till the end of the century. Such men, whatever their science or religion, are the minor shuttles of the English-speaking race which bind and weave together into one whole the web of the English family. In the Phrenological Magazine for August, Mr. Daniel Lamont, continuing his reminiscences of L. N. Fowler, brings these down to the year 1850

PROFESSOR FOWLER.
From a ph to by Elliot and Fry.

At that time, he says, after sixteen years' advocacy of phrenology, the Fowlers had good reason to look backward with thankfulness and forward with hope. They were thankful that the something attempted had resulted in something done. Their establishment in New York was a throbbing hive of restless industry. They were not a great company, but they had a mission and a message. In the consulting department there were lecturers, delineators, and shorthand writers; in the commercial and publishing department there were editors, clerks, packers, porters, and messengers. Twenty thousand copies of the Phrenological Journal, eighteen thousand copies of the Water Cure Journal, and five thousand copies of the Student, had to be mailed every month; thousands of books and pamphlets were despatched by post to all parts of the world; many hundreds of lectures were delivered; over ten thousand heads were examined, and twelve hundred characters fully written out, with drawing-room lectrettes and private classes filling up the spare hours of the busy days, was considered a fairly good year's work for the staff connected with the Fowler Phrenological Establishment.

IN "The Stranger in the House," in Macmillan, the writer concludes his sketch by paying a very high tribute to the tact and infinite resource, great dignity and unimpeachable impartiality, of Mr. Peel as Speaker of the House of Commons.

IN "The Stranger in the House," in Macmillan, the writer concludes his sketch by paying a very high tribute to the tact and infinite resource, great dignity and unimpeachable impartiality, of Mr. Peel as Speaker of the House of Commons.

The Penal Laws.—There is a valuable article by Mr. W. S. Lilly in the Dublin Review for July, entitled "The Penal Laws: An Historical Retrospect." It condenses within the compass of twenty-six pages a specification of the list of persecuting laws which, more directly than anything else could do, demonstrates the intensity of the horror and dread which the Papists in Queen Mary's time had succeeded in exciting in the minds of the English nation.

MORE ABOUT ARCHBISHOP MAGEE.

BY THE CANON OF PETERBOROUGH.

THE Rev. Canon John C. Macdonnell, D.D., Canon of Peterborough, writes in Good Words on Archbishop Magee. He says:—

The Archbishop possessed an originality of thought, a moral courage, and a statesmanlike grasp of great questions, both religious and social, which made him to his Church like what the prophets of old were to Israel.

It is not enough to say of him, as all men do, that he was a great speaker both in the pulpit and on the platform. He was not only this, but, on the whole, the greatest speaker which this generation has produced.

His best sermons were the result of intense thought and careful preparation; and he could reproduce generally the arrangement of the reasoning and the most striking sayings; but no report could convey an idea of the almost magical power he exercised over his hearers.

As his sermons were far more than mere oratory, his conversation was something superior to the witty sayings and smart criticisms which gave it zest and brilliancy. Those who ventured to close with him in conversational argument soon found that they were in the grip of a giant. It happened when Dr. Magee was Dean of Cork that he met John Bright at a dinner in the house of a mutual friend. Before long all other conversation stopped, and all listened eagerly to the argument between the two. The verdict of some who were present was that Mr. Bright got the worst of it. Be that as it may, he learned to respect the powers of his new opponent. Long subsequently they agreed in their discontent with the English (not the scholarship) of the revised version of the New Testament; and the Bishop often said that it would have been very much better if John Bright had been one of the revisers; and that, at all events, they ought to have had some colleague like him, who did not know Greek, but would judge the translation solely from the standpoint of pure English.

As a man who could take in all the bearings of a great social or political question, and use knowledge of various kinds to throw light upon it, Dr. Magee was unequalled. But his own political opinions were strongly marked and candidly expressed. In his early years he had read every history he could lay his hands upon, whether in English or French, of the great French Revolution; and the dread of a revival of its spirit and possibly even of its sanguinary scenes, influenced his political feeling through life. He often expressed his wonder that the lessons of that eventful crisis seemed to be so soon forgotten or ignored.

In his private life the Bishop was remarkable for the depth of his family affections. He lost his two eldest children when he was at Bath; and it seemed as if his great affliction through these losses deepened his love for those who were born afterwards, and coloured his whole after-life. His efforts to procure legislative protection for the young and his anxiety to pass the Children's Insurance Bill were no passing impulses of philanthropy, but the outcome of deep feeling as well as of strong conviction.

He had a varied experience of difficulties and trials, which influenced his feelings and modes of action in after-life. As a very young man, when curate of a great city parish, he was threatened with disease of the chest, which his medical advisers thought might be cured by a winter or two spent in a more genial climate. The event proved that they were right. He spent two winters in the south of Spain. His visits to Grenada and Seville were among his happiest memories. He learned to speak as well as to read Spanish fluently. But his letters at that time showed that he contemplated the possibility of his career being cut short.

Not only in Great Britain and Ireland, but in our most distant colonies, his name was known and revered. "Lately twice in the Winnipeg law courts, on a question of the schools there, the Archbishop (Magee) was quoted by the barristers on each side as an authority out here which even a law court ought to recognise."

JACK TAR UNDER GOOD QUEEN BESS.

IN the English Historical Review for July there is a very interesting paper on the Royal and Marine Navy under Elizabeth. It gives a curious picture of the way our Navy has come into existence in a world in which the State did not hesitate to prohibit the use of meat on three days of the week in order to develop the fishing industry, which was the nursery of our seamen in those days. Another curious feature of that time was that piracy in those days almost attained the dignity of a recognised profession. In 1563 there were 400 known pirates in the four seas, including among them many men of good family. Ten years later, when these gentlemen had pillaged the Earl of Worcester's embassy, 900 of them were captured, of whom only three were hanged. The Elizabethan warship was a very cranky vessel indeed. It was kept from capsizing by a gravel ballast, of which the reviewer says:—

It was seldom changed, and, becoming soaked with bilgewater, drainings from beer casks, and the general waste of a ship, was a source of injury to the vessel and of danger to the health of the men. The "cook-room," a solid structure of brick and mortar, was built in the hold on this ballast, and in that position, besides making the ship hot and spoiling the stores, was a frequent cause of fire.

Notwithstanding the defects of the ships, they were sometimes threescore years in active service, while one, the St. Michael, rode the waters for nearly one hundred years. The Royal William, built in 1670, was not broken up until 1813. The chief danger which the sailors of those days had to face was not the storms of the sea, but the scurvy and other diseases caused by bad food and worse sanitation. In the expedition of 1559 two-thirds of the men employed perished for want of food; old oil and fish casks were used for the storage of beer. Elizabeth pinched the Navy as many of her successors have done since. Hawkins, who was treasurer of the Navy and superintendent of the building, equipping, and repairing of ships, lamented to Cecil that there was no man living who had so careful, so miserable, so unfortunate, and so dangerous a life; there is hardly any time left to serve God and to satisfy man, so great was the business of the office, and the trouble and the distrust.

In 1588, she made Howard and Drake pay out of their own pockets for the wine and arrowroot supplied to the dying seamen at Plymouth, but her own bill for Gascony wine alone in the preceding year was some £12,000.

The pay of a Lord High Admiral a day in the Armada year was £3 6s. 8d., and the pay of the sailor was 10s. a month, and a preacher received from £2 to £3 per month. The naval estimates for the six years after the Armada varied from £54,000 to £56,000 per annum. The cost of building the largest ship in the navy in 1561 was £3,788, and her stone shot cost 6d. apiece. These vessels carried 450 seamen, 50 gunners, and 200 soldiers, considerably more than the complement of a first-class ironclad of to-day, which costs a million sterling. The heaviest anchor weighed 30 cwt., and a man-of-war usually carried from ten to twelve of them. The article, which is by Mr. Oppenheim, is full of interesting and curious details, which will be read with interest by all the successors of the sea-kings, who established the supremacy of Britain in the reign of good Queen Bess.

SOME REMINISCENCES OF MY BOYHOOD.

BY CARDINAL MANNING.

THE first of a series of illustrated interviews which appear in the Strand Magazine for July is devoted to Cardinal Manning. The article is illustrated by photographs of the interior of the Cardinal's palace at Westminster. The interviewer gives the following account of the domestic chapel and its relics:—

The domestic chapel is in close proximity to the dining-room. Through a little ante-apartment, where the vestments are kept, and past a small confessional exquisitely carved in oak, the door of the chapel is opened, and the rays of light stream through the windows on to a simple altar. Here, in a glass case, is the mitre of white silk, to which the gold trimming still clings, worn by St. Thomas à Becket whilst in the residence at Sens. At another corner is a relic of St. Edmund. There are seats on the green baize benches for a dozen worshippers; the gilt chair once used by the Cardinal is in the centre, with a black knee cushion richly worked with flowers. The relics, one of the most precious collections in the kingdom, are preserved in a case at the far end. They are a sight of rare beauty—wonderfully carved specimens of Gothic work in ivory, elaborate gold, silver, and silver-gilt work. Amongst the most precious of them all, contained in a piece of crystal, is a fragment of the column against which our Lord was scourged; and set in a silver and enamelled shrine are three small pieces of dark wood, resembling ebony, round which are engraved the words: "Behold the wood of the cross on which our Saviour was hung."

The following is the Cardinal's account of the routine of his present working day:—

"Every day brings a multitude of letters. I open them all myself. Many I reply to, and the remainder keep two secretaries busy all day, and then they are by no means finished. I have a long, long day myself. At seven I get up, and oft-times do not go to bed until past eleven—working all the time. My dinner is early, at 1.30, and tea comes round at 7 o'clock. Newspapers? I manage to get through some of the principal ones every day. Of course I only 'skim' them over, but I make a point of reading the foreign news."

The interviewer then succeeded in eliciting the following reminiscences of his boyhood from the Cardinal:—

"Well, if you want me to talk nonsense, I will say that it is a long way back to remember, for I am eighty-three, but I spent my childhood at Totteridge. As a boy at Coombe Bank, Christopher Wordsworth, late Bishop of Lincoln, and Charles Wordsworth, Bishop of St. Andrews, were my play-fellows. I frankly admit that I was very mischievous. The two Wordsworths and I conceived the wicked intention of robbing the vinery. The door was always kept locked, and there was nothing for it but to enter through the roof. There was a dinner party that day, and there were no grapes. This is probably the only case on record where three future bishops were guilty of larceny. Were we punished? No, we were discreet. We gave ourselves up, and were forgiven."

"I was always fond of riding, shooting, boating, and cricketing. I well remember that with the first shot from my gun I killed a hare. That shot was nearly the means of preventing me from ever becoming eighty-three. My father's gamekeeper was with me at the time, and he was a very tall, heavy fellow, with a tremendous hand. When he saw the hare fall, he brought that same huge hand down on my back with all his might, and a hearty 'Well done, master Henry!' His enthusiasm nearly knocked me out of the world. My shooting inclinations, however, once nearly ruined the family coach—in those days, you know, we used to have great cumbersome, uncomfortable vehicles. I had a battery of cannons, and my first target was the coachhouse door. One of these formidable weapons carried a fairly weighty bullet. Well, I hit the door—the bullet went clean through, and nearly smashed the panel of the coach.

"I went to Harrow when I was fourteen, and remained there four years. I fear I can tell you but little about my cricketing days. I wish I could say that 'our side' won, but alas! in the three matches I played in against Eton, and Winchester at Lords we were beaten every time. I certainly scored some runs, but their total is forgotten. Then, as a boy, I was very fond of wood-carving, and the principal articles of home manufacture were boats. I made many of them, and as a lad they used to constitute my birthday present to my youthful companions. After I had reached manhood I found my stock of small river craft unexhausted, so I would give them away to my friends as small mementoes of my boating days."

AN AMERICAN VIEW OF NEW ZEALAND.

MR. G. M. GRANT, in Harper's Magazine for August, gives a very interesting account of the Great Britain of the Southern Seas. The paper is copiously illustrated and very well written. He has travelled over the islands and likes them well. He says:—

The production of cereals and root crops, of butter and cheese, of sub-tropical fruits and flowers—in a word, of everything raised in temperate climates or in the favoured lands along the shores of the Mediterranean—is steadily increasing. And better than richness and variety of soil is climate. There is no climate better suited to the Anglo-Saxon race, and no colony has been settled so exclusively from the British Islands and from the best classes of British people. I saw fewer alterations from the original stock than in Australia, the southern coast from Gippsland to Adelaide excepted, and any changes in physique were not for the worse. The climate, too, is far more pleasant than that of Britain, simply because there is far more sunshine. One is tempted to ask, for what other spot on earth has the Almighty done so much?

Mr. Grant is deservedly severe upon the overburdened Titan school of British statesmen. It was only the energy and enterprise of individual adventurers who enabled us to survive the blunders of Downing Street. The following anecdote I do not remember having read before:—

These Fortunate Islands went a-begging from Captain Cook's time down to 1840, and the South Island was within an ace of being picked up by France. In that case it would have been probably used as a home for récidivistes, for in default of it New Caledonia was selected and is still used for that purpose. Captain Stanley, of the Spitfire, arrived three days before the vessels of the French Company, and had hoisted the union-jack. The Frenchman laughed good-naturedly, landed his emigrants, and sailed away for New Caledonia.

After describing the natives, the scenery, and the characteristics of the islands he sums up his observations as follows:—

Nowhere is there a fairer land. Nowhere is labour more sweet, or recreation more shared in by all classes. Every township has its park, racecourse, and playground; the cities have these and everything else that can be imagined. Picnics are universal. The long summers and bracing winters make open-air amusements delightful. Sports are taken up eagerly, from coursing matches over rough ground and pig-stalking, to cricket, foot-ball, and volunteering. From the beginning generous provision was made for schools and colleges, the people—in the South Island especially—having the spirit of the men who colonised New England. No one with eyes in his head can fail to see that the New Zealander of to-day is laying the foundations of a mighty state.

HEREDITY IN MEN AND NATIONS.

A FRENCH DIALOGUE.

M. LEON DAUDET is about to publish a book under the title given above. It is to consist of three dialogues on no less a subject, apparently, than human life, and he has given one of these dialogues to the Nouvelle Revue. The first part of it appeared in the Revue for June 15th; it is completed in the number for July 1st.

The dialogue is conducted by an artist, a doctor, and a soldier—intended, doubtless, to typify the man of sensations, the man of intellect, and the man of action; and each subject, as they touch it, is treated to some extent from the three points of view. They touch all sorts of subjects beginning with the mind and the effect upon it of heredity as observable in individuals and nations. Traban, the doctor, inclines to divide people into two classes: the predestinate, who have been cast in so strong a mould that from birth to death they scarcely change, but carry with them the direct inheritance of one special set of ancestors. This type should be looked for by preference in remote and isolated districts where, if those conditions have prevailed for many generations, it will usually be found that the inhabitants have not only a physical but a moral resemblance to each other. Hence, of course, by development arise national characteristics. To the other class of mankind he gives the name of Versatiles. These are the complex natures in which many currents of heredity meet, and who, being impelled to give expression to each in turn, pass through amazing transformations of character. Every one has had the opportunity of observing in children the phases of physical resemblance first to one parent and then to another through which they pass. The attentive observer will probably often have noted some corresponding moral change.

NATIONAL CHARACTERISTICS.

The discussion, carried on with interest, leads naturally to a classification of the predominant qualities of the leading European races. Traban declares, as the scientific man is bound to do, that between English, French, and German there can be no question of superiority but only of difference. Some excellent definitions of the prevailing characteristics of the three races follow.

The German subjective love of theory and the abstract is contrasted with the objective English devotion to experiment and the real. The two currents are traced through the science and history of both nations, and then we get this description of the French:—

"We have the highest intelligence in Europe. We are the intellectual race, and we might be capable of assimilating the two antipodes of subjective and objective if we had as much attention as we have lucidity; if we were as persevering as we are clear. We understand more quickly than others, but we don't know how to use our victory. A Frenchman has an idea. He is quickly tired of it. He does not realise it. Successors are all tired of the ideas of their predecessors, and France is the country. I won't say only of Europe, but of the universe, in which there is the greatest waste of ideas. Then we have too much sentiment. We are always placing ourselves at the morally conventional point of view. We do not see events as they are. We judge them outside the plane of the real in accordance with some current ideal of goodness or of useless generosity which spoils the best conceptions. We are of the "It-can't-be-because-it-should-not-be" order of mind. The English say, "It is, therefore it must be."

Alas for the habit of basing our judgment upon final causes, and for the love of allegory, which are the two curses of our race!

WHAT IS GENIUS?

The question of heredity is not abandoned without touching on the great problem of genius. The definition of "divine folly" is to Traban wholly inapplicable. Folly implies disorder; genius is before all things a co-ordination of the powers of thought; it implies coherence and method.

The genius is a kaleidoscope of which the images are always well ordered; the madman is mere broken glass in which bits of colour may be found.

The individual whom we name a "genius" represents an accumulation in one person of all the qualities, defects, aptitudes, and aspirations of an entire familial series. The point at which all the various strains of heredity run into one another may be called the point of genius. It ought to occur in every family within a given period. Women play an immense part in this hereditary descent, handing on their instincts, often undeveloped, from generation to generation of mothers, till at last a son is born in whom the unopened buds of his mother's inherited faculties suddenly stupefy the world by bursting into blossom. Expression having been once given to these accumulated powers of a family, the strain is crossed, and ages may pass before another similar accumulation has been stored. These theories may be taken as the reader pleases to account for the general theory as to the mothers of great men, and also for the fact that genius is not often transmitted in immediate descent.

Heredity is far from being the only subject discussed in M. Léon Daudet's suggestive dialogue. These extracts must be taken only as a sample of its matter. It may be added that they do scant justice to its manner.

A PLEA FOR CLASSICAL EDUCATION IN RUSSIA.

THE opening article of the second number of the Nouvelle Revue for July is signed by the name of Michel Katkoff, and by that alone would command attention. Nor can it be said to lose its value for the majority of readers by the fact that it is not now published for the first time. European readers of the Russian press are few, and the general public will not be affected by the knowledge that the eloquence to which Madame Adam's organ thus gives a second voice has already done its work in Russia by contributing to confirm the Tzar in the principles it advocates. The arguments are, of course, not new, but eloquence is always new, and the supporters of classic secondary education in France may willingly welcome this enforcement of their views. M. Katkoff adopted M. Renan's theory of education, that what is required is not so much instruction as awakening. Life is coming; it will bring instruction to the mind which has been well prepared.

School is not the place in which to work at the progress of science, in which to carry out researches, to make discoveries, to profess courses of knowledge. It is a place in which to bring up children so that they shall arrive at maturity of the mind at the same time as maturity of the body, and be rendered apt for science as well as for all serious intellectual activity.

Looking to this aim of secondary education, Katkoff was of opinion that it is better achieved by the classic method than by the attempt to cram modern information into the unformed mind. Speaking of Latin and Greek, he said:—

These languages alone, in their indissoluble union, possess all the qualities which render it possible to concentrate upon them the work of young minds on the way towards maturity, and to reap a rich return for expended effort. Not only do they unite all the conditions necessary to the wholesome and normal exercise of the intellectual faculties, but they give the same faculties also abundant nourishment.

A GREAT ENGLISHWOMAN.

MADAME BODICHON. BY MADAME BELLOC.

In the Englishwoman's Review for July 15th Madame Parkes Belloc writes:—

By the death of Madame Bodichon the Englishwomen of this generation have lost the woman to whom, more than to any other, they owe the great change which has taken place in their position and opportunities. It is fourteen years since she was struck down with the attack of paralysis which removed her from the active world of London, and fourteen years is almost a generation where the upspringing of new minds and new memories has to be taken into account. It is time to place upon lasting record what she was in her youth and middle age.

She started with certain great advantages, being the grand-daughter and daughter of well-known members of Parliament. Barbara Leigh Smith was the eldest daughter of Benjamin, eldest son of William Smith, who succeeded his father in the Parliamentary seat, and was himself a most keenly intelligent and interesting man. When first I was brought into close intimacy with Barbara Leigh Smith in 1846, the Corn-law struggle had just been won. She was then a beautiful, active girl of nineteen, ardent in every social cause, and those years from 1846 to 1851 were to us bright with the light of dawn.

It was in 1854 that she began her work by collecting in a pamphlet all the laws specially relating to women, a pamphlet very thin and insignificant looking, but destined to prove the small end of the wedge which was to change the whole fabric of the law. The importance of her social relations brought the subject before influential men connected with the society for the amendment of the law; Lord Brougham and Mr. George Hastings took up the question actively; meeting after meeting was held; Bill after Bill attempted to be carried through for the protection of the earnings of married women; the Association for the Promotion of Social Science was founded, Lord Brougham being President, and Mr. Hastings Honorary Secretary, and questions relating to the social and legal status of women came to the front. Especially was this the case at the meeting which took place at Bradford in 1859. The law which gave to married women the possession of their own earnings was finally carried in 1870.

Madame Bodichon's marriage to a French physician took place in July 1857. Her husband was a man of marked and peculiar ability, who had gone to Algiers not long after the conquest by the French. For some years Dr. and Madame Bodichon divided their time between Algiers in the winter, and London and Sussex in the summer. It was in 1858 that the Englishwoman's Journal was founded, for which Madame Bodichon furnished part of the capital, and when in London frequented the office almost daily, carrying into the work the sunshine of her vigorous intellect and warm heart.

Of Madame Bodichon's great liberality what grateful recognition can be adequately made? I believe I am correct in saying that the £1,000 she gave was the first given for Girton—to which I am told she has bequeathed £10,000. She was well endowed with fortune, and her paintings early commanded considerable prices; and of the money at her disposal she was a most liberal and conscientious guardian. She had essentially the initiative mind, and it may truly be said of her that she scattered ideas broadcast, and that they took root far and wide.

Of Madame Bodichon's artistic gifts it is perhaps unsuitable to say much here. I think that they were very great, and that the expression of the French critic who called her the Rosa Bonheur of landscape painting was not exaggerated. Her paintings are full of nature and poetry, and power and strong individuality. Years must pass before they cease to bring tears into the eyes of those who can recall the artist in her beautiful prime.

For myself I would fain add a few words. It has been my lot to know, with hardly an exception, the most remarkable Englishwomen of the last fifty years, and many of the noted Frenchwomen also. Some of them have taken a great and permanent place by reason of things actually achieved. But in Barbara Leigh Smith existed that indefinable power which his contemporaries appear to have recognised in Arthur Hallam, a something which transcended that which was done. And the lack in either was due not to any fault of organisation, but solely to causes external, to early death, to failure of physical power, to the outward accident of a weighted life.

SHOULD WOMEN JOIN BENEFIT SOCIETIES?

YES; BUT THEY ARE NOT ALLOWED.

THE editor of the Leisure Hour discusses this question, and answers it in the affirmative. Unfortunately, in England the vast majority of such societies exclude women, for the following alleged reasons:—

1st, that they would occasion larger demands on the funds than men; 2nd, that they are able to earn less and contribute less than male workers, and that allowances to them would involve disproportionate demands on the fund; and 3rd, that their wants and their claims would be troublesome in the administration of the fund, and that they would be more likely to abuse the conditions for relief.

The editor replies as follows:—

First, as to the greater expense for sickness. It is true that women have slight illnesses more frequently than men, but the duration of the maladies is on the average shorter, and they are less exposed to serious accidents. Official statistics have demonstrated this. In a report obtained of the authorised Sociétés de Secours Mutuels in Paris, it was found that the average number of days of sickness in a year was in the proportion of 5·71 for males, and only 4·66 for female members.

As to the other objections, the entrance fees and assessment of contributions can in each society be regulated by special laws, provided only that the principle is admitted of the wives as well as the husbands having right to medical attendance and other benefits common to all members. With regard to difficulties in the administration, men are often at least as troublesome and as prone to frauds as women are, and on the whole more likely to come on the sick fund by misconduct than the wives are. Female visitors as well as male visitors must watch against occasional faults; but the general experience in such societies shows an honour and a loyalty which women are as capable of as men.

In London and large towns, where there are so many workshop and factory clubs, and "house funds," the majority of the members being young and unmarried, the admission of women is not often practicable. In cases like the post-office or telegraph services there is no reason why the mutual benefit should not be for all who are employed. In villages, and definite districts of towns, the principle of common interest in family life is carried out usefully in "Medical Provident Institutions," of which there are several in London. These ought to be multiplied, and by the help of contributions from "honorary members," the working classes can be liberally helped, without any compromise of their independence; their payments as participating members giving them claim to assistance, and for all branches of the family in accordance with the rules of each institution.

In the Strand Magazine for July there is an interesting account of the 26th Middlesex Cyclists' Corps, which now number one hundred and twenty men. The cost of a military cycle is £12, and it lasts about six years, and enables them to cover the ground at about thirty miles day after day. They ride at about ten miles an hour on a good road. One member of the Cyclist Corps proposes to supply a cyclist band, in the shape of a huge musical box, which will give out military music whenever the treadles are put in motion.

IS ENGLAND MORE REPUBLICAN THAN AMERICA?

YES. BY MR. MONCURE CONWAY.

MR. MONCURE CONWAY, in the Monist for July, has a paper on the right of evolution, which is a vigorous protest against the revolution that is contemplated by many Socialists. Mr. Conway maintains that the United States affords a signal illustration of the evils of revolution. England is an illustration of evolution, the United States of revolution. The following are the more striking passages of his article:—

There appears to me nothing more important than that the world should be undeceived about America, whose political history is, really, the great warning against revolution—a handwriting on the walls of the world, the misunderstanding of which is a peril to mankind.

THE EVILS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

The independence of America was a necessary thing, but it came in the worst way possible. It was heavy misfortune, from which we still suffer, that independence was secured by war. The colonies had exhausted their resources in their success; but they had not exhausted England. The colonies, still confronted by the powerful enemy they had made, were compelled to unite for common defence. These colonies had radical differences, political, religious, commercial; some were free, some held slaves. But in presence of the common foe they had to unite at once, and sink their differences. When they met to frame a constitution for their union the majority had no notion of any constitution save that of England, and little accurate knowledge of that. What they framed was a crude imitation of the undeveloped English constitution of a hundred years ago. They made two legislatures because England seemed to have two; but made them equal, not knowing that in England the two were not equal. They supposed England was really governed by the king; so, having knocked down George III. they set up a monarch much more powerful, who to-day under the name of president possesses more power than any throne on earth. They formed a Senate, able to defeat the popular House.

THE PRESIDENT A REAL MONARCH.

The Senate is a peerage of states, in which New York has no more power than states hardly larger than some of its counties. This anomaly was advocated on the ground that in England boroughs of a few hundred voters had equal representation with others of many thousands. The old monstrosity, now the extinct "rotten borough" system, was here actually raised into a constitutional principle. Command of the army and navy, there nominally lodged in the crown, was really lodged with the American monarch, so that he may slip from his civil to his military throne, and rule by martial law. This powerful monarch is not elected by the people of the United States, but of the States separately, through electors proportioned to their members of Congress. Consequently, as New York has the greatest number of electors, the monarch in nine cases out of ten, is chosen by one State. The present President got a trifling majority in New York, and was elected. Mr. Cleveland received some 100,000 majority of votes in the nation, and was defeated. A popular superstition calls that the Great Republic. Since the electors ceased to be real electors, as the constitution intended, and became mere messenger-boys carrying votes they never cast, this government is not so republican as the English has now become.

SLAVERY ONE RESULT OF THE REVOLUTION.

Even at its best our hasty constitution gave new lease to an England discredited at home, and a new lease to slavery, which had been decaying. Slavery entered its new stronghold, and ruled America for generations; had it not lost its head and assailed its own stronghold, it might be ruling still. Our much eulogised constitution, by its compromise with slavery, cost America a million lives and a billion of money. And all of those evils, involving a steady degradation of our politics, are due to the fact that America got its independence not by evolution—which would have surely secured it, leaving England its friend—but by revolution, which made England its enemy; necessitating a premature, crude, military union; preventing the mature discussion and development which could have made the constitution an advance in political civilisation instead of a retrogression. When our fathers had swept English authority out of the country, they had not swept political superstitions, monarchical notions, out of it; so they re-throned in their garnished habitation the defects of the system they had fought.

IN PRAISE OF THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION.

By argument, petition, parliamentary influence, England has secured something like republican government under its mask of monarchy.

The United States monarch is able to transfer office from his opponents to his supporters. He is powerful because he is removed every four years. He can claim that the nation has freshly given him all that power. The English sovereign has no political power at all. The nation is governed by responsible ministers. The president may snap his fingers at a parliamentary majority; the English executive may be dismissed in a night. In a monarchy all classes are interested to reduce a power which only one family can enjoy; but under a presidency all are anxious to enhance the power of an office to which all may aspire,—especially where it is renewed every four years by an electoral revolution.

In England other antiquated things have subverted progress. For the very reason that hereditary legislation is anomalous, antiquated, the peers became weak; the "upper" house became "under" by an evolution that had been impossible had it been elective. But in this very irresponsibility to the popular vote lay that independence of popularity which gives their House weight as a debating and revising body. A further step in evolution, which should determine the exact number of times that the Lords might reject a measure, after which its passage through the Commons would make it law, might make the peers a useful body in checking popular passion and haste.

A PROPOSED MISSIONARY EXHIBITION.

A MEMBER of the staff of the Baltimore American has proposed that a missionary exhibit should be one of the features of the Chicago Exhibition.

It is proposed to exhibit the idols of the world by specimens, casts, and photographs, the work of missionary publishing houses, medical missionaries, and industrial schools, and the mission stations and missionaries connected therewith. The exposition would include mission work at home and abroad in all its branches. The harems of Turkey and the zenanas of India; the alphabets and literature of missionary lands, customs, and manners; Buddhist praying wheels, and models of Juggernaut's car, and the fanes and shrines of idol gods; monkey temples of Benares, charms, etc., will be presented to the eye; and the contrast between what was and what is will be rendered as complete as possible by the models of Christian villages over against those which the Gospel has not yet lifted to a higher level.

In connection with this may be noted a scheme for the celebration of the nineteenth century of Christianity by holding every ten years during the twentieth century a World's Chautauqua Assembly on the centennial grounds at Jerusalem. All parties acknowledging the three oldest creeds should have a right to be represented, and all languages in which the gospel is preached should be heard there. From every nation and people there should be at least one man, and all idols superseded by the gospel should be shown as trophies. If this scheme is carried out it will be more than ever necessary that the Turkish Empire should be preserved in existence, if only that a strong body of neutral troops should be available, in order to prevent the assembled Christians from breaking each other's heads. It is difficult now; what it would be at each decennial demonstration who can say?

THE FEDERATION OF THE ENGLISH-SPEAKING WORLD.

A PROTEST BY PROFESSOR FREEMAN.

IN the July number of the Proceedings of the Scottish Geographical Society, Professor A. Freeman discusses "Britannic Federation," and points out the political and physical basis of national unity. He is quite right in pointing out, in his usual vigorous and lucid style, that Imperial Federation is an absurdity when used by those who are really aiming at the federation of all English-speaking people. But after all this criticism advances the matter very little. What is more serious is his contention that the colonies have no sentiment for each other, and that the only tie which binds them together is their relations with the mother country. When we point out that there is no reason why Canada should not care as much for Australia as Colorado does for Florida, he replies that mere continuity of territory produces interests common to all, that is to say, that because a man can walk from San Francisco to Boston, Californians and New Englanders have more interests in common than South Africans and Australians. But that assertion is surely due to the old fallacy that the sea is a divider instead of a uniting of peoples. Nothing is more certain than that transit by sea, measured by cash, which, after all, is a great standard of measurement when material interests are in question, is much cheaper than transit by land. Our Empire may be only half baked, and in a very straggling condition, but that it exists at all is due to the fact that the ocean highway enables us in our island home to communicate at an almost nominal rate with our colonies at the other end of the world. Just imagine if every bale of goods that went to Australia had to travel overland the whole way! Another point of Mr. Freeman's contention is that a federal executive would be much more likely to meddle in the state of affairs than the present Colonial Office. That is an assertion to which the experience of the United States supplies a sufficient answer. Mr. Freeman's strongest point is that federation would destroy the authority of Imperial Parliament:—

Does every one who talks about federation, "Imperial," "Britannic," or any other, always think what any kind of federation means as regards the Parliament of Great Britain? Make Great Britain a member, make England and Scotland separate members, of a Britannic Confederation. The powers of the British, English, Scottish Parliament will at once cease to be boundless; they will be cut down to the measure of such powers as the Federal Constitution may leave to each of the several States. The British, English, Scottish Parliament will sink to the level of the Legislature of Delaware or the Grand Council of Zug. Are we ready for this? I can speak for one man only. I am no lover of "empire"; I am not anxious for my country to exercise lordship over other lands, English-speaking or otherwise. But I will not, as far as one man can hinder it, have my country ruled over by any other power, even by a power in which my country itself has a voice. If it is proposed that the great and historic assembly which King Edward called into being in 1295 shall keep its six hundredth anniversary by sinking to the level of the Legislature of a canton of a Britannic Confederation, then I shall be driven, however much against the grain, to turn Jingo and sing, "Rule Britannia."

Mr. Freeman had better take to practising "Rule Britannia" betimes, for even this will not save him. If we have to choose between the alternative of a little England and a Federated English-speaking world, the party which he calls Jingo is much more likely to accept federation than the party which, five years ago, tried to give Home Rule to Ireland, not so much to extend the foundations of the Empire as to fling off a burden.

THE MAKING OF GERMANY.

THERE is a good article in the Quarterly Review for July on the "Making of Germany," which is interesting, not only on account of its subject, but also because of the ideas which it suggests as to what is needed to make the English-speaking world, which at present stands almost as much in need of unification as Germany did in the eighteenth century. At the beginning of last century, Germany was divided into three hundred sovereign territories, of which eighty were not of more than ten or twelve miles in extent. The reviewer asks how has the chaos become cosmos, which now exists. What creative power worked this miracle? He answers his own question as follows:—

The primordial fount of being is that Logos, Intellectus, Vernunft, Reason, which is, in the strictest sense, Divine. That it is that has built up the great Teutonic nation. The political unity, so recently wrought with blood and iron, is but the symbol and the pledge of the intellectual, the moral, the spiritual unity achieved by thought. It is the outward visible sign of the national consciousness which has been called into existence by an illustrious succession of thinkers from the days of Leibnitz to our own day.

The real makers of Germany are the philosophers and poets at whom we have briefly glanced, and the smaller men who sat at their feet and disseminated their teaching. With Leibnitz the line of "light and leading" begins. In Lessing we salute the first German classic. Goethe and Schiller create a literature which is the common heritage and priceless treasure of the Fatherland, binding it in intellectual solidarity. Kant establishes the ethical unity of his country upon the adamant foundation of the transcendental morality. Hegel supplies the cohesive doctrine of political science, and exhibits the type of the State in which the men of action were to complete the unifying work of the men of thought.

When the poets and philosophers had done their work Prussia undertook to fulfil their prophecies, and Stein, who was dominated by the idea of the duty which men owed to their country, evoked the moral force which unified Germany. The reviewer concludes as follows:—

"What is a nation?" From the point of view of history, a nation is the development of a race by various processes of expansion. Consanguinity is its starting-point. Local contiguity, community of language, and common political institutions are conspicuous among its actual conditions. But the real principle of its unity is spiritual. Consciousness is realised only in corporate existence. No doubt a common religious creed and cult afford the best expression of that community of thought and will which constitute a nation. The "complete union of Church and State" cannot be realised in an age of religious disunity such as this. And that being so, the best substitute for it is a common morality, based upon the only possible foundation of supersensuous truth. Such a morality, if not capable, like religion, of being embodied in a polity, and in outward acts of worship, yet permeates the manners and forms the character of a people. Germany possesses it. Germany possesses, too, a common tongue, a common literature, common traditions, common aspirations; a patriot army where every man must serve his country and receive the priceless blessing of military discipline; political institutions which afford orderly expression to popular sentiment, and guarantee to all a rational amount of individual freedom; and a royal house—true kings of men—in which the national life is centred and expressed. This is what Germany—a century ago so chaotic and impotent—has now become; "whole in herself, a common good" to her children; a bulwark of law and order among peoples given over to "anarchy and self-government by the basest," "a noble and puissant nation."

HAS QUAKERISM A FUTURE?

YES, SAYS THE "EDINBURGH REVIEW."

THIS subject furnishes the text for an interesting article in the Edinburgh Review, the writer examining the conditions of religious vitality to be found in the history of the sect, and the grounds for forecasting an increased vitality in the future.

The influence of the doctrine of the "inner light," says the reviewer, has engendered a spirit of self-assertion and independence, making Quakerism a protest alike against the ecclesiastical tyranny of the Laudian High Church party and the spiritual oppression of the Independents and Presbyterians.

It refused the authority of the priest, but it refused no less decisively the self-arrogated claim of the presbyter, "old priest writ large," as no one discerned more clearly than George Fox. It equalised, though in a wild, haphazard fashion, the claims of aspirants to become religious teachers. Instead of external qualifications and secular accomplishments, all that the genuine evangelist needed was a development of that inward illumination he had in common with all men.

Quakerism has stimulated, if, indeed, it did not originate, juster and loftier conceptions of the equality of all men before God, and from those principles sprang those humanitarian and philanthropic truths to which the Friends have given so practical an application in the history of social reform.

In the seventeenth and early part of the eighteenth century, the Quakers largely increased, and numbered in England some 66,000 strong, but soon after that period visibly declined.

To the spiritual unrest, the many-sided burning enthusiasm, of the seventeenth century succeeded, in due course, the lassitude and coldness of the eighteenth. It was not that the church wanted apostles. George Fox had followers as zealous and unwearied as himself, but the time was not propitious. The religious and political environment had changed. In a heartless and sceptical age like that which followed the Restoration, appeals to religious impulses and sensibilities were necessarily "flat, stale, and unprofitable." The harp-strings had no longer their old tension, and the tones that feebly vibrated from the relaxed strings were but dissonant echoes of their former high-strained music.

Since 1860 there has been a slow but steady increase in the statistics of membership. Taking the last ten years, in 1881 there were 14,981 members, in 1890 they had advanced to 15,961. Throughout the world, Ireland with 2,687 members is not increasing, but in Canada with 1,109 adherents progress is being made. The United States contain 81,000 Friends, who are much subdivided. In their Sunday schools in England and Wales there are:—Adult scholars, 22,735; junior, 12,154; taught in 199 schools by 1,900 teachers. Foreign mission work is also carried on successfully by the Friends of England and America in India, China, Madagascar, and Syria.

As to the future possibilities of Quakerism, the writer thinks that:—

Summing up this portion of our subject, the credenda of the Quakers, if we may be allowed such a term, may roughly be described as general beliefs of evangelical Protestantism, partly determined, partly modified, by the central doctrine of the inner light. The distinguishing marks of Quakerism in comparison with other Christian communities seem to be these: that they lay greater stress on spiritual freedom, and they provide greater scope for spontaneity in religious feeling and its devout expression. Unless we are mistaken, these characteristics mark tendencies discernible in much of our current religious thought. In every direction we seem able to detect a growing impatience of excessive dogma on the purely speculative points of the Christian creed, a higher estimate of spiritual liberty, the need of greater flexibility in formal modes of devotion. So far, therefore, from modern Quakerism being out of touch with other churches and bodies of Christians, it would rather seem as if here, just as in the field of philanthropy and human amelioration, the Quakers have been the first to indicate courses and forecast directions and energies which other Christians have in time found it expedient to follow and adopt.

The writer thus concludes:—

A further point in which the auspices seem favourable to at least a sympathetic consideration of the claims of neo-Quakerism is the growing tendency to cherish simplicity and refinement as the highest characteristics of religious culture. The lofty position which Quakers have attained in the commercial, the scientific, and the political world has often been remarked, as well as the undeniable fact that the numbers of those who have attained such distinction have been unusually great in reference to the sum total of the sect; but it has not been so universally noticed that these distinctions have been acquired, not by ambitious and ostentatious self-seeking, but by the silent, unobtrusive manifestations of lives directed by simplicity and integrity.

THE REPUBLIC OF BIRMINGHAM.

FROM A FRENCH POINT OF VIEW.

PROVINCIAL England, so little known thirty years ago, is becoming an interesting fact to our neighbours across the Channel. The sympathetic description of Birmingham, which is given in the Revue des Deux Mondes for July, by M. Max Leclerc, under the title of "A Tour in England," is indicative of the intelligent appreciation with which some of the best elements of English life are regarded in France. "A Well-Governed Republic" is the sub-title which M. Leclerc has given to his sketch, and after tracing, with many statistics, a history of the rise of the great manufacturing centre, its system of municipal government, its education, its health, its public institutions, the solidarity of interests which exists between the various sections of its society, the public spirit by which the whole community is animated, he concludes as follows:—

It seems to me that I have now said enough to justify my title. Birmingham is a veritable little republic in the heart of a monarchy, and a well-governed republic. Municipal life circulates there in full tide; liberty has no apparent limits. The commune is all-powerful; it affirms its omnipotence, but does not abuse it. It constructs municipal monuments which would be a challenge, if there were any one to challenge; but in Birmingham, as in all English towns, there are as few as possible of the visible representations of the central power; nowhere is there any trace of tutelage, of mistrust from above, or of a trammel upon these free men; they have been treated like reasonable beings, and they act as such. Is it not strange, in a town of 500,000 inhabitants, to meet with no administrative offices, no prefecture peopled with scribblers sent down from the capital, no officials, no permanent tribunals? In Birmingham men judge each other, they bring up and instruct their children as they please, they nurse their sick according to their own ideas, they plan and lay out their streets as they want them. I assure you they are excellent republicans; the name alone is wanting, but they have the thing and that suffices. They are wise men.

When French opinion has fully realised the effects of free institutions upon our towns, it will perhaps become more reconciled to our system of colonial government. It is not in England alone but throughout the British Empire that the English race proposes to itself to multiply little republics in all but name on the model of Birmingham and its sister towns.

HOW TO TAX DEAD MEN'S PROPERTY.

AND WHAT TO DO WITH THE PROCEEDS.

In the North American Review for July Prof. Richard T. Ely, in a paper entitled "The Inheritance of Property," summarises the chief things required to bring about an improved society in the United States as follows:—

First—Education in its broadest sense, including kindergartens, manual training, technical schools, colleges, and universities.

Second—The abolition of private monopoly, and the substitution thereof of public ownership and management of all those enterprises which are by nature monopolies, like railway, gas, and electric lighting businesses, telegraphs, telephones, etc.

Third—A reform of the laws of inheritance.

A PROPOSED REFORM OF THE DEATH DUTIES.

Under the last head he sets forth as a good basis of discussion Prof. Bluntschli's ideas, which are as follows:—

First, the share of a child is not to be taxed unless it exceeds $24,000, but of any excess above $24,000 the local political unit (which, for the sake of brevity, we will hereafter call town in every case) shall receive 10 per cent. If the share of a child exceeds $120,000, the state shall receive of the excess above $120,000 a child's share.

Second, if the estate falls to parents or grandparents of the decedent, the town is to receive a share of 5 per cent. of the estate, provided the share of a single ancestor is more than $2,400 but does not exceed $12,000, and 10 per cent. of the excess of a share over $12,000. If the share of a single ancestor exceeds $24,000, the State receives a share equal to 10 per cent. of the surplus.

Third, the brothers and sisters, and children of brothers and sisters, of decedents are to be treated, so far as inheritance goes, like parents and grandparents.

Fourth, if the heirs of the decedent are descended from grandparents, but not from the same parents—that is to say, if they are cousins, aunts, and uncles—the town is to be entitled to a share of ten per cent. of the estate if this exceeds $2,400 and twenty per cent. of the excess of the estate above $12,000. If the estate exceeds $24,000, twenty per cent. of this excess to go to the state, and not to the town.

Fifth, if the heirs of the decedent are descended from common great-grandparents, but not from common grandparents or parents, the share of the town is to be twenty per cent. if the estate exceeds $2,400 and thirty per cent. of the excess above $12,000; and if the estate exceeds $24,000, the state is to receive thirty per cent. of this excess.

Sixth, if the decedent has no relatives near enough to be descended from common great grandparents, the estate is to fall to the town if it does not exceed in value $12,000, but if the value is greater than this, the entire surplus above $12,000 is to fall to the state.

Seventh, if the decedent leaves a husband or wife, the survivor is to have a life interest in the share of the town or state.

HOW TO USE THE NEW TAXES.

The use to be made of the funds acquired by the taxation of inheritances, and by establishing the co-heirship of town and state, must vary according to time and place. There are, however, many uses which suggest themselves. In cases of cities, towns, and States weighed down with debt, the payment of bonds would be an excellent employment of the funds. In case taxes are extraordinarily high and are weighing down industry, the tax-rate might be reduced.

The States of the Union, and many of the towns, ought to go into forestry, purchasing large tracts of land, especially on mountains and along river courses, and covering these with trees. States and cities have allowed the ownership of valuable public works to slip away from them into the hands of private corporations. Waterworks, gasworks, street-car lines, and the like might be purchased and operated at cost. All great cities require a large number of parks, especially of small parks in the crowded sections. There are many cities which ought to buy slums and tear down the houses in them.

School funds ought to be increased until they become great enough, with the aid of current taxation, to provide the entire population with the best educational facilities of every sort, including manual training, kindergartens, public libraries, universities, industrial museums, art-galleries, and the like. It would be especially desirable to improve the schools in the rural communities, establishing good high-schools wherever the population is sufficient to furnish them with pupils. Good schools in the country districts would tend to keep people in the country, who go to the cities to educate their children. It is desirable to make the country pleasanter and more attractive as a place of abode. Another fund may be suggested as suitable to be accumulated out of property inherited by the State and town, and that would be a highway fund, designed to help to improve the streets and roads of the State. The income of this fund could be distributed to towns and counties in such a manner as to encourage them in the improvement of roads and streets.

AN IDEA THAT WILL "CATCH ON."

If once this idea got hold of the public mind we should hear a great deal more discussion about the death duties than we do at present. Bluntschli's idea at bottom is that when rich men die a good large proportion of their inheritance should be divided among the poor, or, rather, should be used in providing for the poor institutions which they are unable to provide for themselves. That idea may take hold in England yet, and when it does there will be a good deal more interest taken in politics than is likely to be the case so long as the two parties differ as tweedledum does from tweedledee.

WHAT WILL BE THE EFFECT OF THE EIGHT HOURS DAY?

PROFESSOR J. E. C. MUNRO, who writes the first article in the current number of the Economic Journal, discusses the probable effect of the eight-hour day on the production of coal and the wages of the miners. The professor may be a great economist, but he is not a great writer. When you turn over page after page it seems to be clear enough, but the net result is that no very definite impression is left on one's mind. His chief point is that in 1872 the eight-hour day was virtually established in this country in our coal mines, and the net result was that the average output per man diminished by about eighteen tons a year, which is between five and six per cent. This, however, was not due to the shortening of the hours; many new men flocked to the mines who were unskilled, old pits were re-opened and new pits were sunk. After the period of prosperity passed and wages fell, the miners elected to lengthen their hours rather than diminish their earnings. The miners, therefore, have the greatest possible interest in maintaining the individual output. If prices do not rise, the miner must, to gain the same wage in the shorter day, send as much coal to the surface as he did before, and hence he will have the strongest possible motive to save time from the hours allowed for meals, to use a faster stroke, to idle less, and even to increase if necessary the average number of days he works in the week in order to realise his standard. If the total output be maintained there will be no rise in price, and no disadvantage as regards the foreigner; if the output per miner be maintained there will be no increase in the cost of production. As regards wages, if the total output and the output per miner be maintained, wages will not be affected by the reduction in hours.

UNIVERSITY EXTENSION IN AMERICA.

BY PROF. H. B. ADAMS.

FEW more remarkable illustrations are afforded us of the enormous importance of the intercommunication of ideas and of information between those who are in concert, than the story of the growth of the great modern movement for democratising the universities. The way in which the University Extension movement, after taking root on this side the Atlantic, sprang up on the other side, shows how much may be done when the much-to-be-desired return of the best that is attained by those who are working for the amelioration of the condition of the people is made up and rendered universally accessible. Professor Herbert B. Adams, of Johns Hopkins University, in the last number of the American Edition of the

PROF. ADAMS, OF JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY.

REVIEW OF REVIEWS, has told at great length the story of the way in which the University Extension movement began in England and was afterwards carried over to America.

To the author of this article was unanimously awarded, at the Albany Convocation, July 10th, the Regents' prize of one hundred dollars offered on behalf of the University of the State of New York for the best printed contribution to the subject. A summary of his paper appears in Help, describing the English method of democratising the Universities, and giving his account of the way in which that method was introduced into the States.

Professor Herbert B. Adams also writes on the same subject in the Forum for July. He says:—

Americans have already advanced one step further than has the mother country, for New York has provided for a State system of University Extension. Into this vast field will soon enter the new University of Chicago.

OUR HELPERS AND THEIR SERVICE.

THE publication of the first article in the series of reports from our Helpers as to the best institutions in their own localities appears in the current number of Help, from the pen of Professor Eberli, who describes the school accommodation provided by a small Swiss town for the education of its children. By degrees I hope we shall be able to collect the materials for framing a normal standard of necessities of civilisation which can be written up before the eyes of all men, so that every community may know the best that has been attained in supplying the wants of man by various associated efforts of human activity.

I am requested to ask all those who may be interested in the formation of a local association of Helpers in Leeds to communicate with our local secretary of the Helpers in Leeds, namely, Mr. J. A. Haywood, 14, Mosdale Street, Hunslet Road, Leeds.

Our Helper at Londonderry, Mr. Joseph Edwards, desires me to state, for the information of those who may be passing through the northern seagate of the United Kingdom on their way to or from the New World, that he will be very glad to be of any service that he can to readers of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS. His address is 41, Great James Street.

Mr. Edwards has kindly undertaken to supply a copy of the REVIEW to emigrants going across the sea to a new home in the New World. It is hoped that it will not only supply them with reading matter on the voyage, but may remind them that wherever they go they can never pass outside the great unity of the English-speaking race.

I am glad to hear that the Bradford Coffee Tavern Company have offered to place the upper rooms of one of their establishments in a populous street at the disposal of my Bradford Helpers' Association, in order that it may be converted into a social club on the lines that have been popularised by Mr. Buchanan and the East End Teetotums.

Another excellent suggestion, which has been made by our Gateshead Helper, has been carried out this summer in the shape of garden parties for the workhouse children. The idea is one which is capable of adoption within short range of a workhouse school, a garden, or wherever a green field is at the disposal of a kindly heart.

IN Harper for August there is an interesting sketch of the Nihilists in Paris, by Mr. Rosny,* illustrated by portraits of Lavroff and other Russian Nihilists. He gives a curious account of Tikhomiroff, for whom Madame Novikoff succeeded in securing a pardon from the Russian Government, and who has made the most emphatic recantation of his Nihilist heresies. Mr. Rosny says:—

The Nihilists hope for a revolution produced by means of a coup d'état, and they esteem that (1) the present autocracy is really weak; (2) that the great towns and central garrison would suffice to overthrow the existing order of things; (3) that the peasant would remain indifferent or almost indifferent to the issue of the struggle, and would soon rally to the new régime when he felt its beneficent effects.

IN the Sunday at Home for August there is an interesting article by a lady, describing the thirteen months which she spent in a London Hospital. It gives a good and, on the whole, a pleasant account of the treatment of patients in the institution.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE FOR THE POOR.

BY MISS OCTAVIA HILL.

IN the Nineteenth Century for August, Miss Octavia Hill has the first place with an article entitled "Our Dealings with the Poor." The note of it is her desire to link the special work of visiting the homes of the people with family life. She says that her workers, almost without exception, prefer work in her houses to any other sphere whatever. "There is never a year that we do not increase the number of houses under their charge." Paid inspection, she thinks, is a mockery, so she suggests that those who really love and care for the poor should put themselves in touch with the homes of the people on the one hand, and the official bodies on the other, as to become an ever-present, all-pervading, informal, but most active body of volunteer inspectors, instinctively noticing, truly recording, and regularly communicating through recognised centres with the officials? And should they not also perform this office for organised volunteer agencies, as well as for those established by law? So that at once the Poor Law and the School Board, the Sanitary Aid and the M.A.B.Y.S., the Invalid Children's Society, and many others, should have visitors attached to every small district in the parish.

The establishment in Southwark of the Women's University Settlement suggested to her the desirability of drawing up a sketch of such district visiting as would meet the modern want. Her plan is that visitors do many kinds of things for a few people, and not one thing for many people, and she would make the visitor a kind of bishop for the few people under her charge in a small district. She would begin by collecting their savings from door to door. By this means she would establish an easy and natural means of introduction, from which she would build up a close acquaintance, and become a medium of communication between them and the guardians, the school Board, the Sanitary Aid Committee, and the vestry. If once you have got a wise and loving heart established in close personal relations with a small number of families, you have got an arrangement capable of being utilised to almost any extent. Such visitors might do many things. They might obtain sometimes the management of the houses themselves, which would enable them to have power as well as influence. They could establish a Neighbourhood Guild, wherein the inhabitants of a given locality could unite together to raise the standard of physical, moral, and artistic condition of streets and houses. They might help their poorer friends to improve their temporal prosperity by schemes of co-operation.

Miss Hill repudiates all idea of making a radical change in the condition of the people. Here is what she proposes:—

It is but a feeble effort to bring, according to the special need of the moment, one human being into near touch with others in their homes; to lead the new and wiser thinkers of to-day to occupy themselves not with the problems pondered on in the study, but with individuals in their homes and daily life. What the result of such intercourse will be must depend wholly on what our visitors are and what their flocks are, and this must vary infinitely.

IN the Asiatic Quarterly Review for July Sir E. N. C. Braddon, Agent General for Tasmania, declares that the island affords an elysian retreat for those possessed of small fixed incomes. You can live like a prince there on a thousand a year. Living is much cheaper than in England. The island is the most English of all English possessions, and in no other country is the scenery so beautiful and the climate so enjoyable.

HOW I WRITE MY POETRY.

BY SIR EDWIN ARNOLD.

IN Cassell's Saturday Journal Sir Edwin Arnold recounts to an interviewer how he writes his poetry. The interviewer asked him if he did not find poetry and journalism antagonistic. He replied:—

"On the contrary, the most poetical place I know is Fleet Street. It differs very much from the slopes of Fujisan and the beautiful open sea, but there is nothing so interesting to me as humanity.

"My 'Light of the World' was commenced at a tea house in Japan. The little silver pipes were smoking, the samisen (Japanese guitars) were playing, and Japanese songs were being sung. I heard one of my friends say, 'Damatto (be quiet), Dana Sama is writing.' I was reminded by that exclamation that I had just put down on paper the lyric which occurs 'he 'Light of the World':—

A voice beginning to be,
Deep as the sleep of the sea,
When the stars their radiance glass
In its blue tranquillity."

"It had come to me abruptly," resumed Sir Edwin after he had in his modulated tones recited these now famous lines, "and it had to be written. I had been engaged in conversation, yet it had suddenly struck me, compelling me to withdraw myself for the moment, and I was completely absorbed in that verse."

"I do not, at any time, force poetry," said he. "I must be thoroughly in the mood. These moods come imperatively, but very irregularly. My method is this: Either I write first and roughly and on scraps of paper, or my daughter takes it down from my dictation—she is the only one who can do so for me—as I walk up and down the room and smoke. I put the rough notes in my pocket until the next day. Then I read the verse over and over, correct and copy all out myself, altering it very much, and filling it up. These scraps I enter into a sort of day book or ledger until the work is nearly finished. I treat the matter thus compiled as the rough draft. I go over it myself, polish it, and transcribe into a second book, which may be called the poem itself, but still in a rough state. Then I copy it out again, and finally in a fair manuscript for the printer. Every line of the poem, therefore, passes through my mind three or four times. Sometimes the lines are importunate and will be at once registered. Reading, smoking, driving, dressing for dinner—it does not matter how I may be then engaged, the verses will haunt you, fascinate you, dance before your imagination, demanding to be fixed; and you must catch them then and there or they will go. Sometimes the right ideas will come as suddenly as if by electric message."

Mr. A. E. STREET, in Macmillan for August, discussing the proposal to extend Westminster Abbey so as to accommodate more of the illustrious dead, sums up his view as follows:—

Give us, however, a new refectory, such as the actual report of the Commission suggests, restored for another and higher purpose than that which its founders contemplated; give us a Chapter House freed from accretions, the squalor of which can hardly be matched in the neighbourhood of any other great church; and we shall say that the common altar of Use and Beauty has been crowned with an acceptable offering on which the fire from heaven will not be called down in vain.

SOME STRANGE INSTINCTS OF CATTLE.

INSANITY OR CRIME ?

IN Longman's Magazine for August Mr. Hudson discusses certain strange instincts in cattle, which in some cases resemble insanity and in other cases simulate the darkest passions of man

These instincts are :—

(1) The excitement caused by the smell of blood, noticeable in horses and cattle among our domestic animals, and varying greatly in degree, from an emotion so slight as to be scarcely perceptible to the greatest extremes of rage or terror.

(2) The angry excitement roused in some animals when a scarlet or bright red cloth is shown to them. So well known is this apparently insane instinct in our cattle that it has given rise to a proverb and metaphor familiar in a variety of forms to every one.

(3) The persecution of a sick or weakly animal by its companions.

(4) The sudden deadly fury that seizes on the herd or family at the sight of a companion in extreme distress. Herbivorous mammals at such times will trample and gore the distressed one to death.

Mr. Hudson gives a remarkable account of the effect of blood upon a herd of cattle which he one time saw in the Pampas. A beast had been killed within half a mile of the march of a herd, the moment they sniffed the blood they changed their course and came to the spot moving round it in dense masses bellowing continually :—

The animals that had forced their way into the centre of the mass to the spot where the blood was, pawed the earth, and dug it up with their horns, and trampled each other down in their frantic excitement. It was terrible to see and hear them. The action of those on the border of the living mass in perpetually moving round in a circle with dolorous bellowings, was like that of the women in an Indian village when a warrior dies, who all night shriek and howl with simulated grief, going round and round the dead man's hut in an endless procession.

The impulse to kill a weakly animal he attributes not to an instinct proper, but to an aberration of instinct, a blunder into which animals sometimes fall when excited into action by unusual circumstances.

In these wild abnormal moments of social animals they are acting in violent contradiction to the whole tenor of their lives; that in turning against a distressed fellow they oppose themselves to the law of their being, to the whole body of instincts, primary and secondary, and habits which have made it possible for them to exist together in communities. Felix de Azara records a rather cruel experiment on the temper of some tame rats confined in a cage. The person who kept them caught the tail of one of the animals and began sharply pinching it, keeping his hand concealed under the cage. Its cries of distress and struggles to free itself greatly excited the other rats, and, after rushing wildly round for some moments, they flew at their distressed companion, and fixing their teeth in its throat quickly despatched it. In this case, if the hand that held the tail had been visible in the cage the bites would have been inflicted on it; but no enemy was visible, yet the fury and impulse to attack an enemy was present in the animals.

Mr. Hudson thinks that he has put the wild animals under an obligation by a theory which maintains that this massacring of unfortunate individuals instead of being a hateful crime is in its motive the noblest which the animal can know, that sublime courage and daring which they show in defence of a distressed companion. The only mistake is that they blunder as to the object of their attack, and attack the sufferer instead of the cause of his sufferings.

POETRY IN THE PERIODICALS.

IN Good Words for August, A. H. Begbie has some verses entitled "Failed," in reply to the usual pitying epitaph upon one who fought a losing fight and went down fighting.

And I say again, Count you the cost
Of this Bridge? To what is it nailed?
What are its bulwarks piled high—these
You cross to your City of Ease?
Man! I tell you 'tis built on the Failed—
The Fighters who lost.

And he—scorn or pity as you will—
'Twas in fording that stream he fell.
For Freedom, for Man, for the Right!
Was his cry in the heat of the fight;
And for these, and for you, rang his knell.
Then "failed," say you still?

In Cornhill there is a poem entitled "Sparrows," the moral of which is in the last two verses :—

Speak from the heart! all else is incomplete;
Speak to the heart! for that alone is sweet;
Weak words are mighty that with heart-blood beat.

Sing out thy meagre life's obscurest cares;
Sing out the burden that thy dumb soul bears.
Perchance some heart may bless thee unawares!

There is a striking little poem by Louise Chandler Moulton, entitled "Dead Men's Holiday—After Shipka." It is based upon the remark of Vereschagen, "Every one kept holiday except the dead." She asks, Who dares to say that the dead men were not glad that all the banners flaunted triumph there? "Proudly the general galloped down and shouted thanks and praise" :—

And there, in front, the dead lay silently—
They who had given their lives the fight to win.
Were their ears deaf, think you, to all the din,
And their eyes holden that they could not see?

I tell you, no! They heard, and hearing knew
How brief a thing this triumph of a day,
From which men journey on, the same old way,
The same old snares and pitfalls struggle through.

Theirs the true triumph, for their fight was done;
And with low laughter called they, each to each—
"We are at rest, where foemen cannot reach,
And better this than fighting in the sun."

Edgar Fawcett contributes to the Cosmopolitan for August the following sonnet on "Environment" :—

This earth, where so mysteriously we came,
Girds us with kinships; in robust oaks dwell
Our fortitudes; the willow and fern too well
Our toolish frailty or pliancy proclaim;
The dawns are our pure deeds; the erratic flame
Of lightning flares our passions; the grave spell
Of moonlight speaks our sorrow—and scarce we tell
Our pictured lives from their terrestrial flame.

Wherefore, the closelier that we lean to look
On those material and yet airy ties
Which bind us to this orb through fated years,
We almost feel as if great Nature took
Our joys to weave her sunshine with, our sighs
To make her winds, and for her rains our tears.

Tennyson's Use of the Bible.—The Rev. Henry Smith, in the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine for July, says :—

The Laureate has been accustomed to mark with the greatest possible care the margins of Bibles in constant use at his quiet retreat in Farringdon. It clings to his poetry as the rose-odour clings to the rose-grower.

Since the publication of "Timbuctoo" in 1829, to "Demeter," etc., in 1889, Biblical references have been ever found freely and reverently interspersed. There is scarcely a book, either of the Old Testament or the New, to which Tennyson does not refer; while from many he quotes frequently. We find, for example, at least thirty-nine references to Genesis, eighteen to Exodus, seventeen to Isaiah, thirty-one to the Psalms, one hundred and twenty to the Gospels, and one hundred to the Epistles.

Genesis—allusions are to be found in "De Profundis," "The Princess," "The Two Voices," "Sir John Oldcastle," "Queen Mary," "Maud," "Becket," "Lancelot and Elaine," "Aylmer's Field," "Locksley Hall," "Early Spring," and "In Memoriam." Exodus—allusions are to be found in "The Lover's Tale," "The Promise of May," "Despair," "Supposed Confessions," "The Ring," "Vivian," and others. Mr. Van Dyke says that "Aylmer's Field" 'is a mosaic of Bible language, most curiously wrought and fused into one living whole.' Mr. Lester has noted thirty passages in "Aylmer's Field": five from Genesis, one from Exodus, one from Leviticus, three from Judges, one from Kings, one from the Psalms, two from Isaiah, nine from Matthew, and others from Luke, Acts, Romans, Peter, etc.

In "In Memoriam" we have passages from Exodus, Deuteronomy, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Psalms, Ecclesiastes, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Matthew, Luke, John, Acts, Hebrews, Peter, Revelation, etc.

A Great Unknown Painter.—In the English Illustrated Magazine for August, John Todhunter pays a tribute of praise to George Wilson, the Scotch painter, who died last year at the age of 42. Mr. Todhunter says :—

Wilson may not have been a great but he was an exquisite painter. He had the secret of beauty as few men in this generation are given to have it. He dreamed of beauty, and painted what he dreamed, imperfectly no doubt, but always delightfully. He did not follow the usual methods or arrive at the usual results. What the average man does easily, he either could not do or did with difficulty; but then he did what the average man cannot do. He painted poems because he lived in them. He painted trees divinely, because he loved them and felt through all their life, from the firmly planted roots to the intricately woven branches, bending and springing to every wind that plays through their leaves. His drawing of stems and branches, sometimes rapid and suggestive, sometimes elaborately studied, always vital, cannot easily be matched. He painted the sunned spaces of grassy glades, seen through and under the trees, deliciously; and steep grassy slopes in sunshine or shadow, and the wild tangle of long grass and weeds and flowers, inimitably, because he loved these things too, and loved to let his spirit bask and wander among them. In all his landscape work there is a sweet idyllic quality, which perhaps recalls Mason more than any other of our painters, though Wilson's composition and handling were widely different from his. Many of his landscape studies soothe yet quicken the mind, like fine pastoral poetry. One might imagine these sunny or twilight lawns and less trodden by the feet of that shepherd-boy in Sidney's Arcadia who lives on in our imaginations "piping as if he would never grow old." Wilson's pictures have this quality of eternal youth. They never grow old; and they are most pleasant things to live with. They are the outcome of the best hours of a life which, in spite of much suffering, was essentially a happy one.

The Lot of a Governess, by Charlotte Brontë.—In the unpublished letters of Charlotte Brontë, now appearing in Macmillan's Magazine, the following passage occurs on the lot of a governess :—

I have always been accustomed to think that the necessity of earning one's living is not in itself an evil; though I feel it may become a heavy evil if health fails, if employment lacks, if the demand upon our efforts made by the weakness of others dependent upon us becomes greater than our strength. Both sons and daughters should early be inured to habits of independence and industry.

A governess's lot is frequently indeed bitter, but its results are precious. The mind, feelings, and temper are subjected to a discipline equally painful and priceless. I have known many who were unhappy as governesses, but scarcely one who, having undergone the ordeal, was not ultimately strengthened and improved—made more enduring for her own afflictions, more considerate for the afflictions of others. The great curse of a single female life is its dependency: daughters, as well as sons, should aim at making their way honourably through life. Teachers may be hard-worked, ill-paid, and despised; but the girl who stays at home doing nothing is worse off than the worst paid drudge of a school: the listlessness of idleness will infallibly degrade her nature.

Lonely as I am, how should I be if Providence had never given me courage to adopt a career, perseverance to plead through two long weary years with publishers till they admitted me? How should I be, with youth passed, sisters lost, a residence in a moorland parish where there is not a single resident family? In that case I should have no world at all. The raven weary of surveying the deluge, and with no ark to return to, would be my type.

As it is, something like a hope and a motive sustain me still. I wish every woman in England had also a hope and a motive. Alas! I fear there are many old maids who have neither.

British v. English.—Every now and then I receive an indignant remonstrance from Scotchmen who seem to scrutinise the Review of Reviews with the sole object of discovering the slips of the pen which I sometimes make when I use the word English for British, a mistake which they regard as high treason to Scotland. As a rule I use English-speaking as the only term which includes Irish and Scotch, Americans and Australians, and English. But Mr. Freeman, in a paper in the Charlatan on "England in the Eighteenth Century," maintains that it is quite right to use "English" as a generic term for all English speakers. He says :—

It would greatly help to clearness if we could, on both sides of the Ocean, learn to use a few words, specially the words British and English, in their right places. English and American are words which should never be opposed to one another; British and American are words which constantly must be opposed. English is the name of a folk in which, in all its possessions, the English-speaking people of America have the same right as the English-speaking people of Britain. Britain is the name of a political power with which the English-speaking people of the United States have, since the Declaration of Independence, had nothing to do. To keep this distinction is simply to fall back on the language of the days of the War of Independence; it is to speak as Washington spoke. Washington did not speak of those against whom he had to strive as the English, but as the British. That is to say, the political tie was severed; the higher tie of race and speech remained. So of old the Phœnicians and the Greeks were none the less one folk because they formed many political powers. The German folk at this day are divided among four political powers; but they are one German folk none the less. We should teach ourselves to look on the severed branches of the English folk as in the same way one, in the same way separate.

THE REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE "CHAUTAUQUAN" AND ITS EDITOR.

THE Chautauquan, as it has developed, is a broad, general periodical of first-rate importance, that appeals to the needs and tastes of intelligent people everywhere; but it has the primary advantages of a perfectly definite constituency and of a perfectly definite aim. It is at liberty to grow and improve constantly, with the immense satisfaction of knowing its own public and understanding its own scope. The Chautauquan

DR. THEODORE L. FLOOD.

is an organ, without sacrifice of freedom; and it enjoys a monopoly which it has so fairly earned as to excite no just man's envy. The periodical which Dr. Theodore L. Flood founded in 1880, and which he has continued to edit and publish, is the exclusive organ of the greatest popular educational movement of modern times. Its relationship to that movement is a monopoly privilege wholly unique in the field of periodicals. Associated press franchises are a monopolistic possession that gives some newspapers an advantage over others. But such franchises do not compel any portion of the reading public to buy particular newspapers. The peculiarity of the Chautauquan's monopoly lies in the fact that it is not only the exclusive publisher of certain materials, but that a vast constituency has actual occasion to buy it in order to obtain those materials.

The Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Reading Circles, and the Chautauqua Non-Residents' University, with students scattered all over the globe, are members of the great Chautauqua guild in virtue of following certain courses of study and reading from year to year. For these "required readings," a large portion of the material is freshly prepared by writers of authority and distinction; and something like half of the so-called "required reading" of each month is obtainable only in the current issues of the Chautauquan. These readings usually deal in serial form with great subjects or fields in history, literature, or science.

The Chautauqua movement—admirably described by Professor H. B. Adams in last month's American edition of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS—is supervised by the wisest, and most distinguished educators of America and is a brilliant and permanent success. And this success gives the Chautauquan magazine an assured nucleus for its constituency such as no other periodical in the world can claim. The magazine reaches the very heart of the American people; for it supplies much of the serious reading matter of intelligent families, in town and in country, for the long winter evenings.

The Chautauquan will complete its eleventh year next month. Its germ was the Chautauqua Assembly Herald, which was first issued in August, 1875, as a daily at Chautauqua, New York, publishing the lectures and reporting the various meetings and entertainments of the great summer educational gathering. During the other months of the year, the Assembly Herald was issued as a monthly from Meadville, Pennsylvania. Dr. Theodore L. Flood, who was in those days the pastor of a large Methodist Church at Meadville, was the editor of the Herald from the beginning, and one of the pillars of the Chautauqua educational movement. In October, 1880, he founded the Chautauquan, which absorbed the Assembly Herald (except as to its daily issues at Lake Chautauqua in August), and Dr. Flood became editor and sole proprietor of both publications.

The new magazine began modestly. It was almost exclusively the organ of the Chautauqua movement, which was then narrower in its scope than to-day. About two years ago it was wholly re-cast in form and took its place among the handsome standard American magazines, with their conventional dimensions. The next change is to occur next month, when the magazine will begin the experiment of moderate illustration.

The Chautauquan contains 136 pages of reading matter, of which some twenty pages pertain to the news and work of the Chautauqua circles, besides the forty pages of "required reading." There remains considerably more than half the magazine at the disposal of its editor for general articles and editorial departments. This space is used with rare discrimination and ability. Dr. Flood insists upon short articles from his contributors, but he secures from the best writers of America and Europe their mature thought upon living issues, in condensed form.

He is very fortunate in having a list of several hundred contributors upon whom he draws for his general articles.

A new feature of the magazine is the "Woman's Council Table," which in twenty pages manages to include some ten or twelve bright articles each month by the best women writers and thinkers upon topics that particularly concern women.

The circulation of the Chatauquan is, of course, not confined to regular readers of the Chatauqua courses, but it is confined almost wholly to annual mail subscribers. Dr. Flood has adopted the policy of keeping his magazine off the news stands and trains, and he is always ready to argue vigorously in support of the thesis that magazines cannot be safely and profitably marketed through news companies. At least he has, by his own methods, made the Chatauquan a very lucrative and valuable property. Its circulation is said to approach a hundred thousand. It is printed at the Chatauqua-Century Press, Meadville, Pennsylvania, this institution being one of the most complete and modern establishments in the country for the making of books and periodicals. The printing-house is owned by Dr. Flood, and Mr. George Vincent, who operate it under the firm name of Flood and Vincent.

Dr. Theodore L. Flood is a man of strong personality, who combines business and editorial ability in a degree that is altogether unusual. With large experience behind him, he is still in "the forties." In earlier years he filled important pulpits in New Hampshire, and in that State he was very active in religious and philanthropic organizations—a presiding elder, the president of inter-denominational Sunday-school conventions, and so on. He went to the war as a young private, fought at Antietam and Chancellorsville, was made sergeant and lieutenant, and afterward resumed Methodist pastoral work, chiefly in Pennsylvania. He was influential in the general conferences of his Church; but when he founded the Chatauquan he withdrew wholly from the ministerial office and became a layman. The Methodist who is not also a politician is a rare man. Methodism trains men in the methods and the spirit of organized activity, and it teaches the duty of alert citizenship. Without being intrusive, Dr. Flood is in fact a very influential party man and politician in Pennsylvania, and the only reason why he has not already served two or three terms in Congress is because he has quietly declined what he might have had. He speaks from the platform clearly and strongly upon public questions. The legislators from his own region urged his name for United States senator last winter as against that of Mr. J. Donald Cameron. It is not unlikely that he may yet be drawn into public life. Meanwhile the Chatauquan is growing constantly in influence and merit as one of the chief educational publications of the world.

THE August number of the Chatauquan contains an interesting article, by T. L. Flood, entitled, "Old Chatauqua Days" (illustrated). It tells the story of the foundation of Chatauqua, which might be reprinted with advantage by our Home Reading Union, as it explains the beginning of the institution from which have grown sixty Chatauquan assemblies in the United States alone, and how Chatauquan literary and scientific circles have spread everywhere. The miscellaneous papers for general reading are of more than usual interest. Professor Trowbridge rather throws cold water upon the hopes of those who imagined that before long we might be able to fly by means of electricity. Mr. C. M. Fairbanks, on "Illustrations and Our Illustrators," attributes the advanced movement in illustration in America to the London Graphic twenty years ago. There are some interesting African myths and legends in Heli Chatelain's paper. Mrs. Pennell describes travelling in Provincial France, and Mr. Freeman writes briefly on "England in the Eighteenth Century." The Woman's Council Table is as full as ever of interesting papers. In one of these it is mentioned that the Queen of Italy and the Queen of Roumania already have their women physicians for the court.

THE Cosmopolitan is a very strong number this month. Besides Amelie Rives's new story, which is begun, and General Adam Badeau's "Gambling in High Life," which is noticed elsewhere, there is a copiously illustrated paper upon the Dukeries, Nottinghamshire, with views of Clumber, Welbeck, etc., and an article, with an immense number of portraits, devoted to the "Woman's Press Club of New York." The article upon Bismarck cartoons is very good, but rather slight. Mr. Gribayedoff's paper on "Illustrated Journalism" is good both on account of its matter and its illustrations. He says there are five thousand illustrated periodicals in the United States. "Dissected Emotions" is an article devoted to an explanation of the muscular movements of the features indicative of hate, sorrow, pain, etc. Mr. Gladstone figures as representing gravity, while Miss Ellen Terry as Lady Macbeth appears for sorrow. An article on the "Court Jesters of England" contains a good deal of out-of-the-way matter, and the portraits of the most famous of these worthies.

THE Presbyterian and Reformed Review for July contains several articles of more than usual interest to theological students. Among others there is an examination of the inaugural address of Professor Briggs, a review of the Rev. G. A. Smith's "Isaiah," and a survey of recent dogmatic thought in Germany. Of more general interest are Mr. Worcester's paper on "Count Tolstoi as Reformer," and Mr. Henry M. Baird's description of the "French Method of Dealing with Religious Liberty in the Reign of Henry the Second."

In the Educational Review for July there is a sensible paper by Mr. George E. Hardy on "The Function of Literature in Elementary Schools," in which he pleads for the reading and study of real literature for children, in the cultivation of the reading habit, and in the substitution of classic reading matter in our books for the cheap commonplaces of the feeble bookmaker. The important thing to give the child at school is a taste for reading, and this is practically impossible by the inanity of so many school reading books. The same review contains a survey of the recent school legislation in the United States.

Dr. Cook, in Our Day, continues to quote a remark which I made before I started the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, when I was still on the Pall Mall Gazette, that I obtained more value from his paper than from any other American monthly. This is no longer the case. The current number for July, for instance, while containing several useful articles, contains too much reprint. There are three or four articles taken solidly from the London Spectator, and one of Lord Salisbury's speeches, which is well worth while reprinting no doubt; but while this may be useful to American readers, it tends to make the statement that I received more value from Our Day than any other American monthly somewhat incredible to any one who knows what kind of value an English editor seeks to find in an American monthly.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

THE Contemporary Review for August contains two first-class articles, and nine that are pretty fair. The former are "Italy, France, and the Papacy," and "The Antipodeans," by D. Christie Murray. They are both dealt with elsewhere.

THE STORY OF AN INDIAN CHILD-WIFE.

Professor Max Müller, of all people in the world, writes a paper which, however it may have been intended, undoubtedly will be read as constituting more or less of an apology for Hindu child-marriage. The Professor guards against this as best he can, but the peep which he gives us into the sanctuary of the wedded life of Srimati-Soudamini Ray, the wife of one of the leading members of the Brahmo Somaj, will probably leave an impression that will tell in the wrong direction. The following remarks may be true, but it is a very far cry between the attachment of children and the linking together of two human beings for life before they cease to be children :—

Why should we be so determinately incredulous as to the possibility of a pure attachment between children under the warmer sky of India? Those who have lived much with little children know the transport of love with which some cling to their mothers, or sisters to brothers, or boys to some pretty child of their acquaintance. There can be no doubt of children being capable of the strongest fervour of devotion, not even unmixed at times with bitter jealousy. Natives who speak at all of the mysteries of their heart dwell with rapture on the days of their boyhood and boyish love as the most blissful of their whole lives.

TWO ARTICLES ON ART.

There are two papers on Art. Vernon Lee, under the title of "Pictor Sacrilegus, A.D. 1483," writes a story, half imaginative and half based on fact, concerning Domenico, the son of Luca Neroni, painter, sculptor, goldsmith and engraver, a contemporary of Perugino, of Ghirlandajo, of Filippino Lippi, and of Signorelli, by all of whom he was influenced at various moments, and whom he influenced by turns.

The other paper is by Mr. W. Hastie, B.D. It is devoted to "Rembrandt's Lesson in Anatomy," the central point of which he maintains has been almost entirely ignored by those who have described the picture, for the simple reason that they were not anatomists. He says :—

The central interest of the great Lesson is, in a word, the representation of the Divine Art exhibited in the structure of the human body by the demonstration of a peculiarly striking and unexpected instance of it. The instance lies in the hand, and more particularly in the remarkable arrangement of the tendons of the muscles which bend or flex the fingers at their two joints.

What this marvellous picture then presents to us is the artistic glorification of Science in the light of the Divine Idea of Life, and more particularly of that Idea as embodied at its highest in the natural art-work of the human organism. In it Science, Theology, and Art meet, and are harmonised in absolute unity.

WHY IS GAMBLING WRONG?

Mr. W. D. Mackenzie has an elaborate paper on "The Ethics of Gambling." He is rather troubled in his mind at the difficulty experienced by some moralists in defining wherein gambling is wrong, so he sets forth, with much painstaking, the reasons which lead him to think that a day is coming in the history of the English race when it will be seen that betting involves as real, although not as great, a dishonour to the idea of humanity as slavery itself. He bases this conclusion on the following three grounds :—

First, to deal with property on the principle of chance, which is non-moral, must be immoral, because it involves the false proposition that property itself is non-moral.

Secondly, to resign for the nonce the use of my own manhood by resolving to risk my money on a mere chance is as real a dishonour to my nature as to give up the control of my reason for the pleasure of intoxication.

Thirdly, there is involved in this resolve and this deed an effort to stand to my neighbour in a relation which is outside all thinkable moral relations. To elucidate this, let me ask if any one can give a name to the relation in which I stand to my opponent while our bet is undecided, and further, can any one bring that relation under cover of an ethical category?

THE AMERICAN TRAMP.

Mr. Josiah Flynt has a brief but vivid little paper on "The American Tramp." Of the genuine American tramp there are about 60,000. Five-eighths of them are American born, and the remaining three-eighths are Irish and German. They make their living by begging, stealing, and some of them by tattooing. Sometimes a tramp will make as much as 10 dols. on a Sunday by tattooing roughs who have a fancy for that kind of adornment!

Mr. Flynt says :—

Boys from fourteen to twenty-one years of age are a popular addition to the fraternity. These youths usually accompany the older men, and are compelled to beg for them. These boys suffer the worst and most immoral abuse from their own protectors. The antecedents of these children are usually unknown; they have been brought up in reform schools and orphan asylums, and drift into trampdom by inclination. Generally speaking, all tramps have spent some part of their lives in reformatory institutions. This accounts for the fact that so many of them are fairly well educated. Almost every tramp can read and write.

MR. CHARLES BOOTH'S BOOK.

Miss Clementina Black devotes several pages to describing the contents and singing the praises of Mr. Charles Booth's new book on "Labour and Life in London." She says :—

If accurate diagnosis be the first steps towards curing a disease, the name of Mr. Charles Booth will deserve to be ranked as that of the man who led the way towards the cure of the great social disease of his time—the disease of poverty. His style is admirably lucid, temperate and impartial; yet it has no aloofness, coldness or inhumanity; it is, on the contrary, full of a kindly human interest, and his pages are lighted up, now by a picturesque touch, now by a humorous phrase that keep the descriptions living. Whatever there may be of dryness in the book is on the surface, and quickly vanishes; the interest, the vividness, and significance of these chapters grow at every reading. Their value now, and their value as history hereafter, are simply beyond calculation.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Canon MacColl, in an article entitled "Morality in Fiction," reviews Lucas Malet's "Wages of Sin," a book, he says, which makes for righteousness, and the sterling merits of which surpasses, in psychological insight, any English novel published since the death of George Eliot.

Norah Gribble has a somewhat curious imaginary dialogue entitled "Souls and Faces," which does not amount to very much, except that you can see a man's soul in his face, and you can never see a woman's, and therefore most men form quite a wrong estimate of women,—which is no doubt true. But it is rather hard on men. If women always wear masks how can we tell what really lies behind? "It is only in rare ideal characters that a woman's face is like an open book." Dr. Ball discourses on the importance of understanding the Roman law in order to appreciate correctly the significance of St. Paul's allusions to Adoption and Inheritance.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

THERE are some brilliant articles in the Fortnightly, to which I much regret space will not allow me to do justice.

THE DOOM OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The most incisive of the articles in the Review, and the one that is most aggressive and the most calculated to ruffle up the susceptibilities of readers, is Mr. Francis Adams's paper on "The Labour Movement in Australia." There is a fine dogmatism about Mr. Adams. His point of view may be best stated in his own words.

I went out to Australia seven years ago, touched to the heart with the idea that as England had found men great enough to create this world-wide Empire, so (after the bitter and bloody lesson of 1776) she would find men great enough to preserve it. Three years showed me that it was a dream; six left me with the conviction that Imperial Federation would spell "swindle" to every one but the greedy English traders.

Mr. Adams thinks that if Mr. Cecil Rhodes, Sir John Macdonald, and Sir Thomas Mcllwraith had been made Dictators of the Empire, with three months' absolute power, they would have modified, if not changed, history, and made the Imperial idea an established fact, whereas, as they were not given that opportunity, this is what will happen:—

The Imperial idea is left to the average English statesman, the average English politician, the average English Tory, the average English Liberal, the average English clique, the average English constituency. And their business is to dawdle and blunder till Canada is absorbed in the States, and Australia strangles Anglo-Australia, and stands up to face the everlasting sun, on her own brave feet, joyous and defiant.

Whether we agree with Mr. Adams or not, his paper is well worth reading. A little too thin and screamy, perhaps, but full of an intensity of conviction that makes itself felt on every page.

THE DOOM OF PORTUGAL.

Mr. Oswald Crawford has the first place in the Review with a paper on the future of Portugal, of which he prophesies even more evil things than Mr. Adams prophesies concerning the British Empire. It is an interesting paper, full of information which is possessed by few persons except the writer. He sums up the matter as follows:—

The opinion of educated native and foreign observers on the spot—cynical, unhopeful men most of them, and therefore on that very account perhaps not wholly philosophical—varies between whether the future of the country is to be a slow process of decadence and decay into ruin, or whether the political and economical death of the country is to be accompanied by spasmodic convulsions of revolution and revolt.

THE DOOM OF PROTESTANTISM, OR OF MARRIAGE.

After having smashed the Empire and polished off Portugal, an anonymous writer, who is either the Duke of Marlborough or Mr. W. H. Mallock, signing himself "M.," makes short work with indissoluble marriage. The article on marriage and free thought appeals to all those who share in any way the modern spirit to facilitate divorce, granting it, in response to the wish of both parties, and of removing from it altogether any unnecessary discredit. That is to say, marriage should be dissoluble by mutual consent. There is a great deal in the article that is good and true, especially in what the writer says about the duty of married people to each other. He says that "no woman is nearer hell than a woman whose sole virtue is chastity." But "M." is on the wrong tack when he invokes the modern spirit to support his contention that a fit of bad temper is on the same plane as an act of adultery. For if the modern spirit teaches anything, it teaches the supreme importance of heredity, and this renders it impossible to place acts which affect the reproduction of the species on the same plane as acts which only wound the feelings. The sin in the latter case may often be greater in the sight of God, but that is a matter between God and the individual, with which society cannot interfere. It is otherwise in the case of acts which may have a direct result in the birth of children, or in impairing the conditions best adapted for the proper multiplication of the species. In order to guard against too easy a renunciation of marriage obligations, the writer proposes that rich persons wishing to be divorced should surrender three-fourths of their incomes, which should be held in trust for their children and next heirs. The moral of the whole article, which seems to indicate that its real writer is Mr. Mallock, and is nothing more than a masked plea in favour of Catholicism, is that we have either to have marriage indissoluble by consent, or logically find ourselves landed in Catholicism.

MR. WALTER WREN ON THE WAR-PATH ONCE MORE.

Lord Wolseley's recent address on Military Education has started Mr. Walter Wren once more on the war-path against his ancient enemy the public-school teacher. The whole-hearted zeal with which Mr. Wren wields the tomahawk and scalping-knife is an edifying example of thoroughgoing energy. This article, like all his articles, leaves on the mind the impression that the only way to reform the public school is to adopt Carlyle's prescription for the reform of the Foreign Office—to set a live coal under it, and that the public schoolmasters, as they escaped from the burning building, should be caught, tied up in a sack with snakes, and cast into the depths of the sea. Then, and not till then, will justice have been done and Mr. Walter Wren be happy.

THE NEW YACHTING.

Sir Morell Mackenzie gives a charming account of his trip to Sebastopol and back last August in the Orient steamer Chimborazo, which carried eighty passengers on a yachting cruise to the Mediterranean and the Black Sea. Sir Morell praises the system of the omnibus yacht very highly, and says he found it one of the best of remedies for the effect of over-work and prolonged illness. He felt rejuvenated by his trip, which secured him repose in a pure atmosphere with constant change of scene. After this flaming certificate the Orient Company will be the most ungrateful of corporations if they do not give Sir Morell a "perpetual free pass" over their line for life.

MR. GRANT ALLEN'S NEW POET.

His name is William Watson, of Liverpool. His poetry is to be found in a book published by Mr. Fisher Unwin, entitled "Wordsworth's Grave." Mr. Howells agrees with Mr. Grant Allen. So does Mr. Walter Besant. Also Mr. Edward Clodd. Mr. William Watson is not a minor poet. He is a major. His poems, Mr. Grant Allen tells us, are a delicately finished piece of fine and austere handicraft, subdued, terse, graceful, carefully chased, daintily modulated, and clear as crystal. It is a rare and precious treasure of contemporary poetry. Since "In Memoriam," Mr. Grant Allen has not heard from any new tongue so large and whole an utterance. What shall we say of all this but that Mr. Grant Allen has forgotten that great Hellenic secret, that the half is more than the whole and so spoils the effect of his eulogy? Mr. William Watson is not quite Mr. William Shakespeare.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

THE National Review, which is now published by Mr. Edward Arnold at 37, Bedford Street—by whom it is edited does not appear—contains the usual indispensable article on the "Persecuted Russian Jews," reference to which is made elsewhere. Its political leader is anonymous. It is devoted to the Session and to the domestic questions. It contains little that is new beyond an assertion that the success of the Opposition at the by-elections are probably due to Free Education. Considering that three-fourths of the seats won by the Liberals were won before the Government had committed themselves to Free Education, the truth of this explanation is not very obvious. However, the remedy for Ministerial reverses lies within the grasp of Ministers themselves, for the same writer tells us that the Government would have been more popular if they had been a little less successful. Lord Salisbury manages foreign affairs so well that people forget there are any foreign affairs to manage. The uniformity of success needs the break of an occasional failure in order to enable the country to appreciate his invaluable services. Mr. Hugh E. Egerton writes upon the "Historical Drama and the Teaching of History." He concludes his article by a curious appeal in favour of the Magic Lantern Mission. What is wanted, he declares, is something that shall bring history home to the common intelligence of the average working man, and the only means remaining by which history can be taught are lectures relieved and animated by calling in the aid of the sense of sight. In other words, if the masses are to be taught and interested in history, it can only be done by the aid of the magic lantern. The lectures might be developed into the representation of historical tableaux vivants.

Mrs. Andrew Lang ridicules the ideal household of Rousseau. Mr. Karl Blind publishes an appeal for the Triple Alliance, which is based upon the hankering of the Pope for his Temporal Power; and secondly, upon his dread of Russian predominance in the Mediterranean. Against French Voltairians, who support the Temporal Power of the Pope, and Russian designs on Constantinople, he thinks the Triple Alliance of monarchical countries forms a necessary barrier very useful to the French Republican cause itself. The upset of the Triple Alliance would mean war between France and Germany, and that war, however it might terminate, could only bring disaster to the Republic, for the general who rode in triumph into Berlin would be little likely to brook the restraints imposed by Republican "superstitions."

The most interesting article in the Review is Mr. W. E. Hodgson's protest against the degradation of British field sports. Betting and the newspapers, he thinks, are ruining everything. Matches are only played for gate-money, driving has been introduced in deer forests in order to enable indifferent sportsmen to shoot a deer at short range, and generally we are all going to the bad. So says Mr. Hodgson, who has besides a good deal to say about the intrinsic cruelty of fishing, and the evil consequences that are likely to follow from the present boom in golf. Even golf, he maintains, is no longer pursued for the sake of sport, but solely for the sake of winning a five-pound note or a medal. In fact, according to Mr. Hodgson, it may be said of British sports that "the trail of the serpent is over them all." Mr. Tighe Hopkins has an interesting article of historical gossip concerning some famous pirates, who must have been almost as disagreeable to sail with as to have been captured by. Mrs. James C. Robertson's paper upon the Anglo-Indians is a plea for Eurasian and European women in India. All benevolent efforts have hitherto passed over their head, and they have been allowed to wallow unheeded in such a slough of ignorance and misery that it is no wonder they have lost all belief in the goodness of God or of men.

Under the head of "A Materialist's Paradise," Mr. Morris Hewlett cudgels the head of Mr. William Morris for his "News from Nowhere."

NEW REVIEW.

THE New Review for August contains Mr. Arnold White's report on the possibility of Jewish colonisation, which is noticed elsewhere, and is one of the most important articles in the magazines of the month. As if to make up for a valuable contribution to the great social question of the day, the rest of the magazine is very slight. A short story, which Mr. George Moore calls "A Remembrance," a dissertation on "Love and Fiction," which would call for no attention if it were not signed by Paul Bourget, and an account of "Nathan Brown," a missionary in Assam, by Professor Max Müller, do not call for more than passing mention. Captain Shaw's article on "Theatre Fires! Their Causes and Remedies," sets forth the improvements which, in the opinion of the late Chief of the Fire Brigade, should be made in order to give the indispensable minimum of security to theatre goers. The fire rate of theatres is very high.

In the years 1886, 1887, 1888, and 1889 there were fifty-five theatres destroyed and twenty-three damaged, making a total of seventy-eight, and there were four hundred and ninety persons killed and two hundred and six injured, making a total of six hundred and ninety-six. In the year 1890 there were thirteen theatres destroyed and fifteen damaged by fire, and two panics from other causes, making a total of thirty casualties, but no spectators were killed, and only seven were injured.

Mr. E. N. Buxton has an interesting paper embodying "Reminiscences of Elk Hunting." Mr. H. Marshall Ward contributes a paper on "Trees and Flowers" to the series entitled "A Model City; or, Reformed London." His list of flowers and shrubs that can be grown in a great city will be useful to those who are wondering what they shall put into their town gardens. The most interesting paper in the Review is "From the Maid's Point of View," in which a maid, or some one masquerading as such, says many things which are somewhat to the point, although she is rather given to moralising. Speaking of the latitude allowed to fine ladies in matters of morals, she says:—

When our Lord forgave the woman of Samaria, He did not ask whether she was a lady or a servant; and what scores of ladies do and do not get punished for, I don't see why a poor girl should not do and go scot free, too.

The moral of it all is, that if some mistresses were half as respectable as their maids the world would go better than it does now.

THE Encyclical and the Manchester School.—The American Catholic Quarterly Review exults in the Encyclical. It says:—

In the name of Christ and His religion, the Holy Father strikes down with one blow that horrible perversion of humanity which, both as to employers and as to the employed, has been the very foundation of the system of economics taught, and so long and disastrously acted on, by the Manchester school and by the whole tribe of laissez faire political economists. Against such a definition of man, the Vicar of Christ enters an indignant protest, in the name both of reason and of religion. Together with this execrable foundation, he repudiates the whole system of economics that has been reared upon it.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

THERE are some good articles in the Nineteenth Century, two of which—Miss Octavia Hill's "Our Dealings with the Poor" and Sir Alfred Lyall's "Frontiers and Protectorates"—are noticed elsewhere.

ADVICE TO UNIONISTS IN DISTRESS.

Mr. Edward Dicey, in a paper entitled "The Next Parliament," advises his Unionist friends as to the course they should adopt in order to save themselves from extinction at the next General Election. He suggests that they should pass a Local Government Bill for Ireland, reform the House of Lords, and introduce a new scheme of redistribution. Having done this, they should pledge themselves to pass a bill next Parliament limiting hours of labour by legislation. He does not believe in the Eight Hours Bill, but he sees that the labour question will be one on which the next General Election will turn. Lord Randolph Churchill seems to him the only leader capable of helping the Conservatives in this pinch, and no doubt Mr. Dicey is right in the instinct which leads him to select Lord Randolph Churchill as the predestined champion of a cause which is cynically put forward as unsound in principle, but useful in practice. He thinks Mr. Chamberlain will be the next Liberal Prime Minister after Mr. Gladstone, but the condition of leadership is to be an indefinite postponement of Home Rule, from which it will be seen that Mr. Edward Dicey cannot claim to take high rank as a prophet of things to be.

MR. FORBES'S REMINISCENCES.

Mr. Archibald Forbes, in his gossiping article, gives an interesting account of his reminiscences as a war correspondent. He thinks that Julius Cæsar would have been an exceptionally brilliant war correspondent, but that Napoleon would have achieved first rank in that capacity if only he could have been a little truthful occasionally. The career is not without danger. The percentage of casualty among war correspondents is greater than among the actual fighting men. In the Servian War of 1876 three correspondents were killed and four were wounded out of twelve who went under fire. Six died out of thirty that accompanied the Nile Expedition.

The rest of his paper is somewhat miscellaneous, which is natural to one who has been imprisoned in war in France, Spain, Servia, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Russia, Roumania, and Bulgaria. Embedded in this interesting mass of gossip there is a curious picture of Sir Edward Malet as a man who can never, in any conceivable circumstance, be made to look absurd.

THE FUTURE OF LANDSCAPE ART.

Mr. J. Stanley Little is one of the few men who write about art who have faith in their subject, and a capacity to make their faith somewhat intelligible to the inartistic public. In his paper on the "Future of Landscape Art," he predicts that it has a future, to begin with, and that this future will be an advance upon all that which is passed:—

A further word will come, if it come at all, from the painter or painters who are able to look at nature free from the prejudices and banalities of caste or occupation. . . . In the work of the very greatest painters we detect a false quantity here, a wrong accent there; and, without entering into politico-social questions, it may be stoutly affirmed that, until a painter arises whose training has been such as to make him wholly insensible to feelings of caste, trade, or occupation—who shall know as much as the artisan or field labourer on the one hand, being equally at home in courts or with books on the other—a man whose education has been so wide (and the word education is used in its more legitimate sense) that he can regard all men and pursuits as things to understand and to see, not things to extenuate or to extol, each as low as each, each above each while below and equal with each, no matter from which end the consideration of them may proceed—until such impartiality as to artificial things be possible in man, we shall not have the greatest painter possible for us to have.

The question naturally arises, "When will such a prodigy of an artist be expected to be seen in the horizon?" Not to-day, he admits, nor to-morrow, but perhaps the day after to-morrow.

WHAT SHALL BE DONE AT THE WAR OFFICE?

General Sir George Chesney follows up the description of the lamentable state of affairs at the War Office with a plan of his own for remedying the same. He thus explains at the beginning of his paper what he has set himself to do:—

The case for reform has been completely established. The country has had warnings enough, and should be satisfied with no reform which stops short of placing the administration of the army on a sound and reasonable footing; and this object can be attained only by placing responsibility and authority on the persons competent to exercise them. If this general principle be accepted, it has next to be considered who are to be the chief professional officials whose responsibility is to be thus declared and enforced, and what are to be their respective functions. The determination of these points, which practically involves the project for a proper organisation of the War Department, is the object of this paper.

It is too long to enter into details as to how he proposes to reorganise the War Office, but it is sufficient to notice that at the close of his paper he maintains, what very few persons will be willing to deny, namely, that if things are allowed to go on in the present condition, we are inviting disaster such as overtook Prussia in 1806 or France in 1870.

THE FRENCH IN TONQUIN.

Lord Lamington has a brief paper describing the results of his examination of the latest French conquest in Tonquin, the gist of which is that Tonquin is a province very well worth having, but entirely mismanaged by people who do not know how to deal with a good thing when they have it. There are far too many functionaries, and there is far too little trade, and there are far too many dacoits. Lord Lamington explains briefly, but succinctly, how he would turn the whole administration of the colony upside down. He does not say so, but it is difficult to read his paper and not come to the conclusion that the best thing to be done for Tonquin and the Tonquinans would be for the French to take themselves home again, leaving their places to be taken by an English administration.

WILL AUSTRALIA REPUDIATE?

Mr. Howard Willoughby, replying to Mr. Fortescue's attack on "The Seamy Side of Australia," ridicules the idea that the Australians will ever repudiate. He says that the Australian repudiating could be little better than a common thief, and he points with good reason to the example of New Zealand:—

In New Zealand there occurred the greatest over-borrowing and the greatest extravagance and mismanagement which the colonies have witnessed, and the severest reaction followed. Nothing so bad is likely to happen again. But repudiation was never so much as hinted at by the wildest ranter. The people ordered borrowing to be stopped, and they summarily disposed of the plungers. Expenses were cut down, economies were introduced, taxes were increased, and now New Zealand has not only turned the corner, but is in a fair way to speedily recover her former buoyant prosperity. The New Zealander has had to pinch, but the holder of New Zealand debentures has never been in any doubt about the punctual payment of his interest.

IDENTIFICATION BY FINGER-TIPS.

Mr. Francis Galton has finally decided that there is no means of identifying a human being so unerring as the simple method of taking a print of his finger-tips:—

This token of identity lies in the system of ramification of the minute ridges that run across the palms of the hands and the soles of the feet, and it more especially resides in the scrolls or other patterns that the ridges form on the inner surfaces of the bulbs of the fingers.

The article, which is illustrated with a plate showing how finger prints can be made and sorted, concludes with the following statement of what he hopes to see before very long:—

I look forward to a time when every convict shall have prints taken of his fingers by the prison photographer, at the beginning and end of his imprisonment, and a register made of them; when recruits for either service shall go through an analogous process; when the index-number of the hands shall usually be inserted in advertisements for persons who are lost or who cannot be identified, and when every youth who is about to leave his home for a long residence abroad shall obtain prints of his fingers at the same time that the portrait is photographed, for his friends to retain as a memento.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Sir Douglas Galton, writing on "Demography," sings the praises of the Hygienic Congress that is to be held in London this year. The Rev. Father Ryder, in a long paper "On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles," defends Cardinal Newman against Dr. Abbott, selecting as his topics two miracles, the recovery of a blind man by the relics of St. Gervasius and Protasius, and the power of speech to the African Confessors deprived of their tongues. Mr. H. A. Kennedy discusses Ibsen, Henry James, and others under the title, "The Drama of the Moment," in which he says that the most characteristic development of the stage to-day is the naturalistic actress. Woman has never been so vividly put on the stage as at present. Mr. Rowland E. Prothero gives us one of his interesting descriptions of French poets in his paper on "Théodore de Banville," but he does not—unfortunately for many readers—attempt to give us an English translation of the verse which he selects for praise.

Progress in Divorce Reform.—The Rev. Dr. Dike's paper on the "Present Status of the Divorce Question," in the Homiletic Review for July, calls attention to the extent to which the family and the home have come to be recognised as constituting an essential part of the divorce question. He thinks that so far as the organised movement for reform is concerned affairs are in a very healthy and hopeful condition:—

The great State of New York has now come forward with the proposal of commissions on uniformity by as many States as possible, to see what can be done through co-operative State legislation, without touching the Constitution. At the time I write, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware—making, with New York, four contiguous States—have established these commissions, with the probability that Massachusetts and perhaps Ohio will join them. These commissions all include in their scope marriage, divorce, the probate of wills, notarial certificates, etc. The American Bar Association, the National Board of Trade, and the National Divorce Reform League are co-operating. In this way both social and large business interests are united in giving the method a fair trial.

THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

The Westminster Review for August opens with an article upon "Federation and Free Trade." The writer is somewhat visionary. He concludes his paper with the following prophecy:—

No, it will not take another five hundred years to bring about the millennium of the united nations and the abolition of war. If all the nations could free themselves from their prejudices, and make radical changes as rapidly as the Japanese, if they had the adaptive power of the Japanese, or the hard common-sense of the Australians, no time would be lost in establishing a world-embracing Federation, and all the burning questions that now divide the nations would either be settled in the International Legislature, or would have to be tried and decided by an International Court of Arbitration, whose decrees would be enforced by the combined power of the civilised world.

Mr. Theodore Stanton continues his article on Abraham Lincoln, which he is spinning out a little too long. Mr. Macnamara contributes a paper which is rather painful reading, describing the ignorance and incapacity of rural School Boards in small villages. His practical advice is as follows:—

If the localities must raise penny by penny for every copper doled out imperially, let the areas of local administration be enlarged if thereby the incidence of this taxation may be equalised. And, above all, by the same means let us remove from the helm of popular control those individuals who, through ignorance, prejudice, selfishness, or other reason, would circumscribe, starve, or hinder the proper equipment of those into whose hands are passing the destinies of this great State.

There is a somewhat pedantic paper on the "Teaching of History," the main point being that there are no historians who can write history, as all those now in existence are deficient in knowledge of practical affairs. The most interesting article in the Review is Mrs. Aldis's account of the struggle for justice for women in the Universities. Mrs. Aldis has the advantage of looking back upon her old battles from a colony which has set an example to the old country in this as it has in some other respects:—

In New Zealand, where these words are written, sex confers no privilege in the University. Lectures, scholarships, degrees, Convocation, all are open to women as well as to men, who are capable of profiting by them, or of attaining to them. On Diploma Day the lady graduates, in cap, gown, and the pretty pink hood, take their places among the other graduates.

There is another article by Mr. Gundry, who writes on "The Recent Audience in China." He tells the whole struggle for diplomatic recognition on the part of the representatives of the foreign powers. The following description of the Emperor at the audience is worth quoting:—

The Emperor himself is described as having an air of decided personal distinction. "Rather pale and dark, with a well-shaped forehead, long, black, arched eyebrows, large, mournful dark eyes, a sensitive mouth, and an unusually long chin; he wore, together with an air of great gentleness and intelligence, an expression of melancholy, due, naturally enough, to the deprivation of nearly all the pleasures of his age and to the strict life which the hard and complicated duties of his high position force him to lead. He was dressed, like his Ministers, in a puce-coloured silk robe, with dragon embroideries on the shoulders and breast, and a large felt hat of the ordinary official pattern."

MR. ANDREW LANG has an excellent article upon "Piccadilly," which is admirably illustrated by W. D. Almond, in the August number of Scribner.

THE ARENA.

THE Arena follows the Century in giving its frontispiece to Oliver Wendell Holmes. Dr. George Stewart writes the accompanying sketch.

MARRIAGE IN AMERICAN SOCIETY.

Mr. Edgar Fawcett gives a very discouraging account of the plutocratic snobbery which prevails in New York society. The following concerning the New York marriage market is, it is to be hoped, exaggerated:—

Daughters are trained by their mothers to leave no efforts untried, short of those absolutely immoral, in winning wealthy husbands. Usually the daughters are tractable enough. Rebellion is rare with them; yet nearly always capitulation follows. And then what follows later on? Perhaps heart-broken resignation, perhaps masked adultery, perhaps the degradation of public divorce. But usually it is no worse than a silent disgusted slavery, for the American woman is notoriously cold in all sense of passion, and when reared to respect "society" she is a snob to the core. Some commentators aver that it is the climate which makes her so pulseless and prudent. This is possible, but one deeply familiar with the glacial theories of the fashionable New York mother might find an explanation no less frigid than comprehensive for all her traits of acquiescence and decorum.

SHOULD THE NATION OWN ITS RAILROADS?

Mr. C. Wood Davis begins the discussion on this question by a brief review of the objections to national ownership. When Mr. Davis wrote his first paper, in February, on "The Farmer, the Investor, and the Railroad," he was against national ownership, but he has now been converted. He attributes his conversion to the occurrences attending the flurries of last autumn in the money markets, when half a dozen men, in order to obtain control of certain railways, entered into a conspiracy that came near wrecking the entire industrial and commercial interests of the country. This shed a lurid light upon the enormous and baleful power which the corporate control of the railways places in the hands of what Theodore Roosevelt aptly termed "the dangerous wealthy classes."

THE TELEPHONE AND TABLE-RAPPING.

M. Camille Flammarion concludes his paper upon "The Unknown," in which he maintains that it is not impossible that communication may be established between the inhabitants of Mars and those of the earth. He tells some excellent telepathic stories which indicate the power of mind to influence mind even at considerable distances. The principle of transformation of force opens up every day new views which may well be called marvellous. That, he says, is a dynamic act, and like other forces, psychic force can transform itself into electricity, heat, light, motion. Already our thought can move a table, what may it not do hereafter? Our voice transmitted to the telephone is transformed from vocal velocity into electric velocity, and travels instantly a distance that a sound wave would take seven hours to cross. The photophone by the aid of selenium transmits sound as light, and reproduces the voice by the vibrations of a mirror. His explanation of telepathy is based on telephonic analogy:—

When you act from afar upon another mind, it is not your thought which travels as a mental condition, but your thought traverses the intervening ether through a series of vibrations as yet unknown to us, and only becomes thought again when brought into contact with another brain, because the last transference brings the impulse into a medium akin to that from which it started.

SWISS LESSONS FOR AMERICAN REPUBLICANS.

Mr. McCrackan thinks that there are many things in the Swiss Republic which might be imitated with advantage in America. He asks:—

What, then, is the peculiar mark and symbol of the Swiss Constitution, taken as a whole? When all has been said and done, the most characteristic provisions are those which introduce forms of direct government or of pure democracy, as the technical expression is.

The United States seems to be standing at the parting of two ways, one of which leads back in a vicious circle to plutocracy and despotism, while the other advances towards a genuine pure democracy. No nation can stand still. Which way shall it be?

Mr. McCrackan has no doubt in his own mind as to what the answer to that question ought to be.

IN PRAISE OF THE RULE OF MAJORITIES.

The Rev. Francis Bellamy, replying to the editor's recent denunciation of Socialism, makes some remarks in praise of the tolerance of majorities which tend to confirm the belief in the direct government of the people by the people:—

Indeed, in our American life especially, the generosity and long-suffering of majorities are among the most notable features. On the other hand it may with truth be said that the worst tyrannies have been on the part of minorities. There has been in history no power which has tyrannised less than the political majority. In modern times, at least, the most violent acts of despotic outrage have been the attempts to ride down the will of the political majority.

A PROGRESSIVE INCOME-TAX.

Professor Buchanan argues strongly in favour of a three per cent. tax on all fortunes over ten million dollars on the ground that it would not only enrich the commonwealth but stimulate industry in millionaires. The following passage is interesting although painfully illustrative of the extent to which a lie will be repeated when once it is set in circulation. Professor Buchanan, in predicting the good things that will come to pass when his system is carried out, says:—

Such profligates as the Prince of Wales, who spends half a million yearly, and then calls upon his avaricious mother for one or two millions to silence the clamour of the creditors whom he has defrauded, will be no longer feasted, admired, and imitated, for justice will be embodied in law, and the race of profligates will have been exterminated.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Dr. Manley writes upon the question of Eternal Punishment, Hamlin Garland tells the story of "A Prairie Heroine," while the editor discourses upon various things, among others upon the conflict between ancient and modern thought in the Presbyterian Church.

THERE is a paper of a good deal of interest at the present moment on the increase of industrial remuneration under profit sharing in the Economic Journal for July.

In the Asiatic Quarterly Review the late editor of the Morocco Times replies to Dr Cust's attack on the Sultan of Morocco, in which he says that Morocco never had a kinder ruler than the present Emperor.

THERE is a thoughtful article in the Andover Review for July, entitled "Socialism and Spiritual Progress—a Speculation," by Miss Vida D. Scudder. She maintains that genius and greatness of character spring most naturally from those classes which are neither very poor nor very rich, for it is starved by extreme poverty and stifled by extreme wealth, and socialism, which she regards as the next step upwards in the human race, will afford more scope for spiritual struggle, and in a wonderful and unforeseen measure set free the soul of men.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

THE North American Review for July is much improved by the change of its binding; instead of being side pierced like the REVIEW, it is stitched. I wish we could stitch the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, but it is impossible, our circulation being too large and our price too small. However much impatient readers may write complaining of the wire-stitching, they would complain far more if I were to keep the REVIEW back another week and charge another penny for it in order to stitch it like the North American.

I quote elsewhere Baron Hirsch's account of his method of disposing of his wealth, which a euphemistic Jewish journal tells us was acquired by a genius in finance, as illustrated in his organisation of railways from Central Europe to the farthest East. That Jewish journalist is lacking in the proverbial wisdom of his race. The less said about the way in which Baron Hirsch's wealth was acquired the better.

DOMESTIC SERVICE IN ENGLAND.

Miss Emily Faithfull writes a paper upon Domestic Service in England, which, although pleasantly readable, leaves no deep impression on the mind. Miss Faithfull is a genial optimist who thinks that there never was a time when servants were better treated, better fed, or allowed more liberty than at present. When we take into account that they are boarded and lodged in addition to their wages, it is obvious that a servant in a good house receives more equivalent for her labour than the girl-clerk, or type-writer who receives £60 a year. It is the slave in the boarding-house who is the real object of compassion, but Miss Faithfull has nothing to say as to how her lot may be improved. She has her doubts about lady helps, but thinks that a lady in the nursery is a desirable adjunct in every household. The most obliging and civil servants she ever met with were those employed in royal and aristocratic houses.

MORAL LOAFING.

There is a curious paper on "Loafing and Labouring," by the late E. P. Whipple, in which there occurs the following passage descriptive of moral loafing:—

Moral loafing is the characteristic of a large class of people. They find a lazy enjoyment in harmonising their opinions with what is noble and just; but it is moral self-indulgence they are after, not moral self-sacrifice. They loaf for great causes, not labour for them. Their sympathies, thus divorced from action, soon become misdirected and unwholesome. If they take a languid interest, for example, in any large plans of criminal reform, it gradually degenerates into a morbid pity for the criminal, in which they lose all horror of crime. In a letter written by John Randolph to Josiah Quincy, Randolph says: "We are so full of the ass's milk of human kindness that we shall soon learn to speak of Judas Iscariot as an unfortunate man." This ass's milk is now consumed at too many philanthropic tea-tables, and "iniquitous" makes desperate attempts to pass itself off as a synonym of "unfortunate."

ENGLISH UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES.

Professor Freeman sets forth, with his customary painful lucidity, the difference between a college, which was in its beginning simply an endowed house for the maintenance of students in the universities, and universities, which were simply the whole body of masters and students who settled down in any existing town. He explains that halls were simply the houses in which scholars began to live together in small societies, and which at first might be the property of anybody. If by a hall we understand a house occupied by students, a college is simply an endowed and incorporated hall. He also tries to explain the exact position of an Oxford tutor and an Oxford professor. The professor is an endowed university teacher, who, in a university which has no colleges, is the immediate teacher of the students. In a university which has colleges, that work falls more naturally upon the college tutors. In a healthy state of things, the tutor would take the lower, and the professor the higher branches of teaching. The present state of things is not healthy, but it might be made so—at least so thinks Mr. Freeman.

THE SINS OF WOMEN WRITERS.

Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, in a very slight paper on the Relations of Literature to Society, says the following cruel things concerning her sister writers:—

It must finally be regretfully admitted that women writers have done much to degrade the profession of literature. They do hasty and slipshod work, inaccurate and sentimental, overloaded with adjectives, frescoed all over with purple patches of what they consider fine writing. But this is a venial fault; where they chiefly offend is in making love the all-important and absorbing passion of life. Their stories teach too often that a girl has an absolute right to the fool of her choice, though she has to break every holy domestic tie to gratify herself. Further, Florence Layard accuses them of being the translators of the lowest and most sensual French novels, though they gain by this dirty work only the smallest and most precarious of incomes. Is the world much to blame if it gives some of the odium due to a profession which offers women such opportunities?

THE THEOLOGICAL CRISIS.

Professor Briggs sets forth his views of the immense gains of the present theological crises, which he thinks will strengthen and secure the foundations of Christianity. He concludes his article as follows:—

"To be well-pleasing to Christ" will be the one end and aim of the Christian world.

It is evident that the evolutions of Christian theology which have brought on the theological crisis, are preparing the way for a new Reformation, in which it is probable that all the Christian churches will share; each one, under the influence of the Divine Spirit, making its own important contribution to the world-wide movement, whose goal is the unity of the church and the redemption of the world.

OTHER ARTICLES.

The Farmers' Alliance is discussed by Col. L. L. Polk, President of the Farmers' Alliance, and by Erastus Wiman, from very different points of view. The Colonel tells of the farmers' discontent, Mr. Wiman that a change is coming which will make the American farmer the most prosperous man in the world. Wheat is going up 40 per cent., and a similar gain is likely to take place in the whole of his crops. He is going to get rid of his debts. Every farmer's wife is to have a silk dress, and every farmer's daughter an elaborate trousseau. Unfortunately Mr. Wiman does not name a date when this good time is coming, but he hints that it is not very far off. Mr. D. B. Eaton replies to Mr. Clarkson's paper on the "Politician and the Pharisee," in which he ridicules the admiration of Mr. Clarkson for the spoils system and his theory that extreme partisanship is the best substitute for patriotism. Mr. F. B. Thurber's "Industrial and Financial Co-operation" is meagre. The short papers at the close do not call for any special mention.

THE FORUM.

THE Forum is getting on; we shall have it illustrated before long. In June it added notices of new books, and in July it published a map. The number is solid and interesting. The best paper, that by Dr. Geffcken on the Emperor William II., is dealt with elsewhere in our Character Sketch. Mr. Hamerton's "Home Life in France," and President Walker's paper on "The Census of the Coloured Race," are noticed among the leading articles. Under the same head will also be found a reference to President Adams' "University Extension in America," which I have added to an extract from an interesting illustrated paper on the same subject published in our American edition.

HAS IMMIGRATION BECOME A CURSE?

Oswald Ottendorfer, a German emigrant, who arrived in the United States forty years ago, asks the question whether the emigrants are to blame for the corruption which prevails so much in American life. He gives an interesting account of the effect which America produced upon him when he arrived there in 1851. He was a student who had never done a day's work in his life. The ship that brought him over was hardly moored when he ran up the nearest street, and, standing in Broadway, observed the passers by:—

From their appearance they were mostly men who worked for a living, but nearly every one of them bore himself as if he was a sovereign. The expression of their eyes seemed to say, "I am second to none; there is nothing so great and so high that I cannot accomplish it, and I intend to fight my way."

He could not speak a word of English. He obtained the position of a common labourer, and in a few days his hands were blistered and bleeding:—

I had been inspired with the energy that I saw in the eyes of those men on my arrival, and I continued, not disheartened by pains or difficulties in my work. I had received the baptism of the real American spirit, and I was never so proud of anything as of the blisters on my hands in consequence of my labour.

I mention these facts to show in a concrete case the really incomprehensible power and influence of the American atmosphere in the assimilation of foreign elements.

Naturally, with such antecedents, Mr. Ottendorfer thinks that the real curse of America is not so much the herd of penniless, non-English-speaking immigrants as a handful of titled English adventurers, who turn the heads of society and induce dudes to follow their snobish civilisation. He thinks that the greatest duty and the highest ambition of all thinking men should be to discourage the American tendency in favour of small families. Nothing more is wanted in order to prevent the evils of immigration than the rigid and impartial enforcement of the present immigration laws, and the developing of what may be called an Americanising spirit for the purpose of imbuing the emigrants with American ideas.

A PLEA FOR ANNEXING CUBA.

General Thomas Jordan sets forth many reasons why the United States want Cuba, which, being summarised, amount to this, that it lies handy to the United States, and is worth while stealing, which is exactly the same argument which justifies the negro in annexing the fat chicken that is fool enough to roost low. Cuba, he points out, bars the entrance of the Gulf of Mexico, it is only seven hours' steam to the nearest American territory and only sixty-six hours from the City of Washington and New Orleans. Since 1857 Cuba has exported more to America than any other country, England and France excepted; 67 per cent. of its exports come in American vessels. Not only is Cuba one of the most fertile islands in the world, but General Jordan is convinced that it contains a gold field. If so, let him be at rest: within six weeks after that gold mine is discovered and found to be rich in gold-bearing ore, the Stars and Stripes will be hoisted over Havanna. General Jordan thinks that whatever is to be done in Cuba we must not only be just and generous to Spain, but in the highest degree careful of her natural and national sensibilities. The poor duck has to choose its own sauce, but it has to be killed all the same.

THE AMERICAN COPYRIGHT.

Mr. F. R. Dady discusses the probable effect of the American Copyright Bill, in which he points out defects which would appear to be inconsistent with its principle. He thinks that it will materially curtail, although it will not entirely extinguish, reprints, and slightly but only gradually raise the price of books. His point of view he thus explains:—

Far from being opposed to the framers of the new American measure, I recognise that by it they have strengthened copyright as a property, and desire to thank them for their arduous efforts in promoting this valuable result. It encourages the feeling that a universal copyright law for the civilised world is within measurable distance, and I hope they will not relax their efforts until this desirable consummation has been achieved.

THE INTER-STATE COMMERCE LAW.

Mr. A. F. Walker writes upon the operation of the Inter-State Commerce Law from the point of view of a believer in its fundamental principles and in the propriety of federal legislation upon this subject. The article is of purely American interest:—

Sufficient time has elapsed to bring out the more obvious imperfections of the law, which has now been thoroughly tested, and has profoundly affected railway management in every part of the country. Among its indirect results may be noted a hesitation to engage in important railway construction, and an increased tendency toward the consolidation of lines and the unification of interests, arising largely from the severity of its pressure upon the weaker roads. Unregulated competition is essentially self-destructive.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Ex-Secretary C. S. Fairchild writes on the "United States and Silver" from the point of view of one who objects to allow his country to run any chance of having a depreciated currency.

There is another brief financial paper, by J. Selwin Tait, on national bank embezzlements, which praises very highly the system in England of having large banks with branches radiating in all directions from the central office. He thinks that the United States would be much better served if instead of having 3,500 solitary banks, as at present, they could have fifty large banks with fifty or 100 branches each in all parts of the country.

A third financial paper, by David M. Stone, deals with the need of an elastic currency.

A CURIOUS illustration is afforded of the difference between English and American administration in the Monist for July, by a reply to Prof. Lombroso's recent article on the Anarchists, by Michael Schwarz, a convicted Anarchist, who is at the present moment in a State penitentiary. The article is chiefly notable on account of the excellent description which its writer gives of Spies, the Chicago Anarchist.

THE POLYTECHNIC INVASION OF NORWAY.

MR. QUINTIN HOGG, FOUNDER OF THE POLYTECHNIC.

THERE are few more interesting features in connection with the multiform work of the Regent Street Polytechnic Institute than the development of a kind of co-operative holiday movement for the benefit of the ten thousand clerks and mechanics who are enrolled amongst its members and students. The movement originated in an attempt made by Mr. Quintin Hogg to entertain thirty or forty of the members during the summer holidays at his country house. As the Institute grew and began to count its members by thousands, the continuance of this arrangement became impossible, and the committee were led to consider the desirability of making holiday arrangements a special feature of their work. Their first great effort in this direction was in connection with the Paris Exhibition of 1889. Mr. Robert Mitchell, the energetic and indefatigable secretary, to whose efforts the success of these holiday trips must be entirely attributed, succeeded in organising a trip to Paris by which 2,100 young men, and 400 young women, visited the Exhibition and spent eight days in Paris for the inclusive sum of £2 7s. 6d. each. Encouraged by this success, the committee arranged last year for a Scotch trip. Morningside College, Edinburgh, was placed at the service of the party, and no less than 3,500 young persons, of both sexes, visited North Britain, went through the Trossachs, down the Clyde, up to the Highlands, and had a most interesting trip of eight days for £2 7s. 6d., and about 30s. extra for the daily trips. The committee also arranged a trip in 1860 to Madeira, of which 200 availed themselves, a trip to Killarney for a similar number, and trips to Switzerland, Clacton, and Hastings.

Early in the present year the committee conceived the idea of a proportionately cheap trip for the members of the institute and their friends to the Norwegian fjords. Those who had been most regarded as authorities in such matters ridiculed the idea, but, undeterred by their opinion, they succeeded in arranging with the Halvorsen Steamship Company for a series of five trips, of which the second has just been most successfully concluded. The trips were to cover the principal places of interest, from the Hardanger Fjord in the south to Molde in the north, were to occupy thirteen days, each trip was to consist of about one hundred passengers, and the inclusive fare was to be eight guineas. In addition to this some certain journeys on shore involved an expenditure of 26s., bringing the total necessary cost for the whole trip to £9 14s. As I was advertised to conduct the second trip, it may be well for me at once to say that all the arrangements which I am about to describe, and award a deserved commendation, were carried out by Mr. Mitchell, who accompanied the trip, and that my duties were confined to acting as chaplain and host.

On Saturday afternoon, July 4th, the steam yacht Fridtjof, Capt. Evjenth, of the Halvorsen Line, left Gravesend with one hundred and seventeen tourists on board, one hundred and fifteen of whom had never visited Norway before, and the great majority of whom had never slept in a berth in their lives. When this fact is borne in mind, it was an eloquent testimony to the steadiness of the vessel and the propitious character of the elements that Sunday morning found the breakfast table as crowded as any day during the trip, and that our Sunday morning service illustration was attended by the whole company. With eight Wesleyan ministers, one clergyman, and at least ten lay preachers on board the duties of chaplain were not onerous. With a continuance of favourable weather the two days at sea passed quickly by, and early on Tuesday morning we anchored off Stavanger. The mail steamer for England was just departing as we arrived, and first acquaintance with a bewildering foreign currency of nine kroner for ten shillings, and forty-five ore for sixpence had to be made very rapidly in order to purchase postage stamps for letters announcing a delightful passage. Stavanger possesses a rather fine cathedral with a remarkable carved pulpit, which Josiah Nix, of the West London Mission, was very eager, had time permitted, to use as a rostrum. I must, however, in passing, pay tribute to the good conduct of all the party alike in this edifice and amidst the grander beauties of nature which we were soon to visit. The "jolly bank holiday" kind of conduct was conspicuous by its absence, and some who might have been harshly judged as Philistines of the Philistines, and bourgeois of the bourgeoisie, showed a keen appreciation of the scenery and surroundings of the Norwegian fjords which would have satisfied the soul of John Ruskin. During the morning's ramble, accompanied by a friend, I dropped into a Norwegian confectioner's shop, and proceeded, in true John Bull-abroad fashion, fiercely to brandish a weight, whilst my friend poked an umbrella into a tin of biscuits, our united purpose being to ask for a pound of that commodity. To our surprise and chagrin, the shopkeeper in this back-street of a little Norwegian town said quietly in perfect English, "How many biscuits do you want?" If Mark Twain had been looking round the corner, he might have described our feelings. I can't. It seemed that the shopkeeper had spent ten years in America, and was a type of a large number of Norwegians who have not only picked up the English language, but also the Yankee cuteness, and are trying to teach their fellow-countrymen to make the Britisher pay a high price for all his pleasures. This, however, is not by any means the only secret of the rapid increase in the number of English-speaking Norwegians. We found that in nearly all the towns we visited English was being taught in the Government schools to the children of the small farmers and the labouring classes, and even the boys who drove the stolkjarres, between their schooling and the English tourist, had picked up a fair command of our language. All this is a striking indication of the rapid spread of the English tongue which is going on all over the world.

In the afternoon when we had left Stavanger behind and were quietly steaming down the Bükken Fjord and great sounding board, against which the echo of four cannon which we fired reverberated like a whole battery of artillery. The evening had cleared up, and the weather once again was perfect. After the captain had let off some rockets for the amusement of our visitors—which so completed the effect that, as one of our company remarked, “‘Spiffin’ was the only word for it”—the concert commenced spontaneously by one of our party striking up the grand hymn, “All hail the power of Jesu’s name!” The women in the boats replied to this hymn by singing with great sweetness the Norwegian national anthem. Our party responded with “Rule Britannia,” and so the concert went on for about an hour, finishing with the Doxology, each party heartily cheering songs the Bömmel Fjord into the Hardanger Fjord, we had our first touch of bad weather in a storm of rain which lasted a few hours. Like all the bad weather of the trip, it occurred when it would least effect our enjoyment. Safely sheltered by a comfortable awning we amused ourselves by watching for whales, and after several false alarms three of Jonah’s lifeboats were sighted to the great satisfaction of everybody.

THE “POLY” PARTY ON DECK.

We reached a small village named Gjerdi, at the head of the Hardanger Fjord, a little before midnight, and were treated to a most unique entertainment. The villagers had assembled to meet us from the country for several miles round, and came off in boats accompanied by their good pastor, and dressed in their quaint and interesting national costume. The boats surrounded the ship and waited for our party to commence the strangest concert at which I was ever present. The lofty mountains around the little bay at the head of the fjord furnished a given by the others. My description of this idyllic scene is very imperfect, and the memory of it will not soon be forgotten by any who were present. It was still practically daylight when the concert finished. The sun had only just dipped below the horizon, and whilst a few of us retired to rest, several went ashore and had a jolly country dance in the open air with Norwegian maidens, neither side being able to speak a word of the other’s language.

Three hours in bed was all that was allowed that night for those of our number who had decided to cross the great Folgefonde glacier and meet us at Odde in the afternoon. The rest of the party were up at four o’clock in the morning, and, landing at Sundal, climbed to the foot of one arm of the glacier, returning to the steamer for breakfast and for the journey down the Sör Fjord to Odde. No guide-book descriptions or travellers’ records will successfully describe all the charms of these days spent on the fjords. Only those who have visited them can imagine the pleasure afforded to these hundred young people, who most of them would never have left their native shores but for the forethought and effort of Mr. Quintin Hogg and those who have worked with him for so many years.

The drive from Odde to Laatefoos (Foss is Norse for waterfall) was our first experience of the Norwegian scenery inland, and alike on the journey and at the waterfall I was again impressed with the deep and true appreciation of the grand and the beautiful which characterised these embryo tourists. The blasé traveller who has "done" everything in the world, from Niagara to the Falls of the Zambesi, from the Himalayas to the Mexican Popocatepetl, might possibly have regarded our party as intruders if he had met us in these journeyings; but if he had known the rich enjoyment with which our company gazed on these mountains and waterfalls, he would have been more envious than scornful.

Resuming our journey along the fjords we called at the little town of Eide on Wednesday evening, and reached the flourishing seaport of Bergen on Thursday morning. An admirable dinner was served to the company at the Hotel Bergen, and after an afternoon spent in rambles around this interesting seaport, we started upon one of the most extraordinary night journeys that a party of tourists ever attempted. The first part of this unique expedition consisted of a four hours' railway ride from Bergen to Vossevangen, through scenery of unsurpassed grandeur and beauty. Such is the character of the country that it has necessitated the formation of fifty-five tunnels in a journey of rather less than seventy English miles. I was much amused by the keen anxiety expressed by some of our English fellow passengers as to where our one hundred and seventeen would sleep, and their surprise and relief when I told them that Vossevangen was only a resting place in a journey which would last until seven the next morning. Never was a railway journey more enjoyed than ours on this occasion. The platforms of the Pullman carriages were found admirably adapted for outlooks, and the long stoppages at the stations relieved any monotony that so long a journey might have caused. Our reception at Fleischer's Hotel, Vossevangen, where we were to sup prior to our long drive, was most amusing. A crowd of English and American tourists watched our long procession defiling from the station to the hotel with the keenest interest. After a rest of two hours and a splendid supper, we started at 10 p.m. on our long midnight drive. Our 58 stolkjarrs and kariols formed the strangest cavalcade that I have ever seen. Slowly for five delightful hours our long procession wound its way up to the top of the watershed from which the rivers flow down the northern side to the Sogne Fjord. That drive is simply indescribable. One good minister in our party could only express his feelings by saying at intervals, "I call this original; that man Mitchell is a genius." So light was the journey that at midnight one of our company took a photograph, which is here reproduced, and several of us read with ease a passage from the leading article of a newspaper, and others wrote billets-doux to friends at home. About three o'clock we began to descend, and reached Gudvangen about half-past five. After a hearty breakfast at Hansen's Hotel we were met by our steamer, which had come round from Bergen.

I am told that the scenery down the Naero Fjord, on which Gudvangen is situated, and the Sogne Fjord, of which it is a branch, is peculiarly interesting and beautiful. During most of the day the deck resembled that of a man-of-war after an action. The analogy was made the more perfect by a capital joke played on one of our party whom sleep had captured as completely as if he had been a hibernating dormouse. Some who had been to the Naval Exhibition arrayed the sleeper in a Union Jack, placed a telescope in his hand, labelled him, "The Death of Nelson—visitors are requested not to touch," and then summoned all the passengers who were awake to see the show. In forty winks, many times multiplied, and in innocent jokes, the day passed quickly by, our vessel steaming through charming fjords on its way to our most northern point, the town of Molde, which we reached on Saturday morning. Two hours ashore enabled us to visit this pretty Norwegian town, with its church possessing the famous picture of the Resurrection Morn, and then we steamed away again through more fjords to Naes, the little town at the foot of the great Romsdal Horn. Here the Orient liner, the Garonne, had preceded us by a few hours, and such was the demand for kariols that some had come from a distance of forty miles to supply our requirements for the drive around the Romsdal Horn. Once again we set out in a long procession, which led a Yankee tourist from the Garonne, who was kept half an hour waiting as we defiled by, to exclaim, "I guess you beat the record in this country." Naes was left at midnight, and Sunday was spent in the Geiranger Fjord, the vessel anchoring for morning service. In the afternoon we landed at Meraak, at the head of the fjord, climbing the wonderful Corkscrew Road. After supper at the Union Hotel, an interesting open-air service was held on the lawn in front of the hotel, and was attended by a large number of the villagers, who were attracted by the capital singing of our party, but their knowledge of English was not sufficient for them to benefit much by the addresses. On Monday we steamed quietly down the fjords and along the coast, sheltered by the islands, to Bergen, where Tuesday was spent in very enjoyable excursions. Wednesday found us homeward bound, just calling for a couple of hours in the early morning at Hangesund, giving us time to visit the spot where Harold Haarfagr, the Egbert of Norway, was buried in 933, and to whose memory a monument was recently erected on the thousandth anniversary of the commencement of his reign. Weather scarcely less favourable than that of our outward passage fell to our lot on the return journey, and on a day of almost cloudless sunshine and perfect calm we arrived at Harwich, after a thirteen days' trip of surpassing enjoyment.

Looking back upon the voyage as a whole, there were several features that stand out prominently. First and foremost I would emphasize the genuine good-fellowship of all on board. If this trip be a specimen of the "people" on holiday, I should like to take all my holidays in future with similar company. From first to last no jarring note disturbed our harmony. As a natural corollary of this good fellowship, I was impressed by the great distance certain pairs of our tourists travelled in a very few days. I said to our amiable secretary, who has just been looking over my shoulder, "Perhaps I had better cross that out, it may frighten the mammas." "Not at all," he replied, "it will only make them come with us next time, and we found an advantage last voyage, as everything then was signed, sealed, and delivered before we left the boat."

The last point that occurs to me as worth emphasizing is the illustration of the value of the co-operative principle which this trip affords. For all practical purposes our tourists had every enjoyment which the passengers secured on expensive steamers spending twice and three times as much as we did. At the same time, the fact that no one was making money out of the trip, but that we were all contributing equally to its success, obviated all grumbling, and secured a general bonhomie of priceless value on such trips. Finally, I should add that, though the trip was so inexpensive, it has been so well arranged as to pay all expenses, a fact that brings out clearly the co-operative as opposed to the philanthropic character of the undertaking. The resolution appended was carried at a general meeting of the passengers on the last day of the voyage, and speaks for itself :—

Resolved—That this meeting of the passengers of the steam yacht Fridtjof hereby expresses its keen appreciation of all the arrangements made by the authorities of the Regent Street Polytechnic for the second of the series of five trips to the Norwegian fjords, and wishes to affirm in the strongest possible manner its gratitude to Mr. Robert Mitchell for his untiring energy and successful efforts in anticipating all the varied wants and necessities of this very enjoyable trip. Both on board and ashore, nothing has been spared which could add to the reasonable comfort and pleasure of all the party. It also desires to thank Rev. Dr. Lunn, Captain Eysenth, and the officers of the Fridtjof for the courtesy and kindness which they have shown throughout the voyage.

WM. THOS. CALE, for Polytechnic Boys and
G. W. MORLEY, Londoners.
W. H. HODSON, Solicitor, Bristol, for Provincials.
M. KATHERINE H. PRICE HUGHES, for Ladies,
HY. SIMPSON LUNN.

THE GEIRANGER FJORD.

THE FRENCH REVIEWS.

THE REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

THE two numbers of the Revue for July are rich in interesting articles. Art, science, politics, and history are each well represented.

Besides M. Victor Cherbuliez' articles on "Art and Nature," and the French view of the McKinley Bill, and others which are more fully noticed elsewhere, there is an interesting medical article on "Tuberculosis" by M. Rochard, in which, after dwelling at some length upon the preventive measures by which the spread of the disease can be best restricted, he concludes with a warm and hopeful eulogium of the labours of the bacteriologists, and the results which may fairly be looked for notwithstanding the disappointment which has attended the great and sudden hopes raised by Dr. Koch. There is no doubt of the existence of the bacillus of tuberculosis. To have made this sure is a step forward, of which the honour belongs to Dr. Koch. His method of destroying it has proved a failure. This is not, in M. Rochard's opinion, to say that no method will yet be found either by him, or by some one else. M. Baudrillart pleads urgently, in his article upon "Le Crédit Agricole," the advantages which may be anticipated for French agriculture by the establishment of some system of credit, and points out how agriculture tends, day by day, to draw nearer in its conditions to other forms of industry and commerce. M. Paul Monceaux contributes a scholarly article on "Vulgar Latin" to the second number for the month, and a "Sketch of the Spanish War" is drawn from the same memoirs of Comte Vigo Rousillon which furnished, not long ago, a striking picture of Napoleon's Egyptian campaign.

THE NOUVELLE REVUE.

THE number for the 1st of July opens with a short article by Don Cesare Lombroso, which has for its object to show that passion has a good deal to do with political revolts and revolutions, and that noble passions are stirred in revolutions, and base ones in revolts. The thought is hardly, however, worked out beyond the point which it has already assumed in every mind, and the paper is rather a succession of notes than an article.

"Germs and Dust," by M. Léon Daudet, is noticed elsewhere. A sketch by M. Wodzinski of a new novel by the Polish author Sienkiewicz, gives a vivid impression to Western readers of the mixture of simplicity and subtlety which Tolstoi has taught us to look for in Slavonic fiction. The Imperial marriage projects of 1852 are, of course, those of Napoleon III., and M. de Brotonne's account does not place the figure of the "parvenu" Emperor in a very agreeable light. The progress of State Communism is a protest by M. Charles Limousin against the danger that we run of a tyranny that may prove worse than any which our fathers have endured. M. Masseras, always strong on economic questions, has an article on the United States in 1890. M. du Wailly contributes in his "Lake Tchad and the Kingdom of Bornu" one of his characteristic African sketches.

ANNALS OF THE FREE SCHOOL OF POLITICAL SCIENCE.

THE article which has most interest of actuality for English readers in the current quarterly publication of this journal is a lucid and moderate re-statement of the Newfoundland question from the French point of view. The subject has been so thoroughly canvassed in the English press that, historically speaking, there is scarcely anything left to learn. The account given by M. J. Cruchon of the facts is substantially the same as that which has been repeated ad nauseam by every daily newspaper in England for the last year and a half. It is chiefly interesting to find how little the French statement differs from the English, and how fully a French writer is able to appreciate the position of the people of Newfoundland. But, as M. Cruchon says, so far as their conception of their own rights is concerned, the French are perfectly content with matters as they stand. If Newfoundland is not, the onus of providing a satisfactory solution, or at any rate of proving its case against France, falls upon it. As for the French Government. —

It is not for us to formulate desires (with regard to acceptable compensation). The British Government must know better than any one the full delicacy of the position in which it is placed. For years past England has only seemed to govern her colonies on condition of obeying them. If such a system suits her she is perfectly free to follow it. But if it pleases Newfoundlanders to violate our rights England can have no claim to shelter herself behind the "self-government" of her colony. We have no discussion with the Cabinet of St. John's. We only recognise the English Cabinet, which signed the treaties. It is for it to consider the situation and to seek for some combination by which it can escape from the difficulty. Our rights, which are incontestable, satisfy us fully; it is not, therefore, for us to take the initiative.

Considering the contest which has raged round the French rights, it is forcing the use of language not a little to say that they are "incontestable." Some of them are, as M. Cruchon himself points out, so difficult of definition that they are about to be submitted to a council of arbitration.

Besides the article on Newfoundland there is one on the English Audit and Exchequer Department; the remaining notices are historic or bibliographical.

THE GAZETTE DES BEAUX ARTS.

THE Gazette for July consists entirely of continuations. There is not one new article to indicate, but the continuations will be willingly received by readers who have already become interested in preceding chapters. M. Edouard Rod continues his literary sketch of the contents of the two salons Paul Durrieu satisfactorily establishes his theory of the illustration of the famous copy of Boetius, by Alexandre Benin, and gives some detail of the life of this hitherto anonymous miniaturist. He gives also a delightful specimen of Benin's more familiar style in a photogravure representing the interior of a jeweller's shop. M. Paul Seidel continues, with plentiful and interesting illustrations, his biographical sketch of the painter of the Court of the great Frederick—M. Antoine Pesne. M. Rod's article is accompanied by some beautiful illustrations of portraiture and sculpture from the salons.

THE GERMAN MAGAZINES.

Deutsche Revue. Breslau. 2 Marks. August.
Count Albrecht von Boon. XXVII.
Berlin and the North Baltic Canal. Vice-Admiral Batsch.
Vienna Medical School. III. A. Kronfeld.
Cornelius and Kaulbach in Düsseldorf. II. H. Müller.
The French Revolution and the Modern State (concluded).
Unpublished Correspondence of Ludwig von Knebel. K. T. Gaedertz.

Deutsche Rundschau. Berlin. 2 Marks. July.
The Autograph Album of August von Goethe. I. Dr. W. Vulpius.
A Newly Discovered Legend of the Creation of the World. Dr. F. Hommel.
The Croy Tapestry of Greifswald University. J. Lessing.
Political Correspondence.

Die Gesellschaft. Leipzig. 1 Mark. Heft 7.
"Andreas Hofer:" a Suabian Peasant Play. O. Panizza.
Poems by Peter Merwin and others.
Psychophilosophy. G. Ludwigs.
"St. Elizabeth:" A New People's Play, by W. Henzen. L. Sturm.
Wilhelm Wundt. With Portrait. E. Steiger.

Nord und Süd. Breslau. 2 Marks. August.
Max Waldau: a Forgotten Poet. II. R. von Gottschall.
Dr. Max von Forckenbeck.
On the Death of Moltke. Poem. K. Gjellerup.
Carl Gottlieb Svarez. II. E. Schwartz.
Pen Pictures of Holstein. II. L. Siegfried.

Preussische Jahrbücher. Berlin. 1 Mark 50 Pf. July 1.

The "Giovannino" by Michelangelo in the Berlin Museum. (Illus.) W. Henke.
Hoffmann von Fallersleben. G. Kreyenberg.
Hæstat: (concluded). R. Wagner.
Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens. A. Bauer.
Political Correspondence—The Triple Alliance; Russia, France, and the Pope; the European Statesman in the Paris Figaro; Austria, etc.
The End of the Dream (concluded). G. Duruy.

Velhagen und Klasing's Neue Monatshefte. Berlin. 1 Mk. 25 Pf. July.

Ten New Songs by Rudolf Baumbach.
Minna Herzlieb. With Portrait. J. E. Freiherr von Grotthus.
The Berlin Art Exhibition. (Illus.) Hanns von Spielberg.
Winland: The Discovery of America in the Eleventh Century. Dr. O. L. Jiriczak.
Playing Cards. (Illus.) Dr. O. Doering.
Oriental Carpets. (Illus.) C. von Vincenti.

Westermann's Illustrierte Monatshefte. Berlin. Quarterly. 4 Marks. August.

Palermo. (Illus.) II. L. Salomon.
Konrad Ferdinand Meyer. Zürich Poet. With Portrait. E. Zabel.
The Tournament. (Illus.) I. A. von Heyden.
Sultan Abdul Hamid, of Turkey, and the Yıldiz Palace. With Portrait. H. Vambergy.

Vom Fels zum Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mk. Heft 12.
The Thyra Valley in the Unterharz. (Illus.) German Churches and Schools in Paris. Dr. P. Tetzner.

Poisonous Reptiles. (Illus.) Karl Vogt.
The Youth of the Austrian Emperor Joseph II. A. Kleinschmidt.
New York's Arab Colony.
In the Wasgau—Hagenau, etc., in Alsace. (Illus.) O. Schwebel.
Railway Swindlers. A. O. Klausmann.
Inland Steamship Travelling in the United States. (Illus.) C. Benckard.
Taking off One's Hat in Saluting, and other Customs. K. Erdmann.
The Country of the Mouth of the Rhine. K. Kollbach.

The "Deutsche Rundschau" and its Editor.—In Germany the magazine hero of the moment is Dr. Julius Rodenberg, editor of the Deutsche Rundschau. He has just attained his sixtieth year, and his friends and admirers have been helping him to observe his birthday in right festive fashion. Some of the magazines, notably Nord und Süd for July, and Heft 13 of Ueber Land und Meer, have also done honour to their "colleague", in suitable articles and reminiscences, so that this month, when the Continental edition of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS will be started, he may quite appropriately form the subject of the brief biographical sketch in the series inaugurated by Mr. Albert Shaw in connection with the American magazines.

Before settling down to his literary work at Berlin, however, Dr. Rodenberg wandered about Europe a good deal; and of all the countries which he visited England would seem to have pleased him most. In his poems, novels, and sketches, he constantly shows us how well he knows the turmoil of the great city, with its dingy districts on the Thames and its more aristocratic quarters of the West End. But he is equally well acquainted with the more secluded country-seats out of hearing of the metropolis, and with the scenery and life in Wales and in the Emerald Isle. "An Autumn in Wales" and "London in the Autumn Fog" were some of the fruits of his visit in 1856. The tragic side of London life also made a deep impression on him—that intense feeling of loneliness and the consciousness of being utterly friendless in a sea of human beings—and as the result of his emotions he has given the world his sketch, "The Girl From Seven Dials."

DR. JULIUS RODENBERG.

Two years later Dr. Rodenberg went over to Ireland, passing through Wales on his way, and greeting his old friends at the farm where he stayed on his previous Welsh tour. To the Irish tour we owe "The Isle of Saints" and the "Harp of Erin," in which the author contends that there is probably no other country where folk-lore and religious belief have such a deep hold on the minds of the people, and that the true home of the legend is the country where the people's affection for the Catholic Church is the most deep-rooted, and that in Ireland, moreover, the people not only cherish their religious beliefs and repeat their legends, but every day they go on creating new stories. In the years 1859 to 1864 he published, among other works, his "Everyday Life in London," "Day and Night in London," "The Isle

- Das Zwanzigste Jahrhundert. Berlin.
Mark. July 22.
Poems by G. Wauer, W. Hess, A. Mais, and Paul Warncke.
Natural Religion.
The Universal German Union.
- Deutsche Literaturzeitung. Berlin. 7
Marks yearly. July 18.
The Scientific Expedition of the Gazelle, 1874—1876. G. Geriand.
- Das Magazin für Literatur. Berlin.
40 Pf. July 4.
The "Freiland" Movement. Paul Michaelis.
July 18.
Lillencron's New Lyrics. O. J. Bierbaum.
Lynch Law. P. Schellhas.
Gustave Flaubert's Correspondence. F. Maithner.
July 25.
The late Wilhelm Weber. Prof. B. Krause.
Periodicals and Literature. II. A. Herr.
- Moderne Rundschau. Vienna. 50 Pf.
July 1.
Profit-Sharing. R. Grazer.
Madame Blavatsky.
Prizes for Short Stories.
Poems by D. von Lillencron and others.
- Wiener Literatur-Zeitung. Vienna.
2 Marks yearly. July 15.
A Vienna Theatre-Year. A. Müller.
Robert Hamerling as a Philosopher. Dr. V. Knauer.
- Der Zeitgenosse. Berlin. 50 Pf.
July 1.
Poems by Hugo Groth, C. Bienenstein, and others.
Ferdinand von Saar as a Story-Writer. F. Lemmermeyer.
July 15.
Prince Emil zu Schönau-Carolath, Poet and Novelist. O. Flaischlen.
Poems by R. Zozmann and others.
- Sphinx. Gera (Reuss). August. 1 Mark.
The Theosophical Society in India and Madame Blavatsky. Dr. F. Hartmann.
Meister and his Doctrines. O. Kiesewetter.
- Deutsche Worte. Vienna. 1 Mark 50 Pf.
quarterly. July.
The Prevention of Crime. Dr. F. Tönnies.
- Kritische Revue aus Oesterreich. Vienna.
July 1.
The Majority of the Future. Josef Graf.
The Most Recent Russian Literature. I. A. Golant.
July 15.
Twenty-five Years Ago. Dr. G. J. Guttman.
Russian Literature (concluded).
- Romanische Revue. Vienna. 12 Marks yearly.
June.
A Defence of the Persecuted Magyar Innocence.
Archbishop Silvestre Morariu-Andrievid.
With Portrait.
Rumanian Marriage Customs. Dr. S. Dische.
- Ueber Land und Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mark.
Heft 1.
In the Valley of the Gera. (Illus.) A. Trinius.
Across the Atlantic. (Illus.) O. Neubaur.
Annaburg Military Training Institution. (Illus.)
The Electrical Exhibition at Frankfurt-on-the-Main. (Illus.) Dr. T. Wimmenauer.
Ten Poems. L. Thaden.
The Fan. (Illus.) K. von Adelfels.
Gustav Freytag. (Illus.) F. Ruffler.

of Thanet," "Jersey and Guernsey," and his novel "The Street Singer of London."

In 1861, meanwhile, Dr. Rodenberg had taken a wife, and the following year saw him finally take up his abode at Berlin. First he edited several small periodicals till 1874, when the Deutsche Rundschau was founded, and he became its editor, to make it in a very short time one of the most important and influential of the German reviews, numbering among its contributors the first authors and poets of the day. No one will have forgotten the greatest event in its history so far—its publication of the Emperor Frederick's Diary of the Franco-German War. Besides his "Pictures of Berlin Life," in three volumes, Dr. Rodenberg has found time to edit, "with marginal notes," the posthumous papers of Franz Dingelstedt, and to write several novels dealing with different phases of Berlin life. His poems also take a high place.

Die Gesellschaft.—A notable feature of this magazine has already been pointed out—the reviews of foreign books. The English literature noticed in the July number includes Miss Octavia Hill's "Homes of the London Poor," which, however, has just been translated into German; "Janet," by Mrs. Oliphant, and "Eric Brighteyes," by Rider Haggard. The editor recommends all to read Miss Hill's book; for, though it is old, it is ever new; it is not only true, but excellently written. The reviewer of the two stories, too, finds them well worth reading.—Oskar Panizza describes a very interesting Suabian peasant play, recently performed at Oberdorf in the Bavarian Algäu, which, he thinks, gives us a better insight into the mediæval "mysteries" than does the Passion Play of Oberammergau. This year the subject of the Oberdorf performance was the Tyrolese hero Andreas Hofer. The actors write their piece in dialogue form, half in Suabian and half in Tyrolese dialect; they know the story, and the scene, the stage, is the neighbourhood.—"St. Elizabeth" is the title of another drama, by William Henzen, successfully produced at the Worms Reformed Theatre.

Preussische Jahrbücher.—The Berlin Museum, though it may possess no master-works of the first rank, contains several original productions by the first artists. There is, for instance, the charming little Madonna, by Raphael, and in the sculpture department we have the marble statue of John the Baptist, the "Giovannino," a most characteristic early work of Michelangelo. Herr W. Henke describes this statue at great length, and supplements his article by an illustration, probably the first that has brightened the pages of the Jahrbücher. Herr Kreyenberg follows with an interesting account of Hoffmann von Fallersleben, author of the well-known national song, "Deutschland, Deutschland über alles," to whom it is proposed to erect a monument in Heligoland, where the famous song had its birth exactly fifty years ago.

Velhagen.—The July number publishes ten new songs by Rudolf Baumbach. Then comes a Goethe article, telling the story of Minna Herzlieb, a late love of Goethe's, and the model for Ottilie in his novel, "Die Wahlverwandtschaften" ("Elective Affinities"). Adolf Stahr tells the following episode: Minna was once travelling through Potsdam, and was desirous of seeing over the castle of Sans-Souci. She learnt, however, that the king was there, and that all entrance to the castle was prohibited. When she was on the point of turning away disappointed, an officer stepped up to her and asked her how she liked the neighbourhood and whether she had not wanted to see the castle. She answered him shortly in the affirmative, but that the presence of the king had made it impossible. To which the officer replied that that need be no hindrance, she had only to announce herself. Then she recognised that the officer was no other than King Frederick William III., whose invitation she must of course accept; but her abrupt answer made her feel so ashamed that she could not remember having seen anything but a number of inquisitive faces staring at her.

Vom Fels zum Meer.—Christian Benckard writes an instructive parallel between the condition of inland steamship travelling in America and inland steamship travelling in Germany, and comes to the conclusion that, though enormous progress has been made in America, in the last few years the progress has been backwards, partly owing to the standstill in trade and industry, but chiefly to the indifference of the Government at Washington which shows so little concern for the keeping of the inland waterways. But a change for the better is imperative for the self-protection of the Union. For the waterways have a great strategical importance, and in case of war it would matter greatly if, for instance, a flotilla of gun-boats could not reach Delaware from New York other than by the sea route, or if the flotilla were held in those harbours by strong hostile fleets.

Aus Allen Welttheilen. Leipzig. 80 Pf. July.
The Anthropography of the Balkan Peninsula
(continued). (Illus.) O. Händler.
A Ride Through North-Eastern Tants. R.
Fitzner.
Reminiscences of Travel in Bosnia. G. Paull.
Wisemann's Explorations (continued). W. H.
Portrait of Herbert Ward and other illustrations.

Globus. Brunswick. July.

A German Map-Making Jubilee, with supplement, "The Oldest Map of Germany" (1491).
L. G. Binger's Travels from the Niger to the Upper Guinea Coast. (Illus.) H. Seidel.

Die Gartenlaube. Leipzig. 50 Pf. Heft 8.
The Police and Crime in Berlin. (Illus.) II.
P. Lindenberg.

A Rhine Journey with Viktor von Scheffel.
(Illus.) W. H. Riehl.
The Brothers Lachner, Musicians. (Illus.)
Wanderings in Vienna. (Illus.) V. Ohlvaacoi.

Daheim. Leipzig. July 18.

Ernst Julius Hähnel, Sculptor. (Illus.)

July 28.

Men and Horses: Eating and Drinking in England. G. Horn.
Ohlli. (Illus.)

Schorer's Familienblatt. (Salon-Ausgabe.)
Berlin. 75 Pf. Heft 12.

The Gospel in Modern Life. With Portrait of Mrs. Humphry Ward.
Experiences in a Madhouse. O. Eburg.
Dr. Heinrich von Stephan, German Postmaster-General. With Portrait. E. Schmidt.
Berlin Cardsharps. M. Klepper.
Prizes for Amateur Photography.

Heft 13.

Amateur Photography. (Illus.) Dr. W. H.
Vogel.

The Scheffel Monument in Heidelberg. (Illus.)

SOME CATHOLIC MAGAZINES.

Alte und Neue Welt. Binsledeln. 50 Pf.
Heft 11.

Justinus Kerner, Poet. With Portrait. A.
Kessler.

From Lake Constance to the Adriatic. (Illus.)
F. Hopf.

The Beginnings of the Swiss Confederacy.
(Illus.) III. W. S. dier.

Postal Rates and the Zone Tariff. F. Spiegel.

Deutscher Hausschatz. Regensburg. 40 Pf.
Heft 14.

The Benedictine Priory of Salesmes. (Illus.)
Dr. J. M. Höbner.

French Politeness. Marianne Meister.

Indian Temples. (Illus.)
Eisenach and the Wartburg. (Illus.) A. J.
Clippers.

Heft 15.

Old Prophecies about the Emperor and the Empire. Dr. H. Grauert.

The Exhibition of the Holy Coat at Trèves.
S. Beissel.

Die Katholischen Missionen. Freiburg
(Baden). August.

Jacob Müller and Go (continued). (Illus.)
Recent Indian Troubles in America. P. Jutz.

Litterarische Rundschau für das Katholische Deutschland. Freiburg (Baden).
9 Marks yearly. July 1.

New Works in the Department of Philosophy and Theological Speculation. I. M. Glo-sner.

Stimmen aus Maria-Laach. Freiburg
(Baden). 10 Marks 80 Pf. yearly. July 1.

Old and New in the Labour Encyclical. A.
Lehmkuhl.

The Economics of Marx Socialism. H. Paech.

The following papers have also been received: — Musikalische Rundschau, *Deutsch-
Soziale Blätter*, Zeitschrift für Volkskunde,
Litterarischer Merkur, Der Gute Kamerad, Das Krienschen.

Ueber Land und Meer.—This periodical, which has just started a new volume, shows such great signs of improvement that it is worth while to call attention to them here. The articles are longer and the subjects are more interesting. Hitherto they resembled little newspaper paragraphs and had no permanent value whatever.

Deutsche Literaturzeitung.—This is, in fact, a weekly review of new books in every department of literature. A notable feature is the publication of the contents of current periodicals. The same plan has been adopted by Städtebilder and the Wiener Literaturzeitung.

Das Magazin für Literatur.—"Freiland" is the title of a social picture of the future, by Dr. Theodore Hertzka, published in the autumn of 1889. In the form of a novel the Vienna economist depicts a transformed human society, based on the principles of liberty and equality.

Germania: Deutsche Dichter der Gegenwart is the title of a publication in connection with the German Exhibition at West Brompton. It gives the portraits and autographs of some seventy living authors and poets, and, instead of biographical notices, a specimen of the work of each writer is given. Thus the book is made up of poems, dramas, and short articles and tales. Julius Rodenberg, for instance, figures with a description of "The Early People on a Winter Morning in Berlin." Publishers: Gebrüder Paetel, Berlin; and Waterlow and Sons, London. Price 3s. 6d.

Part 8 of The Universal English-German and German-English Dictionary, by Dr. Felix Flügel, has also been received. Asher and Co., Bedford Street.

THE SPANISH MAGAZINES.

In the Revista Contemporanea for June 30th, Dr. Luis Marco continues his series of "Political Poets" with a paper on Don Eduardo Benot. The translation of the REVIEW of REVIEWS article on Leo XIII. is completed, and also the Marquis de Nadaillac's paper on "The Progress of Anthropology." Of the other papers none call for special remark except "The Year's Art and Literature in Valencia," by D. J. Casan, which is a solid piece of work, animated by a healthy spirit of protest against the materialism of the age, and an instalment of Don Luis Canovas's story, "Rosarito," which is also continued in the mid-July number. The latter also contains an anonymous article on the "Bable" language—that is, the most ancient speech of the Province of Asturias—and the sketch of a new Penal Code, drawn up by the Academy of Jurisprudence. On the whole, the number is not a very interesting one.

We have received some numbers of La Reforma Literaria, a monthly published at Madrid, and edited by Don Manuel Lorenzo d'Ayot, which claims to represent, and to be "dedicated to the propaganda of," modern ideals in art and literature. It began as a fortnightly, the monthly issue dating only from last January. A novel ("The Tragedian's Daughter") and a play ("La Gaviota"—the Sea-Gull) by the editor are running simultaneously as feuilletons. As a whole, the publication seems to promise well. A short paper in the May number, by Luis Vega-Rey, contrasts the relative positions in Spain of the drama and the bull-fight, the advantage being enormously on the side of the latter, much, as the author thinks, to the discredit of the Spanish nation. His language on the subject is pretty strong, and leaves the impression that the national pastime shows no signs of falling into disuse.

The two most important articles in España Moderna are José Ramon Melida's on "Ancient American Monuments and the Arts of the Far East," and "Faust in Music," by Arturo Campion, discussing the way in which the legend has been treated by Gounod, Boito, Berlioz and Schumann. There are short stories by R. Becerro de Bengoa and Ricardo Palma. The foreign section includes, among other things, Renan's "Souvenirs d'Enfance," Zola's article on the Goncourts, and Victor Cherbuliez on the late King of Bavaria, with "La Soupe au Fromage" by Alphonse Daudet, and a characteristic sketch by Théodore de Banville. L'Aveng for July is the best number we have yet seen. Its principal contents are an article by Luis de Romero, describing a walking tour to the celebrated monastery of Montserrat; a paper on the pictures in the Barcelona Exhibition (the process reproductions, however, are extremely poor); and a Pyrenean sketch by J. Massó Torrents, entitled "A Mountain Siren." There are also specimens of ancient dialect poetry, and the beginning of a series of papers on "Popular Anthropology," by Ignasi Valenti Vivó.

THE ITALIAN MAGAZINES.

La Nuova Antologia.

July 1st.

- The Recently-discovered Aristotle MS. D. Compagnetti.
- Mystical and Pagan Italy. (II.). G. Barzellotti.
- Italian Africa. P. Antonelli.
- The Workmen's Schoolmistress (a novel). E. de Amicis.
- Lord Byron's Political Influence. G. Chiarini.
- The First Falsehood. (A Comedy. Act III.) L. di Castelnuovo.
- The Disciplinary Authority of the President. R. Bonghi.

July 16th.

- Is History a Science? (Conclusion.) P. Villari.
- The Platonic Academy of Florence. L. Ferri.
- Lord Byron's Political Influence (II.). G. Chiarini.
- The Italian Kingdom and the German Empire. C. Baer.
- On Fatigue. P. Mantegazza.
- Co-operation and Collective Property. G. Valenti.

La Rassegna Nazionale.

July 1st.

- Stefano Jacini and his Political Programme. O. Scalvanti.
- Toys. Attilio Brunialti.
- On Some Recent Historical Works by French Authors. G. Gabrinski.
- Antonio Stoppani as a Geologist. G. Mercalli.
- Italian Schools in Foreign Countries. A. Rossi.

July 16th.

- A Recent Critic on Guizot. T. Persico.
- Natural Laws. G. Gabardi.
- Military Science. C. V. M.
- Commentations on the Creation (continued). A. Stoppani.
- Contemporary Social Facts. E. Coppi.
- Mercury, Venus, and Mars, according to Recent Observations. O. Z. Bianco.
- A New Edition of the Poems of G. Giusti. L. Alberti.

La Civiltà Cattolica.

July 4th.

- The Encyclical of Leo XIII. (I.)
- Notes on the Universal History. C. Canth.
- A New Explanation of Hypnotism.
- Count Campello and Catholic Reform in Italy.

July 18th.

- The Centenary Celebration of St. Aloysius Gonzaga.
- The System of Physics of St. Thomas Aquinas.
- The Migrations of the Hittim.

La Scuola Positiva.

June 30th.

- Divorce and the Italian Catholics. A. Naquet.
- The Demand for Legal Codification. G. Vandale-Papale.

July 15th.

- Public Trial. R. Garofalo.
- The Salvation Army. F. S. Nitti.
- On Prostitution. G. Fioretti.

La Nuova Antologia.—G. Chiarini, who has made a special study of English literature, contributes two very readable articles on Lord Byron's political influence in Europe in the early part of the century. How is it, he asks, that with contemporary poets, whose verse is now admitted to display far greater genius, and whose moral character was incomparably higher, the author of "Childe Harold" exercised so powerful a fascination over Europe? Signor Chiarini explains the mystery by the fact that Byron was the only Englishman of note who protested openly and eloquently against the reactionary wave which spread over Europe after 1815, and of which the Castlereagh Administration was the logical outcome in England. Neither Goethe, nor Shelley touched the hearts of their readers as Byron did, for no one reproduced so faithfully as he the repressed revolutionary spirit of the times. Nor did Byron restrict himself to protesting with his pen. After leaving England in utter disgust at the insular Philistinism of his native land, he was for a year or two an active member of the "Carbonari" before transferring his sympathies to the struggling Greek nationality. Hence the enthusiasm evoked. He inspired Mazzini, and in the Slav countries Byron was the first English poet who was ever studied at all. In conclusion, the Italian critic, whilst fully admitting the artistic limitations of Byron's poetic genius, maintains that he contributed directly to the realisation of the two great ideals of his life—the liberation of Italy, and that of Greece, and that he is thereby placed infinitely above the level of even greater poets than himself.

La Rassegna Nazionale.—Between serious disquisitions on the political programme of the much lamented Stefano Jacini, and the geological discoveries of the equally lamented Antonio Stoppani, the Rassegna has placed a pleasant, chatty article on children's toys, with many interesting details as to their origin and manufacture. Fortunately for the curious in such matters, the old heathen custom of burying favourite toys by the side of children lasted through the first centuries of the Christian era, and many are the playthings that have been dug up by archaeologists, not only in ancient Greek and Egyptian burial places, but also in the Roman catacombs. The very earliest toys of all, like most heathen images, are invariably of a hideous and terrifying aspect, fit more to alarm than to amuse the children; but already, in the days of Greek prosperity, we find the most exquisitely modelled and jointed figures made by real artists for the amusement of the Greek youth. In the Middle Ages the most elaborate mechanical toys were constructed for the amusement of princes and great nobles; and later, Paris dolls, exquisitely attired in the latest fashionable novelty, were sent all over Europe as models of taste and elegance. During the reign of Queen Anne, in the midst of the most bitter wars between England and France, special passports were granted to the fashion dolls sent over from Paris for the edification and imitation of the ladies at the Court of St. James. Nowadays, it appears, the toy manufacture is almost non-existent in Italy; Germany, of course, has always excelled in carved wooden toys; England for a long time produced the best wax dolls, but she has now been supplanted in the trade by France. Altogether, on a rough calculation, 25,000 workmen are employed through Europe in the manufacture of toys alone, earning wages to the extent of over £3,000,000 per annum.

The Civiltà Cattolica, besides commencing a series of articles on the Papal Encyclical—the first of which is devoted to reaffirming the rights of private property—contains a vigorous attack on the recently published "Life of Count Campello," the self-styled founder of the new Italian Catholic Church, by Alexander Robertson, Presbyterian minister at San Remo.

La Scuola Positiva.—Senator Naquet writes on his special subject, divorce, and disclaims the contention that because he himself happens to be of Hebrew origin—a fact he has no wish to deny—that the present movement in favour of divorce is in any way specially inspired by Jewish sentiment. The anti-Semitic agitators on the Continent have been making use of the argument in order to excite the minds of orthodox Catholics in favour of their Crusade.

THE SCANDINAVIAN MAGAZINES.

Samtiden.

Bergen, Published by J. Brunchorst and Gerhard Gran. Yearly subscription, 5 kr. post free. July.

August Strindberg. Ola Hansson.
My Travelling Companion. X.
Unitarianism. G. Armauer Hansen.
Religious Paintings in the Salons of 1891.
Gaston Dechamps.

Skilling Magazin.

Weekly (Illus.) Christiania. Yearly subscription, 8 kr. 80 öre.

No. 26.

Joseph Kainz, actor. (With Portrait.)
Welhaven's Ancient Songs. Henrik Jaeger.
Behind the Scenes. Ulrikke Greve,
The Wilderness of Sydvaranger. J. S.
The Heirs of Dedlow Marsk. Bret Harte.

No. 27.

From Christiania to Skien at the opening of the Agricultural Show.
Jenny Lind. (Continued from No. 24.)
Reminiscences from Anam. II. Bailli.
The Heirs of Dedlow Marsk. (Conclusion.)

No. 28.

Microbes. Dr. G. Armauer Hansen.
Henrik Wergeland's 17th of May Festival at Eidsvold. H. Tonsager.
Sheriff Christensen.
An Uninvited Guest. Anna Wahlenberg.
The Renewal of the Triple Alliance. A. Raedder.

No. 29.

Chr. Birch-Reichenwald. (With Portrait.)
Our Naval War with England. (Illus.) Constantius Flood.
The Ocean World. Aksel S. Steen.
The Wilderness of Sydvaranger. J. S.
Literary Reviews.

Svensk Tidskrift.

Published by Franz von Schéele, Upsala. Yearly subscription, 10 kr.

Songs. Viktor Rydberg.
Marching and other Military Movements. C. O. Nordensvan.
The Art Exhibition of Gothenburg. F. U. Wrangel.
New Lyrics. Reviews by Richard Steffen.
On the Question of the Necessity of Latin in Schools. L. H. A.
Through Shadows. Opening chapter of a novel. Mathilda Roos.
A Life that was Lived for the Liberty of the People. L. H. A.
Literary Reviews. L. H. A.

Samtiden opens with a story of August Strindberg, the Zola of Sweden, by Ola Hansson. The article is strongly eulogistic. Written by Ola Hansson, it is unnecessary to say that it is in good style and full of interest. It is open to question, however, whether he is altogether correct in comparing August Strindberg, as author and as man, to the pillar of fire which of old led the Israelites through the wilderness by night. All Strindberg's writings are not written in a style calculated to draw Young Sweden into the fair paths of purity and right. The will may be there, the motive may be the right, and it is at least comforting to the soul that there should be so many who aspire to be pillars of fire to the people. And alas! that so many aspirations should have no more glorious end than the magic pills that, in childhood's days, we set fire to on a plate, and there arose out of their midst black serpents, horrible to look upon, and—accompanied by the vilest of smells. For has the "Giftas" of Strindberg, the "Krentzer Sonata" of Tolstoi, or the many ear-tingling novels of Zola and other "pillars of fire," been of greater benefit to the world, after all, than the "Moths" of Ouida? There would seem to be so many different ways in which men of talent might really be as pillars of fire to the world, instead of merely calling up black serpents and vile smells for the benefit of those who gloat over and revel in such. Ola Hansson gives a charming pen-and-ink sketch of August Strindberg, which I reproduce for those interested in the author of "The Red Room." His exterior bears the stamp of genius, and over his whole personality lies something of the hero of old Northern saga. Nothing commonplace. A slim, elastic figure, with small feet and small white hands, a little aristocratic face of Mongolian caste, with upturned moustache, and full, red lips, a remarkably high forehead, over which the thick hair falls in boisterous curls, and eyes large, gloomy, and changeable as the sea at autumn's close, smiling and shining as the sunbeam through the mist, threatening and defiant as a couple of pistol-mouths.

Viktor Rydberg's songs, in Svensk Tidskrift, are simple, rhythmical little ditties, taken from a story of his dealing with the days of the Reformation, and as yet unpublished. The present issue of Svensk Tidskrift is full of variety, and contains several very interesting articles. The most attractive feature is, however, undoubtedly the opening chapter of the new novel by Mathilda Roos, "Through Shadows." The story promises to be one of vivid interest. So far, we are presented to a pessimistic heroine with shadowy unbeliefs, an intriguing stepmother, a scorned but manly lover, an enthusiastic, heaven-devoted pastor, whose handsome face sends a sudden gush of religion into the hearts of the fashionable, who dote on him, and prayer meetings are organised. The poor are doted on likewise, and yearnings for a better life steal over the elegant circles, and the fashionables weep—with the exception, of course, of the sceptical damsel, who grows sarcastic on the subject—and bibles are read diligently, the while the poor pastor, knowing not for how much of this sudden revolution in the beau monde his handsome face is responsible, prays and preaches on with beautiful humility and sincerity. Thus far the first chapter.

Among the literary notices by "L. H. A." is a review of one of Edna Lyall's books, the title of which has been translated "Skvaller-ormen" (The Tattle-snake). The novel, says the reviewer, shows an undeniably keen knowledge of humanity and psychology, though the work is rather marred by a large amount of exaggeration; for one can scarcely believe that even gossip can bring about such disastrous results as in Edna Lyall's book, where one of the characters, a young man of Polish descent, and altogether irreproachable, chancing to criticise somewhat bitterly in England Russia's Bulgarian politics, etc., finally ends his life in the dread Siberian mines, where the sun does not shine by day nor the moon by night. All because fatal-fanged Gossip takes up his remark, and, passing it along till it grows into a rumour of his having been the author of the last Tsar assassination, breathes the tale into the ears of the Russian police authorities, and the thing is done. There is a strain of antipathy to Russia (easily accounted for, according to "L. H. A." so far as the English are concerned) running through the story; but all political or æsthetic tendency may well be set aside, for it is worthy of note, if only for the sharp blow it deals the busy-tongued, mischief-making tittle-tattler. "But read the book yourself. You will be sure to find something in it to ponder over on your own account."

THE DUTCH MAGAZINES.

De Gids opens with a story by W. Jaeger, which appears to be an unconscious reminiscence of Bret Harte's "Flip." On any other theory it would be difficult to account for the close resemblance of every detail in some passages, which might almost be a free translation, especially the scene where the girl—Cinderella-like—dresses herself, in a secret nook of the woods, in the hidden store of finery. At the same time the "Rose of Rigaa" has an air of freshness and sincerity which suggests honest work and not intentional plagiarism. The story has been adapted from Bret Harte; the setting and treatment are Heer Jaeger's own; and Rosa Koldsen, the daughter of a Danish adventurer and his Javanese wife, has a distinct individuality of her own, as unlike saucy, boyish Flip as the steamy forests of the Sumatra headlands are to the Californian sierras. The lover, instead of being an outlawed desperado, is a respectable lieutenant in the Dutch navy, and, we may add, a much more insignificant figure than Lance. But the tragic close is almost word for word the same—except that the two have been shot in a skirmish between the Atchinese smugglers and the Dutch man-o-war's men, instead of committing suicide in a charcoal-pit.

Dr. C. C. Uhlenbeck contributes an article on "Russia in the Middle of the Seventeenth Century," which gives an interesting view of a little-known subject.

The whole article is full of interest—especially the picture of old Russian social life, and the specimens of ancient songs and ballads, several of which are quoted.

"Over the Border" is a clever article by the author who writes under the name of "Wilkama"—of a kind somewhat difficult to classify. It reminds one of Sir Arthur Helps's dialogues, and has some of his acuteness of observation and neat way of putting things. Several subjects are treated, but the main point discussed is the present insignificance of the Dutch in European life and politics. With regard to the reasons why Dutch literature is not better known, one of the interlocutors says:—"Our language is the great obstacle to our getting a hearing in the concert of the world." Accordingly, several well-known writers have preferred to use French or German. Elsewhere, "Wilkama" says:—"Let us not begin to discuss the question whether or not it is desirable to write in a language only understood by some four and a half millions of people, of whom only a small proportion are in the habit of reading, and only an infinitesimal fraction of that proportion ever buy books." We learn incidentally that one of the greatest forms of enjoyment to a Dutchman (all Netherlands being passionate devotees of tobacco) is to smoke in a railway carriage not intended for smokers. By the by, the belief that neatness and cleanliness are peculiarly Dutch virtues is unpatriotically declared by "Wilkama" to have no foundation. "Our primitive type in this respect," he says, "stands before us in the Transvaal Boer," and he adds that most Hollanders have a natural horror of water, which, however, is to be accounted for—if not excused—by the scarcity of other than stagnant water in the country.

Max Rooses contributes an article on "Peter Paul Rubens," forming a sequel to his paper on the Antwerp Museum.

Vragen des Tijds contains the conclusion of Dr. Waalewijn's essay on "Religion and Science," an article on "Patriotism," by J. P. Meerkerk, and a paper, rather of the blue-book order, on "Forced Labour in the Lampong District (Java)," from which we learn that the corvées of the French Ancien Régime still survive in some parts of the Dutch colonies. Some of these services are paid and others unpaid, the latter including work on roads and bridges, and carrying the baggage of officials on their journeys from place to place. It has been proposed to abolish this system altogether, and substitute one of taxation which has already been introduced in some parts; but nothing has as yet been done in the matter.

NEW PUBLICATION.

Hearth and Home, a new weekly periodical for ladies, which I should have noticed at the time, has now been in existence for three months. It is sold at threepence, and has two features which deserve special mention. Mrs. Talbot Coke, who is well-known as a contributor to the Queen, the Gentlewoman, and other ladies' journals, throws into this new venture her energy and her experience.

The genesis thereof was the conviction that in spite of the big weekly women's papers, there was room for a modest lovable paper which "speaks the language of our hearth and home," which should possess some literary merit—not all fuss, fluff and feathers—and give as much practical help in domestic and artistic matters as possible; in short, to aim at a strong personal touch between contributors and readers in all departments, and "all for threepence." Steering clear of the fatal personalities about nobodies was to be one article of faith. "New journalism" was to produce our chats with celebrities. Art in the house was given over to Mrs. Coke, who has already almost as large a correspondence as she had for the two years on the Queen before a call to Egypt broke off work. Next to Mrs. Coke's department, the one which has created most interest is "What to do with our daughters," and Mr. Senior's delightful "Out of Town" papers have been heartily welcomed. The Art Guild with its monthly competition has caught on splendidly, too.

The other feature is the fact that Hearth and Home is publishing as a serial Carmen Silva's new novel. I am glad to see that, unlike other ladies' journals, it has not hesitated to recognise woman's need for a wider sphere of activity and interest than the conventional routine of society.

THERE are two notable articles in the New England Magazine for July. The Hon. Nelson Dingley, in his account of the State of Maine asserts that no part of the world excels Maine in its marvellous combination of ocean, lake, river, forest, and mountain scenery. There are hundreds of lakes as beautiful as Killarney, Windermere, or Geneva. And very often the sky is as clear and blue as that of Italy. Obviously, Messrs. Cook ought to arrange for tourists' trips to Maine without more ado. The other article, by Mr. W. B. Harte, is a plea for Continental unity. It is an article which sets forth with earnest conviction a plea for the union of Canada with the United States. In 1900 the writer thinks that the North American continent will have shaken off the last shreds of monarchy, and will be from north to south one harmonious and powerful republic. There is an illustrated paper on Schliemann's discoveries in Hellas, which is full of interest.

Cold as a Beautifier of Flowers.—Writing in Cornhill for August, Mr. Grant Allen points out that the popular belief that the tropics furnish a more brilliant floral display than the Alps is a mistake.

As a matter of fact, people who know the hot world well can tell you that the average tropical woodland is much more like the dark shade of Box Hill or the deepest glades of the Black Forest. For really fine floral display in the mass, all at once, you must go, not to Ceylon, Sumatra, Jamaica, but to the far north of Canada, the Bernese Oberland, the moors of Inverness-shire, the North Cape of Norway. Flowers are loveliest where the climate is coldest; forests are greenest most luxuriant, least blossoming, where the conditions of life are richest, warmest, fiercest.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE MONTH.

For the convenience of subscribers the publisher will undertake to send any photograph in this list post free to any address on receipt of 2s. 2d.

ROYAL.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

H.I.M. the German Empress. A series of excellent portraits, taken at Potsdam by an operator sent for the purpose, and printed so rapidly that they were on sale in England on the day of the Emperor's arrival.

H.I.M. the German Emperor. A series of photographs, also taken at Potsdam.

SOCIAL.

MESSRS. BROWN, BARNES AND BELL, LIVERPOOL.

Sir Andrew B. Walker, Bart. In five positions.

LITERARY, ARTISTIC AND SCIENTIFIC.

MESSRS. BOWING AND SMALL.

Professor Huxley. Milder and blander than usual.

Dr. Norman Kerr, M.D., F.L.S.

MESSRS. BASSANO AND CO.

Mr. Grant Allen. An excellent and lifelike portrait.

THE LONDON STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY.

M. Jan van Beers.

MR. FRANK M. SUTCLIFFE, WHITBY.

The Late Miss Mary Linskill. A very good likeness of the popular lady novelist.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Mr. William Davenport Adams. See reproduction in "Books of the Month" pages.

RELIGIOUS.

MESSRS. JOHN HORSBURGH AND SON, 131, PRINCES STREET, EDINBURGH.

Rev. James McGregor. In robes of office as Moderator of the Assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Rev. Professor Thomas Smith. In robes of office as Moderator of the Free Church Assembly.

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

THE LONDON STEREOSCOPIC COMPANY.

Miss Decima Moore, The South African Native Choir, Herr Paderewski, Miss Agnes Huntingdon, Miss Lingard.

MR. ALFRED ELLIS.

Mr. C. Hayden Coffin. Six excellent likenesses in morning dress, and in the theatrical costume in "La Cigale." We doubt, however, whether it is wise to flood the market with so many counterfeit presentments of this gentleman.

Miss Irene Vanbrugh. An excellent likeness (in evening dress) of the gifted member of Mr. Toole's Company.

Miss M. St. Cyr. Three portraits of Miss St. Cyr in "La Cigale." And a host of other theatrical portraits.

The Theatre (Eglington and Co.) of this month contains excellent photographic portraits of Miss Mary Lamb and Mr. Charles Haddon Chambers, the dramatist.

Men and Women of the Day (Eglington and Co.) for August contains full page panel portraits of H.I.M. the German Emperor (by Russell and Sons), the Countess of Aberdeen (by Mr. Herbert Barraud), and Sir Graham Berry (by Mr. Herbert Barraud.)

INDEX OF STANDARD PHOTOGRAPHS.

THIS "Index" is a continuation of the Index of Standard Photographs which formed a portion of the "Annual Index of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS." The "Annual" was published at two shillings, and contains particulars of some eleven hundred sets and series of photographs, as well as some nine hundred and fifty single pictures of importance. Photographers and publishers are invited to forward particulars of their new issues to the compiler, H. Snowden Ward, REVIEW OF REVIEWS Office, W.C.

Lantern Slides.—As September is the month when all the important new lantern sets are first issued, the September "Index" will be devoted to lantern slides only. Slide-makers were never busier than they are now, and there will be a very interesting assortment of novelties. Particulars are invited.

Alhambra and Granada.—Ninety views taken just before the fire in the Alhambra, and including many subjects which are now destroyed, 9 by 7, 8 by 5, 5 by 4, unmounted, from 1s. to 4d. Also as medallions, opalines, stereo and lantern slides, etc. G. W. Wilson and Co., Aberdeen, through trade.

Antiquities.—The Roman Wall (thirty subjects) series of altars, pottery, etc., found in Roman camps, and intended for proposed museum at Walwick Chesters. About 8 by 6. Unmounted, 1s. J. Pattison Gibson, Hexham.

Architectural Studies.—See Victoria Law Courts.

British Navy.—Numerous additions since "Annual Index," 12 by 10; unmounted, 2s. 6d.; carbon enlargements, 24 by 18. 27s. Symonds and Co., Portsmouth, and trade.

Celebrities.—Men and Women of the Day.—Three permanent photographs, 9½ by 7, with biographical notices. In cover, 2s. 6d. August issue contains H.I.M. the Emperor of Germany, the Countess of Aberdeen, and Sir Graham Berry. Photos by Barraud, and Russell and Sons. London: Eglington and Co., Great Queen Street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, W.C., and all booksellers.

Clergymen.—The whole of the clergy of the diocese of Liverpool, with about two exceptions; almost the whole of the clergy of the diocese of Manchester. Cabinets, 1s. 6d. Brown, Barnes and Bell, 31, Bold-street, Liverpool, and trade.

English Views.—All principal Derbyshire scenery; also Scarborough, Stratford-on-Avon, Leamington, Kenilworth, Warwick, London, etc. Cartes, 1d.; cabinets, 6d.; 8½ by 6½, 1s.; 9½ by 7½, 1s. 6d. William Potter, Matlock Bath, Derbyshire.

Geological.—Six new views at Giant's Causeway, six sections at Cave Hill limestone quarries, Belfast, eight views of cliffs of Rathlin Island, and basaltic stack, Doonmore. (See "Irish Views," Welch.)

Gibraltar.—Small series taken before the permits were withdrawn by military authorities. (See "Alhambra," Wilson.)

Glenariffe and its waterfalls. New series. (See "Irish Views," Welch.)

Irish Views and Antiquities.—Large additional series of views, etc., in Co. Antrim, Co. Down, and North Coast, 8 by 6 or 8½ by 5½, 1s.; platinum, 1s. 6d. (See also "Annual Index," p. 77. R. Welch, 49, Lonsdale Street, Belfast.)

High Art.—Photogravures. "The Bath of Psyche," after Sir Frederic Leighton, P.R.A.; India prints £1 1s. "After Waterloo: Sauve-qui-peut," after Andrew Gow, R.A.; artist's proofs on Japan, £10 10s.; ditto on India, £8 8s.; India prints, £3 3s. "The Visit to Æsculapius," after E. J. Poynter, R.A.; artist's proofs on Japan, £8 8s.; ditto, on India £6 6s.; India prints, £2 2s. "A Foretaste of Summer," after L. C. Nightingale; India prints, £1 1s. "The Spinster:

there was a simple maiden long ago," after Edwin Long, R.A.; artist's proofs on Japan, £4 4s.; on India, £3 3s.; India prints, £1 1s. The Berlin Photographic Company, 43, New Bond Street, W., and trade.

Jamaica.—New and complete series. Valentine and Sons., through trade.

Liverpool.—Twenty new views (series proceeding), cabinets, 1s 6d., 8½ by 6½, 2s. 6d. Brown, Barnes and Bell, 31, Bold Street, Liverpool, and trade.

Manchester Ship Canal. Eastham section.—Five views on opening day; 8 by 5, unmounted, 1s. Priestley and Sons, Egremont, Cheshire.

Men o' War.—Chilian vessels. Almirante Brown and Almirante Lynch, 12 by 10, 2s. Robinson and Thompson, 28, Church Street, Liverpool, and trade.

Natal.—A valuable series of views, studies of native life, etc., a selection from which was exhibited at the Indian and Colonial Exhibition in 1886. The native life studies are numerous, carefully chosen, and of considerable educational value. List issued. No English agent. Photos supplied at 18s. per dozen. 15 per cent. discount on orders of over £2.

Roman Remains.—Roman wall, altars, pottery, etc.; large series, 1s. 6d. each. J. Pattison Gibson, Hexham.

Sea-Birds.—Razorbills and Guillemots, at their breeding-places, on the Great Bird Cliffs, Rathlin Island, and on the basaltic stack Doonmore. (See "Irish Views" Welch.)

Southern Italy.—Series of San Roque, Castellar, Malaga, and other places. (See "Alhambra," Wilson.)

Sporting Subjects.—Additional series of jockeys, horses, trainers, and sporting celebrities; also views of Newmarket town and exercise ground, taken this season. Portraits: cabinet, 1s. 6d.; coloured, 4s. Horses and views, 8 by 6, unmounted, 2s. H. R. Sherborn, Newmarket.

Stereographs.—100 instantaneous views of clouds, sunsets, shipping, etc. 100 views of Whitby and Yorkshire coast, 1s. each, stereoscopic size. Glass stereographs, 3s. 6d. each, 36s. dozen. Benjamin Wyles, Southport.

Victoria Law Courts, Birmingham, opened by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, July 21st. 30 subjects, exterior and interior, and architectural details. 12 by 10, 4s.; 8 by 6, 2s.; cabinet, 1s. Harold Baker, 58, New Street, Birmingham, and trade.

From photos by Mr. S. Jno Sutton]

THE CHIEF KRELL.

DANCING BOYS.

[Umtata. Tembu'and.

MEDICINE MAN.

SOME PHOTOS FROM TEMBULAND, S. AFRICA.

G. T. Ferneyhough, F.R.G.S. etc., Pietermaritzburg, Natal, South Africa.

Philadelphia and Fairmont Park.—Large series, 10 by 8, mounted, 50 cents, or 5 dols. per doz.; unmounted, 35 cents, or 3 dols. per dozen. A book of miniature views, containing one hundred subjects for selection, will be sent for 1 dol. R. Newell and Son, 633, Arch Street, Philadelphia.

Photo-Micrographs.—A splendid collection of some five hundred and fifty subjects, arranged under Animal Kingdom, Vegetable Kingdom, and Mineral Kingdom. Mounted silver prints, cabinet size, 25 cents; bromide prints, same size, 30 cents; lantern slides, 60 cents. Dozens and upwards about 20 per cent. less. Complete list, W. H. Walsley, Limited, Walnut Street, Philadelphia, U.S.A.

Royal Visit to Derby, May 21, 1891.—Six subjects, 8½ by 6½, platinum type, 1s. 6d.; one view, Mayor presenting address to the Queen, 15 by 12, 4s. Richard Keene, Derby, and trade.

Studies.—Including a good selection of flowers, still life, shipping, sunsets, atmospheric effects, etc., 6½ by 4½, unmounted 6d.; 8½ by 6½, 1s., 12 by 10, 1s. 6d.; enlargements, 15 by 12, on bromide paper, 4s. Also on opal, and as medallions, Christmas cards, etc. W. W. Burnand, Poole, Dorset, and trade.

Vyrnwy Waterworks.—40 views of the undertaking, 12 by 10, 2s.—Robinson and Thompson, 28, Church Street, Liverpool, and trade.

Waterworks of the Liverpool Corporation.—Lake Vyrnwy (seven views), Norton Waterworks, Prescott Reservoir, Oswestry Filter Beds and Reservoir. See "Liverpool," Brown, Barnes and Bell.

Waves.—Four new studies on the north coast of Ireland. (See "Irish Views," Welch.)

Yachts under way.—All the "cracks" of the present season, and new views of the older vessels, are being added to the series of the principal nautical publishers, whose sizes, prices, etc., will be found in the "Annual Index," pp. 84-85. The principal publishers are J. Adamson and Son, Rothessay; Adams and Scanlan, Alhambra Studio, Southampton; F. C. Gould, 10, Harmer Street, Gravesend; Priestley and Sons, Egremont, Cheshire; Smale and Son, Dartmouth; Symonds and Co., Portsmouth; and West and Son, Southsea.

Zulu War.—A series of scenes during the war, and views of battlefields, etc., taken since. By G. T. Ferneyhough, the photographer appointed to accompany the expedition. See "Natal," above.

ART IN THE MAGAZINES.

Magazine of Art. August. 1s.
 "The Morning After the Ball." Etching after A. A. Anderson.
 Longleat. (Illus.) Percy Fitzgerald.
 The Dragon of Mythology, Legend, and Art. (Illus.) I. John Leyland.
 Our Artists and our Universities. M. H. Spielmann.
 The Maddocks Collection at Bradford. II. (Illus.)
 The English School of Miniature Art, with Special Reference to the Exhibition at the Burlington Fine Arts Club. From William Wood (1780-1809) to the Present Time. Illus. J. Lumsden Propert.
 The Potteries of Aller Vale. (Illus.) Cosmo Monkhouse.
 Lucas d'Heere, Painter and Poet of Ghent. (Illus.) Lionel Cust.

Art Journal. August. 1s. 6d.
 "The Widow's Prayer." Etching after R. Knops.
 The Pilgrims' Way. (Illus.) II. Mrs. Henry Ady.
 Velvets, Velvetens, and Plushes. (Illus.) F. Miller.
 The Exhibition at the Champs Elysées and the Champ de Mars. (Illus.) C. Phillips.
 The Clyde and the Western Highlands. (Illus.) R. Walker.

Art Decorator. July. 1s.
 Emblems of Great Artists—Dürer, Holbein, Michelangelo, Raphael, and Rubens. R. Knorr.
 Wood Inlay. Design by F. Flinzer.
 Lunette (The Vine). Prof. G. Sturm.
 Polychrome Friezes (Italian Renaissance). Prof. T. Seubert.
 Decorative Landscapes. A. Wirth.

Art Amateur. July. 3s. 6d.
 The Salon of the Champ de Mars. T. Child.
 An Art Student's Holiday Abroad—Belgium. (Illus.) M. R. Bradbury.
 St. Louis School of Fine Arts. Illus. E. Knauff.
 Hints to Art Students. F. Fowler.
 Mr. A. F. Tait on the Painting of Sheep. (Illus.)
 Studies of Costumes from Drawings by Modern Artists. (Illus.)
 Painting in Water Colours. (Illus.)
 The Draped Model. Chat with Carroll Beckwith and W. Satterlee.
 China Painting. (Illus.)

L'Art. July 15. 2s.
 Abraham Bosse, continued. (Illus.) A. Valabregue.
 An Exhibition of American Artists at Paris. (Illus.) A. Saglio.
 Architecture at the Salon of 1891. V. Petit-grand.
 Illustrations: Le Philosophe en Méditation, after Rembrandt. Le Grand Mare à Saint-Aubin, près Quillebeuf, after V. J. Binet.

Cassell's Saturday Journal. August.
 George Du Maurier at Home. (Illus.)

Chautauquan. August.
 Illustration and Our Illustrators. C. M. Fairbanks.

Contemporary Review. August.
 Pictor Sacrilagus: A.D. 1483. Vernon Lee.
 Rembrandt's Lesson in Anatomy. W. Hastie.

English Illustrated. August.
 George Wilson (Illus.) John Todhunter.

Good Words. August.
 Historic and Genre Pictures. (Illus.) III. Archdeacon Farrar.

Newbery House. August.
 Childhood in Art. (Illus.) II. T. Child.

Nineteenth Century. August.
 The Future of Landscape Art. James Stanley Little.

Tinsley. August.
 The Society of Portrait-Painters.

Magazine of Art.—A capital number. Longleat, the seat of the Marquis of Bath, forms the subject of Mr. Percy Fitzgerald's article. It is, he says, one of the most interesting and imposing of the historic mansions of Wiltshire, about four miles from Warminster. Though the building is said to be after the designs of an Italian architect, it is evident many architects have contributed during the course of centuries, among them Robert Smithson, Sir Christopher Wren, and Sir Jeffrey Wyatt. The mixture of styles, however, is not unpleasing. No English nobleman's palace offers so dramatic a collection of portraits, most of them legitimately connected with the history of the mansion, too.—Mr. Leyland begins an interesting history of the Dragon-Myth, and credits the Chinese and the Japanese with the conception of the dragon in the most terrific shape. Yet it is in China also that the dragon reaches its highest pinnacle as an object of reverence, being emblazoned on imperial standards, and figuring in almost every prominent position as a decoration, besides being markedly an object of propitiation. In a second instalment Mr. Leyland proposes to show the development of the legend in Western lands.—Writing on "Our Artists and Our Universities," Mr. Spielmann finds that Oxford in the last half-century has been more ungrudging in its hospitality than the other Universities which have power to grant honorary degrees to artists and art-writers. Sir Frederic Leighton, Mr. G. F. Watts, and Professor Richmond are the only living artists, and Mr. Ruskin the only living art-writer, who have received the attention of both Oxford and Cambridge. Since 1858 the University of Edinburgh has only received six professors of the arts within its fold, and only once has the University of Glasgow made a Doctor of Laws of an artist—Sir Daniel Macnee. London University has as yet no power to grant honorary degrees; while the Universities of Durham and Ireland seem to have the power, but have never availed themselves of it. The University of Wales has no charter to confer degrees of the kind, and the Victoria University has exercised the power only once. A similar privilege of degree-conferring is enjoyed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and he has exercised his right during the last fifty years on no fewer than four hundred occasions; but although these "Lambeth degrees" have been liberally distributed among professors of music and medicine as well as the theologians, it is interesting to learn that not a single artist is to be found on the list. In the same way Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities have never recognised the artist at all, the minister of religion being the almost exclusive object of their attention.

Art Journal.—In the useful series of papers on the Progress of the Industrial Arts, we get an interesting article on Velvets, Velvetens and Plushes, and illustrations of designs by Messrs. Warner and Ramm, Messrs. Morris and Co., Messrs. Liberty and Co., and others. At the French Salons the collection of sculpture seems to be very much below the high water-mark of French achievement in this department. The Médaille d'Honneur, according to Mr. Claude Phillips, has been awarded to Alfred Boucher for his colossal marble statue "A La Terre," apparently because it must be accorded to some one section, and in that of painting no sufficiently commanding majority had been attained by any artist.

Art Decorator.—In this magazine the London Electrotpe Company publishes every month five plates of designs in colours. The third series begins with the July part. It is the only work of its kind, and to the amateur, as well as to the art-worker, it must, undoubtedly, be most useful. The subjects of the July plates are given in the preceding columns.

Art Amateur.—Another indispensable magazine for the amateur is the Art Amateur of New York, and the July number is an especially good one. Besides the useful articles referred to in the table of contents, it gives three-colour plates and a number of designs for carving, china-painting, embroidery, monograms, tapestry-painting, etc.

To Good Words Archdeacon Farrar has sent his concluding paper on "Historic and Genre Pictures." His object in writing the papers was, he says, to bring out the beauty, the significance, and the lofty teachings of art. "Illustration and Our Illustrators," in the Chautauquan, is an article on the illustrators of American periodicals. In the Nineteenth Century Mr. James Stanley Little discusses the "Future of Landscape Art."

SOME FOREIGN MILITARY PERIODICALS.

FRENCH.

Journal des Sciences Militaires.

France in Tunis (concluded). General Cosseron de Villenoisy.

War in Mountainous Countries (concluded). Colonel Jayet.

The Lebel against the Manlicher and Vetterli Rifles in the Coming War. Colonel Ortus.

A Covering Army in 1813.

The Campaign of 1814: The Cavalry of the Allied Armies. From documents in the Imperial Archives at Vienna (continued). Commandant Well.

A Proposal for the Organisation of the French Colonial Army. Captain V. Savournin.

Reasoned Instruction in the Infantry (continued). Lieutenant de Cisse.

La Marine Française.

France and the Quadruple Alliance at Sea. Lieutenant X.

Quick-firing Guns.

A National Peril: The Defence of the Hyères Islands.

Revue Maritime et Coloniale.

German Naval Constructions in Accordance with the Programme of 1889.

The Black River and Upper Western Tonkin (3 Maps.) Dr. A. Sadoul.

The Organisation of Modern Torpedo Flotillas. (4 Figs.) Rear-Admiral Serre.

Historical Studies of the French Navy: The Navy under the Regency and under the Ministry of De Maurepas. XII.

Unveiling of the Statue of Jean Charles d Borda (1733-1799).

Miscellaneous Paragraphs.

Revue Militaire de l'Étranger.

The German Infantry Regulations for Attack. The Actual Condition of the Reserve Troops of the Russian Army.

The German War Budget for 1891-92.

The Spanish Colonial forces (concluded). Foreign Military Intelligence.

Le Spectateur Militaire.

Espionage and Treason. Noel Desmaysons.

The History of Cavalry-Cuirassiers, Dragoons, and Chasseurs à Cheval. Captain H. Choppin.

The Arms and Tactics of the Greeks before Troy. Jules de la Chauvelays.

Offensive Fortification. L. Brun.

A German Opinion on the Civil Permanent Aeronautical Committee. W. de Fonvielle.

The Unpublished Works of Vauban. III. Field Fortification and the Reorganisation of the Army. Lieut.-Colonel de Rochas.

The Annuaire of the French Army 1819-1890. XVII. C. Boissonnet.

IN the Journal des Sciences Militaires the most noteworthy article is "A Proposal for the Organisation of the French Colonial Army," put forward by Captain Savournin, of the 1st Regiment of Spahis. The plan recently submitted to the Chambers by the French Government proposes to form the nucleus of a colonial army out of the marine infantry and the marine artillery, and to make the Minister of War solely responsible for the defence of the French colonies and protectorates. This proposal, however, amounts to little more than giving a legal sanction to what has hitherto obtained in practice, whilst its chief merit seems to lie in the fact that, as there will be a separate budget for the colonial army, it will be possible to scrutinise more closely the expenditure involved by adopting a spirited colonial policy. Its defects lie on the surface, since the temptation to utilise the organised troops of the colonial army, in the event of a European war, would probably prove irresistible. If the French colonies and protectorates are to be effectually guarded it must be by a force which is altogether outside the sphere of European complications. For this reason, therefore, Captain Savournin considers France is not suited to serve as the headquarters of the Colonial army, and that the centre of the French colonial defence system should be transferred to Algeria; more especially as that colony alone, if properly organised for the purpose, possesses sufficient resources to undertake the defence of the other colonies in the not impossible event of the home country being unable to participate directly in their defence. The 19th Army Corps, stationed in Algeria, is reckoned as one of the corps to be mobilised in case of war, but it is questionable whether, under certain contingencies, it could be landed in France. Captain Savournin suggests that it should be utilised to form the nucleus of an independent colonial army, divided into two corps, and gives the distribution in detail which he recommends. This army during peace time would consist of five brigades of infantry, and would be capable of expansion in time of war to a total force of 150,000 men. It would be organised primarily for the defence of all the French colonies and protectorates, but it would also be available to a considerable extent for service in France in case of necessity. The troops would be raised by conscription and by voluntary re-engagements, and, in order to prevent immature and unacclimatised men from being sent to the colonies, every Frenchman, before entering the colonial army, would have to satisfy the requirements of the law on recruiting, i.e. he must have served three years with the colours. The advantages claimed for this proposal are that the organisation of the colonial army would not in any way compromise the mobilisation of the French army, that none but seasoned troops would be sent abroad, and that the colonial army, instead of being a drain on the home army, would materially add to its strength. The opening article on "The Lebel Rifle against the Manlicher (two—the Austrian and German patterns) and Vetterli Rifles in the Coming War," deals with the technical details of construction of the four arms.

The Revue Maritime et Coloniale contains an interesting account of the physical features, climatology and ethnography of the hitherto little explored mountainous region embraced between the Song Ngia, or Red River, and the Song-Bo (Nam Te), or Black River, in Upper Western Tonkin. Some idea of the insalubrity of this region may be formed from the fact that of the survivors of a company of the 2nd Tonkin Regiment who were examined by Dr. Sadoul, every man was found to have suffered severely from malarial fever, and no less than 71 per cent. of them had to be sent back to their homes suffering from chronic affections. These men, moreover, were all seasoned Annamite natives, who had only been twelve months on service in Upper Tonkin. Admiral Serre, in "The Organisation of Modern Torpedo Flotillas," starting from the premise that "any piece of

GERMAN.

Internationale Revue über die gesamten Armeen und Flotten.

Germany: Further Experiments with Krupp

Quick-firing Guns of Large Calibre.

Plain Words on the Austro-Hungarian Army as regards its Relationship to the German Army.

Two Years' Service.

The Organisation, Distribution, and Employment of Field Artillery belonging to the Army Corps.—II. Lieut.-Colonel Von Nieu-staedt.

France: The Present Condition of the French Armoured Fleet (continued).

Italy: The Parliamentary Situation in Italy. D. Bonamico.

Italian Correspondence by Pellegrino.

Turkey: Recent Improvements in the Organisation of the Ottoman Army.

China: Critical Side Glances on the Present Development of the Military Forces of China.

Neue Militärische Blätter.

On the Doings of the Prussian and German Cavalry in the last Campaigns. Lieutenant von Hoffman.

The Battle of Worth Strategically and Tactically considered.

The English Shipbuilding Programme under the Naval Defence Act, 1889.

Military Explosives from the Past of East Prussia. Lieut.-Colonel Grabe.

On Torpedoes.

The Railway Transport of Troops.

What Role does Paris play as a Fortress? Major Scheibert.

Count Buonaccorsi di Pistoja's Automobile Torpedo. (3 Figs.)

Miscellaneous Items and Reviews.

AUSTRIAN.

Mittheilungen aus dem Gebiete des Seewesens.

The United States Shipbuilding Programme. (28 Figs.)

The Preservation of Meat on board Ship. Dr. A. Plumert.

The French Armoured Coast Defence Ships. From Le Yacht.

The Portuguese Submarine Boat designed by E. Pereira de Mello.

Belloc's new Sounding Apparatus.

ITALIAN.

Rivista di Artiglieria e Genio.

On the Conditions of Stability of the Retaining Walls of the Casemates of Dry Docks.

III. Major Caviglia, R.E. Projectiles charged with High Explosives for Field Guns.

Studies and Proposals on Firearms. (6 Plates.) Major G. Freddi, R.A.

The Electrical Establishment of Tedeschi Bros. at Turin.

Pattern of American Cart for Replenishing the Supply of Ammunition to Infantry on the Battlefield. (2 Plates.)

SPANISH.

Revista General de Marina.

Considerations on Naval Material. Lieut. L. Haack.

Recent Advances in Naval Construction.

The Education of Naval Officers.

The Want of Fog-warning Stations on the Spanish Coasts.

Recent Improvements in the Manufacture of Armour Plates for Ships.

Manning the Fleet: A Rearrangement of the existing Corps and their Training. Lecture by Capt. C. Johnstone, R.N., at the R.U.S. Institution.

The Climate of Spain: Paper read before the Geographical Society of Madrid, by Don Antonio Blasquez. (4 Maps.)

Trials of the Sims-Edison Torpedo at Havre. (2 Illustrations.)

Organisation and Working of Foreign Ministries of Marine, from the Annual of the Office of Naval Intelligence, Washington (continued).

mechanism which is required to work within close limits of the resistance of the materials of which it is composed must be kept in a state of preservation and solidity very closely approaching its original condition," considers that this dictum is specially applicable to torpedo boats, and that if they are to develop their maximum value when war breaks out they must be kept unused during peace time. He suggests, therefore, that torpedo boats should be kept in groups of seven on covered slips: that six of them should remain absolutely unused, and that the seventh should serve as a practice boat, to be run out of harbour at least five days a week, so as to give constant practice to the special complements destined to man the service boats in time of war. Admiral Serre enters into minute particulars as to the form of slip on which to keep the boats and the best method of preserving them in a state of thorough efficiency and readiness. He also has a good deal to say on the subject of vedette boats, and gives full specifications for the construction of a decidedly novel 200-ton wooden boat, suggested by his extensive researches in connection with ancient war galleys, which he estimates would easily attain a speed of twenty-one knots and be admirably suited for watching an enemy's movements, while the cost of building it would not exceed a sixth of the sum paid for a modern cruiser. These vedette boats, however, would probably only be suitable for use in the Mediterranean.

The Revue Militaire de l'Étranger gives a résumé of the somewhat intricate changes effected in the organisation of the battalion cadres of the Russian reserve troops by the regulations issued in February and March last. When mobilised these cadres will be able to furnish a total of 542 battalions of infantry and 132 batteries of artillery, four-fifths of which would be available to reinforce the field army in case of war. The Revue also has a very complete study on the "Composition and Effectives of the Spanish Colonial Forces," from which it appears that the combined naval and military forces available for the defence of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands amount to the very respectable total of 2,388 officers and 43,053 men.

In the Spectateur Militaire, M. L. Brun replies to the strictures passed by the French military press on his proposal for the revival of the shield, referred to in the May number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, and claims that the results of the competitive trials of armour plates at Annapolis go to prove that a shield, 6 ft. 6 in. by 3 ft. 3 in., capable, when inclined at an angle of 44°, of deflecting rifle bullets, can be made of nickel steel at a weight of about 47 lb.; whilst aluminium bronze, by reason of its great tenacity and lightness, would probably prove even more suitable for the purpose. The shields, being only intended for the last phase of the assault on a position, would rarely be subjected to artillery fire, partly because the defending artillery would have quite enough to do to hold their own against the artillery fire of the attack, and partly because it would only be in very exceptional cases that the guns would be so placed as to allow them to fire on advancing troops so close to the position occupied by their own troops.

In the Neue Militärische Blätter, Major Scheibert, a notorious opponent of permanent fortifications, gives reasons for considering that the fortifications of Paris are likely to prove a source of weakness rather than of strength to France. Paris, with its outer circle of forts 160 kilometres in circumference, notwithstanding that the strategical error committed by investing it in 1870 is not likely to be again repeated, would require a garrison of at least 125,000 men. If these men are taken from the active army, the troops available for active service in the field will be correspondingly diminished, whilst if they are drawn from the territorial troops their inexperience would probably make it possible for an enterprising enemy to isolate one or more of the forts, and thus to break through the circle of defence. In any case it is not likely that more than a couple of army corps would be detached to watch Paris, whilst the number of troops that must perforce be retained to garrison the forts would largely exceed the total of the army of observation. In the article "On Torpedoes" the pros and cons are well summed up in the résumés which are given of Commander Reisinger's prize essay on torpedoes ("Proceedings of the United States Naval Institute"), and Captain Grenfell's lecture "On the Position of the Torpedo in Naval Warfare" (Journal of the R. U. Service Institution). A description is also given of the new Buonaccorsi torpedo, which is claimed by the inventor to have a speed of 34 knots, and to be superior in several important respects to the Whitehead torpedo.

SOME BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

SEVERAL books have been published this month of considerable interest, but there is no one book which towers above the rest far enough to justify special attention being paid to its contents. There are, however, three or four which may be mentioned among the most interesting of the new publications of the month.

The first is the thinly veiled story of the grievances of Queen Nathalie, which is published by Ollendorf, of Paris, under the title "Le Roi Stanko et la Reine Xenia." The wrongs of the unhappy Queen Nathalie are set forth in this volume with sympathising pen. The identity of the various personages described in this chronique scandaleuse are easily recognisable. Queen Nathalie herself has retired into private life, while her own son has paid his first official visit to St. Petersburg. The contrast between the demonstrations of welcome which have been accorded the child and the cold indifference with which his Royal mother has been received in the country which gave her birth is one of the unpleasant incidents in the development of the Eastern drama.

A very different book is the latest collection of the poems of Walt Whitman, entitled "Good-bye, My Fancy," a second annex to "The Leaves of Grass," published by David MacKay, of Philadelphia. The book is published as a memorial of the war times. The volume contains some of the articles which Walt Whitman has contributed to periodical literature of late years. I extract only one short poem with its characteristic footnote:—

FOR QUEEN VICTORIA'S BIRTHDAY.

An American arbutus bunch to be put in a little vase on the Royal breakfast table, May 24th, 1890:—

Lady, accept a birthday thought—haply an idle gift and token

Right from the scented soil's May-utterance here
(Smelling of countless blessings, prayers, and old-time thanks)—

A bunch of white and pink arbutus, silent, spicy, shy,
From Hudson's, Delaware's, or Potomac's woody banks.

Note.—Very little as we Americans stand this day, with our sixty-five or seventy millions of population, an immense surplus in the treasury, and all that actual power or reserve power (land and sea) so dear to nations, very little, I say, do we realise that curious crawling national shudder when the "Trent Affair" promised to bring upon us a war with Great Britain, followed unquestionably, as that war would have been, by the recognition of the Southern Confederacy by all the leading European nations. It is now certain that all this train of inevitable calamity hung on arrogant and peremptory phrases in the prepared and written missives of the British Minister to America, which the Queen (and Prince Albert latent) positively and promptly cancelled; and that her firm attitude did alone erase and leave out against all the other official prestige and Court of St. James. On such minor and personal incidents (so to call them) often depend the great growths and turns of civilisation. This moment of a woman and queen surely swung the grandest oscillation of modern history's pendulum. Many sayings and doings of that period, from foreign potentates and powers, might well be dropped in oblivion by America—but never that if I could have my way.

Of the English books, that which bears most closely upon current affairs is Harold Frederic's volume on the German Emperor. Mr. Harold Frederic is a thoroughly competent journalist. As the London correspondent of the New York Times he has distinguished himself as almost the only competent letter-writer from the

WALT WHITMAN.

Old World to the New. What Mr. G. W. Smalley was in his prime some years ago, and more than that Mr. Harold Frederic is now. He sometimes has a curious squint which prevents him seeing straight; but for good all-round work, great industry, and a capacity for saying what he has to say in clear interesting English Mr. Harold Frederic is about the best American correspondent I know. His book on "The Young Emperor" is thoroughly characteristic. It is clear, bright, well up to date and thoroughly on the nail. But it bears also some of his characteristic blemishes. Mr. Frederic repeats as true the story that the Emperor Frederick had drawn up and signed his abdication, a statement which is stoutly denied by all those who ought to know, and there are other statements relating to the period of the Emperor Frederick's illness which have given considerable pain to those most concerned. Still, after all deductions are made, it is a good readable book, which appears just in the nick of time, and contains material enabling us to form a conception of the character of one of the most remarkable of modern rulers. It is to be regretted, however, that Mr. Frederic did not complete his book, firstly, by some careful chronological table of the acts and deeds of the young Emperor; secondly, that he did not give us an index; thirdly, that he did not reprint a verbatim translation of the Emperor's speech on education. Possibly he may do all these things in his second edition.

Another very interesting book is Mr. George W. E. Russell's "Life of Mr. Gladstone," which forms the latest volume of the "Prime Ministers of Queen Victoria" series, which is edited by Stuart J. Reid, and published by Sampson Low and Marston. This volume has as a frontispiece a remarkable photogravure from an unpublished portrait taken by Mr. Rupert Salter. It gives one phase of Mr. Gladstone's features better than any other portrait that I have seen. It is a wonderful face. Mr. Russell knows his subject well, and manages, on the whole, to condense the story of Mr. Gladstone's career into the brief space allotted to him with sound judgment. Opinions will of course differ immensely as to whether or not this or that one of Mr. Gladstone's various exploits should have been told at greater length; but the great thing was to get the story told as a whole. Still I think he might have given us a page or two more concerning the great resurrection of Mr. Gladstone in 1876 after he had descended into the shades of Hawarden. It was one of the most characteristic and historically one of the most important of Mr. Gladstone's many extraordinary performances, and as such it was better worth recording than many of the earlier phases of his career. The book, which has a good index, is invaluable. What is wanted now is another book on the same subject by some one on the other side. Mr. Gladstone's character is too complex for it to be adequately sketched by a single writer, especially when that writer is on his own side of politics.

A book of considerable literary and human interest is Mrs. Ireland's Biography of Mrs. Carlyle, published by Chatto and Windus in one volume, with a portrait of Mrs. Carlyle as frontispiece.

It is a melancholy story this of Mr. Carlyle's domesticities. Mr. Froude drew aside the veil which shrouded it from the outside world with somewhat damaging results to the hero whose life's story he had to tell. Mrs. Ireland, in her biography of Mrs. Carlyle, rather deepens the impression produced by Mr. Froude's revelations. Mr. and Mrs. Carlyle set each other's teeth on edge, and in various ways rubbed each other up the wrong way. Both were much too sensitive, and one of them had far too bad a digestion to go through life without diffusing a good deal of unhappiness to those who were close to him. Mrs. Ireland has done her work as biographer conscientiously, and with intense sympathy with Mrs. Carlyle. I extract from the appendix the following account, given by a grave-digger, of Carlyle's visit to the ruined church of Haddington, where Mrs. Carlyle is buried:—

"Ay, he comes here lonesome and alone," said the grave-digger, "when he visits the wife's grave. His niece keeps him company to the gate, but he leaves her there, and she stays there for him. The last time he was here I got a sight of him, and he was bowed down under his white hairs, and he took his way up to that ruined wall of the old cathedral, and round there and in here by the gateway, and he tottered up here to this spot." Softly spake the gravedigger, and paused. Softer still in the broad dialect of the Lothians he proceeded: "And he stood there awhile in the grass, and then kneeled down and stayed on his knees at the grave; then he bent over, and I saw him kiss the ground—ay, he kissed it again and again, and he kept kneeling, and it was a long time before he rose and tottered out of the cathedral, and wandered through the graveyard to the gate, where his niece was waiting for him."

There is a tragic pathos in that scene which will be remembered when the moans and groans of a dyspeptic and supersensitive household are forgotten.

Amelie Rives's New Story.—The most beautiful and graceful of American novelists has at last begun to write again, and in the Cosmopolitan for August we have the first part of Amelie Rives's new story, "According to St. John," a story which has as its keynote this, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." The scene of the story is laid in Paris, where the authoress has been living for the last year or two, and it contains at least one passage—the prayer of the heroine in the Madeleine—that is as good as anything that Amelie Rives has done yet. A singularly beautiful portrait of the authoress forms the frontispiece of the Cosmopolitan, and it conveys, better than any portrait that I have ever seen, the sense of delicacy and refinement, blended with strong feeling, which are the characteristics of this Virginian genius.

Two well-known writers of fiction begin new stories in the August magazines. Mr. Robert Louis Stevenson, with whom Lloyd Osbourne is collaborating, begins the "Story of the Wrecker" in Scribner. The story opens in the Marquesas Islands, which leads up to the yarn of Joudon Dodd. Bret Harte begins a new serial in Macmillan's under the title—"The First Family of Tasajara."

The Cost of Steam Pleasure Yachting.—In the Chautauquan for August there is an interesting paper entitled "American Sporting on the Seas." Some interesting details are given as to the cost of steam yachting. The Electra, steam yacht, of Commodore Gerry, of the New York Yachting Club, cost £30,000 to build, and about £4,000 a season of five months to keep her going, excluding the cost of hospitalities. The cost of water for steam yachts for the five months averages about £80. The average salary of the captain is £25 a month, although Mr. Vanderbilt, J. Gould, and Mr. Aster pay their skippers a thousand a year. Bermuda and Florida are becoming the popular resorts of yachtsmen during the winter time.

In an article in Scribner for August on "Parliamentary Days in Japan," I am glad to see that Mr. Kaneko Kantaro, whose portrait and autograph appeared in our "Portrait Album," and whom I counted among the regular readers of the Review in Japan, has been appointed chief secretary of the Japanese House of Peers. The writer of the article says that upon important points of Parliamentary and Constitutional usage, Kaneko's work, although not publicly acknowledged, has been of superlative value.

Herr Windthorst.—There is an interesting article in the American Catholic Review by Mgr. Joseph Schroeder. When Doctor Windthorst lay dying, he was heard repeating "Jesus, for Thee I live; Jesus, for Thee I die; Jesus, I am Thine in life and in death." Then saying "Father, into Thy hands I commit my spirit," he passed away.

During the first years of his parliamentary career in Berlin he lost, one after the other, three of his four children, in the flower of their youth—his two sons and one daughter. The father's heart was broken; the Christian's strength was his support in the hour of trial.

"If heaven had left me my sons I should never have been able to fill my position in political life. For I am not at all rich, and my position necessitates many expenses. . . And then you know I do not like to live at another's cost; I must be thoroughly independent of all; that is why I do not accept anything from any one . . . I believe that a God governs this world, and I strive to serve Him . . . You may say perhaps that I am a survival of the old world—that I am out of fashion—but let me add that this faith has been my sole happiness and my only stay."

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

NOTICE.—For the convenience of such of our readers as may live at a distance from any bookseller, any Book they may require, whether or not it is mentioned in the following List, will be forwarded post free to any part of the United Kingdom, from the Office of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, on receipt of Postal Order for the published price of the Book ordered.

BIOGRAPHY.

Fairbank, Calvin. HOW THE WAY WAS PREPARED. (Edward Hicks, jun., 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 207. Price 6s.

Believing slavery to be unconstitutional and a cruel offence against liberty, the Rev. Calvin Fairbank devoted his life to the liberation of the black slaves of the Southern American States. His story is a thrilling narrative of the perils and hardships which he had to undergo, for everywhere he met opposition, and often personal cruelty.

Haviland, Laura S. A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK. (Edward Hicks, jun., 14, Bishopsgate Without, E.C.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 554. Price 4s.

Like Mr. Fairbank, Mrs. Haviland gave up her life to the liberation and education of the ostracised fugitives from slavery, and the story of her life is full of interest and instruction.

Hodgkin, Thomas, D.C.L. THEODORIC THE GOTH: THE BARBARIAN CHAMPION OF CIVILISATION. (G. P. Putnam's Sons). Red cloth. Pp. 427. Maps and illustrations. 5s.

This, the fourth volume in Putnam's admirable series of biographical studies of the lives and work of a number of representative historical characters, is even more interesting than at least one of the preceding volumes. Of the many striking personalities who played a leading rôle on the stage of the Early Middle Ages, Theodoric the Ostrogoth was one of the most striking; and the author of "Italy and Her Invaders" was well chosen by Mr. Evelyn Abbott to deal with that period of history when Italy was more united, free and prosperous, than she ever was before the days of Mazzini, Cavour, and Garibaldi.

Ireland, Mrs. Alexander. LIFE OF JANE WELSH CARLYLE. (Chatto & Windus.) 8vo. Cloth Pp. xvi. 330. Portrait and facsimile letter. Price 7s. 6d.

Macdonald, E. A. MR. GLADSTONE. (Oliphant, Anderson and Fernald.) Paper covers. Pp. 247. Price 1s.

A popular biography, written, as the author happily puts it, "not for the critics to slash at, but for the people to read." Mr. Macdonald seems to have done his work with taste and discretion, and to have selected and arranged his facts with care.

Richardson, Benjamin Ward. THOMAS SOPWITH, M.A., C.E., F.R.S. (Longmans.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 400. Price 6s.

Thomas Sopwith, who lived from 1803 to 1879, kept a voluminous diary, which Dr. Richardson has done his best to put into shape, the result being interesting but in no way enthralling, for although a friend of the Stephensons and the Armstrongs, Sopwith could hardly be termed their equal in point of intellect, although he was undoubtedly a man of a large and shrewd mind.

Russell, George W. E. THE RIGHT HONOURABLE WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE. (Sampson Low, Marston and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. x. 290. Portrait. Price 3s. 6d.

ESSAYS, CRITICISMS, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Howells, W. D. CRITICISM AND FICTION. (Osgood and McIlvaine.) Post 8vo. Pp. 188. Price 3s. 6d.

The task which Mr. Howells has set himself in this work is to find out what, if any, are the enduring principles of criticism by which good and bad fiction can be distinguished. He appears to lay chief stress on the qualities of truth, sincerity, and natural vigour; and he points out that only in so far as a work of art tends to exalt the ideals of the race, can it be judged of any lasting interest and value. A pen-and-ink sketch of the author, together with facsimile autograph, forms a frontispiece.

Leather, Robinson K., and Le Gallienne, Richard. THE STUDENT AND THE BODY-SNATCHER. (Elkin Mathews.) Post 8vo. Buckram. Pp. 76. Price 3s. 6d.

The authors rightly describe the small sketches in this volume as "trifles"; but they are very clever trifles, reminiscent in some slight degree of the work of Robert Louis Stevenson. Mr. Le Gallienne has already published some volumes of creditable verse and a volume of criticism on Mr. George Meredith's fiction and poetry. The literary notes, too, which appear in the Star every week, over the signature "Logroller," are from his pen.

Leland, Charles (Editor). THE WORKS OF HEINRICH HEINE. Vol. I. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 441. Price 5s.

The first volume of a new translation of Heine's Works, by the author of the famous "Breitmann Ballads," containing "The Memoirs of Herr von Schnabelewopski," "The Rabbi of Bacharach," and "Shakespeare's Maidens and Women."

Wheatley, Leonard A. THE STORY OF THE "IMITATIO CHRISTI." (Elliot Stock.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xvi. 236. Price 4s. 6d.

This is a volume of the "Book Lover's Library," and the first of a section to be devoted to the history of books of world-wide fame. It gives a comprehensive and popular account of Thomas à Kempis' immortal work.

Wilde, Lady. NOTES ON MEN, WOMEN, AND BOOKS. (Ward and Downey.) 8vo. Pp. 346. Price 6s.

The first series of a selection of essays. Various subjects are dealt with, amongst others Jean Paul Richter, Calderon, Lord Lytton, Disraeli, Leigh Hunt, and Charles Keen.

FICTION.

Ainsworth, William Harrison. THE TOWER OF LONDON. (Routledge.) Post 8vo. Half Cloth. Pp. 448. Price 1s. 6d.

The first volume of a cheap re-issue of Ainsworth's novels uniform with the already published edition of Lord Lytton's works.

Allen, Grant. WHAT'S BRED IN THE BONE. (Tit-Bits Office.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 414. Price 3s. 6d.

Mr. Allen first published this story in Tit-Bits, and won the prize of £1,000, offered for the best novel suited to Mr. Newnes' needs. That the tale has interest and is readable cannot be denied, but one feels throughout that the author is not giving us his best.

Caird, Mrs. Mona. A ROMANCE OF THE MOORS. (J. W. Arrowsmith.) Paper covers. Pp. 182. Price 1s.

A volume of Arrowsmith's "Bristol Library."

Calvert, Walter. A WOMAN'S HONOUR. (Eden, Remington and Co.) Paper covers. Pp. 146. Price 1s.

Crombie, Robert. A PLUNGE INTO SPACE. (Warne.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 240. Price 2s.

The author of this work is a literary pupil of M. Jules Verne (who contributes a commendatory preface), for he depends on the scientifically impossible to furnish him with materials for his story, which is, of its sort, well worth reading. The hero discovers a way of insulating any object from the attraction of the earth, and he and his friends go off in an iron globe to the planet Mars, which is described at some length and in a somewhat tedious manner.

Despard, C. (Editor). A VOICE FROM THE DIM MILLIONS. (Griffith, Farran and Co.) Paper covers. Pp. 128. Price 6d.

A book which deserves to be circulated in its thousands as giving a better idea of the hard, cheerless and hopeless lives which the London poor, however deserving they may be, have often to lead, than anything we have read.

Gray, Annabel. JEROME. (Swan Sonnenschein.) 3 vols. Price 31s. 6d.

In spite of slipshod and careless English, and an uncontrolled use of grandiloquent phrases, "Jerome" is, from the point of view of plot and construction, one of the best novels of the year. The majority of the characters are well drawn and original.

Michaelis, Richard. A SEQUEL TO "LOOKING BACKWARD." (Wm. Reeves.) Pp. 110. Price 1s.

The author of this novel protests in his preface against what he calls Mr. Bellamy's Communism, and against the mock equality which Mr. Bellamy preaches in "Looking Backward."

Morris, Alfred. THE MINIMUM WAGE: A SOCIALISTIC NOVEL. (Cassell.) Paper covers. Pp. 232. Price 1s.

Nicholas, J. W. THE HOUSE OF MYSTERY. (J. W. Arrow-smith.) Paper covers. Pp. 234. Price 1s.

Saltus, Edgar. THE TRUTH ABOUT TRISTREM VARICK. (Routledge.) Paper covers. Pp. 191. Price 1s.

Mr. Saltus is one of the most popular of the younger school of American novelists, and this is one of his best known works.

THE CHRIST THAT IS TO BE: A LATTER-DAY ROMANCE. (Chapman and Hall.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 279. Price 3s. 6d.

Wilde, Oscar. LORD ARTHUR SAVILLE'S CRIME. (Osgood and McIlvaine.) 12mo. Boards. Pp. 168. Price 2s.

Four short stories, all conceived in a farical spirit, but readable and amusing. The impression left is that they are the work of Mr. Wilde's earlier days; they are more conventional and less clever and epigrammatic than his more recent work.

Wilkins, Mary E. A HUMBLE ROMANCE and A FAR-AWAY MELODY. (Davis Douglas, Edinburgh.) 1s. each.

Two volumes of short stories, similar in aim and execution to the same author's "New England Nun," which was noticed in these columns two months ago. Like that work, too, they are studies of the quiet and humble home life of the village people of New England, quite devoid of sensation, but full of gentle pathos and simple humour. Volumes of the series of "American Authors," they are charmingly bound and beautifully printed on good paper.

Wills, C. J. JARDYNE'S WIFE. (Trischler.) Three volumes. Price 31s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY, TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Rae, W. Fraser. THE BUSINESS OF TRAVEL: A FIFTY YEARS' RECORD OF PROGRESS. (Cook and Son.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 318. Distributed gratuitously.

An account of the rise and growth of the great tourist agency associated with the name of Cook. The founder began by taking a temperance party from one small provincial town to another. This was fifty years ago. To-day his business is the largest of its kind in the world.

Tregellas, Walter H. TOURISTS' GUIDE TO CORNWALL. (Stanford.) Pp. 160. Price 2s.

Less cumbersome than a "Murray" or a "Baedeker," we can imagine no more desirable companion for a tourist in Cornwall than this small guide, of which a sixth edition, with alterations and additions, has just been published.

HISTORY.

Caine, Hall. THE LITTLE MANX NATION. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 159. Price 2s. 6d.

A reprint of the three lectures which Mr. Hall Caine—himself a Manxman—delivered recently at the Royal Institution, on the history, the religion, and the customs of the people of the Isle of Man. The author disarms criticism when he disclaims, in his preface, any attempt at writing history proper. Certainly the papers are sketchy and too colloquial in style, but they are readable and interesting.

Chambers, Robert. HISTORY OF THE REBELLION OF 1745-46. (W. and R. Chambers.) Cloth. Pp. 534. 2s. 6d.

A new edition of a work which originally appeared in Constable's Miscellany in 1827. Mr. Chambers wrote with much skill, and his history is interesting and entertaining.

De Arnaud, Charles A. THE NEW ERA IN RUSSIA. (Gay and Bird.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 166. Price 2s. 6d.

"Russia," says the author of this work, "from the accession of Peter to the reign of Alexander I., has dazzled the judgment by the amazing rapidity of her progress, and captivated the fancy by the magnificence of her development." From this sentence one learns the whole purpose of the book, the author attempting to prove that the Nihilists are not true patriots, but reactionaries who are hampering the political and civil development of their country, and that the stories of Russian cruelty to Siberian exiles are, in the main, entirely false.

POETRY AND THE DRAMA.

MR. WILLIAM DAVENPORT ADAMS.

From a photo by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

Adams, William Davenport. A BOOK OF BURLESQUE. (Henry and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 220. Price 2s. 6d.

A volume of the "Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour," in which the author, without attempting to supply a consecutive history of English stage travesty, has, nevertheless, given us a remarkably readable and interesting account, supplemented by characteristic extracts from the works of various dramatists, of the burlesque of the past and present. As Mr. Davenport Adams himself points out in his preface, the subject is treated from the literary rather than from the histrionic point of view, a treatment which makes the work much more interesting to the general public.

Isidore de Lara. THE LIGHT OF ASIA: A SACRED LEGEND. Vocal Score. Paper Covers. 7s. 6d. Pp. 226. 4to. (Mocatta and Co., Berners Street.)

Those persons who were disappointed at the failure to produce at Covent Garden the operatic adaptation of Sir Edwin Arnold's "Light of Asia" may find some solace in the possession of the vocal score now published. Some parts of the opera have already been heard in the concert room. Indeed, the "Light of Asia" was originally composed as an oratorio to English words, and was afterwards adapted as a "sacred legend," in which form it was intended to perform it at Drury Lane, with some dramatic illustrations. At that time, various necessary additions were made to the music; but subsequently it was determined to produce the work at Covent Garden as an opera. Mr. Muzzicato wrote the Italian adaptation, but it was the fag end of the season, and the opera was postponed indefinitely.

"J. K. S." LAPSUS CALAMI. (Macmillan and Bowes, Cambridge.) Post 8vo. Pp. 92. Price 2s. 6d. net.

A new edition, with considerable omissions and additions, of a volume of humorous verse, which, even in the few weeks it has been published, has achieved a wide popularity. It is now an open secret that "J. K. S." is the eldest son of Sir James Stephen, Bart.

Knight, Charles (Editor). THE WORKS OF SHAKESPEARE (Routledge.) Long post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 528. Price 2s. 6d. The fifth volume of the dainty little Mignon edition, containing reduced illustrations by Sir John Gilbert.

Lewis, H. Elvet. MY CHRIST. (William Andrews and Co., Hull.) Post 8vo. Pp. 51. Price 1s.

Purves, John, M.A. (Translator), and Evelyn Abbott, M.A. (Editor). THE ILIAD OF HOMER TRANSLATED INTO ENGLISH PROSE. (Percival and Co.) Large 8vo. Cloth. Pp. lvi. 442. Price 18s. net.

"The translation which is here printed was the chief literary work of Mr. Purves' life. It was begun about the year 1871, and after many interruptions, often of considerable length, was completed in 1894. In revising the manuscript for the press, as little change has been made as possible." The translation itself is preceded by a very readable synopsis of the poem.

ROSMER OF ROSMERSHOLM. (Sonnenschein.) Crown 8vo. Paper. Pp. 79. Price 1s.

A drama in four acts, said to be by an author of some repute, suggested by Henrik Ibsen's "Rosmersholm," to which play it forms a sort of prologue, containing as it does, in dramatic form, all the incidents which happened prior to, and which have considerable influence upon, the plot of that play.

Schofield-Milne, R. COWBOY BALLADS. (John Heywood.) 1s.

A volume of ballads and poems, the majority of which are much above the average.

Seaton, Rose. ROMANCES AND POEMS. (Simpkin, Marshall.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 119. Price 3s. 6d.

REFERENCE BOOKS.

Baron, Joseph. A BLEGBURN DICKSHONARY. (North-East Lancashire Printing and Publishing Co., Blackburn.) Paper covers. Pp. 78. Price 5d.

We should imagine that Mr. Baron intends to make his collection of words in the Lancashire dialect amusing rather than useful. Amusing they certainly are; but, as the explanations of the words are also in dialect, we doubt whether as a dictionary the work will find a public, although as a piece of humour pure and simple we can certainly commend it.

Bradley, Henry (Editor), A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Vol. III., Part I. (Oxford: At the Clarendon Press.) 4to. Paper covers. Pp. viii. 344. Price 12s. 6d.

This instalment extends from E to Every. The dictionary—an undertaking of which English scholarship may well feel proud—is founded upon materials collected by the Philological Society, and is "edited by Dr. James A. H. Murray, with the assistance of many scholars and men of science." Dr. Murray himself is still working away at the letter C.

HANSARD'S PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES FOR SESSION 1890-91. Volume IV. Containing Debates in both Houses from April 7 to May 1, 1891. (The Hansard Publishing Union.) 8vo. Boards. Pp. 1,930.

Nisbet, Charles and Don Lemon. EVERYBODY'S WRITING DESK BOOK. (Saxon and Co., 23, Bouverie Street.) 16mo Pp. 302. Price 1s.

The editors of this volume have aimed high. They have essayed to teach the would-be author how to spell, how to punctuate, and how to write grammatically, and with a due regard to style. Their chapters are interesting, and some may, perhaps, prove of use to the amateur author. The book is cheap enough in all conscience.

THE INSURANCE BLUE BOOK AND GUIDE. (Champaness, 33, Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus.) Pp. 334. Price 2s. In this work a large amount of information is to be found respecting the British and Foreign insurance companies.

THE WARSHIPS OF THE WORLD. (Lloyd's, 2, White Lion Court, Cornhill.) Large 4to. Cloth. Pp. 100. Price 5s.

A vast amount of statistical information concerning the warships and the merchant navies of this and every other country is to be found in this volume.

RELIGION AND PHILOSOPHY.

Greg, W. R. ENIGMAS OF LIFE. (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. cii. 312. Price 6s.

A new edition—the eighteenth—with a prefatory memoir, edited by his wife. The memoir is followed by some letters to Lady Derby, and by "Contributions" from Mrs. Lecky, Mrs. Thackeray Ritchie, and by Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff. As to the essays themselves, it will be sufficient to quote Mr. John Morley, who thinks that the fact "that meditations so stamped with sincerity and so honestly directed to the perplexities of thoughtful people should have met with wide and grateful acceptance is no more than might have been expected."

Knox-Little, W. J. THE CHRISTIAN HOME: ITS FOUNDATIONS AND DUTIES. (Longmans.) Cloth. Pp. 287. 6s. 6d. Lectures delivered in the spring and summer of last year, in London, Oxford, and Worcester, which have been reprinted by general desire.

Liddon, H. P., D.D. SERMONS ON OLD TESTAMENT SUBJECTS. (Longmans, Green and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xiv. 380. Price 5s.

The sermons gathered in this volume deal with a series of subjects taken from the Old Testament. Most of them were preached in St. Paul's Cathedral; none were published by Dr. Liddon; but all show signs of careful preparation. There are twenty-five sermons in all, which are arranged in chronological order.

Morden, J. W. AGNOSTICISM FOUND WANTING. (Elliot Stock.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 180. Price 3s. 6d.

The sub-title of this work is "Atheists and Secularists' Arguments Refuted," the purpose of the author having been to provide Christian workers with answers to the infidel questions with which they are every day confronted.

Robertson, John M. MODERN HUMANISTS: SOCIOLOGICAL STUDIES OF CARLYLE, MILL, EMERSON, ARNOLD, RUSKIN, AND SPENCER. WITH AN EPILOGUE ON SOCIAL RECONSTRUCTION. (Swan Sonnenschein and Co.) 8vo. Red cloth. Pp. 276. Price 2s. 6d. (Social Science Series.)

A series of lectures prepared and delivered last winter for the South Place Ethical Society, under the title of "Modern Criticisms of Life." Some of the lectures have been extended, and all have been revised. A number of references and elucidations have also been added.

SCIENCE, MEDICINE AND EDUCATION.

Gordon, W. J. OUR COUNTRY'S FLOWERS, AND HOW TO KNOW THEM. (Day and Son.) Cloth. Pp. 154. Price 6s.

A small book, and dry—as all short introductions to systematic botany must be. It is, however, well arranged, and will be found lucid to patient readers; but the numerous coloured plates are over-coloured and sometimes vague. The picture of the poppy conveys quite a wrong impression of its shape, and beginners will go away with the idea that Litorea has a blue flower.

Guyau, J. M. EDUCATION AND HEREDITY: A STUDY IN SOCIOLOGY. (Walter Scott.) Cloth. Pp. 306. Price 3s. 6d. This is a volume in the Contemporary Science Series. It is translated from the second edition of Monsieur Guyau's book by Mr. W. J. Greenstreet, and is supplied with an introduction by Mr. G. F. Stout, M.A.

Holder, William. CREMATION VERSUS BURIAL. (Wm. Andrews, Hull.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 45. Price 1s.

A lucid and concise exposition of the sanitary and financial advantages of cremation over our present method of burial in the earth.

Low, W. H., M.A. A HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, A.D. 1784-1798: WITH QUESTIONS ON THE PERIOD 1760-1798. (Clive and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 124. Price 3s. 6d.

This work is avowedly prepared for examination purposes. The author has gleaned a number of facts from the various literary handbooks in general use, and has pieced them together in the shape of a connected and continuous narrative. The book shows no sign of original research or of real scholarly grasp of the subject, but it will serve as a "cram book."

MATRICULATION DIRECTORY, No. X. (Clive and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 46. Price 2s.

This little work may be cordially recommended to all who are desirous of taking a degree at the London University. The information which it gives is eminently practical, and comprises particulars of the examination, lists of text-books, and the papers (with solutions) set last June. It is issued in connection with a University Correspondence College.

Swan, H. COLLOQUIAL GERMAN FOR TRAVELLERS. (David Nutt.) 18mo. Cloth. Pp. 142. Price 1s. 6d.

This is an ingenious little handbook for travellers, in which a number of idiomatic and useful German phrases and their exact pronunciation are represented on a new phonetic system. Some general information is appended.

Westermarck, Edward. THE HISTORY OF HUMAN MARRIAGE. (Macmillan.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 644. Price 14s. net. Mr. Westermarck is lecturer on Sociology at the University of Finland, in Helsingfors, but he writes this work in excellent English, and prefers to address an English-speaking audience. Its style and execution do him the highest credit. The treatise is the fullest and most systematic which has yet appeared on the important subject with which it deals. Its conclusions are to a great extent reactionary—that is to say, Mr. Westermarck rejects the hypothesis of the early promiscuity of mankind upheld by McLennan, Lubbock, Bastian, Bachofen, Herbert Spencer, and most other recent investigators, in favour of a theory of primitive monogamy, which he defends with great learning and a formidable array of evidential facts. His method, however, is strictly scientific; he bases his ideas on biological principles, affixing human marriage on the monogamous instincts of animals, and allowing full weight both to natural and sexual selection. His views on the origin and antiquity of marriage, the probability of a primitive pairing season, the true meaning of dress, and the cause of prohibited degrees are striking and original. The work is one which no investigator can afford to disregard. Its tendencies are all in the direction of regarding the pure monogamous union as the natural state of man.

Wilson, Sir Daniel, LL.D. THE RIGHT HAND: LEFT-HANDEDNESS. (Macmillan and Co.) Cloth. Pp. 216. 4s. 6d. The author's aim is not only to trace left-handedness to its true source, and thereby prove the folly of persistently striving to suppress an innate faculty of exceptional aptitude, but also to enforce the advantages to be derived by all from a systematic cultivation of dexterity in both hands.

SOME FRENCH BOOKS.

I.—LITERATURE.

Bourneville, Dr. L'ANNÉE MÉDICALE. (Lecrosnier et Ballié, Paris.) 8vo. Price 4fr.

A résumé of the progress made during the past year in medical science. Edited by a physician belonging to the Bicêtre Asylum.

Delaborde, Henri Comte. L'ACADEMIE DES BEAUX-ARTS. (Pion, Nourrit et Cie., Paris.) 8vo. Price 6fr.

Mercklein, A., et F. Block. LES RUES DE PARIS. (Librairie Nadaud, Paris.) 4to. Price, complete, 100fr. History of the streets of Paris. Profusely illustrated. Of considerable historical interest.

Ricard, de Général. AUTOUR DES BONAPARTES. (Albert Savine, Paris.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c. Anecdotal history of the Bonaparte family.

Saunier, de Baudry. HISTOIRE GÉNÉRALE DE LA VÉLOCIPÈDE. (Paul Ollendorff, Paris.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c. Complete history of cycles and cycling machines. Profusely illustrated.

II.—FICTION, POETRY, AND THE BELLES LETTRES.

Mary Jules. LA COURSE AU BOULMER. (Ernest Rolle, Paris.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c. New novel, by the author of "Roger la Honte."

SOME BLUE BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

The following list comprises all the more important Blue Books issued during the month of July. A complete list may be obtained of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Queen's Printers, East Harding Street, E.C.

I.—THE ARMY.

ARMY MEDICAL DEPARTMENT. Report.

Report for the year 1889 (Volume XXXI.). A general summary of the health of our white troops at all stations is followed by an account of the sanitary condition of the various home stations. Lastly, we are given particulars of the health of the troops serving in the Mediterranean, in Canada, Bermuda, the West Indies, Western Africa, South Africa and St. Helena, the Mauritius, Ceylon, China, the Straits Settlement, India, Egypt, and on board ship. There are numerous statistical tables, and abstracts. (Pp. viii., 320. Price 1s. 4d.)

II.—COLONIAL POSSESSIONS.

COLONIAL TARIFFS. Return.

Return of Colonial Tariffs, reprinted from the Colonial Office List, 1891. The various Colonial possessions of the Empire are taken in alphabetical order, and the import and export duties on each article are given, exemptions being in every case noted. (Pp. 60. Price 3d.)

III.—DOMESTIC.

BRITISH MUSEUM. Return.

Gives an account of the income and expenditure of the British Museum (Special Trust Fund) for the year ending 31st March, 1891; also a return of the number of persons who have visited the British Museum in each year from 1885 to 1890; together with a statement of the arrangement and description of the collections, and an account of the objects added to them in the year 1890. The number of persons making use of the reading room has continued to increase during the last year. The number of volumes supplied to readers was 1,226,126, as against 1,311,420 in 1889. (Pp. 152. Price 8d.)

CENSUS OF 1891. Preliminary Report.

Preliminary report and tables of the population enumerated in England and Wales and in the islands of the British Isles on the 8th April, 1891. The total number of persons returned was 29,001,018. This shows an increase of 3,026,579, or of 11·65 per cent., upon the number returned at the previous enumeration of April 1881. The rate of increase is lower than in any previous decennial period of the century. (Pp. 138. Price 1s. 3d.)

CIVIL SERVICE. Report.

Thirty-fifth Report of Her Majesty's Civil Service Commissioners, with appendix. Gives the number of "cases dealt with" in 1890, the number and nature of the examinations held, and the results. One of the appendices of correspondence and statistics contains an interesting reference to the omission of Italian as an examination subject for the Indian Civil Services. (Pp. 38. Price 3s.)

INFLUENZA. Report.

Local Government Board Report on the Influence Epidemic of 1889-90 by Dr. Parsons, with an introduction by the medical officer to the Local Government Board. A report of great interest and value. Dr. Parsons appears to have set it beyond question that "in its epidemic influenza is an eminently infectious complaint communicable in the ordinary personal relation of individuals one with another." (Pp. xii., 324. Price 2s. 11d.)

LABOUR COMMISSION. Evidence.

The minutes of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission on Labour are being issued from time to time in blue-book form. The first day of Section A; the first six days of Section B; and the first two days of C are ready. They vary in size, but the price is in each case a shilling.

LOCAL TAXATION. Returns.

The annual local taxation returns for the year 1889-90 give inter alia a comparative statement of the expenditure on relief to the poor in 1889 and 1890, and a summary of the population and rental and rateable value of the various divisions and union counties of the United Kingdom. (Pp. xx. 88. Price 11½d.)

LUNACY. Report.

Copy of the forty-fifth Report of the Commissioners in Lunacy to the Lord Chancellor. It states, among other things, that "the number of lunatics, idiots, and persons of unsound mind included in the usual returns made to our office show that on the 1st January last the total insane under official cognizance in England and Wales was 88,795, being an increase of 728 as compared with the 1st of January, 1890."

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS. Returns.

Returns of Accidents and Casualties as returned to the Board of Trade during the three months 31st March, 1891, together with the Reports of the Inspecting Officers of the Railway Department to the Board of Trade upon certain accidents which were enquired into. During the three months under review, railway accidents in the United Kingdom caused the death of 4 persons and injury to 407. The four persons killed were railway officials.

IV.—EDUCATION.

TRAINING COLLEGES (SCOTLAND). Report.

Reports for the year 1890, by (1) J. Kerr, Esq., one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools; (2) the Hon. Mrs. Colborne on Needlework; and (3) Sir John Stainer on Music. There are also a list of training colleges under inspection, statistics for the year 1890, and a syllabus of subjects for the examination for certificates at Christmas, 1891. (Pp. 84. Price 1s.)

V.—FOREIGN.

FOREIGN OFFICE REPORTS. Index.

Index to Reports of Her Majesty's Diplomatic and Consular Representatives abroad on trade and subjects of general interest, 1886-1890. The index (which seems to be a very complete one) gives the number of the report as well as the page on which the particular subject is discussed. Thus, "85 A. 54" means "Annual Series, No. 85, page 54." (Pp. 154. Price 1s.)

FOREIGN OFFICE REPORTS. Miscellaneous Series. The following Foreign Reports on subjects of general and commercial interest have been issued during the month:—

- 201. Russia. Further Report on the Russian Steam Navigation and Trading Co. (Pp. 8. Price 1d.)
- 204. Argentine Republic. Report on Immigration. (Pp. 4. Price 1d.)
- 205. Italy. Report on the amount of private wealth, as compared with that of other countries in Europe. (Pp. 10. Price 1d.)
- 208. Denmark. Making Copenhagen a free port. (Pp. 6. Price 1d.)
- 207. Persia. A journey from Tehran to Karun and Mohamrah, via Kum, Sultanabad, Burnjird, Khorembad, Dizful, and Ahwaz. (Pp. 16. Price 1½d.)
- 208. Turkey. The liquorice plant found on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates. (Pp. 4. Price 1d.)

VI.—IRELAND.

DUBLIN HOSPITALS. Report.

Thirty-third Report of the Board of Superintendence of the Dublin hospitals. Nine hospitals have been visited by the Board, and an interesting report upon each is given. We observe that in regard to one of them it is suggested that "more coloured prints on the walls would have a brightening influence on invalids, and that a proper supply of books and newspapers, under the supervision of the chaplain, would tend much to relieve the dreary and monotonous existence in these wards." (Pp. 64. Price 3d.)

CONTENTS OF THE LEADING REVIEWS.

CONTEMPORARY REVIEW. August, 2s. 6d.

Italy, France and The Papacy. Signor CRISPI
The Story of an Indian Child-Wife.
Professor MAX MULLER.
Pictor Sacrillegus: A.D. 1483. VERNON LEE.
Labour and Life in London. CLEMENTINA BLACK.
The Ethics of Gambling.
W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE.
Modality in Fiction. Canon MACCOLL.
The American Tramp. JOSIAH FLYNT.
Souls and Faces. NORAH GRIBBLE.
Rembrandt's Lesson in Anatomy.
W. HASTIE, B.D.
St. Paul and the Roman Law.
W. E. BALL, LL.D.
The Antipodeans. I. D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.

FORUM. July. 2s. 6d.

The Emperor William II.—His Character
and His Policy.
Prof. F. HEINRICH GEFFCKEN.
The Census and the Coloured Race.
President FRANCIS A. WALKER.
University Extension in America.
Prof. HERBERT B. ADAMS.
The Operation of the Interstate Commerce
Law.
ALDACE F. WALKER.
Are Our Immigrants to Blame?
OSWALD OTTENDORFFER.
The United States and Sliver.
Ex-Secretary CHARLES S. FAIRCHILD.
Why We Need Cuba.
General THOMAS JORDAN.
Home Life in France.
PHILIP GILBERT HAMERTON.
The American Copyright Act: Its Policy
and Probable Results. F. R. DALDY, Sec.
English Copyright League.
The Need of an Elastic Currency.
DAVID M. STONE.
National Bank Embezzlements.
J. SELWIN TAIT.

FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. August.

The Future of Portugal.
OSWALD CRAWFORD, C.M.G.
Goethe's Friendship with Schiller.
Professor DOWDEN.
The Labour Movement in Australia.
FRANCIS ADAMS.
Note on a New Poet.
GRANT ALLEN.
The New Yachting.
Sir MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.
The Education of Military Officers.
WALTER WREN.
Pain's "Palace of Pleasure."
J. A. SYMONDS.
Private Life in France in the Fourteenth Century.
MARY F. ROBINSON.
(Madame Darmesteter).
Marriage and Free Thought.
M.
The Old Economy and the New.
Professor W. SMART.

HELP. August. 1d.

Democratizing the Universities. With Por-
trait of Arnold Toynbee.
For the Citizenship of Women and the
Sanctity of the Home. By W. T. STREAD.
A Professional View of the Magic Lantern
Mission.
The Normal Standard of Social Necessaries.
By Professor EBERLE.
The Good Work of the Grand Duchess of Baden.
By Lady MEATH.
The Darkest Corner of Darkest England.
Country Holidays for Children.

NATIONAL REVIEW. August. 2s. 6d.

The Session: Its Domestic Questions.
Historical Drama and the Teaching of History.
H. B. EGERTON.
Rousseau's Ideal Household.
Mrs. ANDREW LANG.
A Plea for the Triple Alliance. KARL BLIND.
The Degradation of British Sports.
W. EARL HODGSON.
Some Famous Pirates. TIGHE HOPKINS.
The Anglo-Indians.
Mrs. JAMES C. ROBERTSON.
A Materialist's Paradise.
MAURICE HEWLETT.
The Persecuted Russian Jews.
C. B. RAYLANE KENT.

NEW REVIEW. August. 9d.

Jewish Colonization and the Russian Persecution.
1. ARNOLD WHITE.
2. B. B. LANIN.
Love and Fiction.
PAUL BOURGET.
Nathan Brown. Professor MAX MULLER.
A Remembrance. GEORGE MOORE.
Theatre Fires: Their Causes and Remedies.
Capt. EYRE M. SHAW, C.B.
Reminiscences of Bk Hunting.
EDWARD NORTH BUXTON.
From the Maid's Point of View. M. Y.
A Model City; or, Reform London.—V.
Trees and Flowers.
Professor H. MARSHALL WARD.

NINETEENTH CENTURY. August. 2s. 6d.

Our Dealings with the Poor.
Miss OCTAVIA HILL.
The Next Parliament. EDWARD DICEY.
A War Correspondent's Reminiscences.
ARCHIBALD FORBES.
The Future of Landscape Art.
JAMES STANLEY LITTLE.
Demography. Capt. Sir DOUGLAS GALTON.
On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles.
Rev. Father RYDER.
The "Confusion Worse Confounded" at the War Office. General Sir GEORGE CHESNEY.
The Drama of the Moment.
H. A. KENNEDY.
Théodore de Banville.
ROWLAND E. PROTHERO.
The French in Tonquin.
Eight Hon. Lord LANINGTON.
"The Siamy Side of Australia": A Reply from the Colonists.
HOWARD WILLAUGHBY.
Identification by Finger-tips. (With Plate.)
FRANCIS GALTON.
Frontiers and Protectorates.
Sir ALFRED LYALL.

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

July. 50 cents.

My Views on Philanthropy.
By Baron DE HIRSCH.
The Farmers' Discontent.
THE PRESIDENT OF THE FARMERS'
ALLIANCE.
The Farmer on Top. ERASTUS WIMAN.
Domestic Service in England.
EMILY FAITHFULL.
Loafing and Labouring.
The late H. P. WHIPPLE.
A New Variety of Mugwump.
The Hon. DORMAN B. EATON, Ex-President of the Civil Service Commission.
The Inheritance of Property.
RICHARD T. ELY.
English Universities and Colleges.
Prof. EDWARD A. FREEMAN.
Industrial and Financial Co-operation.
F. B. THURBER.
The Relations of Literature to Society.
AMELIA E. BARR.
The Art of Magic.
Chevalier HERRMANN.
The Theological Crisis.
By the Rev. CHARLES A. BRIGGS, D.D.
Can Lying be Justified?
ELLA S. CUMMINS.
To Women not Dumb.
R. INFANUS STEVENSON.
Selfishness as a Preservative.
JUNIOUS HENRI BROWNE.
Middle-Aged Women.
KATE GANNATT WELLS.
Weeping Pugilists.
EDWARD P. JACKSON.
The Future of Marriage.
JOHN L. HEATON.

WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

August.

Federation and Free Trade.
Abraham Lincoln. III.
JOSEPH J. DAVIES.
Persecution of the Jews in Russia.
O. N. BARHAM.
Village Education under Popular Control.
T. J. MACNAMARA.
The Recent Audience at Peking.
R. S. GUNDRY.
Complements and Compliments.
MARY STEADMAN ALDIS.
The Politician as Historian.

UNITED SERVICE MAGAZINE.

August. 1s.

India, the Gift of Sea Power.
Captain S. EARDLEY-WILMOT, R.N.
Military Criticism and Modern Tactics. By the Author of "The Campaign of Fredericksburg."
Disappearing Guns for Battleships.
W. LAIRD CLOWES.
An English Reply to "A German View of the Defence of India."
Major J. WOLFE MURRAY, R.A.
The Truth About the Yeomanry Cavalry.
Major W. A. BAILLIE HAMILTON, C.M.G.
Molke on the Battle of Königgrätz (Translated from the German).
SPENSER WILKINSON.
Naval Prize in War—II.
Captain CHARLES JOHNSTONE, R.N.
The War in China. From the Diary of an Eye-Witness.
CONSTANCE EAGLESTONE.
The Recruiting Question—V. (Rank and File Opinion).
ONE OF THEM.

GAZETTE DES BEAUX ARTS.

The Salons of 1891. M. EDOUARD ROD.
Arab Art in Maghreb. ARY RENAN.
Alexandre Benoit. PAUL DURRIEU.
Antoine Feste. PAUL SIEDEL.
Theodore Deck. MAURICE HENRY BERGER.
Belgian Correspondence. HENRI HYMANS.

NOUVELLE REVUE. July 1st.

The Part of Passion in Revolutions and Revolution.
DON CESARE LOMBROSO.
Foreign Society in Paris in the Early Part of the Century. COMTE PAUL VANIL.
Fin de Siècle. Penal Servitude. ***
Germs and Dust. M. LEON DAUDET.
Nowadays (1st part). J. DU TILLAT.
Romanian Superstitions. JULES BRUN.
The Romance of Molt St. Michel.
MDMF. STANISLAS MEUNIER.
Night of Anguish. (P. em.) M. E. VITTA.
The Ardeche. PAUL VIBERT.
In China. PHILIPPE LEHAULT.
July 15th.
The Reform of Secondary Instruction in Russia. MICHEL KATKOF.
An Imperial Marriage in 1852.
LEONEL DE BROTONNE.
The Projected Reform in the Organisation
of the Council of State.
M. HENRI PENSA.
The Progress of State Communism.
CHARLES M. LIMOUSIN.
"Nowadays." Second Part. J. DU TILLAT.
A Novel by Sienkiewicz.
COMTE WODZINSKI.
Joseph Mary. M. CAMAN.
The City of Happiness. LEON MICHARD.
William Tell and the Men of Ruth.
M. C. S.
The United States in 1890.
M. E. MASSERAS.
At Lake Tohad. G. DE WAILLY.

REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

July 1st.

Art and Nature (1st part)
VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.
A Girl's Love.
MDME. PAULINE CARO.
The McKinley Bills.
M. A. MOISEAU.
The Spanish War.
COLONEL VIGO ROUSSILLON.
Agricultural Credit.
HENRI BANDRILLART.
The Salons of 1891.
GEORGE LAFANESTRE.
The Memoirs of a Happy Man.
F. BRUNETIERE.
July 15.
Art and Nature, Second Part.
VICTOR CHERBULIEZ.
A Girl's Love.
MDME. PAULINE CARO.
Tuberculosis.
M. JULES ROCHARD.
The Jews and Anti-Semitism.
ANATOLE LEROY BEAULIEU.
The Historic Landscape of France. III.
EDOUARD SCHURE.
Vulgar Latin.
PAUL MONCEAU.
A Tour in England.
MAX LECLERC.

CONTENTS OF THE CURRENT QUARTERLIES.

American Catholic Quarterly Review. July.

The Idea of a Paedagogical School. Rev. John Murphy.
Proofs of the Existence of a God, Drawn from the Metaphysical or Ideal Order. Rev. L. F. Kearney.
Encyclical Letter of Pope Leo XIII. The Prospect for Irish Home Rule. Bryan J. Clinech.
The Popes and the Temporal Power—1821-1846. John A. Mooney.
The Encyclical Reus Novorum. Rt. Rev. John J. Keane.
The Mystery of Christian Marriage. Rev. James F. Loughlin.
The Failure of Naïve Christianity. P. S. J.

Church Quarterly Review. July. 6s.

Didon's "Life of Christ."
The Oxford Movement. (Review of Book by Dean Church and Letters of Cardinal Newman.)
Royal Edinburgh. (Review of Mrs. Oliphant's Book.)
Scartazzini's Prolegomena on Dante. Christ or Pagan? (Dr. H. H. Hibbert Lectures.)
Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens. The Colonial Episcopate.
Lord Houghton. (T. Wemyss Reid's Biography.)
The Original Manuscript of the Prayer Book.
The Government Educational Bill.

Dublin Review. July. 6s.

The Penal Laws: an Historical Retrospect. W. S. Lilly.
John MacHale, Archbishop of Tuam. Rev. F. Plus Devico.
Traces of Unionism among Women in Ireland. Henry Abraham.
The Augustinian System. By the author of "St. Augustine, a Historical Study."
A New System of Biblical History: The Age of the Patriarchs. Prof. Ch. de Harlez.
Catholic Theology in England. Rev. W. H. Kent.
The Internuncio at Paris during the Revolution. Rev. T. B. Scannell.
Independent National Churches. Rev. Luke Rivington.
Leo XIII. on "The Condition of Labour." Cardinal Manning.

Economic Journal. June. 5s. (To be continued quarterly).

The Probable Effects of an Eight Hours Day on the Production of Coal and the Wages of Miners. Prof. J. E. C. Munro.
Richard Cantillon. Henry Higgs.
The Increase in Industrial Remuneration under Profit-Sharing. David F. Schlosser.
The Gresham Law. Robert Giffen.
Taxation through Monopoly. Prof. C. F. Bastable.
The McKinley Tariff. F. W. Taussig.
Some English Railway Problems of the Next Decade. T. C. Farrer.
The Difficulties of Individualism. Sidney Webb.
The Baring Financial Crisis. A. Crump.
Reports of the Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labour on Working Woman. Miss C. C. Clifton.

Economic Review. July. 3s.

Why Working Men Dislike Piecework. David Schlosser.
Henrik Ibsen. C. E. Maurice.
The Destruction of the Village Community. Prof. W. J. Ashley.
An Arkian's View of the Eight Hours Question. James Naylor.
Some Aspects of Game Preserving. R. V. Canon Furse.
Working Class Insurance. Rev. J. Frim Wilsonson.

Edinburgh Review.

Memoirs of Prince Talleyrand.
The System of the Stars.
The Beatrice of Dante.
Hawthorne's History of Phenicia.
The Correspondence of John Murray.

The Tales of Bullyard Kipling.
London Architecture in the Nineteenth Century.

The Revival of Quakerism.
Colonial Independence.
The Melville and Leveson Memoirs.
The Individual and the State.

English Historical Review. July. 5s.

The Introduction of Knight Service into England: Accepted Views Criticised and New Theory to be Propounded. J. H. Round.
Did Henry VII. Murder the Princes? No. Reply to Clements Markham's Recent Article on "Doubtful Verdicts." James Gairdner.
The Royal Merchant Navy under Elizabeth. M. Oppenheim.
Count Lally: The Story of the General whom the French Accused of Treason in India, and executed. S. J. Owen.

Englishwoman's Review. July. 1s.

Barbara Leigh Smith Bolitho. Madame Parkes Bell.
Industries in Ireland. M. S. Power Labor Women's Suffrage.

International Journal of Ethics. July. 2s. 6d.

The Modern Conception of the Science of Religion. Prof. Edward Caird.
The Functions of Ethical Theory. Prof. James H. Hyslop.
The Morality of Nations. Prof. W. R. Sorley.
J. S. Mill's Science of Ethology. James Ward.
Vice and Immorality. R. W. Black.
The Progress of Political Economy since Adam Smith. F. W. Newman.
Programme of School of Applied Ethics.

Jewish Quarterly. July. 3s.

Critical Problems of the Second Part of Isaiah. I. A Further Study on the Date of the Unity of the Second Part of Isaiah. Rev. Prof. T. K. Cheyne.
The Literature of the Jews in Yemen. After the Letter of Maimonides to Jacob at Favyuni. Dr. A. Neubauer.
The Sabbath Light. Discussion of the Custom of Husband and Wife kindling Lights and Praising God at the Arrival and Departure of the Weekly Festival. M. Friedmann.
What is the Original Language of the Wisdom of Solomon? Review of Prof. D. S. Margolouth's Book. Prof. J. Freudenthal.
The Law and Recent Criticism. Review of Prof. C. H. Toy's "Judaism and Christianity." S. Schechter.

Juridical Review. July.

Portrait of Professor Rivier. Frontispiece.
The Archives of the High Court of Justiciary. I. Charles Scott.
Lynch. (Article on Lynch Law in General and the New Orleans incident in particular.) N. J. D. Kenney.
The French Bar. I. (Of To-day.) G. W. Wilton.
A Forgotten Chapter in the History of Law. ("Fees of Conquest" in Scotland.) George Law.
The Administration of Justice in the Levant. II. D. Dénédicades.

London Quarterly. July. 4s.

The Oxford Movement. (Dean Church's Book and Cardinal Newman's Correspondence).
Unearned Increment.
Jenny Lind.
Dr. Lutherard's Recollections.
Rev. J. G. Wood.
The Present State of Old Testament Study.
Post Royal.

Mind. July. 3s.

The Problem of Psychology. E. W. Scripture.
The Physical Basis of Pleasure and Pain. I. H. R. Marshall.
Schopenhauer's Criticism of Kant. W. Caldwell.
On the Origin of Music. R. Wallaschek and Prof. J. McK. Cattell.
The Co-efficient of External Reality. Prof. J. Mark Baldwin.

Monist. July. 2s. 6d.

Psychology of Conception. James Sully.
The Right of Evolution. M. D. Conway.
A Convicted Anarchist's Reply to Professor Lombroso. Michael Schwab.
The Principle of Welfare. Prof. Harald Höffding.
The Criterion of Ethics an Objective Reality. Editor.
On Thought and Language. Prof. F. Max Müller.
Pedagogics in Germany. Christian Offer.

Palestine Exploration Fund. July. 2s. 6d.

Notes on Hebrew and Jewish Inscriptions. Professor Clermont-Ganneau.
Ruins of a Church on the Skull Hill, Jerusalem. Prof. T. H. Lewis.

Photographic Quarterly. July. 3s.

Shall we Resounce? George Davison.
What to Photograph. P. H. Newman.
Toning of Images. C. E. M. J. Leaper.
Autotype Printing in Pigma. G. H. James.
In Hand with a Camera. Edwin H. Jeffrey.
Composition. John Andrews.
The Optical Lantern as an Aid in Teaching—The Lantern and the Manipulation of it. C. H. B. Hamley.

Presbyterian and Reformed Review.

July. 3s. 6d.

C Calvinism and Confessional Revision. A. Kuiper.
The "Chambre Ardente" under Henry II. Henry M. Baird.
The Ethical Antecedents of the English Drama. Theodore W. Hunt.
Mr. George Adam Smith's Isaiah. George C. M. Douglas.
Recent Dogmatic thought in Germany. Adolph Zahn.
Totipot as a Reformer. John H. Worcester, jun.
The Barrier Act of the Church of Scotland. William Henry Roberts.
The Inaugural Address of Professor Briggs. Talbot W. Chambers.
The Presbyterian General Assembly. Benjamin B. Wrafield.

Proceedings of the Society for Psychological Research. July. 2s. 6d.

On Alleged Movements of Objects without Contact, Occurring not in the Presence of a Paid Medium. F. W. H. Myers.
Experiments in Clairvoyance. Dr. Alfred Buckman.
A Case of Double Consciousness. Richard Hodgson.
On Spirit Photography: A Reply to Mr. A. R. Wallace. Mrs. Henry Sidgwick.

Quarterly Review. July.

Memoir of John Murray.
Plautus and His Imitators.
Sir Robert Peel's Correspondence. Lincolnshire.
Talleyrand.
The Making of Germany.
Maclean's Memoirs.
The L'v'er Jansenists.
Giovanni Morelli.
Conflict between Capital and Labour.

Reliquary July. 2s. 6d.
 Village Antiquities. R. v. P. H. Ditchfield.
 Notes on the Smaller Cathedral Churches of Ireland. (Illus.) II.
Scottish Review. July. 4s.
 The Oriental Jews. Major C. R. Conder.
 A Publisher and His Friends.
 Philosophy of Religion. R. M. Wrenley.
 The Legend of Archangel Leslie. T. G. Law.
 Mineral Leases and Royalties. Ben Taylor.
 Certain National Names of the Aborigines of the British Isles. Professor John Rhys.
 Goethe's Faust and Modern Thought. M. Kaufmann.
 Laurence Oliphant.
 The Scotch Ploughmen's Union and its Reforms. J. G. Dow.
Shakespeareana. 50 cents. July.
 The Shakespearean Entourage. (Illus.) Horace P. Harman.
 The Editors of Shakespeare. XX. Alexander Dyer. Wm. H. Fleming.
 Shakespeare Societies in New York City.

AMERICAN.

Andover Review. July. 25 cents.
 The Relation of the Church to Modern Scientific Thought. Professor Joseph Le Conte.
 John Williamson Nevins. Rev. William F. Faber.
 The Sun's Song. Professor Charles Sprague Smith.
 "Christian Ethics" and "The Simple Gospel." Rev. Charles F. Carter.
 Socialism and Spiritual Progress—A Speculation. Miss Viola D. Snider.
 The Proceedings against Professor Briggs. The Editor.
 A General View of Missions. Second Series. India. Rev. Charles C. Starbuck.
Arena. July. 50 cents.
 Oliver Wendell Holmes. Frontispiece.
 Oliver Wendell Holmes. George Stewart, D.C.L., LL.D.
 Plutocracy and Slavery in New York. Edgar Fawcett.
 Should the Government Control the Railways? C. Wood Davis.
 The Unknown. II. Camille Flammarion.
 The Sales and American Constitutions. W. D. McCrackan.
 The Tyranny of All the People. R. v. Francis Bellamy.
 Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes. II. Prof. Joseph R. des Buchanan.
 Roman Punishment. Rev. W. E. Manley, D.D.
 The Negro Question. Prof. W. S. Scarborough.
Chautauquan. August.
 Old Chautauqua Days. (Illus.) The Lord L. Flood.
 Fighting by Means of Electricity. Prof. John Trowbridge.
 Illustration and Our Illustrators. C. M. Fairbanks.
 What Shall be Taxed? Edward W. Bemis.
 American Sporting on the Seas. J. H. Mandigo.
 African Myths and Legends. Heli C. Stetlin.
 The Physical and the Mental in Hypnotism. Alfred Fouillee.
 Travelling in Provincial France. Elizabeth R. Pennell.
 England in the Eighteenth Century. Edward A. Freeman.
 A Debate in Germany; the Woman's Petition in the Reichstag at Weimar.
Cosmopolitan. August.
 According to St. John. Story. (Illus.) Amélie Rives.

The Ducal town of D'Uzé's. (Illus.) T. v. A. Jauvier.
 The Dukeless. (Illus.) C. S. Pelham-Clinton.
 The Court Jesters of England. (Illus.) The Woman's Press Club of New York. (Illus.) Jannie Aymr Mast.
 The John Hopkins University. (Illus.) Daniel Colt Gilman.
 Pictorial Journalism. (Illus.) Valerian Gribayev.
 Gambling in High Life. (Illus.) Adam Badesu.
 Prince Bismarck. (Illus.) Mu at Halstead.
Educational Review. July. 1s. 6d.
 Religious Instruction in State Schools. J. L. Spalding.
 The American High Schools. II. Ray Greene Huling.
 The Function of Literature in Elementary Schools.
 Recent School Legislation in the United States. W. B. Shaw.
 Contemporary Educational Thought in France.
 A Proposed Training College for Teachers at Oxford.
Homiletic Review. July. 1s.
 Culture in its Relation to Preaching. Professor J. O. Murray.
 The Present Status of the Divorce Question. Rev. Samuel Wike.
 Action and Acting. J. Spencer Kennedy.
 The Kingship of Jesus. R. W. Dale.
 European Department. J. W. H. Stucken-berg.
Magazine of American History. July. 50 cents.
 The Royal Society of Canada. Its Congress in Historic Montreal, May 27-30, 1891. (Illus.) Mrs. Martha Lamb.
 The Fairy Isle of Mackinac (Illus.) Rev. William C. Richards.
 The Monroe Doctrine. Hon. William L. Scruggs.
 To my Books. Sonnet. Caroline Elizabeth Norton.
Missionary Review of the World. July. 25 cents.
 Missionary Money—Quality and Quantity. Rev. A. J. Gordon.
 Letters from Abroad. II. Herrnhut: The Home of Moravian Missions. D. v. L. Pierson.
 The Relation of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour to the Church. Rev. F. E. Clark.
 The Miracle of Mission. H. William Islands.
 The Political Check in Japan. Rev. D. S. Spencer.
 Small Islam Rule Africa. Rev. Samuel C. Barnes.
 The Proposed Exposition of Missions. The Editor.
New England Magazine. July. 25 cents.
 The State of Maine. Hon. Nelson Dingley, junr.
 The Mutual Threat in National Politics. John C. Clemon Adams.
 Her in all things. Poem. Philip Bourke Marston.
 The Natural Bridge of Virginia. Katherine Loomis Parsons.
 The Daisies. Poem. C. Gordon Rogers.
 The City of the Dead. Laurens Maynard.
 A Brief for Continental Unity. Walter Blackburn Hart.
 Schliemann's Discoveries in Hellas. J. L. Ewell.
 Emerson's Views on Reform. Wm. M. Salter.
Our Day. July. 25 cents.
 The Expulsion of the Jews from Russia.
 The Manifest Worth of the Sabbath. Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts.
 The Wickedness of Licensing the Liquor Traffic. Joseph Cook.
 Unsolved Southern Problems. Joseph Cook.
 General Sherman's Death. Joseph Cook.

Wilson's Photographic Magazine July. 30 cents.
 Notes on Landscapes. F. L. Picher.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL.

National Magazine. May. 1 rupee.
 Outlines of Hindu Celebrities. By Ananth.
 Sir Charles Elliott: Hoshangabad Settlement.

POLISH.

July.
The Polish Review (Cracow).
 After Twenty five; Reflections upon the Past and Present. Count Stanislaw Tarnowski.
The Universal Review (Cracow).
 The Hindoos and their Religion. II. Rev. Ladslas Zaborski.
 The Historical Development of Nihilism in Russia. Rev. Stan. Zaencki.
The Literary and Scientific Guide (Lemberg).
 Geographical Sketches of the Karpathians. A. Rehman.
 An Englishman's (Bynes Morrison's, 1853.) Notes of his Travels in Poland. A. Krahar.
 Andrew Edward Korman's Letters, 1830-1864.
 On Church Organisation in Poland until the 18th. Dr. W. Kentyński.
The Warran Library.
 English Opinion on Fr. Chopin's Life and Work. L. Zelenski.
 The Mortgaged Lands in Russian Poland. John Bloch.
 English Writers and their Critics. E. S. Nagowski.

FRENCH.

L'Initiation. July. 1 fr.
 A Profound State of Hypnotism and Cerebral Localisation. A. de Rochas.
 Psychic Force. Lemelle.
 Death. Dr. Carl Du Prel.
 The Life of a Dead Man.
Revue d'Art Dramatique. July 15. 1 fr. 25c.
 Don Juan and D. ne Elviri. E. Thierry.
 M. le Saint-Val, 1743-1830. P. Pourcel.
 The Art Orphanage. (For the orphan daughters of artists.)
 Summer Performances. P. Vébar.
Revue Encyclopedique. July 15. 1 fr.
 The Anti-Slavery Conference at Brussels, with Map of Africa.
 Guns in the Armies of Europe. (Illus.)
Revue Générale. July.
 The French Catholic Economists and the Social Question. C. Cément.
 Anti-Slavery in Africa. Comte H. d'Ursel.
Revue de l'Hypnotisme. July. 75c.
 The Society of Hypnology.
 Hypnotic Treatment of Dipsomania. Dr. H. Neilson.
 Hypnotism and Hysterics. Dr. Babinski.
 Hypnotism from the Medical—Legal Point of View. Dr. G. Ballet.
Revue des Revues. July. 1 fr.
 The Art Orphanage. Marie Laurin.
L'Universite Catholique. July 15.
 Religious Instruction in Secondary Education. C. Dementhon.
 The Administration of the French Colonies. C. Chaband-Arnault.
 On the Teaching of History in the Free Colleges. F. Robiou.
 The Discovery of America and the Etymology of the Name.

THE MORE NOTABLE ARTICLES IN THE MAGAZINES.

- Advance. August. 1d.
The Polytechnic Trip to Norway. Mrs. Hugh Price Hughes.
Surgical Service. Mrs. Sheldon Amos.
- All the World. August. 6d.
Help: The Cry of a Troubled Soul. General Booth.
On the Farm Colony. Eileen Douglas.
G-tting into Italy. Major Whitmore.
Social Salvation in Sweden. By the Commandant.
- Amateur Work. August. 4d.
A Drawing-Room Overmantel. (Illus.)
Colour Photography. R. A. R. Bennett.
- Argosy. August.
The Bretons at Home. Charles W. Wood.
- Astrologers' Magazine. August. 4d.
On Pre-Natal and Post-Natal Directions.
- Atlanta. August. 6d.
Illustrations from Wagner's Operas. No. II. Taubhauser. R. Gerald Savage.
Edge Hill and Compton Wynyates. Julia Cartwright. With many illustrations.
In the Sunny South of France. C. J. Willis. Illustrated by P. H. Newman.
- Atlantic Monthly. August. 1s.
A Disputed Correspondence. (St. Paul and Seneca.) Harriet Waters and Louise Doige.
Two Little Drummers. (Natural History Article.) Olive Thorne Miller.
General Sherman. John C. Ropes.
The Queen's Closet Opened. (A Receipt-Book of the Seventeenth Century.) Alice Morse Earle.
The R-form of the Senate. Wendell P. Garrison.
Six Centuries of Self-Government. W. D. McCrackan.
- Banker's Magazine. August. 3s.
Foreign Exchange.
City Editors. With Portraits.
- Blackwood's Magazine. August. 2s. 6d.
Sir John Macdonald. Martin J. Griffin.
Cookery.
Studies in Tactical Progress during the last Twenty-five Years.
Names in Novels.
Woodcock, Snipe, and Clover. A Son of the Marshes.
Mnemosyne. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.
- Boy's Own Paper. August. 6d.
Seaside Birds as Pets. (Illus.) W. T. Greene.
How to Set Butterflies and Moths. Rev. Theodore Wood.
How I became a Botanist. Rev. J. Vaughan.
- Cassell's Family Magazine. August. 6d.
That Little Woman. New Serial. Ida J. Lemon.
River Birds. (Illus.) M. G. Watkins.
Hereditary Traits. Alexander Gargill.
- Cassell's Saturday Journal. August. 6d.
A Day in Jewland. (Illus.)
A Chat with Sir Edwin Arnold. K.C.S.I. (Illus.)
Mr. George du Maurier at Home. (Illus.)
- Century Magazine. August. 1s. 4d.
The German Emperor. (Illus.) Poultney Bigelow.
Thou Reignest Still. Poem. Louise Chandler Moulton.
Thumb-nail Sketches: Mag'shen. (Illus.) George Wharton Edwards.
On the Study of Tennyson. Henry Van Dyke.
The Press as a News Gatherer. William Henry Smith.
The Eleventh Hour Labourer. L. Gray Noble.
- Life on the South Shoal Lightship. (Illus.) Gus'ar Kobbe.
Pity in Province: The Grand Arrival of the Bull. (Illus.) Joseph Pennell.
- Chambers's Journal. August. 7d.
Beam-Trawling.
Irrigation in India.
Musical Myths. J. F. Rowbotham.
- Church Missionary Intelligencer. August. 6d.
Mission and Civilization. Rev. G. Booser.
The Parochial Clergyman in reference to Foreign Missionary Work. Rev. Canon J. Allan Smith.
- Clergyman's Magazine. August. 6d.
Pastor in Parish. II. Rev. H. C. G. Moule.
Our Confirmation Class. Lesson IV. Rev. Canon Wynne.
Imputed Guilt. Very Rev. G. A. Chadwick, D.D.
- Coming Day. August. 3d.
God's Saints.
Who Was Jehovah? J. Page Hopps.
The Philistines of Handel's "Messiah."
- Cornhill Magazine. August. 6d.
Some Pagan Epitaphs.
High Life.
Sparrows Poem.
Seasonable Weather.
- English Illustrated. August. 6d.
George Wisn. (Illus.) John Todhunter.
Tewkesbury Abbey. (Illus.) Very Rev. the Dean of Gloucester.
Dickens and Punch. (Illus.) F. G. Kitton.
Old Landmarks. (Illus.) Dewey Bates.
The Russo-Jewish Immigrant. (Illus.) Rev. S. Singer.
- Expositor. August. 1s.
Interpretation of the Life of the Early Church. Rev. W. Lock.
On the Moral Character of Pseudonymous Books. Rev. Prof. J. S. Candlish.
Lost or Latent Powers of the Five Senses, with Relation to II. Kings, vi. 8-17 and St. Luke xxiv. 13-35. Rev. Alex. Gosart.
God not the Author of Evil, but of Good. Rev. Samuel Cox.
- Gentleman's Magazine. August. 1s.
Captain Kitty: a Salvationist Sketch. Story. Lillias Wassermann.
Summer Beverages for Fat People. Dr. N. E. Yorke-Davies.
Flowers and the Poets. Spencer Moore.
A Railway Centre. (Crewe.) John Sansome.
Some English Expletives. Thomas H. B. Graham.
The Cry of the Saxon. Poem. M. A. Curtol.
- Girl's Own Paper. August. 6d.
The Privilege of Poverty. A Middle-Aged Woman.
Landscape Sketching.
Elizabeth Willoughby. Edward Walford.
In India with Medical Missionaries. Hon. Emily Kinaird.
- Good Words. August. 6d.
The Common Fate of All Things Fair. Poem. August Webster.
A Walk through Canterbury. Hor. and Rev. Canon Fremantle.
Life in Homer's Time. Andrew Lang.
Meran. II. Margaret Howitt.
Historic and Genre Pictures. A chdeacon Farrar.
A bishop Mugge. Rev. Canon McDonnell.
Agol's Dark Companion. William Canton.
Faded. Poem. A. H. Begbie.
- Harper's Magazine. August.
New Zealand. (Illus.) G. M. Grant.
What is Inheritance? Dr. Andrew Wilson.
- Some American Riders. (Illus.) Colonel Theodore Ayraut Dodge.
Glimpses of Western Architecture. Chicago - I. (Illus.) Montgomery Schuyler.
Luck. A Story. Mark Twain.
Lord Byron's Early School Days. Prof. W. G. Blake.
In the High Tower. Poem. Kate Putnam Osgood.
London - Plantagenet. I. Ecclesiastical. (Illus.) Walter Besant.
- Household Words. August. 6d.
Mountmellick Work.
The Music Student in Germany
- Indian Magazine and Review. August. 6d.
The National Indian Association in India.
Struggles of a Hindu Student in coming to England.
Anniversary of Pundita Ramabai's Widow's Home.
- Irish Monthly. August. 6d.
St. Aloysius. Model of Youth. Rev. W. A. Sutton.
Child Life in Shakespeare's Plays. Montagu L. Griffin.
- King's Own. August. 6d.
Tewkesbury Abbey. Rev. A. M. Nickalls.
Aged Pilgrims. C. C. A. Cooper.
Sir Henry Rawlinson. Miss K. E. Howarth.
- Knowledge. August.
Gnats, Midges, and Mosquitoes. By E. A. Butler.
Lunar and Terrestrial Volcanoes. By H. N. Hutchinson.
- Ladies' Treasury. August. 7d.
Ruins of the Temple of Isis, in Pompeii, Italy. (Illus.)
- Leisure Hour. August. 6d.
Commons and Commoners. (Article on Open Spaces and "Waste Lands.") (Illus.)
A Noble Mother. (The Mother of the Strozzi.) (Illus.) Helen Zimmer.
The Handwriting of Our Kings and Queens. George IV., Queen Caroline, Princess Charlotte. With Facsimiles. W. J. Hardy.
The Great Canadian Sir John Macdonald. With Portrait.
The Cricket of This Year.
Louise Seppelher and the First Creche. L. G. Séguin.
Rebecca and Her Daughters. (The "Rebecca Riots" in South Wales.) James Mason.
- Lippincott's Magazine. August. 1s.
A Daughter's Heart. Complete Novel. Mrs. Lovett Cameron.
Thoreau and His Biographers. Samuel Arthur Jones.
Walt Whitman's Birthday. Horace L. Traubel.
My Adventure with Edgar Allan Poe. Julian Hawthorne.
Walt Whitman's Last. Walt Whitman.
- Little Folks. August. 6d.
My Jewel Casket Sunday Talks.
London Phonographer. July. 3d.
Miss Ethel Dickens. Interview.
- Longman's Magazine. August. 6d.
Archbishop Taub of Canterbury. A. K. H. B. Hudson.
The Strange Instincts of Cattle. W. H. Hudson.
- Lucifer. July. 1s. 6d.
The Progress of a "Dad Delusion." H. P. B.—In Memoriam. William Q. Judge, and several others.
Theosophy and the Law of Population. Annie Besant.
The True Church of Christ (continued). J. W. Brodie Innes.
Fragments from an Indian Note Book. K. P. Mukherji.
The Kistic Christ (continued). Edward Maitland.

Ludgate Monthly. August. 3d.
The Oval. (Illus.) C. W. A'cock.
A Bank Holiday at the Crystal Palace.
(Illus.) Percy Graham.

Macmillan's Magazine. August. 1s.
A First Family of Tasajara. New Serial.
Bret Harte.
Westminster Abbey. A. E. Street.
East Lothian Twenty Years Ago. A. G. Bradley.
The Dutchman at Home. Charles Edwards.
A Real Tartarin. A. R. Hope Moncrieff
Mellie's Magazine. July. 1d.
Lite in a Casual Ward.

Monthly Packet. August. 1s.
Greek Forerunners of Christ. Rev. Peter Lilly
Finger Posts in Faery Land. Christabel R. Coe ridge

Month. August. 2s.
Confessio Viatoris. C. Kegan Paul.
Free Education. Editor.
Laurence Oliphant. Rev. Sydney F. Smith.
St. William of Perth and Rochester. A Saint omitted by Butler. Rev. T. E. Bridgett, C.S.S.R.
The Apology of Aristides. Rev. Herbert Lucas.
Some recent Studies on the Solar Spectrum. Aloysius L. Corlie
Natural and Supernatural Morals. Rev. Joseph Rickaby.
The Catholic Conference, 1891. James Britten.

Murray's Magazine. August. 1s.
Two Visits to the West Coast of Connaught. Miss Balfour.
How the Poor Live. W. Morris Colles.
Eiseach and the Wartburg. Florence Elze Norris.
Tackcray's Portraits of Himself. George Somes Layard.

Nature Notes. July. 2d.
The Kew Museums. J. R. Jackson.
Some London Birds. A. H. Macpherson.
The Imperial Destruction of Kew Air. (Illus.) Archibald Clarke.

Newbery House Magazine. August. 1s.
Bishop Blyth and the Church Missionary Society. Rev. Hasket-Smith.
Babylonian Life in the Time of Nebuchadnezzar. Rev. A. H. Sayce.
Are the Planets Habitable? J. E. Gore.
"The Sinless Conception of the Mother of God."
A Buddhist Church Service in Ceylon. David Ker.

Onward and Upward. August.
The late Lady Rosebery. Principal Donaldson.

Outing. August. 6d.
Big Game in Colorado. (Illus.) Ernest Ingersoll.
Four Days' Swordfishing. (Illus.) Rev. Wm. C. Gaynor.
Yacht Clubs of the East. (Illus.) Capt. A. J. Kennedy.

Photographic Reporter. July. 1s.
Photography by the Magnesium Flashlight. Harvey Barton.
Bikonogen v. Pyro. B. Jumeaux.
Survey Work. W. J. Ridd.
Silver, Platinum, and Carbon Printing Theoretically Considered. H. F. Lancaster, M.D.
Photo-Micrography: Its History, Development, and Application. O. V. Darbyshire.
Legitimate Photography. G. F. Blackmore.
Developing (Dry Plate). J. H. Allcott.
Experience in Dyeing; Photography in Italy. G. E. Thompson.

Phrenological Magazine. August. 6d.
Suggestions towards obtaining an Improved Phrenological Nomenclature. I. R. Antinences of L. N. Fowler.
Cautelities in Memory.

Primitive Methodist Magazine. August. 6d.
Premiers of the Victorian Age. Lord Salisbury. (Illus.) Ralph Snelids.

Quiver. August. 6d.
Flowers and Flower Girls in London. G. Holden Pike.
The Homes of Some Foreign Reformers. S. W. Kershaw, F.S.A.
With the Campers-Out. F. M. Holmes.

Scottish Geographical Magazine. July. 1s. 6d.
Britannic Confederation. II. The Physical and Political Basis of National Unity. Edward A. Freeman.
Mapping and Place-Names of India. James Burgess.
The Orthography of African Names and the Principles of Nomenclature. W. A. Elmslie.

Scribner's Magazine. August. 1s.
Pleasantly. (Illus.) Andrew Lang.
Song and Sorrow. Poem. Mrs. James T. Fields.
The Wrecker. New Serial. (Illus.) Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne.
In Absence. Poem. Archibald Lampman.
Dead Men's Holiday—After Ships. Poem. Louise Chandler Moulton.
The Dunchurch Bells. Poem. Archibald Gordon.
The Great King's Dream. Poem. Parliamentary Days in Japan. (Illus.) John H. Wigmore.

Strand Magazine. July. 6d.
A Regime on Wheels. (Illus.)
Portraits.—Duke of Fife, Mrs. Berbohn Tree, G. A. Sala, H. Stacy Marks, R.A., Miss Mary Moore, David James, Max O'Rill.
Illustrated Interviews.—I. Cardinal Manning. Harry How.
The State of the Law Courts. IV. The Criminal Courts. (Illus.)
Captain Mayne Reid: Soldier and Navalist. (Illus.) M. Q. Holyake.

Sunday at Home. August. 6d.
A catfish on Tat.
The Hospital of Noble Poverty. (St. Cross, Winchester). (Illus.) Rev. T. B. Wilson.
Heroes of the Golden Sands. II. The Ganges. Rev. T. Stanley Taylor.
Religious Life and Thought in France. VII. Protestant Agencies. VIII. General View.
Thirteen Months in a London Hospital. By a Lady Patient.
Jews in London. I. Refugees. Mrs. Brewer.

Sunday Magazine. August. 6d.
Refugees in the East End. Rev. Harry Jones.
Gambling and Betting. Rev. Hugh P. Ice Hughes.
In Milton's Footsteps at Vallombrosa. Prof. W. Guden Blake.
A Quaker Poet. (Barton.) W. Garrett Horder.
With the Ancient Egyptians. H. M. Bowne and L. V. Hodgkin.
The Supreme Love of God for His Children. Rev. Benjamin Waugh.
Temple Bar Magazine. August. 1s.
Irish Bulls and Bulls not Irish.
The Congress of Vienna.
The Guelph Exhibition and the Eighteenth Century.

Tinsley's Magazine. August. 6d.
Sir J. R. Somers Vice. With Portrait.
Wesleyan Methodist Magazine. 6d.
August.
The Maker and the Making of Methodism. Rev. W. Nicholson.

Work. August. 6d.
Photographic Tens.
The Safety Bicycle: Its Practical Construction, etc.

Young Man. August. 3d.
Eins Lyall. Dora Jones.

POETRY.

Atlantic Monthly. August.
Notes from the Wild Garden. Edith M. Thomas.

The Pen-Fields. C. G. D. Rober's.
Harebell. E. C. Stedman.

Century. August.
Thou Reignest Still. Louise Chandler Moulton.
The Eleventh-Hour Labourer. L. Gray Noble.
On Elkhorn. Robert Burns Wilson.
Gray Rocks and Grayer Sae. C. G. D. Roberts.

Cornhill. August.
Sparrows.

Cosmopolitan. August.
Environment. Edgar Fawcett.
A Ballade of Lovers. Marion M. Miller.
The Bridal Dress. Isabel Gordon.
The Long-Ago. J. V. Cheney

English Illustrated. August.
Lilies. Ethel Clifford.

Girl's Own Paper. August.
Youth. Ida J. Lemon.
A Birthday Present. G. Weatherly.
The Good Doctor. Anne Beale.
Lilies. Sarah Doudney.

Good Words. August.
The Common Fate of All Things Fair. Augusta Webster.
Failed. A. H. Begbie.

Harper's Magazine. August.
Answered. M. M. Fitzhugh.
In the High Tower. Julia C. R. Dorr.
The Wizard Harp. Kate P. Osgood.

Irish Monthly. August.
Wood Notes. D. Bearn.
Glensmole. Mary Furlong.
A Girl's Thought. Alice Fur'ong.

Leisure Hour. August.
For Once. Miss E. H. Hickey.
See Slumber-Song. Hon. Roden Noel.

Lippincott. August.
A Damascus Blade. C. Scollard.
At a Poet's Funeral. Anne R. Aldrich.
Fancy. D. L. Dawson.

Longman. August.
The Ballad of Sir Hugh. E. Nesbit.
Magazine of American History. July.
To My Books. O. E. Norton.

Magazine of Art. August.
The Habit Does Not Make the Monk. E. F. Strange.

Monthly Packet. August.
Chess.

Murray. August.
By Leth's Banks. J. Deane.
The Shorter Poems of Robert Bridges. Rev. H. C. Beeching.

National Magazine of India. May.
To My Sister. J. C. D.

New England Magazine. July.
Her In All Things. Philip Bourke Marston.

Small and Great. P. H. Savage.
The Daisies. C. Gordon Rogers.
The City of the Dead. L. Maynard.
A June Sketch and a July Sketch. Catherine Thayer.

Our Day. July.
One Flag in Four Winds. J. E. Rankin.

Outing. July.
The Sylvan Sanctuary. F. Le Roy Sargeant.

Scribner's Magazine. August.
Song and Sorrow. Anne Fields.
In Absence. A. Lampman.
Dead Men's Holiday. Louise Chandler Moulton.

The Great King's Dream.
The Dunchurch Bells. A. Gordon.

Sunday Magazine. August.
Sunshine. Clare Thwaites.

The Empty Chair. C. T. Carrisbrooke.
Tinsley's Magazine. August.
Ballade of a Bird. S. J. A. Fitzgerald.
Whispering Reeds. Maud Me ton.
The Song of Hugin. C. Young.

INDEX.

Abbreviations of Magazine Titles used in this Index.

A.C.Q. American Catholic Quarterly Review	D.R. Dublin Review	L.H. Leisure Hour	P.R.R. Presbyterian and Reformed Review
A.R. Andover Review	Econ. J. Economic Journal	Lipp. Lippincott's Monthly	P.M.Q. Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review
A. Arena	Econ. R. Economic Review	L. Q. London Quarterly	Psy. R. Proceedings of the Society for Psychological Research
Arg. Argosy	E.R. Edinburgh Review	Long. Longman's Magazine	Q.R. Quarterly Review
Ata. Atlanta	Ed. R. Educational Review	Luc. Lucifer	Q. Quiver
A.M. Atlantic Monthly	E.H. English Historical Review	Mac. Macmillan's Magazine	Scot G.M. Scottish Geographical Magazine
Bank. Bankers' Magazine	E.I. English Illustrated	M.A.H. Magazine of American History	Scot. R. Scottish Review
Black. Blackwood's Magazine	F.R. Fortnightly Review	Mind. Mind	Scrib. Scribner's Magazine
C.F.M. Cassell's Family Magazine	G.M. Gentleman's Magazine	Mis. R. Missionary Review	Shake. Shakespearean Strand
C.S.J. Cassell's Saturday Journal	G.O.P. Girl's Own Paper	Mon. Monist	Sun. H. Sunday at Home
C.M. Century Magazine	G.W. Good Words	M. Month	Sun. M. Sunday Magazine
C.J. Chambers's Journal	Harp. Harper's Magazine	M. P. Monthly Packet	T.B. Tinley's Magazine
Chaut. Chautauquan	Help. Help	Mur. Murray's Magazine	U.S.M. United Service Magazine
Ch. Mis. I. Church Missionary Intelligence and Record	Hom. R. Homiletic Review	Nat. R. National Review	W.R. Westminster Review
Ch. Q. Church Quarterly Review	In. M. Indian Magazine	N.N. Nature Notes	Y.M. Young Man
Ch. R. Church Review	I.J.E. International Journal of Ethics	N.E.M. New England Magazine
C.R. Contemporary Review	Ir. M. Irish Monthly	New R. New Review
C. Cornhill	Jew. Q. Jewish Quarterly	N.C. Nineteenth Century
Cos. Cosmopolitan	Jur. R. Juridical Review	N.A.R. North American Review
	K.O. King's Own	O.D. Our Day
	K. Knowledge	O. Outing

Aborigines of the British Isles, Certain National Names of, Scot. R., July Action and Acting, Dr. J. S. Kinnard on, Hom. R., July
 Atonal Punishment, Dr. W. B. Mauley on, A. J., July
 Africa: The Orthography of African Names, Scot. G. M., July. African Myths and Legends, H. Costeclair on, Chaut., Aug.
 Aged Pilgrims, C. O. A. Coopes on, K. O., Aug.
 Aloysius, St., R. v. W. A. Sutton on, Ir. M., Aug.
 Aristides, Apology of, R. v. A. Lucas on, M., Aug.
 Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens, Ch. Q., July
 Army: Military Criticism and Modern Tactics, U. S. M., Aug. The Truth about the Yeomanry Cavalry, by Major W. A. B. Hamilton, U. S. M., Aug. The Recruiting Question, U. S. M., Aug. Studies in Tactical Progress during the last 25 years, Black., Aug. The Education of Military Officers, by W. Wren, F. R., Aug.
 Arnold, Sir Edwin, C. S. J., Aug.
 Astronomy: Are the Planets Habitable? by E. Gore, N. H., Aug. The System of the Stars, E. R., July. Recent Studies on the Solar Spectrum, by A. L. Cortie, M., Aug.
 Athens, Medieval, Q. R., July
 Australasian System, D. R., July
 Australia: The S-army Sarm of Australia, reply by H. Willoughby, N. C., Aug. The Antipodeans, by D. C. Murray, C. R., Aug.

Babylonian Life in the Time of Nebuchadnezzar, by Rev. A. H. Sage, N. H., Aug.
 Baden, Grand Duchess of, Help., Aug.
 Bavinille, Théodore de, R. E. Frothero on, N. C., Aug.
 Barton, Bernard, Quaker Poet, Sun. M., Aug.
 Beam-Fawling, C. J., Aug.
 Biblical Mystaphors, Jew. Q., July
 Birds: Two Little Dummers, by O. T. Miller, A. M., Aug. Woodcock, S. Ipe, and Pover, Black., Aug.
 Bismarck, Prince, Murat Halstead on, Cos., Aug.
 Blavatsky, Madame, Dr. P. Hartmann and others on, Luc., July
 Blyth, Bishop, and the Church Missionary Society, by Rev. Haskett Smith, N. H., Aug.
 Bletons at Home, by C. W. Wood, Arg., Aug.
 Briggs, Prof., A. R., July. Inaugural Address of, P. R., July. On the Theological Crisis, N. A. R., July
 Brunt, Charlotte, Unpublished Letters of, Mrs. Williams on, Mac., Aug.
 Brown Nathan, Prof. Max Müller on, New R., Aug.
 Buddhist Service in Ceylon, by Dr. K. r., N. H., Aug.
 Byron, Lord, Early School Days of, Prof. W. G. Blake on, Harp., Aug.

Calvinism and Confessional Revival, by A. Kuypers, P. R., July
 Canada and the United States: A Brief for Canadian Unity, by W. B. Harte, N. E. M., July
 Canterbury, Canon Fremantle on, G. W., Aug.
 Cantillon, Richard, H. Higgs on, Econ. J., June
 Case Horn and Co-operative Mining in '49, W. B. Farne on, C. M., Aug.
 Catholic Church: The Pope and the Temporal Power, 1823-1846, by Dr. J. A. Moon, A. C. Q., July
 Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C. R., Aug.
 Catholic Theology in England, Rev. W. H. Kent on, D. R., July
 Cattle, Strange Instincts of, W. H. Hudson on, Long., Aug.
 Chautauqua: Old Chautauqua Days, Chaut., Aug.
 Chicago Architecture, Harp., Aug.
 Chilian War, Constance Egglestone on, U. S. M., Aug.
 China: The Recent Audience at Peking, by R. S. Gundry, W. R., Aug.
 Christ: Greek Forerunners of, by Rev. P. Lilly, M. P., Aug. Christ or Plato? Ch. Q., July
 Christian Ethics and the Simple Gospel, Rev. C. F. Carter on, A. R., July Church, The, and Modern Scientific Thought, by Prof. J. L. Conte, A. R., July
 Clairvoyance Experiments, Psy. R., July
 Clubs: The Woman's Press Club of New York City, by Fannie A. Mathews, Cos., Aug.
 Colonies: Britannic Confederation, by E. A. Freeman, Scot. G. M., July
 Federation and Free Trade, W. R., Aug.
 Colonial Independence, E. R., July
 The Colonial Expatriate, Ch. Q., July
 Commons and Commoners, L. H., Aug.
 Complements and Compliments, W. R., Aug.
 Conception, Psychology of, James Sully on, Mon., July
 Condition of the People: Labour and Life in London, by Miss C. Black, C. R., Aug.
 Continental Unity, N. E. M., July
 Co-operative Movement: Industrial and Financial Co-operation, by F. B. Thurber, N. A. R., July
 Copyright: The American Act, F. R. Dady on, F., July
 Cottages and Cottagers, by D. Bates, E. I., Aug.
 Court Jesters of England, Rather Singleton on, Cos., Aug.
 Crews, Railway Centre, G. M., Aug.
 Crime: Michael Schwab's Reply to Prof. Lombroso, Mon., July
 Crispi, Signor, on Italy, France, and the Papacy, C. R., Aug.
 Cuba: Why we need Cuba, by Gen. T. Jordan, F., July
 Culture and Preaching, Hom. R., July

Dante: The Beatrice of Dante, E. R., July
 Sartre's Prolegomena on Dante, Ch. Q., July
 Demography, Capt. Sir Douglas Galton on, N. C., Aug.
 Diebens, Charles, and Punch, by F. G. Kitton, E. I., Aug.
 Dixon's Life of Christ, Ch. Q., July
 Dissatisfied Emotions, Cos., Aug.
 Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithfull, N. A. R., July. And from the Maid's point of view, New R., Aug.
 Drama: The Ethical Antecedents of the English Drama, by T. W. Hunt, P. R., July Historical Drama and the Fearful of History, by Hugh E. Egerton, Nat. R., Aug.
 The Drama of the Moment, by H. A. Kennedy, N. C., Aug.
 Dukeries, C. H. Pelham Clinton on, Cos., Aug.

Eas' L. thian Twenty Years Ago, by A. G. Bradley, Mac., Aug.
 Edge Hill and Compton Winyates, Julia Cartwright on, Ata., Aug.
 Edinburgh, Roy., Ch. Q., July
 Education, see also contents of the Educational Review
 The Government Education Bill, Ch. Q., July
 The Idea of a Parochial School, by R. v. J. Murray, A. C. Q., July
 The Education of Military Officers, by W. Wren, F. R., Aug.
 Free Education, M., Aug.
 University Extension in America, Prof. H. B. Adams on, F., July
 Pedagogics in Germany, by C. Ufer, Mon., July
 Democratizing the Universities in England and America, Help., Aug.
 Education at Wincethur, by Prof. Eberth, Help., Aug.
 Village Education and P. p. u. a: Control, by T. J. Macnamara, W. R., Aug.
 Eisenach and the Wartburg, Florence E. Norris on, Mur., Aug.
 Elk hunting, E. N. Buxton on, New R., Aug.
 Emerson's Views of Reform, N. E. M., July
 Emigration and Immigration: Are our Immigrants to blame? by O. Ottenorfer, F., July.
 Emigration from Cities, E. E. Dale on, Cos., Aug.
 Encyclical of Leo XIII., A. C. Q., July
 England in the Eighteenth Century, by E. A. Freeman, Chaut., Aug.
 English Expletives, G. M., Aug.
 Epitaphs, Pagan, C., Aug.
 Ethics: The Functions of Ethical Theory, by Prof. Jas. H. Hyslop, I. J. E., July
 Programme of School of Applied Ethics, I. J. E., July.
 The Criterion of Ethics an Objective Reality, Mon., July
 Ethology, J. S. Mill's Science of, I. J. E., July

- Evolution, Right of, M. neuze D. Colway on, Mon, July
- Fiction: Names in Novels, Black, Aug
Morality in Fiction, by Canon MacCall, C R, Aug
Love and Fiction, by Paul Bourget, New R, Aug
Finance: Foreign Exchanges, Bank, Aug
Fires in Theatres, Capt. Shaw on, New R, Aug
Flammarion, Camille, on the Unknown, A, July
Flowers and the Poets, by S. Moore, G. M., Aug
Forbes, Archibald, War Correspondent, Reminiscences of, N C, Aug
France: Social Legislation, C. Glde on, Econ R, July
Private Life in France in the Fourteenth Century, by Mrs. M. F. Robinson, F R, Aug
Home Life in France, by P. G. Hamerton, F, July
Traveling in Provincial France, by Mrs. Eliz. R. Pennell, Chaut, Aug
Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C R, Aug
Frontiers and Protectorates, Sir A. C. Lyall on, N C, Aug
- Gambling and Betting: Rev. H. P. Hughes on, Sun M, Aug. Gambling in High Life, Adam Bidean on, Cos, Aug. The Ethics of Gambling, by W. D. Mackenzie, C R, Aug.
Game Preserving, Aspects of, by Canon Furse, Econ R, July
Germany, Making of, Q R, July
Germany, Emperor William II. of
Poultry Bigelow on, C M, Aug
Prof. F. H. Giffeken on, F, July
Goethe: His Friendship with Schiller, by Dowden, F R, Aug
His Faust and Modern Thought, M. Kaufmann on, Scot R, July
Graham Law, Sir R. Giffen on, Econ J, June.
- Henry VII.: Did he Murder the Princes? by Jas. Gairdner, E H, July Hersch, Baron, on Philanthropy, N A R, July
History: The Politician as Historian, W R, Aug. Historical Drama and the Teaching of History, by H. E. Egerton, Nat R, Aug
Holland: The Dutchman at Home, Mac, Aug
Homes, Dr. Oliver Wendell, A, July
Homes of the Poor: How the Poor Live, by W. M. Colles, Mur, Aug. Our Dealings with the Poor, b. M. O. Hill, N C, Aug
Hospital of Nob. & Priv. ty, Sun H, Aug
Houghton, Lord, Ch Q, July
Hypnotism: The Physical and the Mental in Hypnotism, by A. Fouillée, Chaut, Aug
- Ibsen, Henrik, C. E. Maurice on, Econ R, July
Identification by Finger Tips, F. Galton on, N C, Aug
Independent National Churches, Rev. L. R. Kingston on, D R, July
India: The Defence of India, Major J. W. Murray on, U S M, Aug
Irrigation in India, C J, Aug
Mapping and Place Names, by J. Burgess, Scot G M, July
India, the Gift of Sea Power, by Captain S. Ardley-Wilmot, U S M, Aug
In India with Medical Missionaries, by Hon. Emily Kinnaird, G O P, Aug
The Anglo Indians, by Mrs. James C. Robertson, Nat R, Aug
The Story of an Indian Child-Wife, by F. Max Müller, C R, Aug
Insurance: Working-class Insurance, Rev. J. F. Wilkinson on, Econ R, July
Ireland: The Prospect for Home Rule, by B. J. Clonoh, A C Q, July
Two Visits to the West Coast of Connaught, by Miss Ba fur, Mur, Aug
Irish Bulls and Bulls not Irish, T B, Aug
Isaiah: Critical Problems of the Second Part, by Prof. T. K. Cheyne, Jew Q, July
Italy, France, and the Papacy, by Signor Crispi, C R, Aug
- Janeists, Later, Q R, July
Japan: Parliamentary Day, by J. H. Wigmore, Scrib, Aug
- Jews:
The Oriental Jews, by Major C. R. Colde, Scot R, July
International Aid for the Jews, O D, July
The Expulsion of the Jews from Russia, O D, July
The Russo-Jewish Immigrant, by Rev. S. Singer, E I, Aug
The Persecuted Russian Jews, C. B. R. Kent, Nat R, Aug
Jewish Colonisation and the Russian Persecution, by Arnold White and S. B. Laulin, New R, Aug
Jews in London: Mrs. Brewer on, Sun H, Aug
A Day in Jewland, C S J, Aug
Persecution of the Jews in Russia, C. N. Barham on, W R, Aug
Johns Hopkins University, D. C. Gilman on, Cos, Aug
Journalism: City Editors, Bank, Aug
The Press as a News Gatherer, by W. H. Smith, C M, Aug. Pictorial Journalism, by V. Gribayedoff, Cos, Aug
- Kipling, Rudyard, Tales of, E R, July
Knight Service, Introduction of, E H, July
Königsgrätz, Battle of, Count von Moltke on, U S M, Aug
- Labour Questions:
Why Working Men Dislike Piece Work, by D. F. Schloss, Econ R, July
An Artisan's View of the Eight Hours Question, by J. Naylor, Econ R, July
The Probable Effects of an Eight Hours Day on the Production of Coal and the Wages of Miners, Econ J, June
The Increase in Industrial Remuneration under Profit-Sharing, by D. F. Schloss, Econ J, June
The Conflict between Capital and Labour, Q R, July
The Scotch Ploughmen's Union and its Terms, by J. G. Dow, Scot R, July
The Labour Movement in Australia, by F. Adams, F R, Aug
The Old Economy and the New, by Prof. W. Smart, F R, Aug
Leading and Labouring, by E. P. Whipple, N A R, July
Laird, Count, S. J. Owen on, E H, July
Law and the Lawyers, see also Contents of the Juridical Review
The Criminal Courts, Str, July
Leo XIII. on Labour, A C Q, July
Cardinal Manning on D R, July
Leslie, Archangel, Legend of, by T. G. Law, Scot R, July
Liberty, Plea for, by S. Ball, Econ R, July
Lincoln, Abraham, T. Stanton on, W R, Aug
Lincolnshire, Q R, July
Linn, Jenny, L Q, July
London, Reformed, Trees and Flowers, by Prof. H. Marshall Ward, New R, Aug
Literature and Society, by Mrs. Amelia S. Barr, N A R, July
London Architecture in the Nineteenth Century, E R, July
London—Plantagenet, W. Besant on, Harp, Aug
Luthardt, Dr., Some Reflections of, L Q, July
Lyal, Edna, Y M, Aug
- Madonna's, Sir John A., L H, Aug; M. J. Griffin on, Black, Aug
MacHale, Archbishop John, Rev. F. P. Devine on, D R, July
Mackinac Fairy Isle, Dr. W. C. Richards on, M A H, July
Magee, Archbishop, Canon Macdonnell on, G W, Aug
Magic, Art of, by Chevallier Hermann, N A R, July
Magic Lantern as an Aid in Teaching, by C. H. Bowdley, Photo Q, July
Magic Lantern Mission, Mr. Elley on, Help, Aug
Maine State, N E M, July
Manning, Cardinal, Interviewed, Str, July
On the Labour Encyclical, D R, July
Marriage and the Marriage Laws:
The Present Status of the Divorce Question, by Rev. S. W. Dike, Horn, R, July
Marriage and Free Thought, F R, Aug
The Mystery of Christian Marriage, by Dr. J. P. Loughlin, A C Q, July
- Melville and Leven Memoirs, E R, July
Meran, Margaret Howitt on, G W, Aug
Mineral Leases and Royalties, B. Taylor on, Scot R, July
Miracles: On Certain Ecclesiastical Miracles, by Father Ryder, N C, Aug
Missions:
Bishop Blyth and the Church Missionary Society, by Rev. Haskett Smith, N H, Aug
Morality: The Morality of Nations, by Prof. W. K. Sursey, I. J. E, July
Vice and Immorality, by R. W. Black, I. J. E, July
Morelli, Giovanni, Q R, July
Morris, Wm., and his "News from Nowhere," M. Hewlett on (a Materialist's Paradise), Nat R, Aug
Mugwump: A New Variety, by D. B. Eator, N A R, July
Municipal Threat in National Politics, J. C. Adams on, N E M, July
Murray, John, Publisher, and his Friends, Q R, July; E R, July; Scot R, July; L Q, July
- Navies: The Royal and Merchant Navy under Elizabeth, M. Oppenheim on, E H, July Disappearing Guns for Battle-ships, W. L. Clowes on, U S M, Aug
Naval Prize in War, Capt. C. Johnstone on, U S M, Aug
Nevin, John Williamson, A R, July
New Zealand, G. M. Grant on, Harp, Aug
Nihilists in Paris, J. H. Rooley on, Harp, Aug
- Old Testament Study, L Q, July
Oliphant, Laurence, Scot R, July
Oxford Movement, Ch Q, July, L Q, July
- Pagan Epitaphs, C, Aug
Painter's "Palace of Pleasure," by J. A. Symonds, F R, Aug
Parliamentary: The Session and the Government, Black, Aug. The Next Parliament, by Edw. Dicey, N C, Aug. The Session: Its Domestic Questions, Nat R, Aug
Paul, C. Kegan, Autobiographical, M. Aug
Paul, St., and Seneca: A Disputed Correspondence, by H. W. Preston and L. Dodge, A M, Aug
St. Paul and the Roman Law, by W. E. Ball, C R, Aug
Peel, Sir Robert, Q R, July
Penal Laws, W. S. Lilly on, D R, July
Phœnicia, Rawlinson's History of, E R, July
Photography, see also Contents of the Photographic Quarterly
Photography in the White Mountains, by E. Wallace, O, Aug
Peculiarly, Andrew Lang on, Scrib, Aug
Pirates: Some Famous Pirates, by Tighe Hopkins, Nat R, Aug
Placer, Mining, Jos. P. Reed on, Cos, Aug
Plautus and his Imitators, Q R, July
Pleasure and Pain, Physical Basis of, by H. R. Marshall, Mind, July
Plutocracy and Snobbery in New York, E. Fawcett on, A, July
Poe, Edgar Allan, Julian Hawthorne's Adventure with, Lipp, Aug
Politicians as Historians, W R, Aug
Population: The United States Census and the Coloured Race, by Prof. F. A. Walker, F, July
Port-Royal, L Q, July
Portugal: The Future of Portugal, by O. Crawford, F R, Aug
Postal Congress of Vienna, T B, Aug
Prayer Book, Original Manuscript of, Ch Q, July
Prerogative, Inheritance of, R. T. Ely on, N A R, July
Providence: Jos. Pennell on, C M, Aug.
Psychology, The Problem of, by E. W. Scripture, Mind, July
- Quakerism, Revival of, W R, July.
- Race Problems of America: Unsolved Southern Problems, by Jos. Cook, O D, July. The Negro Question, by Prof. W. S. Scarborough, A, July

Railways :

Some English Railway Problems of the Next Decade, by T. O. Farier, Econ J. June
Should the Government Control the Railways? by C. Wood Davis, A. July
Railroad, Sir Henry, Miss K. E. Howarth on, K O. July. His History of Phenicia, E. R. July
Refugees in the East End, Rev. Harry Jones on, Sun M. Aug
Revolutionary Measures and Neglected Crimes, Prof. J. B. Buchanan on, A. July
Riders, American, Col. T. A. Dodge on, Harp Aug
Rivier, Prof., Portrait of, Jur R. July
Rousseau's Ideal Household, by Mrs. Andrew Lang, Nat R. Aug.
Royal Society of Canada, Mrs. Martha J. Lumb on, M A H. July
Russia: The Persecuted Russian Jews, O. B. R. Kent on, Nat R. Aug
Russian Persecution, O. N. Barnum on, W R. Aug
Jewish Colonisation and the Russian Persecution, by Arnold White and E. B. Laith, New R., Aug

Sabbath Light, M. Fridmann on, Jew Q. July
St. Cross, and the Hospital of Noble Poverty, Rev. T. B. Willson on, Sun H. Aug
Sala, G. A., Portraits of, Str. July
Scartazzini's Prolegomena on Dante, Ch. Q. July
Scheppeler, Louise, Montyon Prize Heroine, L. G. Séguin on, L H. Aug
Schillemann's Discoveries in Hellas, J. L. Swell on, N E M. July
Schopenhauer on Kant, by W. Caldwell, Mind. July
Sepulture Among the Early Christians, by Mgr. Seton, A C Q. July
Servants: Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithful, N A R. July. From the Maid's Point of View, New R., Aug
Shakespeare: The Shakespearean Entourage, by H. P. Horman, Shake, July. Shakespeare Societies in New York, Shake, July. Child Life in Shakespeare's Plays, by M. L. Griffin, Jr. M. Aug
Sherman, Gen., J. A. Cook on, O D. July
J. C. Ropes on, A M. Aug
Shipping: East through the Suez Canal, by Morley Roberts, Mur. Aug
Smith, Geo. Adam, on Isaiah, by E. C. M. Douglas, P R R. July

Socialism, see also under Labour:

The Old Economy and the New, by Prof. W. Smart, F R. Aug
The Difficulties of Individualism, by Sydney Webb, Econ J. June
The Individual and the State, E R. July
Socialism and Spiritual Progress, by Miss V. D. Soudder, A R. July Social Legislation in France, Prof. C. Glide on, Econ R. July
S.ule and faces, by Norah Gribble, C R. Aug
Sport: Big Game in Colorado, by E. Ingersoll, O. Aug
Sports: The Degradation of British Sports, W. E. Hodgson, Nat R. Aug
Stead, W. T., on the Citizenship of Women and the Sanctity of the Home, Help, Aug
Strozzi, The, and Their Mother, Helen Zimmermann on, L H. Aug
Sun's Song, Prof. C. S. Smith on, A R. July
Swimming Animals, R. Lydekker on, K. Aug
Switzerland: Six Centuries of Self-government, W. D. McCrackan on, A M. Aug
Swiss and American Institutions, W. D. McCrackan on, A. July

Tait, Archbishop, Long, Aug
Talleyrand Memoirs, Q R. July; E R. July
Taxation through Monopoly, by Prof. C. F. Bastable, Econ J. June
Tennyson, Lord,
On the Study of Tennyson, by H. Van Dyke, C M. Aug
His Lincolnshire Farmers, J. J. Davies on, W R. Aug
Tewkesbury Abbey, Dean Spence on, E I. Aug
Rev. A. M. Nickalls on, K O. Aug
Thackeray's Portraits of Hims H, G. S. Layard on, Mur. Aug
Theosophy and the Law of Population, by Mrs. Annie Besant, Luc, July
Thoreau and His Biography, Lipp. Aug
Thought and Language, Prof. Max Müller on, Mon. July
Tolstol, Count, as a Reformer, by J. H. Worcester, Jr., P R R. July
Tonquin: The French in Tonquin, by Lord Lamington, N C. Aug
Tamps, American, J. Flynt on, C R. Aug
Triple Alliance, Plea for, by Karl Blind, Nat R. Aug
Turkey: The Administration of Justice in the Levant, Jur R. July
Tyranny of All the People, by Rev. F. Belamy, A. July

Unearned Increment, L Q. July

United States: The Reform of the Senate, W. P. Garrison on, A M. Aug. The McKinley Tariff, Prof. F. W. Taussig, Econ J. June. The United States and Silver, by C. S. Fairchild, F. July. The Operation of the Interstate Commerce Law, by A. F. Walker, F. July. The Census, see under Population. The Farmers' Discontent, by L. L. Polk, N A R. July. The Farmer on Top, by E. Witman, N A R. July. Universities: The Johns Hopkins University, by D. C. Gilman, Cos, Aug. English Universities and Colleges, by E. A. Freeman, N A R. July
Unknown, The, by C. Flammarion, A. July
Uzza, Ducal Town of, T. A. Janvier on, Cos. Aug

Village Community, Destruction of, Prof. W. J. Ashley on, Econ R. July
Vine, Sir J. R. Somers, Tin, Aug
Virginia's Natural Bridge, K. L. Parsons on, N E M. July

War Office: Confusion Worse Confounded, by Gen. Sir Geo. Chesney, N C. Aug
Watson, William, a New Poet, by Grant Allen, F R. Aug
Welfare, Principle of, Prof. H. Höfding on, Mon. July
Westminster Abbey, A. E. Street on, Mac, Aug
Whitman, Walt, Birthday of, by H. L. Traubel, Lipp. Aug
Whittier, J. G., G. Crutchey on, M N C. July
Willoughby, Elizabeth, Ed. Waford on, G O P. Aug
Windthorst, Dr. L., Mgr. Schroeder on, A C Q. July

Women: Trades Unionism among Women in Ireland, by H. Abraham, D R. July
The Woman's Press Club of New York City, Fanny A. Mathews on, Cos, Aug
St. Paul and His Lady Helps, by Mrs. James Martin, Sun M. Aug
Domestic Service in England, by Miss E. Faithful, N A R. July; and from the Maid's Point of View, New R. Aug
Wood, Rev. J. G., Field Naturalist, L Q. July

Yachting:

The New Yachting, by Sir M. Mackenzie, F R. Aug
Yacht Clubs of the East, Capt. A. J. Kersey on, O. Aug.

CONTENTS.

Frontispiece:— Mr. James Russell Lowell ... .. 212 Progress of the World:— The New Triple Alliance (cartoon) ... .. 213 The French Fleet at Portsmouth ... .. 215 Portrait of the King of Servia ... .. 216 View of Valparaiso ... .. 217 Sketch of the Holy Coat ... .. 219 Portrait of John Dillon ... .. 219 „ of Sir Douglas Galton ... .. 221 „ of Professor Huggins ... .. 222 Portraits of the Swiss Federal Council ... .. 223 Labour and Australian Parties (cartoon) ... .. 224 Diary of the Month ... .. 225 Portraits of Sir A. Borthwick, Mr. Levy Lawson, and the new President, Royal Scottish Academy. Obituary ... .. 226 Character Sketches:— I. The Queen of the Sandwich Islands ... .. 227 Portrait of the Queen ... .. 227 „ the Prince Consort ... .. 228 „ the Heir Presumptive ... .. 228 View of the Royal Palace ... .. 229 Map of the North Pacific and Pearl Harbour... 230 Portrait of King Kalakaua ... .. 231 „ Princess Bernice Penati Bishop ... 233 „ The Hon. C. R. Bishop ... .. 233 „ Lorrin A. Thurston ... .. 234 II. Mr. J. Russell Lowell, and what I Owe to Him ... .. 235 View of Elmwood... .. 235 Beaver Brook ... .. 238 The Poet's Garden at Elmwood... .. 239 Last Interview with. By Mr. Raymond Blath- wayt ... .. 245 Mr. Lowell's Last Poem ... .. 247 Two Swiss Fêtes. The National Fête, with view of stage at Schwytz ... .. 248 The Caricatures of the Month ... .. 249 Portrait of the Caricaturist of Moonshine, and Cartoons from the Italian, French, Australian, Cape, and English Press. Choristers from South Africa. With Portrait Group ... .. 255 A Census of Ghosts. An Appeal to our Readers ... 257 The Truth About Walsall Election. With Portrait of Mr. Holden, M.P. ... .. 259 Leading Articles in the Reviews:— How the next War will begin. By M. de Blowitz, with Portrait of Heir of Austria ... .. 261 Let Germany seize Argentina. By the Marquis of Lorne ... .. 262 First Steps to English-speaking Unity. By Mr. Carnegie ... .. 263 What will my Majority be? By Mr. Gladstone ... 264 How to Get to the North Pole. By Dr. Nansen, with Map ... .. 265	Leading Articles in the Reviews (continued):— Theosophy made Easy. By Mrs. Besant ... .. 266 The Eternal Jew once more, with Cartoon. By Prof. Goldwin Smith, Baron Hirsch, etc. ... 266 Digging for Diamonds in South Africa. By Lieut.- Colonel Knollys ... .. 268 The Queen's Private Gardens at Osborne ... .. 269 A Good Example from Norway: Conciliation ... 270 Government Ownership of Railways ... .. 270 The Seamy Side of Australia. By Mr. Christie Murray, with Cartoon ... .. 271 James Russell Lowell. By Bret Harte and others... 272 Von Moltke. By Lord Wolseley ... .. 273 Down with the State. By Ouida ... .. 274 The League of the Elder Brother ... .. 274 The Spanish Story of the Armada ... .. 275 The Evolution of Swiss Democracy ... .. 276 How we Brightened our Dreary Back Room ... 277 Through Siberia in Winter ... .. 277 How Calvin burnt Servetus ... .. 278 How Consumption is Spread. By Professor Tyndall ... 279 The Story of the Heart of Montrose... .. 279 The Conquest of Life ... .. 280 Why not Nationalise the Cathedrals? ... .. 281 Was Lord Beaconsfield the Sun? ... .. 281 The Well-bred Women of Japan ... .. 282 The Founder of the Brazilian Republic ... .. 283 An Italian View of Tolstoi ... .. 284 Temperance Education in America ... .. 284 A Tale of Love Stronger than Death ... .. 285 Ary Scheffer and his Mother ... .. 286 Cavalry on the Battlefield ... .. 287 Which is the Cleverest State in the Union? ... 288 The Statesmen of Hungary ... .. 289 Can Railway Fares be Cheapered in England? ... 290 The Australian Ballot in America ... .. 291 Poetry in the Periodicals ... .. 292 Reviews Reviewed:— Contemporary ... .. 293 Fortnightly ... .. 294 Nineteenth Century ... .. 295 National and New Review ... .. 296 Century and North American ... .. 297 Arena ... .. 298 Forum ... .. 299 “The Review of the Churches” ... .. 300 Lantern Lectures on Contemporary History ... 301 Is there a Cure for Leprosy? ... .. 302 The Book of the Month. Moltke's History of the Franco-German War. With Portrait of Von Moltke and view of his residence at Creisau ... 302 Photographs of the Month. With Portrait of Mr. W. Watson, Poet ... .. 305 Lantern Slides for the Coming Season ... .. 306 New Books and Blue Books of the Month— ... 307 The Contents of the Reviews and Magazines at Home and Abroad ... .. 311 The Contents of Foreign Periodicals ... .. 314 Art, Music and Poetry ... .. 317 Index to Periodicals ... .. 318
--	--

For more to advertisers, see page xi.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Leading Bankers and Merchants are availing themselves of the Investment advantages of the Company's Endowment Policy with Life Option.

Accumulated Funds exceed, £30,000,000

The BONUSES declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only Five Years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d per cent. per annum, according to age.

BANKERS—BANK OF ENGLAND.

Bonuses Paid in 1890, £575,748; an increase over the amount Paid in Bonuses in 1889 of £13,999.

A LARGE BONUS.

The Company have recently forwarded to the holder of policy No. 278,127 a cheque for £1,099 13s. 6d. in payment of the cash value of the Bonus for 1891, the policy being for £10,000, and issued in 1886, on the five year distribution plan. This return is equal to an annual cash bonus of £2 4s. 0d. per cent. Many of these policies are reaching the bonus period with results very gratifying to the Insured.

The New Six per Cent. Consol Policy now being issued by the Company is specially devised to meet the requirements of people of means, to whom a good investment may be of more moment than Life Insurance. This Policy meets both requirements.

Head Office for the United Kingdom: 17 & 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.—D. C. HALDEMAN, General Manager.

ACTUAL RESULTS.

ORDINARY POLICIES.

The Bonuses declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only five years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

The total payments to Policyholders to December, 1890, amounted to £63,469,322, of which upwards of £16,500,000 were bonus payments—more than twice the amount of Bonuses paid by any other Company.

GOLD PENS: MABIE, TODD & BARD'S

Manufacture, are 14 carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The 'Encyclo. Brit.' says:—"Iridium is a nearly white metal of high specific gravity, it is almost indestructible, a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper. Writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens. One will outwear 90 gross of steel pens. A choice is offered from 250 various shapes and points. They are a perfect revelation to those who know nothing about Gold Pens.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co's. Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day; it cost him only 9/6, it would have cost him, in money alone, over £10 to have done the same work with steel pens.

"SWAN" FOUNTAIN PEN, 10/6, Broad, Medium, or Fine Point.

The "Swan" is a Mabie, Todd & Co. Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold ink enough for two days' constant work, or a week of ordinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as to wind a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and, if by chance the writing point does not suit his hand, exchange it for another without charge, or have his money returned if wanted.

Illustrated Price List, of various sizes (with testimonials), will be sent gratis and post free: Address postal card to

MABIE, TODD & BARD, 93 CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

1889—GOLD MEDAL, PARIS—1889

And Seventeen other Gold, Silver, and Bronze Medals.

WM. WOOLLAMS & CO.,

ORIGINAL MANUFACTURERS OF

ARTISTIC WALL PAPERS,

FREE FROM ARSENIC.

SOLE ADDRESS:

110, High Street, near Manchester Sq., London, W.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA

(IN PACKETS ONLY)

IS THE BEST.

Strong, Delicious and Nourishing,
Selected from the Spring Crops of India, China, and Ceylon.

Price 1s. 10d. to 3s. 4d. per lb.

SOLD BY 5,000 AGENTS IN ENGLAND.

Butler's Musical Instruments.

VIOLINS, GUITARS, BANJOS,
FLUTES, CLARIONETS, CONCERTINAS,
HARMONIUMS, PIANOS,
CORNETS, & BRASS BAND INSTRUMENTS.

Violins, in case complete, 20/, 25/, 30/, 40/, 50/, to £10.

THE LARGEST ASSORTMENT in the KINGDOM.

G. BUTLER,

29, HAYMARKET, LONDON.

Illustrated Price List sent post free.

"SWIFT" & "CLUB" CYCLES.

THE LEADING MACHINES.

WORKS—COVENTRY.

LONDON—

15 & 16, HOLBORN VIADUCT.

MANCHESTER—

9, VICTORIA BUILDINGS.

Catalogues Free.
Gradual Payments.

New Spring Frame "Swift" Model A. COVENTRY MACHINISTS' CO., Ltd.

From a photograph.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

[Elliot and Fry.]

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS

VOL. IV. No. 21.]

SEPTEMBER, 1891.

[PRICE SIXPENCE.]

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

Sept. 1, 1891.

The Peace-keeper of Europe. NOT once but many times in the last month even the most vehement Russo-phobe in Europe must have thanked God for the Tzar of Russia. The events of the past six weeks have brought home to the duller mind the fact that the peace of the world lies in the hand of Alexander III.; and fortunately it could not be intrusted to safer keeping. The extraordinary demonstrations of enthusiasm with which the officers of the French fleet have been received at St. Petersburg and Moscow would have been serious indeed, were it not that the policy of Russia is directed by a strong and silent sovereign who recognises simply, but in all sincerity, that he is called by God to maintain peace in Europe. Imagine John Bright on the Russian throne, and you can understand something of the determination with which Alexander III. discharges his appointed task as peace-keeper of the Continent. Much as we may deplore the persecuting policy by which M. Pobedonostzeff has disgraced the present reign, neither the May laws against the Jews, nor the attempted suppression of the Protestant Revival, should for a moment blind us to the fact that it is an incalculable benefit to Europe that the power of vetoing war is vested in the hands of the man who perhaps, of all others, is most resolute for peace. If the young Nicholas sat on the throne of his father, the peace of Europe would not be worth six months' purchase.

Visit of the British Fleet to Cronstadt.

Those who think that the welcome extended to the French Fleet by the Emperor indicates a disposition on his part to encourage the war which is the recognised end of all French policy, will be undeceived when they see the same welcome extended next year to the British fleet in Russian waters. Such a visit is quite in the natural order of events. It is more than thirty years since the combined French and British Fleets visited the Russian seaboard in the Baltic and the Black Sea, not in peace, but in war. Our old ally in the Crimean campaign has now made a friendly naval visit to our ancient foe, and all Europe has witnessed the hearty warmth of the welcome which they have received. When our fleet next year follows the example set by Admiral Gervais, there will be less fanfaronade, but the Tzar will be even better pleased to welcome his naval guests. If, by a little judicious common sense directed to the utilisation of our resources in Royal personages, the Prince of Wales could take advantage of the occasion to pay a visit with his wife and eldest son to his Imperial brother-in-law, a new, a significant, and a very valuable illustration would be afforded the world of the healing of the old feuds of bygone wars, and the sincere determination of both Empires to support each other in maintaining the peace of the world. Such a programme would be received with enthusiasm in our Navy, and it would afford a practical method of utilising the Heir-Apparent as agreeable to the Prince as it would be advantageous to the nation.

THE DANCE AROUND THE NEW TREE OF FREEDOM.

A MIXED COMPANY.
From Kladderadatsch, August 9, 1891.

Every one is delighted that France should be humoured. She has sulked so long in the corner, eating her heart out in sullen discontent, that for sheer sympathy and compassion it is well that she should be warmly welcomed when she once more ventures out into the society of her equals. As she can never again have the reality of that power which she so misused in the past, we are all only too glad to allow her the consolation of its semblance. But of course it is only a semblance. The French Foreign Office, whatever amicable arrangement they may have effected for mutual support in China, is under no mistake as to the absurdity of the popular delusion that France has an ally in Russia for the furtherance of her aggressive designs on Germany. There is no Government in Europe outside the Triple Alliance that would offer a more stern and effective opposition to any attempt to recover the lost provinces than that of Russia. France is tranquil, and professes to desire peace. Therefore the Tzar extends a cordial greeting to his effusive visitors. But let France propose to make war, and she will be very rudely awakened from her fool's paradise. The Tzar, no doubt, thinks that France is all the more easily kept in hand if she is humoured a little. Therein he is right. And in this matter the British Government is of the same opinion. The extraordinary demonstrations at Quebec, where our French Canadian subjects accorded to a French squadron as warm and enthusiastic a welcome as that which Admiral Gervais received at St. Petersburg and Moscow, meant just about as much or as little. To listen to the speeches in Quebec, people would imagine that the French Republic expected to hoist the tricolour once more upon the heights of Abraham. But of course that is just as ridiculous as the notion that Alexander III. will for a moment encourage any attempt to recapture Alsace and Lorraine.

The cordial welcome extended to the French fleet at Portsmouth last month was an excellent illustration of democratic diplomacy and popular tact. There is not an officer in the British Navy who is not trained from his childhood to regard the French as the only enemy to be feared on the high seas. No other Power possesses a navy worth speaking of. If the French Navy did not exist we might dismantle more than half our ironclads. France is the only Power that can invade us, and the French fleet is therefore the natural, necessary, and habitual standard of comparison to which we adjust our naval estimates. But that is no reason why we should not be civil to our neighbours when they pay an afternoon call; and we were so civil that some people in France seem to have lost their heads a little. Portsmouth tricked itself out with flags, and banquetted its visitors with princely hospitality. The crowd sang the Marseillaise; the Municipality made itself the host of the officers and men; the Admiralty opened the Dockyard to their inspection; the Queen reviewed the fleet, and gave a Royal reception to its commanders; and on the strength of this French newspapers declare exultantly that England has detached herself from the Triple Alliance, whereat there is much huzzaing and newspaper rhetoric. This is all as the mere foam of champagne. As England was never attached to the Triple Alliance, she cannot be detached from it. But England has not varied, and will not vary, a hairbreadth from her declared policy of offering a steady and unflinching opposition to any and every Power which seeks to disturb the peace of Europe. Therein England and Russia are as one. Theirs is the real peace alliance, which holds the balance between the Triple Alliance on the one side and France on the other. So long as England and Russia hold together there will be no war.

The English fleet in the Mediterranean has been paying visits to French ports in the South, for nowadays our international courtesies are all naval; President Carnot is expected in England as a guest of the Queen—to be followed, let us hope before very long, by the President of the American Republic; and if dinners and general junketing can consolidate peace, the nations need have no fear of war. But as M. de Blowitz tells us in the remarkable article summarised elsewhere, the tranquillity of Eastern Europe hangs on the life of Francis Joseph of Austria-Hungary; and there has been an ominous reminder last month, in the shape of Turkish representations, that France has not yet reconciled herself to our position in Egypt. The Turkish Government is believed to be meditating trouble at Cairo. Rumours are rife that the Khedive is to be marked down for deposition; and there is no doubt that after next General Election the French will try what intrigue, and possibly menace, can do to bundle us out of Egypt. They are defeating their own game if they threaten the stability of the Khedivial throne. We went there to establish it on firm foundations. We shall stay there till our task is done. If we are asked when that will be, we

Drawn by F. T. Jans.

"Requin."

"Marsouin."

"Lance." "Surcoat." "Marengo."

THE FRENCH FLEET AT PORTSMOUTH.

"Furieuse."

answer, the day after France and her allies at Constantinople and Cairo cease to menace our Egyptian edifice with destruction.

The Outlook in Eastern Europe. The little King of Servia has made his much-talked-of tour. He has visited the Tzar in the capital of Russia, and he is now back at Belgrade. The only sovereign whom he omitted to visit on his route was his own mother, the unhappy Nathalie. The Servian Government has annulled the concession by which an English firm was to have made the little Kingdom independent of Austria-Hungary by curing the pork which is at present unsaleable excepting by leave of the Magyars. The inability of the Turks to pay their war indemnity to

ALEXANDER, THE BOY KING OF SERVIA.

Russia is said to have led the latter to suggest the cession of a little additional territory to Servia and Montenegro. St. Petersburg and Constantinople have also been at loggerheads about the passage of a Russian troopship through the Bosphorus—which, by the by, a French engineer is proposing to bridge. The Bulgarians have got their Prince back again, and are rejoicing in the eloquent tribute paid them by Lord Salisbury at the Mansion House. It is one of the peculiarities of diplomacy that a Prime Minister can laud to the skies the conduct of a State which he cannot officially recognise. Princess Varesca's love affair in Roumania has been rudely nipped in the bud, and Carmen Sylva, in consequence, is feeling somewhat ill. There are a few indications of unrest on the part of the German Emperor at the fuss which the French are making about their return to European society; but it is to be hoped he will remember that silence is golden, and that the less he says the sooner French effervescence will subside.

The Naval Manœuvres. Our Naval Manœuvres have resulted in creating grave doubts as to the efficacy alike of the torpedo and the defensive netting provided against torpedo attack. Even in peace manœuvres, when no hail of shot and shell is rattling upon the torpedo boat in the terrible 2½ minutes during which it traverses the danger zone—which extends from 2,400 yards range to within 400 yards of the ship where it launches its missile—success in firing a torpedo demands such extraordinary self-possession and precision that out of eight torpedoes discharged only one struck its mark. Of the others, one struck the wrong ship, three did not act at all, and the rest were of no use. If this was the case in peace, what chance is there that torpedoists under fire would be more successful? The torpedo netting cannot be laid down or taken up in less than half an hour. When the ships have their crinoline on they are practically unable to manœuvre, and would be almost hors de combat before they could make ready for action. The half hour necessary for taking up the netting would place them at a sore disadvantage. Then, again, there is grave doubt whether the new Whitehead, when armed with a cutting knife, could not dash through the netting, and even if that were a failure the explosion of a torpedo outside would open the way for others to follow. Seeing that the introduction of smokeless powder will next year give a great advantage to the ironclads in repelling their assailants, the probability seems to be considerable that the crinoline will be discarded in naval warfare.

Sarah Bernhardt as a Political Factor. When ironclads, crammed with the deadliest explosives and arms of precision, in Northern Europe and America are discharging the duties of international courtesy, the French are employing at the Antipodes a very different emissary. Sarah Bernhardt, the actress, whose reception in Australia throws that of Admiral Gervaise at St. Petersburg into the shade, has been acclaimed as an invaluable representative of French interests. A Frenchman, writing from Melbourne, takes this point of view in a letter which is useful if only as calling attention to the possibility of a serious danger from another quarter:—

I cannot tell you how much good a journey like that of

VIEW OF VALPARAISO HARBOUR.

The scene of the last decisive fighting in the Chilean War lay to the north of the city at Placillo, about seven miles distant. This battle was fought on August 28th. Balmaceda had 12,000 troops; the Congressionalists 10,000. The defeat of Balmaceda was complete. The Congressionalists occupied Valparaíso, and their warships anchored in the harbour. Santiago soon afterwards surrendered, and the war was at an end.

Sarah does here. In the eyes of the Australians, France can scarcely be said to exist. The fact is that we are over-run with Germans and with German goods. That fact, if it be a fact, will probably do more to arrest the nonsense talked about "cutting the painter" than any number of sermons in the press and elsewhere about loyalty to the old country. Australia is gradually being surrounded by German colonies. There are several Germans in our Parliament, and the most serious part of the business is that Germany is now turning her attention to the western coast—that is to say, Perth—which is the most thinly peopled and perhaps the richest colony from the agricultural point of view. The Germans have just arranged for making a railway, over 300 miles long, through the centre of the richest district, with the Government of Western Australia. Germany is doing all she can to direct the stream of German emigration upon Australia, about 600 Germans coming over every month by the National line of steamers. If this goes on, they will soon acquire a marked preponderance.

The End of the War in Chili. While the Old World has been using its navies for peace manoeuvres and international picnicing, in the New World war has been going on in grim earnest. Last month the Congressionalists of Chili seem to have decided that the hour had come for a decisive dash on Valparaiso, the capital and stronghold of the Dictator Balmaceda. The arrival of the two ironclad cruisers expected from Europe would have enabled the Dictator to contend on more even terms with the Congressionalists on the element where they at present are supreme. An attempt was therefore made to force a decisive battle before the ships arrived. Valparaiso, defended by heavily armed forts, was invulnerable against direct naval attack. The Congressionalists landed every available fighting man at their disposal at Concon on 21st August, about ten miles north of Valparaiso. They were attacked by the Dictator on the 22nd. There was fierce fighting, 20,000 men being engaged on each side. The Dictator had the worst of it. He was dislodged from his position, and driven backward upon the city. Then he rallied his shattered forces under cover of the fire of his forts, and made a last stand at Placillo on the 28th. The carnage is said to have been frightful. Both his generals were killed. Very little quarter was asked or granted. The combatants fought with cold steel face to face, and three thousand are said to have fallen. Balmaceda's last public act was to send a telegram to Europe saying that he had gained a complete victory, the whole of the Congressional forces having surrendered to escape utter annihilation. Hardly had the telegram been printed in our newspapers before the final blow was delivered which shattered his cause into irretrievable ruin. The Männlicher magazine rifle, like the Chassepott on a famous occasion, did wonders. Balmaceda's troops fled into the city, which was at once handed over to the foreign Admirals in the harbour, who in turn handed it over to the conquerors; Santiago soon after capitulated; and Balmaceda, a hopeless fugitive, was believed to have endeavoured to cross the Andes in mid-winter. If taken he will be shot. He deserves to be hanged. Thus ends the Civil War in Chili. By some miracle the foreign warships have escaped being involved in the fighting, although on one occasion the captain of the Warspite is reputed to have threatened to bombard Valparaiso to punish a shot fired at one of his boats. There is little hope for these South American Republics until they pass under the joint tutelage of England and the United States—a consummation that may be nearer than some suppose.

American Foreign Policy. The United States of America, as may be seen by a glance at the illustrated article on the Sandwich Islands which I publish elsewhere, have decided definitely not to allow Pearl Harbour to slip from their grasp. Pearl Harbour will be, in their hands, the Malta of the Pacific. They concluded last month a Reciprocity Treaty with Spain which gives them virtual possession of Cuba for all commercial purposes. Hayti will sooner or later come under the Stars and Stripes. In Behring's Sea British and American gunboats are enforcing a close time for the seals. At any moment a joint intervention may be precipitated in Chili. Every additional warship that floats the star-spangled banner at her peak increases the urgency of the establishment of a good understanding that may hereafter ripen into a good working and, if need be, a fighting alliance between the two branches of the English-speaking race in the Western hemisphere. The suggestion no doubt will scare the older people both in the Empire and the Republic. But nothing would excite so much enthusiasm among the younger men than such a practical mode of healing the breach that has existed since the days of George III.

American Trade. At present, however, the Americans are not thinking of political or naval supremacy so much as of the commercial ascendency which Nature this year seems to be offering them with both hands. A veritable famine has smitten the quondam granary of Europe. Russia, confronted with absolute lack of bread for her teeming millions of peasants, has forbidden the export of rye, and turns anxiously westward for some substitute for her failing crops. Germany, deprived of her usual supply from Russia, looks also across the Atlantic for breadstuffs. Here in England the summer has been unusually wet. In India a drought, happily not so severe as at one time seemed probable, threatens to deprive millions of their scanty subsistence. America teems with plenty, and her ingenious sons have discovered how to make it rain to order by successive explosions of dynamite. Even without this, an unusually bountiful harvest enables her to offer the surplus of her fields to the other hemisphere. It is calculated that 150,000,000 bushels of wheat will cross the Atlantic this autumn. The American farmer rejoices that at last he is about to escape from his difficulties. In this prosperity Manitoba and the Canadian North-West will have their full share. But for the harvest of the New World, the Old World this year would stand a great chance of starving.

Meanwhile, the dread of famine does not appal the imagination of men. In the Old World things go on much the same. With actual starvation established in Southern Russia, M. Pobedonetzeff has been holding a general council of war of the Holy Orthodox Church at Moscow, which has decided that energetic measures must be taken in order to extirpate the Stundist heresy. That is to say, this infatuated Laud of the nineteenth century seizes the moment when Russia is overtaken by famine to inaugurate a persecution of the pious men and women who, in the midst of the tribulations of this life, have found consolation in spiritual Christianity. The exodus of the Jews goes on. Pobedonetzeff-Pharaoh hardens his heart, and the plagues will not fail to follow. An International Labour Conference at Brussels developed into a Socialist Congress proclaiming war against Capitalism. The pilgrim season has set in at Lourdes with the customary miracles; and at Trèves, in the centre of sceptical Germany, a million devout peasants are passing in endless procession through the Cathedral to gaze in adoring homage upon the shreds and tatters of the Holy Coat, for which they believe, nineteen centuries ago, the Roman soldiers cast lots at the foot of the Cross. "Tis a strange world, my masters!"

THE "HOLY COAT" AT TRÈVES.

Mr. Dillon and Mr. W. O'Brien. The liberation of Mr. Dillon and Mr. W. O'Brien, on the completion of their term of imprisonment, has added two formidable adversaries to the array of Mr. Parnell's opponents. They have made several speeches since their release (to which Mr. Parnell has replied), which, although unsatisfactory enough as explanations of their wobbling when Mr. Parnell was deposed, are quite clear and explicit as to their determination to offer the would-be dictator of Ireland an uncompromising opposition. The Freeman's Journal has deserted Mr. Parnell, and now the only hope of the enemy is to enlist the old prejudice against Catholicism and priestcraft in support of the cause of the co-respondent. Considering that the Roman priesthood reluctantly followed the lead of the English Nonconformists in the matter, the attempt is more than usually disreputable. So far from the discomfiture of Mr. Parnell being a proof of sacerdotal despotism, his triumph would have been a demonstration that the elementary moral principles which Churches exist to teach had as little hold upon the Irish people as they have upon those supporters of Sir Charles Dilke, who admit that he is an adulterer and a perjured liar but who still maintain that he is a fit and proper person to make laws for a Christian land.

MR. JOHN DILLON, M.P.

Drawn by W. Hatherell, R.I., Engraved by J. C. Ruddock.

The By-Elections.

At home the chief political interest has centred in two by-elections and two of Mr. Balfour's speeches. The by-elections took place in Walsall, where the Liberal majority of 1,677 in 1885 was reduced to 539, and in Lewisham, where the Tory majority of 2,125 in 1885 was decreased to 1,693. Walsall was not contested in 1886. In Lewisham in that year the Tory majority was 2,151. Neither of these constituencies show that reversion to the figures of 1885 which is the general rule throughout the country. In the case of Walsall that is due to the fact that the borough was not contested in 1886. In the case of Lewisham the Liberals polled closely up to their figures in 1885, but the Unionists gained among the new voters. So far as these elections go, they justify a calculation that the Liberal majority in the next Parliament will be nearer 100 than 150. But that is an exaggerated estimate of the significance of a couple of elections which run counter to the uniform results of all recent contests.

Mr. Balfour's Evolution.

Mr. Balfour, who six weeks since was the popular idol of the Unionist party, is now "suspect," and for the last month has been the mark for more censure in the Tory press than any other statesman in the Empire, not excepting Mr. Parnell. The cause for this extraordinary eclipse is to be found in the exceedingly frank and candid speech which he made at Plymouth on August 10th, when he proclaimed his intention to establish County Councils in Ireland next year. These Councils are not to control the police, but they are to control the local taxation, and succeed to the powers of the existing county authorities, who are almost exclusively landlords. Mr. Balfour is not sanguine, but he sees the necessity for doing something to give his Irish children practical training in the responsible duties of administration; and being bold and resolute, and withal, if it may be whispered, somewhat under the influence of Mr. Chamberlain in these matters, the experiment is to be made. Hence a great hulla-balloo in the Unionist ranks, not altogether without cause. Nor was that hubbub in the least allayed because of the hint that there is to be some measure of minority representation. Mr. Balfour's proposed Bill for the further disestablishment of the English garrison in Ireland is scouted as a wanton concession to Radicalism, and it would not be in the least surprising if the Bill were smothered in the Lords. The Second Chamber seems to have been created for the express purpose of making the government of Ireland by England impossible. Mr. Forster discovered this in 1880; Mr. Balfour may find it out in 1892.

The death of Mr. Raikes, at the comparatively early age of fifty-three, removes one of the most unlucky Postmasters-General, and creates a vacancy which can hardly be filled by a Minister less in sympathy with the determination of the country to make the Post Office the ready handmaid rather than the surly tax-collector of the country. Mr. Raikes might, if he had been resolute in favour of reform, instead of being obstinate in defence of departmental traditions, have signalised his office by establishing penny postage throughout the English-speaking realm. Instead of doing this, he marred a great opportunity by a peddling twopenny-halfpenny arrangement, for which he received no thanks, and which merely placed our colonies on the same level as foreign countries. He was a painstaking man according to his lights, but wooden and devoid of the imagination which is indispensable to all really great administrators. His successor will have an opportunity of adding a really popular plank to the electoral programme of his party by establishing penny postage throughout the English-speaking lands, and by levelling up the British Post Office to the American standard in the distribution of all newspapers and periodicals. In these respects the British Post Office should be the leader and not the laggard of the world.

August has been a great month for the Congress of congresses. Geography, science, and Health.

hygiene have all held their public parliaments, and the Times has published an encyclopædic mass of printed matter which not one reader in a hundred perused, or one in ten thousand remembered. The Prince of Wales, who presided at the Hygienic Congress, summed up the gist of all

CAPT. SIR DOUGLAS GALTON.

From a photograph by Mr. A. J. Melhuish.

sanitary teaching in the pregnant question: "We read of preventable diseases. If preventable, why are they not prevented?" The answer, of course, is only too obvious. It is possible even to buy health too dear, and even if we could afford to pay for it in cash, we could not afford to sacrifice the liberty of all in order to save a few from the inconvenience of ill-health. As long as men are willing to die frightful deaths by the thousand on the battlefield to rid themselves from authority that is irksome, it is idle to propose that, merely for the chance of reducing their liability to disease, they should become the bondslaves of the doctors, who in almost every age have committed themselves to blunders which have made them the laughing-stock of their own profession in the next generation.

Still a great deal may be done, if only the doctors will learn that liberty, even liberty to be diseased, is still prized among men; and they have undoubtedly a splendid record of achievement to show as the result of improved sanitation. The death-rate of England, which was 80 per 1,000 in 1660-79, fell to 42 per 1,000 in 1681-90, and to 35 per 1,000 in 1746-55. Since then, the progress towards health has been slower. In 1846-55 it was nearly 25. In 1889 it had fallen to just below 18. Preventable disease, according to Sir Joseph Fayrer, still kills 125,000 per annum, entailing a loss of labour from sickness estimated at £7,750,000 per annum. The same speaker drew a very vivid picture of the contrast between Elizabethan and Victorian England. The four millions of Englishmen who called Elizabeth Queen were subject to black death, sweating sickness, plague, petechial typhus, eruptive fevers, leprosy, scurvy, malarial fever, dysentery, etc. The country was uncultivated and covered with marshes and stagnant water. All this is true, but still the four millions who suffered these miseries produced Shakespeare and Bacon, a considerably greater achievement than the twenty-nine millions have accomplished in producing Tennyson and Herbert Spencer.

The greatest blunder of the doctors in this generation was their infatuation about the possibility of eliminating syphilis by legislation, which necessarily gave an enormous stimulus to the vice by which it is propagated. The result of that immoral and irrational short cut has prejudiced the profession in the public estimation to an extent they as yet but imperfectly realise; and so far from their specific achieving their end, the admirable paper read by Dr Nevins at the Congress showed that neither here nor in India, where the system of regulation was applied under the most favourable conditions, did it succeed in materially affecting the ravages of the disease. It rose and fell under the influence of causes which have as much to do with the Contagious Diseases Act as with the Gulf Stream. The foregoing reduced fac-simile of one of Dr. Nevins's admirable diagrams will enable any one to see how utterly facts have falsified the confident assertions of the New Inquisitors.

DR. NEVINS' TABLE OF CASES OF DISEASE IN THE FOURTEEN STATIONS SUBJECTED TO THE C.D. ACTS, FROM 1860 TO 1889.

* The single line indicates Lord Herbert's Commission alone in operation; the double line, the Acts in addition; the treble line, a concealment also influencing the amount of disease; and the broken line, the altered condition of suspended and repealed Acts.

** Lord Cardwell made a rule which deprived every soldier found diseased of his pay. This led to men concealing disease.

The meeting of the Spectro-scope and the Stars. British Association at Cardiff was inaugurated by an address from Dr. W. Huggins, the president, who described discoveries made in the starry heavens by the use of the spectroscope and the photographing of the sky. Few of his readers could follow him in the immense sweep of his presidential survey, but there were passages which impressed even the most casual reader. The picture of the invisible stars photographing themselves silently hour after hour upon the prepared gelatine, thereby revealing the existence of worlds which the unaided eye could never have discovered, fills the imagination with a sense at once of the limitation of sight and of the endless possibilities that are opened up when you can make light do its own printing. His account of the use of the spectroscope was less popularly intelligible; but he contrived to leave on the mind a sense of the creative process of the first book of Genesis being endlessly renewed before our eyes in the star-sown deep of space. The origin and generation of suns and planetary systems is being rendered manifest to the astronomer, and there is not a single dull day that does not witness the birth or re-birth of worlds, as much as when "the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." Note, in passing, that one of the Presidents of the Parliament of Science ventured mildly but firmly to enter his protest against the monstrous anti-scientific superstition of most men of science, that the occult phenomena of thought transference, clairvoyance and the like, ought not to be investigated. Light is breaking even in the darkest places of scientific arrogance and know-nothingism.

Meanwhile while there is one bright spot in the centre of the Continent in the Republic of Switzerland. Five hundred years ago the Switzers banded themselves together in fraternal federation against the Hapsburg, and last month at Schwytz and at Berne they were celebrating with pious gratitude the anniversary of their emancipation. Historical dramas were performed, imposing processions, emblematic of episodes in Swiss history, defiled through the streets; and although the general festivity was marred by a terrible railway collision which cost many lives, the little Republic in the heart of the Old World has good reason to congratulate itself upon the success of its commemoration. If only there had been a plump of Alps in the centre of Muscovy, how different Eastern Europe would be to-day! Where Nature fails to create ramparts for freedom, the cause of liberty seems foredoomed to defeat.

PROFESSOR W. HUGGINS.
From a photograph by Elliot and Fry.

THE SWISS FEDERAL COUNCIL.—DR. WELTY'S CABINET.

Mr. Rhodes's New Departure. The news from the Cape, where General Booth has met with a very hearty reception, is important enough to throw into the shade most of the topics that fill the columns of our newspapers. For after long hesitation, Mr. Cecil Rhodes appears to have made up his mind that nothing but prohibition will save the natives. The Local Option Bill introduced by his Government has been carried through the Lower House in the teeth of the opposition of Mr. Hofmeyer and the brandy growers, whom Mr. Arnold White represented as the masters and owners of Mr. Rhodes. For the first time for twenty years Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Hofmeyer found themselves in opposite lobbies. The Bill, as it went up to the Upper Chamber, provided that the sale of liquor should be prohibited in any district in the colony where a bare majority of the electors on the divisional council register voted against the renewal of the licences. The Bill, as drafted by the Colonial Government, provided for a two-thirds majority. A bare majority was substituted in Committee against the vote of Mr. Rhodes, by the help of Mr. Hofmeyer, who apparently voted against a two-thirds majority in order to increase the chance of securing its rejection. The substitution of the Divisional Council for the Parliamentary Register confines the voting to whites, the natives, it was said, being certain to vote for prohibition. No compensation is to be given to the dispossessed publican, nor is there even six months' day of grace. It remains to be seen whether the Bill will pass the Second Chamber; but it is even more important to see whether it will mark the beginning of a split between Mr. Rhodes and Mr. Hofmeyer. It may be noted, in connection with the subject of liquor legislation, that the German Government has just introduced a drastic Bill directed against intemperance, and that if anything is to be done in this direction in England before the General Election it will have to be in the shape of a brief Bill, establishing Local Option for Sunday Closing.

Australian Developments.

The Senaputty and the Tongan General have been executed for their share in the disturbances in Manipur; but, despite a somewhat foolish despatch from Lord Cross, it is understood that the little State is not to be annexed. It is, however, not India but Australia that has been the chief centre of interest in the Empire last month. The Labour party, which holds the balance of power in the new Assembly, New South Wales, has used it, first, to support Sir H. Parkes against a vote of censure, and, secondly, to reject his resolution in favour of woman's suffrage. A Labour party which begins its career by denying to one-half of the people the right of citizenship is a party which, so far as principle is concerned, differs little from the most "bloated aristocracy" of the old world. In Victoria the Government has brought in a Bill reforming the Constitution, which confers the franchise upon every woman on exactly the same terms as it is granted to every man. The clause is very drastic:—

Notwithstanding anything contained in the Constitution Amendment Act of 1890, no person shall by reason only of being a female (a) be refused or deprived of an elector's right entitling her to vote at elections of members of the Legislative Assembly; or (b) be omitted or expunged from any list or roll of electors to be made out, certified, transmitted, printed, or displayed, furnished, headed, inspected, examined, revised, copied, or enforced for any division of an electoral roll; or (c) be disqualified from voting at any elections of members of the Legislative Assembly.

The evolution of the Labour party is being watched with interest. At present, with its impracticable programme and undisciplined aspirations, all that is clear is that there will be a good deal of disillusionment before very long. Henry George's nationalisation of the land is, among others, one of the planks in their programme. The long-continued shearers' strike has been concluded at last, but the unrest of the wage-earning classes that has kept Australasia in a fever for a year past is far from being allayed.

THE N.S.W. POLITICAL SEE-SAW.
From the Sydney Bulletin, June 27, 1891.

Our portraits of the members of the Swiss Federal Council, except in the case of Mr. Frey, which is from a photograph by C. Ruf, of Basel, are taken from photographs by A. Wicky, of Berne.

DIARY FOR AUGUST.

EVENTS OF THE MONTH.

- July 31. Meeting of assistant masters in St. James's Hall passes resolution to organise and found a National Association of Assistant Masters.
- Manœuvres of portion of Northern Fleet between the Downs and the French Coast.
- Berkeley Peerage case decided in the Lords, the House confirming its decision of 1811, and deciding that Mr. Berkeley had established his right to the Peerage.
- August 1. Six hundredth anniversary of the Swiss Confederation celebrated at Sc. wytz
- Statement issued to lodges of Trade and Friendly Societies throughout the London district protesting against the injustice of closing public houses without compensation, and calling for the signing of memorials in favour of compensation for extinction of licenses.
- Order made for compulsory winding-up of the English Bank of the River Plate.
- 3. Revolutionary affray at Barcelona. Guards at the barracks attacked by a small band of armed men who were repulsed after some bloodshed and arrested.
- High Court of Foresters opens at St. James's Hall.
- Franco-Russian festivities at Cherbourg.
- 4. Prince of Naples visits the Queen at Osborne, and receives the order of the Garter.

SIR ALGERNON BORTHWICK.
(Society of Journalists)

- French Squadron leaves Kronstadt.
- German Chancellor receives the deputation from the Chicago Exhibition.
- Deputation representing 40,000 Oddfellows to the High Court of Foresters.
- 5. Discussion in the High Court of Foresters on old-age pensions.
- Cumberland County Council adopts a scheme of technical education for the county.
- Empress of Germany leaves Felixstowe to return to Germany.
- Czar and Czarina arrive in Finland, and are coldly received by the people.
- Tornado at Pityan, Hungary. Four persons killed.
- 6. Telegram received from Madras announcing the spread of famine in many districts in India.
- Railway collision and fire on West Shore Railway, near Fort Byron. Eleven killed, and nineteen injured.
- Adjournment of the Labour Commission for the holidays.
- Meeting in connection with University Extension movement held in Oxford. Discussion on how to obtain State aid for local organisers, and how local committees could best qualify themselves for the discharge of larger duties.
- 7. French Colonial Office receives telegram reporting the murder of some of the members of the Lake Tchad Expedition under M Crampel.

- 7. Annual Meeting of ordinary shareholders in Allsopp and Sons. Strong condemnation expressed of those responsible for the present disastrous financial state of the company. Report adopted after rejection of proposal to refer it back to the directors.
- Czar and Czarina return to St. Petersburg from Finland.
- Duke and Duchess of Fife visit Elgin to open Victoria School of Science and Art.
- 8. Deputations to King Alexander of Servia at St. Petersburg. Departure of the King for Vienna.
- Camp at Shoeburyness for Artillery Volunteers opens.
- 10. Congress of Hygiene holds its opening meeting at St. James's Hall.
- Eastbourne Town Council rejects Mr. Justice Hawkins' suggestion to allow the Salvation Army to have Sunday processions and bands in a certain part of the town, passing a resolution that action be taken against the Army.
- 11. French Court of Appeal confirms sentence of five years' imprisonment in the case of M. Turpin for the Melinite affair.
- Grand Duke Alexis, brother of the Czar, arrives in Paris.

MR. GEORGE REID.
(President of Royal Scottish Academy.)

- Kinz of Servia leaves Vienna and arrives at Ischl, where he is met by the Emperor of Austria.
- Final deliberations of the Conference for the conclusion of commercial treaties between Germany, Austria, Italy, and Switzerland in Vienna.
- Imperial ukase issued forbidding the export of rye and every kind of bran owing to the failure of crops in Russia.
- Sir Hector Langevin, Canadian Minister of Public Works, resigns in consequence of disclosures made before a Parliamentary Committee.
- 12. Grouse shooting commences.
- 13. The Senaputti and the Tongar general hanged at Manipur.
- Grand Duke Alexis leaves Paris for Vichy.
- Accident to a Brooklyn pleasure barge off Long Island. Fourteen people crushed to death by the blowing down of the hurricane deck.
- The cutter Ierna wins the Ryde Town Cup at the Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta.
- West Suffolk County Council adopts scheme applying nearly £2,000 of the local taxation to technical education.
- 14. Collapse of a bridge in Hayti. Eighty persons killed.
- French African Committee receives telegram confirming the news of the murder of M. Crampel and other members of the Lake Tchad Expedition.

- 14. Celebration of the 700th anniversary of the foundation of Berne commences.
- Funeral of Mr. James Russell Lowell at Mount Auburn, Mass.
- Geographical Congress at Berne concludes its sittings. Resolution passed inviting the Federal Council to summon an European Conference for the adoption of a common meridian.
- Prince Ferdinand arrives at Rustchuk.
- 15. German Emperor and Empress visit the North Sea and Baltic Canal, to inspect the work going on.
- King Alexander of Servia arrives in Paris with his father, ex-King Milan.
- Co-operative Festival at the Crystal Palace. A number of members of the Hygienic Congress visit Cambridge.
- 16. Socialist Congress opens in Brussels. Three Anarchists excluded.
- Czar-witch arrives in Moscow from Siberia.
- Celebration of the 700th Anniversary of the City of Berne.
- 17. Session of the French Councils - General opened.
- Serious railway accident outside Berne, in which fourteen persons were killed and many injured. Centenary festivities abandoned in consequence.
- Closing meeting of the Hygienic Congress held in London University.

MR. L. LAWSON.
(Society of Journalists.)

- French Naval training-ship, the Bougainville arrives in the Solent.
- 18. The Queen holds an Investiture at Osborne.
- Celebration of the Emperor Franz Joseph's sixty-first birthday throughout Austria and Hungary.
- British Mediterranean Squadron arrives at Villefranche from Naples.
- French naval cadets of the Bougainville visit the Naval Exhibition.
- Collapse of the roof of the pavilion in which the Welsh Bisteddod was being held in Swansea. One woman killed.
- 19. French Fleet arrives at Spithead and anchors in Osborne Bay.
- British Association meets at Cardiff. Inaugural address of the President, Dr. Huggins.
- Cyclone at Martinique. Over 300 persons killed.
- 20. Official visits exchanged between Admiral the Earl of Clanwilliam and the Duke of Connaught. The Queen receives the officers of the French Fleet at Osborne.
- British Association meets in sections at Cardiff.
- Annual meeting of the Institute of Journalists in Dublin.
- Holy Coat, of Trèves exhibited for the first time.
- New Radical Dutch Cabinet appointed.

21. The Queen reviews the French and English Fleets. Dinner and ball to the French officers at the Portsmouth Town Hall.

German Emperor and Empress witness sham fight of the German manoeuvring fleet at Flensburg. They leave Kiel for Berlin.

Members of the new Dutch Cabinet take the oaths of office from the Queen Regent.

Resolution passed by Socialist Congress to the effect that the military system was an outcome of the capitalist system, and must be abolished.

Battle of Aconcagua, between President Balmaceda's troops and the Congressionalists. Great losses.

22. Princess of Wales and her daughters arrive in Denmark.

Vessels of the French Squadron thrown open to the public. Banquet given by the Mayor to Admiral Gervais and the commanding officers of the French fleet.

Collapse of a five-storey building and fire in New York. More than 100 persons killed. Th. Procureur de la République at Boulogne notifies that all English bookmakers there and in Calais must leave the country, giving a fortnight's grace.

23. Fighting continued in Chilli. Battle of Vina del Mar. Success of the Congressionalists.

24. Queen leaves Osborne for Balmoral, steaming through the lines of English and French ships at Spithhead.

Visit of the French officers to Portsmouth Dockyard and Gunners School. Duke of Connaught's banquet to Admiral Gervais and principal officers at Government House. Dinner to French seamen in Portsmouth Town Hall.

The Czar and Czarina and their family arrive at Copenhagen.

Council of the British Association elect Sir Archibald Geikie President for next year.

25. Admiral Gervais gives a luncheon on board the Marengo to some British naval and military officers.

Report received from San Francisco that the Mikado contemplated annexing three of the volcanic islands in the Pacific.

26. French Fleet starts for Cherbourg. The Queen sends her portrait to Admiral Gervais as a memento of the visit.

Ukase published in St. Petersburg substituting Russian parcel and postal rates and regulations in Finland for those of the Grand Duchy.

Fighting continued near Valparaiso. Success of the insurgents.

Meeting of the British Association closes.

27. French Squadron arrives at Cherbourg.

28. Admiral Gervais receives the congratulations of the French Cabinet on the manner in which he had represented France on his visits.

French Government provisionally rescinds order for expulsion of bookmakers from Calais and Boulogne, allowing them to carry on business as formerly.

Battle outside Valparaiso between Balmaceda and Congressionalists. Valparaiso captured and entered by the insurgents.

Balmaceda's Generals, Barbosa and Alzoreca, killed. Balmaceda escapes. Junta installed in power.

Russian Military Manoeuvres commence.

29. President Carnot grants a million francs for the relief of the sufferers in Martinique.

Telegram received announcing that the Sultan has yielded to the demands of the Russian Government respecting the Dardanelles, which will be open to Russian vessels whilst closed to those of other nations.

30. Santiago captured and pillaged by the Congressionalists. Order restored at Valparaiso. Two hundred rioters shot.

Demonstrations of Derbyshire and North Wales miners at Chesterfield and Wrexham. Resolutions carried in favour of an Eight Hours Bill.

Italian Ministry in Council on the Budget for 1892-93 propose to reduce expenditure by 25,000,000 francs.

UTTERANCES, NOTABLE AND OTHERWISE.

August 2. Mr. Parnell at Thurles, on the attitude of Messrs. Dillon and O'Brien.

4. Mr. Morley at Stoneleigh, on Parish Councils. Mr. Radley, High Chief Ranger of the Forests, describes the position of the Order at the opening meeting in St. James's Hall.

7. M. Constans at Bagnères de Luchon states the intention of the French Government to bring in the Workmen's Pension Bill, and a Bill for the organisation of credit for agriculturists.

Lord Egerton at a Primrose League meeting at Knutsford expresses his belief that the Education Bill would strengthen the position of Voluntary Schools.

Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Dillon at Mallow, on Mr. Parnell's policy.

10. Mr. Balfour at a large Unionist meeting at Plymouth, replies to a vote of confidence passed in the Government, and speaks of its work in the past Session, and of the Local Government Bill for Ireland to be introduced next Session.

18. M. Stambuloff, to a deputation at Rustchuk requesting him to take measures against the immigration of Russian Jews into Bulgaria, replies that it was not for their country to shut their doors against the unfortunate victims of injustice.

Mr. Pound, Chairman of the London General Omnibus Company, states that he could not prophesy a favourable result for the current half-year owing to greatly increased charges for wages and provender, but was hopeful for the future.

25. Sir Edward Clarke at Lewisham on the five years' work of the Government.

27. Marquess of Lorne to a meeting of Conservatives and Liberal Unionists in Central Bradford, whose suffrage he means to seek at next election.

29. Lord H. Russell in opening a Liberal Club in Swansea, on the abolition of disabilities, religious and otherwise, by Liberalism.

PARLIAMENTARY RECORD.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

July 31. Railway Rates and Charges Bills read a third time and passed. Second reading of a Bill to give perpetuity leaseholders power to redeem their rents, if their landlords consented, moved by Lord Cadogan. Bill read a second time.

Aug. 3. Foreign Marriages Bill read a second time. Coinage Bill read a first time.

4. Second Reading of Women's Suffrage Bill moved by Lord Denman, negatived without a division.

Debate on clause in Elementary Education Bill rejected by the Commons as infringement of privilege. New clause submitted carrying out the objects of the other clause, but in different phraseology, and agreed to. Motion by Lord Salisbury that the Commons' reasons which led to the Amendment do not constitute a precedent agreed to. Foreign Marriages Bill passed through Committee and read a third time. Coinage Bill read second and third times. Commons Amendments to Irish Land Purchase Bill agreed to.

5. Appropriation Bill passed through all its stages. Royal assent given to various Bills. Parliament prorogued.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

July 31. The Chancellor of the Exchequer states that the Government accepts the decision of the Speaker that the Lords' new Clause in the Education Bill was a breach of the money privileges of the Commons, and would negative the Clause, substituting an Amendment in terms which would guard the privileges of the House. Committee of Supply. Scotch and Irish Education Votes agreed to.

Aug. 1. Report of Post Office Vote. Report of Supply concluded. Appropriation Bill read a first time.

3. Lords' Amendments to County Council Elections Bill agreed to. Appropriation Bill read a second time. Coinage Bill read a third time. Clergy Discipline (Immorality) Bill withdrawn.

4. Appropriation Bill through Committee. Sir John Gorst's annual statement as to the finances of India. Formal resolution agreed to after long debate. Lords' new clause in Education Bill agreed to. Betting and Loans (Infants) Bill withdrawn.

5. Appropriation Bill read a third time. Session ends.

BY-ELECTIONS.

August 12. WALSALL:
Alderman E. T. Holden (L) ... 4,899
Frank James (C)... ... 4,351

Lib. majority 538
In 1885:	In 1886:
(L) 5,112	Sir Chas. Foster
(C) 3,436	(L) was elected unopposed.
Lib. majority 1,677

August 26. LEWISHAM:
John Penn (C) ... 4,585
G. S. Warrington (L) ... 2,892

Con. majority 1,693
In 1885:	In 1886:
(C) 4,244	(C) 3,839
(L) 3,019	(L) 1,658
Con. majority 1,225
Con. majority 2,151

OBITUARY.

July 27. Thomas Finchett, newspaper illustrator.

Signor Franco Facio, Italian opera conductor.

28. Archbishop Ferdinand Salvador, Grand Duke of Tuscany, 56.

John Roland Reed, American actor, 83.

Jessie Fothergill, novelist, 40.

31. Earl of Westmorland, 66.

Léon Pelouze, French landscape painter.

Jules Gros, President of the Free Republic of Boumali, 62.

Prince Nicholas Borisovitch Coscopoff, Actual Privy Councillor and Marshall of the Russian Imperial Court, 64.

Aug. 1. Scott Yeomith Stokes, late Senior Roman Catholic Inspector of Schools, 70.

3. Leopold Dukes, Hebrew scholar, 82.

4. Earl of Dartmouth, 68.

Lieut.-General Francis Walker Drummond. Thomas Blackburn Baines, formerly editor of the Leeds Mercury, 59.

Thomas Cooke Foster, editor of the Weekly Times and Echo, 78.

Rev. William Howie Wylie, editor and proprietor of the Christian Leader, Glasgow.

7. Dr. James Henry Bennet. Henry Litolf, pianist and composer, 83.

10. Superintendent Hutchings, of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade.

11. George Henderson, Secretary to the Scottish Corporation.

George Lock, publisher, 60.

G. Higgins, balloonist, killed.

Dean Gilbert Elliot, of Bristol, 91.

Cunon Hawels, of Colchester, 85.

12. George Jones, proprietor of the New York Times.

Sir Thomas Fairburn, 63.

Rev. W. F. Reynolds, of East Molesey.

James Russell Lowell, 72.

13. Robina F. Hardy, Scottish novelist.

John Andrewson, 101.

William M'Bratney, Waterloo veteran, 93.

20. Lord President Inglis, Justice-General for Scotland, 61.

W. Dix Lewis, Treasurer of the Colonial Missionary Society.

James Johnston Greve, formerly M.P. for Greenock, 81.

21. James Martin, agriculturist, Duke of Cleveland, 88.

E. D. Pryce, Lord Lieutenant of Merionethshire, 72.

John Lord Bowes, founder of the British Colony at Grasses.

23. Canon W. Johnson, Prebendary of Bangor.

24. Cecil Balke, M.P., Postmaster-General, 83.

25. Olo Jumbo, Bonny chief.

The Greek Patriarch

26. General Whitcombe, Waterloo veteran, 97.

29. General Latino Coelho, Chief of the Portuguese Republican Party.

HER MAJESTY "LILY-OF-THE-SKY," QUEEN OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

BY SERENO E. BISHOP.

SIX days of westward steaming from San Francisco, 2,100 miles without fear of reef or rock, the horizon is broken by high rugged mountains that on the chart are mere dots. It is the civilised, hospitable, Americanised little kingdom, the other day Kalakaua's, now presided over by her gracious Majesty Liliuokalani.

This name is less intricate than it may look. Try this—Lil-lée-woke-a-lanny. Accent firmly the ee, and run the whole glibly off the tongue. It means Lily-of-the-Sky. The Queen has hitherto been commonly known by foreigners as Princess Lydia, or as Mrs. Dominis. She is past her fiftieth year, in fairly good health, of comely person, and pleasant address. Her husband, long known as Governor Dominis, but now taking rank as Prince Consort, is a prudent, agreeable gentleman of American birth and Honolulu mercantile education. John O. Dominis for many years held the office of Governor of Oahu. They have been married over thirty years, and have no children.

Mrs. Dominis has long held a prominent place in Honolulu society, associating from youth with the more cultivated ladies of the capital, among whom, like Queen Emma and the late Princess Pauahi Bishop, of honoured memory, she received her early education. She has a perfect use of English, a good literary and an especially good musical culture. The Queen's manner is peculiarly winning, her bearing noble and becoming, the latter a characteristic of Hawaiian royalty. Few persons were ever more stately and impressive than many of the old royal chiefs could be upon occasion.

Besides a small private fortune, the Princess, as heir presumptive, for many years enjoyed a stipend of £1,000. As Queen, she receives £4,000 per annum. A sumptuous palace is also maintained for the sovereign's use. Besides this, there is the life-use of the income of the crown lands, amounting to perhaps £15,000 per annum. These provisions may be regarded as ample for purposes of royal state and hospitality in so small a kingdom, although the late King could never make ends meet.

In religious affiliation, the Princess Lydia continued to adhere to the persuasion of the earlier generation of chiefs, declining to follow Queen Emma and Kalakaua in joining the Anglican fellowship. Like King Lunalilo and the Princess Pauahi, she retained her seat in the old Stone church connected with the American Mission. For some years she has been a member of the Woman's Board of Missions and an interested participant in their meetings. She has long been a very active and munificent patroness of the large Kawaiahae Seminary for training native girls, and greatly looked up to by teachers and pupils. The Queen gives evidence of having deeply at heart the moral welfare of her people. She has a large fund of good sense, which is now much needed to gain her people's confidence and to guide a somewhat determined will. Whether or not she will be able to modify certain royal prejudices to the needs of her very difficult position, she is quite unlikely to expose herself to ridicule, as her more showy brother repeatedly did.

HER MAJESTY LILIUOKALANI.

Liliuokalani has assumed the crown in possession of a much larger share of the confidence of her own people than did Kalakaua at his accession, or afterwards. She can hardly be said to be strong in the confidence of foreigners, although they are most kindly disposed towards her. With a sensible policy of conduct she may profoundly hostile to the Reform party, whose cabinet held the reins of power for nearly three years; nor was it strange if she was led to lend her countenance to an effort to recover by force what had been taken by force. Her Palama residence was reported to be the headquarters of the Wilcox conspiracy. On July 31st, 1889, a half-white, Robert W. Wilcox, educated at Government expense in an Italian military school, seized the palace yard and the Government House, seeking to restore the old corrupt system of palace government. This insurrection was suppressed in a few hours with the loss of a few lives of insurgents. Although, after abortive trials for conspiracy, Wilcox and several of his partisans were triumphantly chosen to the legislature by the native vote of Honolulu, and the Reform cabinet went out, yet none

PRINCESS KAIULANI, HEIR PRESUMPTIVE.

H.R.H. JOHN O. DOMINIS, PRINCE CONSORT.

yet establish herself in their confidence, having many qualities fitting her to do so. The serious distrust still felt by many of the whites is mainly due to her attitude after the Reform movement of 1887, and during the later reactionary proceedings of R. W. Wilcox in 1889.

A bit of recent history must come in here. Exasperated and alarmed by a series of profligate and dangerous proceedings of Kalakaua during the preceding year, a united movement of the foreigners on June 30th, 1887, exacted from the King certain changes in the constitution, divesting him of nearly all his direct personal control in the government, which was placed in the hands of the cabinet, subject only to the legislature. The Heir Presumptive, who was visiting England at the time, felt that her brother had been weak in surrendering the prerogatives of the crown. It was most natural that she should be of the attempted amendments to the constitution succeeded in the legislature. The Reform party broke down as a political combination, but their spirit prevails, and their work stands as the law of the kingdom.

To this constitution the Heir Presumptive was understood to be strenuously opposed, as a great wrong and damage to royal prerogative and right. Her accession to the throne was consequently anticipated with much distrust by foreigners. In January last she was acting as regent. The King's return from San Francisco was daily expected. Although known to be in precarious health, no intimation had reached the public of the extremely critical state of his malady. For his welcome home a quite lavish decoration of palace, streets, and landing-place was nearly complete. Suddenly, on the morning of January 29th, the well-known U.S. cruiser Charleston rounded Diamond Head, presenting a singular aspect, with yards aslant, the white hull draped with black, and the royal flag at half-mast. The admiral signalled the painful news to a sister ship in the port, which at once telephoned them to the Government House. The adornments of streets and palace quickly gave place to drapings of black. Much honest sorrow filled the city for the gay and good-natured king so suddenly removed.

The Regent was promptly attended by the Cabinet and the Privy Council. The disturbing question was, "Will not Liliuokalani decline to take the required oath to maintain the constitution?" This was the hope of the Wilcox faction, and the serious fear of the whites and of Court. A majority of the bench decided that in the absence of an explicit provision applying to the case of a new sovereign, the old practice must prevail, and she must appoint a new cabinet. This was done, and while her course accentuated her disposition to insist to the full upon her prerogatives, it is known that she had reliable advice that she was acting within the limits of the constitution.

Since then the Queen has in private avowed her serious purpose to stand by her oath. Wilcox and his associates believe this to be her intention, and are enraged thereby, and utter futile threats against her. There seems to be no reasonable doubt that she has the more thoughtful natives, who all perceived that such an attitude on her part would be revolutionary, and would create the most serious issues in the government. The Princess was well guided, and promptly solved the doubt by taking the oath and assuming the position of sovereign. Many doubted the sincerity of the act. Some may still doubt it, and look for the Queen to seize an early opportunity to reclaim the ancient powers of the crown. After the obsequies of the deceased king were completed, this apprehension was revived, by her insisting upon her right as a new sovereign to appoint a cabinet of her own choice. The constitution expressly debars the sovereign from removing the ministers except after a vote of want of confidence by the legislature. After a contest of three weeks, the cabinet referred the case to the Supreme honestly accepted the situation, and intends to abide by the constitution. It is not supposed that she feels entirely contented with its restrictions upon her power. She is perhaps not unlikely to exert influence to have those restrictions modified in the legal way, by two-thirds majorities of successive legislatures. She is credited with persistent determination, unlike her late brother, who was sure to succumb to vigorous pressure. But not being unscrupulous like him, her good sense and sound principles may be expected to keep her within the limits of her accepted obligations.

THE ROYAL PALACE, HONOLULU.

The present cabinet are men of moderate views, and likely to yield much to her personal wishes. Such fair weather days as their administrative abilities may be competent to meet are liable to be of transient continuance. The Queen will inevitably come under a more or less severe pressure of events to put herself into the hands of the most capable advisers obtainable. In any case a new legislature is to meet next May, and may be expected to take affairs into their own hands. What the political complexion of the majority will be is altogether uncertain. Probably no one party will be in the ascendency. Many causes, including the change in the throne, have increased the already existing confusion of parties.

So much, then, as to the Queen personally and politically. The royal family is now reduced to the person of the young lady recently proclaimed by the Queen as her heir presumptive, the Princess Kaiulani (Kye-you-lanny) Cleghorn. She is the only child of the late Princess Likelike (lik-ay-lik-ay), only sister of Liliuokalani.

Her father is the Hon. Archibald Cleghorn, long collector-general. Mr. Cleghorn has very judiciously placed his daughter under suitable instruction in England. She is a very attractive young lady of nearly sixteen. There are a few other persons of native or mixed blood, of more commerce impending in the immediate future which lends the most serious importance to the political relations of the Hawaiian kingdom. Every ship from the Atlantic crossing the Pacific to Asia will naturally sight the Hawaiian Islands, and every steamer will be likely to replenish her coal-bunkers at Honolulu. This fact will render the political condition and international relations of Hawaii of importance.

It is further seen upon the accompanying map that, although not upon the shortest or "great circle" route between California and China, Honolulu is practically a convenient port of call for steamers upon that line, as many of them now do call. This tendency will increase with the coming growth of Honolulu as a general calling and coaling station. It is also a natural port of call and supply for ships to China from Callao and Valparaiso. Honolulu is thus seen to be the great cross roads of the Pacific commerce. It is the only cross roads of the North Pacific, and the North Pacific will be the chief region of commerce. This port is wholly alone in its or less noble birth, but none of such merit or prominence as to be considered distinctly in the line of possible succession.

A HALF-WAY-HOUSE OF CALL.

A PROBABLE AMERICAN NAVAL STATION.

Obvious facts make it plain that the personal character and policy of any sovereign of the little Hawaiian kingdom must be of minor account in determining the course of affairs therein, confronting, as Hawaii does, the gigantic sweep and stress of commercial and political currents which are gathering around it. Indeed, it is only these which lend to this long isolated group any interest claiming present discussion in this review.

CENTRAL POSITION OF HAWAII.

The essential public interest attaching to Hawaii grows out of its central position in the commerce of the Pacific Ocean. Honolulu is exactly in the track of all steamers sailing to Australasia from San Francisco or Puget Sound. Even more precisely is Honolulu in the direct route of one part of that enormous traffic from Atlantic to Pacific ports which eagerly awaits the cutting of the Nicaragua Ship Canal to burst in an impetuous tide through the Isthmus. All the trade with China and Japan from American ports on the Atlantic must take the Nicaragua route. It is this large movement of ocean commanding position. It has absolutely no competitor. From the Marquesas to the Aleutians, Hawaii is the only land in that tremendous ocean expanse west of America where a ship can call within a space of 4,500 miles from San Francisco and 6,200 miles from Nicaragua. And the favourable position of Honolulu will be materially enhanced by the absolute necessity of using those islands as the intersecting point for telegraphic cables across the Pacific.

POLITICAL CHANGE FORESHADOWED.

Such extensive commercial change and development as is thus foreshadowed must involve serious political changes for Hawaii. The vast commerce about to traverse the Pacific will imperiously demand adequate shelter and protection at the common port of supply, Honolulu. A government must exist there so strong as to assure complete security from disturbers within or aggressors without. Such government must possess sufficient enterprise and ability to furnish and maintain the largest conveniences and facilities of every kind to the ships calling there. The great Hotel of the Pacific must be in charge of some party who knows "how to keep a hotel."

The certain coming preponderance of British shipping will tend to increase the number of British residents, and to enlarge British political influence in Hawaii. There will grow up a pressure, not now existing, for Great Britain to take possession of the Islands, in order to provide for the security of her growing commerce across the Pacific. At the present time the United States has a thorough and pleasant understanding with England that Hawaii is to be regarded as rightfully falling to the United States, rather than to any other power. Germany and France fully concur in this view. None of the great powers would, at the present time, think of interposing obstacles to any amount of domination the United States might seek to exercise in Hawaii. These are well ascertained facts.

AMERICAN POLICY IN HAWAII.

Successive steps have been taken by the United States towards securing a dominating influence in Hawaii. The first of these was the Treaty of Reciprocity with Hawaii, established in 1876 and still in force. By this treaty Hawaiian rice, and the lower grades of Hawaiian sugars, were admitted duty free into the United States. Under the late high tariff on sugar this was of immense advantage to Hawaii, she being able to realise from forty to fifty dollars a ton in San Francisco more than other countries could do. The product of sugar steadily increased from 13,000 tons in 1876 to 130,000 tons in 1890, thus placing Hawaii as eighth in the list of cane-growing countries. The total valuation of sugar plantations in 1890 was about 35,000,000 dols., of which nearly four-fifths are owned by American citizens, of whom a large number, having made fortunes in Hawaii, now reside in the United States. Under the working of this treaty for fifteen years, Hawaii has become, socially and commercially, to a predominant degree, an American colony. At the same time, through reciprocal free-trade in American products, a very large commerce has grown up between the Pacific Coast and the Hawaiian Islands, which derive thence their entire supplies of lumber, flour, potatoes, salmon, live hogs, mules, horses, with the multifarious products of orchard, dairy and farm, besides machinery, furniture, carriages, shoes, clothing, dry goods, hardware, etc. This trade is a leading item in the business of San Francisco. The large number of American ships engaged in it is a very important element.

CESSION OF PEARL HARBOUR.

In 1887, under President Cleveland's administration,

THE LATE KING, KALAKAUA.

supplementary provisions to the Treaty were agreed to by both parties, whereby the duration of the Treaty was extended, and duties were remitted upon a larger number of products, in return for which Kalakaua ceded to the United States the exclusive right to establish and fortify a naval station in the Hawaiian Islands. Pearl Harbour was designated as the station. The continuance of this exclusive right was limited by the duration of the treaty.

In 1889, Mr. Blaine, dissatisfied with the imperfect cession of Pearl Harbour, and with the very limited influence of the United States in Hawaii, proposed to make the treaty permanent; to create absolute free trade between the two countries in all articles except intoxicants; to make the cession of a naval station permanent as well as exclusive; and to pledge to Hawaii full participation in any bounties to be given to American producers of sugars. In short, Hawaii, in all its commercial and productive interests, was to enjoy all the privileges of one of the United States.

In return for these privileges, besides the cession of Pearl Harbour, Mr. Blaine asked a pledge from Hawaii to enter into no treaty engagements with other powers, without the full previous knowledge of the United States. At his request another provision was appended to the draft of the treaty forwarded to Honolulu by Mr. Carter, to the effect that the United States Government should have the right to land military forces in Hawaii whenever deemed necessary for the preservation of order.

The Cabinet submitted the proposed treaty to the king with the clause about the landing of troops expressly disapproved. Kalakaua was, however, anxious to defeat the Reform party in the coming election, and communicated the offensive clause to the Reactionary leaders, who effectively used it to fire the native mind. They hoped to secure such a majority of Reactionary members in the Legislature as to put in a new Cabinet who should join the king in resisting the old Constitution, or, failing that, should proceed with reactionary amendments in the legal method. In that result they failed for lack of a united majority, although scoring some success otherwise.

CANADA DEFEATS MR. BLAINE'S NEW TREATY.

While England is comparatively indifferent to American domination in Hawaii, it is quite otherwise with Canada, which is habitually sensitive about her great neighbour's ascendancy. While the negotiation of the new treaty was pending, Mr. Attorney-General Ashford, who was a Canadian, got leave of absence to visit home. While in Canada he was in close conference with Sir John Macdonald, and became a special guest of President Stephen, of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Upon his return to his post, he at once astonished his colleagues in the Cabinet by throwing his utmost influence with the king against them and the treaty, with the result that the king refused to agree to what Mr. Blaine had been at so much pains to arrange. The reason subsequently given in the legislature by Mr. Ashford for his course, was that to surrender the right to make treaties with other powers without United States supervision was a surrender of independence unworthy in itself, and especially detrimental as precluding some very probable advantageous commercial arrangements with Canada, which he would communicate upon suitable occasion. The Canadian propositions are still unknown to the public; but Canada secured the defeat of Mr. Blaine's new treaty, by refusing which, Hawaii has forfeited her right to share the valuable bounties given to American sugar growers.

AMERICA AVERSE TO ANNEXATION OF HAWAII.

According to present information any movement towards the annexation of Hawaii as a State or as a Territory would be unpopular with the American people, and would encounter a great weight of opposition in the Senate. At the Islands, a pleasant ideal, and one much and hopefully entertained, has been that of a permanently independent State under the friendly protection of the Great Powers unitedly, or of the United States singly. America has hitherto been to Hawaii a friend of unexampled generosity and indulgence. But they may most naturally distrust any respect being paid to Hawaii in time of war, however capable and efficient the little kingdom may prove itself to be in time of peace. It will not be strange if an early date witnesses a change of policy when efforts to secure a mere lodgment for naval supply and security will be exchanged for more positive action. The present rapid enlargement of the United States navy points strongly in that direction.

PEARL HARBOUR.

Honolulu possesses a very accessible and excellent harbour, but of small dimensions. In the close vicinity of the city, however, is "Pearl Harbour," which in security, area, and general convenience, belongs to the class of larger and better havens, like New York and Rio Janeiro. Its entrance is as yet unfortunately closed to large vessels by coral obstructions in the outer passage through the barrier reef one mile from the shore. After passing this, vessels enter a kind of deep river nearly half a mile wide, bordered by low coral bluffs. About two miles inland this river opens into wide reaches or lochs, which are separated by islands and peninsulas. In these riverways and lochs are about 1,500 acres of water, of from four to fifteen fathoms, which is in many places close to the coral bluffs, so that the largest ship might run a plank ashore. In the upper reaches there is an equal amount of water, shoaling from four fathoms to nothing. The least depth in the passage is thirteen feet. To excavate the whole to a depth of thirty feet, with a width of five hundred, for fifteen hundred feet in length, wholly through soft coral or sand, is estimated to cost £100,000 as a minimum. Pearl Harbour being the only secure and spacious harbour between North America and the vicinity of Asia, it is clear that its occupancy by the United States will admit of no delay as the cutting of the Isthmus approaches. Some prominent central part of the harbour will doubtless be occupied by the naval station. The excavation of the bar with proper appliances need take less than two years. The prevailing trade-winds blow directly athwart the passage, so that ships sail out or in on a free wind. The whole region, like all parts of the islands, is perfectly healthy, without miasm or malaria of any sort.

PHYSICAL FEATURES.

There are eight inhabited islands, occupying a line of about three hundred and fifty miles beginning at Hawaii and running west-north-west to Kauai and Niihau. They receive a cool ocean-current from the northeast, with the trade-winds from the east-northeast.

At the time of discovery in 1779, there were undoubtedly 300,000 natives in the group, and not improbably 400,000, as estimated by Cook. It is quite possible that with the skilful and patient culture of the Chinese, one million persons might subsist upon the products of the soil. The population of the group was, last December, about ninety thousand, since when have been added several thousand labourers direct from Japan. The following is the result of the recent census:—

Nationalities.	Males.	Females.	Totals.
Pure Hawaiian ... ..	18,630	16,390	35,020
Mixed do. ... ..	4,460	4,080	8,540
Foreigners, Hawaiian born ...	3,860	3,550	7,410
Americans ... ..	1,320	650	1,970
British ... ..	980	360	1,340
Germans ... ..	515	185	700
Scandinavians ... ..	145	65	210
French ... ..	50	25	75
Portuguese ... ..	4,680	3,650	8,330
Chinese ... ..	13,790	770	14,560
Japanese ... ..	9,700	2,080	11,780
Other races ... ..	200	25	225
Totals ... ..	58,330	31,830	90,160

Eliminating the 11,780 Japanese, the 14,560 Chinese, and the 225 of various races, chiefly heathen, as not being properly members of the body politic, we have left a population of 63,595, who belong to Christendom, and possess much of the best ethical, social, and political ideas of Christendom; 35,020, or over 55 per cent., are pure Hawaiians; 8540, or 13·4 per cent., are mixed Hawaiians, mostly sharing white blood, but partly Chinese, and nearly all writing and speaking English. The remaining 20,035 are mostly of pure white blood, constituting over 31 per cent. of citizens proper to the kingdom. If we add to these the people of three-fourths white blood, whose tastes and tendencies mainly follow those of their white kindred, we find fully one-third of the people to be white or Caucasian. Comparing the males of each class, we find nearly one-half the males to be white. Since, however, on account of illiteracy, large numbers of Portuguese lack the franchise, the number of white voters is far below that of the natives.

CAUSES OF DEPOPULATION.

Meantime the race has been rapidly decreasing, and continues to do so. The causes of decrease are obvious enough, but difficult to reach. A large contributor to it has been defective social morality. A chief cause and

It is also pleasant to learn that liquors have been excluded from the royal entertainments. Drunkenness is a great bane of Hawaiians. It has greatly increased of late years, royal influence having secured the repeal of the prohibitory laws relating to supplying liquors to natives. With the present royal disapproval of Kahunas and drunkenness, the outlook for an increase of the native race assumes aspects of hope.

LEADING PUBLIC MEN.

It is somewhat difficult to specify men of distinctive leadership in public affairs. During the constant and capricious changes in cabinets under the late king, and the later confusion in political parties nearly every pro-

PRINCESS BERNICE PANATI BISHOP.

HON. CHAS. R. BISHOP.
(President of the Board of Education.)

promoter of other lethal influences is heathen superstition. The Kahunas, who are sorcerers and medicine-men, dealing in deadly witchcraft and its antidotes of propitiation of demons by incantations and sacrifices, are ubiquitous and busy, to the ruin of life and health and the subversion of moral influences. The labours of the numerous physicians employed by the Board of Health for the natives are mostly nullified by the influence of the Kahunas, the fear of whom rests heavily upon the people. This poisonous influence is far greater now than it was thirty years ago, before Kamehameha V. revived and organized Kahuna practice. It is most gratifying to record that the Queen excluded heathen exercises from the Palace during the late obsequies, and that she banished them during her recent royal progress. Considering how saturated the Palace circles have been with this element, Her Majesty has shown remarkable decision.

minent man in the country has either been a cabinet minister or has had the position offered to him.

The Hon. Charles R. Bishop has long been eminent in public service. He is head of the powerful banking house of Bishop and Co. Without children, and somewhat advanced in life, he is quietly administering his own estate in a manner that greatly commends itself for wise and thoughtful munificence. His last gift was one of £10,000 to Oahu College, in view of its Jubilee Anniversary. Mr. Bishop's counsel is held in the highest regard in all public affairs. He has long been the President of the Board of Education.

Lorrin A. Thurston, grandson of the pioneer missionary Thurston, is a gifted young lawyer of thirty-five, a leader in the Honolulu bar and in politics. He took a prominent part in the Reform movement, and was practically at the head of the Cabinet of 1889-90.

LORRIN A. THURSTON.

He gives more promise of future prominence than any other man in Honolulu, although he failed to keep the Reform party together, a task calling for more of the peculiar gifts and graces of the politician than he has yet acquired. He is a man of the purest character, and of great industry.

HONOLULU CITY.

Honolulu is a town of about 24,000 inhabitants. It is so much embowered in trees that most of the houses are hidden from a distant view. The business blocks are substantial, but only two stories. The dwellings, including many fine mansions, are scattered over great spaces of ground. The lawns and gardens are often exquisitely beautiful. Water is supplied by the government pipes from mountain streams. It is probable that Artesian wells with steam pumps will be the main source of supply for the future. There are some fine avenues, but in the more central parts the streets are very narrow. There is no municipal government, all public works being conducted by the central government. Good roads extend for a few miles out of town, and vehicles can drive nearly around the island, a circuit of over a hundred miles. The streets are lighted by arc lights.

Transportation is afforded by some twelve miles of tramway, with American cars. Hacks ply at about one shilling a mile. The most interesting rides for visitors are—first, Pali, six miles, suddenly opening a grand panorama from a height of 1,200 feet; secondly, by rail around Pearl Lochs, to a sugar plantation of the first class; thirdly, up Punch Bowl, a singular height in the centre of the city, of five hundred feet, with exquisite panoramic views on all sides, like an Eiffel tower; fourth, to Waikiki Beach and Kapiolani Park, four miles by tramcar. These are the favourite seaside and bathing resorts of Honolulu.

Domestic architecture is characterised by broad verandahs and absence of chimneys. The average dwelling is of one story, and often has a large Lanai (lah-nye) or covered area open on one or more sides, a half out-door room, for lounging. Excessive heat is unknown, day or night. Honolulu abounds in noble trees, gorgeous flowers, and masses of brilliant-coloured foliage. The palms are magnificent, especially the royal palms. At Waikike, the long dark sinuous stems of the ancient cocoa palms stand in acres of groves, their huge fronds swaying far aloft. The chief objects of a tourist's interest are the live crater of Kilauea and the extinct one of Haleakala. The former is reached by steamer and stage. An advertisement of a new hotel at Kilauea concludes as follows:—

By taking this ticket an entire week may be spent at the Volcano, in a cool, bracing climate, with invigorating steam sulphur baths at hand, and the greatest Volcano on earth in constant action in the front yard of the hotel.

A rather large front yard. You look out of the front door into a black pit five hundred feet deep and nine miles in circuit. In this front yard, two miles away, lies another and inner pit, of 150 acres, smoking like Gomorrah. This is called Halema'uma'u (Hally-mah-oo-mah-oo) or Fern-hut. After lunch you descend to spend the evening in Old Red-Hot's headquarters, where the lady of the place, "Madam Pele," will entertain you with a fearsome lake of belching, plunging fire-waves, and where you may peer down white-hot shafts into under-running rivers of lava. About nine you trudge back with lanterns over the rugged lava-knobs, and climb the wooded height to supper and a bed.

The summit of Haleakala, on Maui, at 10,000 feet, is reached with facility on horseback from the fine sugar plantations below. It is extinct, but evidently active not long ago. This crater is seven miles long and 2,500 feet deep, a vast treeless aerial Yosemite. On account of its accessibility and exquisite clearness of atmosphere, the summit is nearly certain to become the site of a first-class astronomical observatory.

The islands abound in the most varied and noble scenery. The steamers are comfortable. As tourists multiply and country hotels increase, Hawaii, with its mild, glorious climate, will become the choicest resort for invalids and seekers of comfort.

Divine Acrostics in the Book of Esther.—Dr. Pierson, writing in the Homiletic Review for August on the "Hiding of God in the Book of Esther," calls attention to a discovery by a distinguished Biblical scholar, Dr. E. W. Bullinger, at the Congress of Orientalists lately held in Stockholm.

The attentive reader of this book has been able to see in it the evidence of Divine interposition, especially at the turning points of the history, and overruling for good the devices of the wicked; but while the Persian king is mentioned or referred to 190 times, his name twenty-nine times, and his kingdom twenty-six times, God's name does not once appear. A closer examination, however, shows the name Jehovah inwoven or inlaid in the most ingenious manner in the very structure of the book, and we design to call the attention of the readers of the Homiletic Review to this remarkable discovery.

Dr. Bullinger has awakened much interest among Orientalists by the disclosure of the fact that the name of Jehovah is found no less than four times in this book, and is introduced in the form of an acrostic; and, what is more notable, we are impressed that this is no accident, for the four cases in which this occurs mark the turning points in the history.

CHARACTER SKETCH: SEPTEMBER.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL:

HIS MESSAGE, AND HOW IT HELPED ME.

O Lowell! I first gave to thee
My boyhood's love and loyalty.
My youth took fire at thy words,
And thou my manhood's spirit stirred
To lofty faith and noble trust.

—MINOT J. SAVAGE.

"ELMWOOD," THE POET'S HOME.

WHEN James Russell Lowell died on August 12th, the greatest of contemporary Americans passed away.

He had no compeer since Emerson died; he has left no successor. On this side the Atlantic there still linger veterans not unequal to him whom we have just lost. But neither on one side of the Atlantic nor on the other is there any poet left us whose verse is instinct with so much inspiration, or one who has in him so much of the seer of these latter days.

Out rushed his song, like molten iron glowing
To show God sitting by the humblest hearth.
With calmest courage he was ever ready
To teach that action was the birth of thought.

And still his deathless words of light are swimming
Serene throughout the great deep infinite
Of human soul, unwaning and undimming,
To cheer and guide the mariner by night.

THE MAN AND HIS MESSAGE.

It is idle for me to try to do a Character Sketch of such a man. He was manysided. Those who knew him intimately have written much, and will yet write more, about the personal characteristics, about his genial humour, of his wide and varied culture, and also, no doubt, about his after-dinner speaking, and his services as diplomatist at Madrid and at London. But all these things are but as the mere carving on the pediment of the Pharos from which streams far and wide over the troubled and turbid waters the light of his Divine message. This man was one of the prophets of the nineteenth century—the Milton of an epoch which had in Lincoln no unworthy representative of Oliver Cromwell. That was and is his supreme significance, and it would almost favour of the profane to devote this article to anything but a humble and reverent attempt to explain, so far as I can, what his message is and wherein, from my own experience, consists its helpfulness to the present generation.

A TRIBUTE OF GRATITUDE.

In what I write there is an autobiographic note that is not to be avoided, for this article is simply the fervent outpouring of the gratitude of one among the thousands whom he has helped—a thanksgiving and an experience rather than a criticism or a biography. In some of the critical moments of my life I found in Lowell help such as I found in none other outside Carlyle's "Cromwell" and Holy Writ. And it may be that I can best help others to find help there by telling faithfully and gratefully how in Lowell's verse and prose I found that which I sorely needed, and which became an abiding possession and a strength for evermore.

I was little more than a boy of fifteen when first I felt the inspiration of Lowell's word. In those days, which seem far away down the vista of nearly thirty years, I chanced at a country house upon a yellow-backed shilling edition of the "Biglow Papers," lying side by side with a well-thumbed copy of Artemus Ward, as a specimen of American humour. But it was not the humour of the delicious verse that made a dint on my life. In those days the ambitions of my boyhood took anything but a journalistic bent. My father used sometimes to quote Thomas Binney's saying that if the Apostle Paul were alive to-day he would edit a daily paper; but most editors seemed to have but little of the Pauline inspiration and none of the glowing enthusiasm of humanity calculated to kindle the imagination or stir the sympathy of a lad full of daydreams from the poets and high imaginings drawn from the traditions of the Puritan and Covenanting struggles of the seventeenth century.

I. HIS IDEAL OF JOURNALISM.

It was not till several years later that I ever bethought myself of journalism as a profession; but I think I can trace the first set of my mind in a journalistic direction to reading the preface to the Pious Editor's Creed, which, as many of my readers may never have seen it, I make no scruple about quoting almost entire:—

I know of no so responsible position as that of the public journalist. The editor of our day bears the same relation to his time that a clerk bore to the age before the invention of printing. Indeed, the position which he holds is that which the clergyman should hold even now. But the clergyman chooses to walk off to the extreme edge of the world, and to throw such seed as he has clear over into that darkness which he calls the Next Life. As if next did not mean nearest, and as if any life were nearer than that immediately present one which boils and eddies all around him at the caucus, the ratification meeting, and the polls! Who taught him to exhort men to prepare for eternity, and for some future era of which the present forms no integral part? The furrow which Time is even now turning runs through the Everlasting, and in that must he plant, or nowhere. Yet he would fain believe and teach that we are going to have more of eternity than we have now. This going of his is like that of the auctioneer, on which gone follows before we have made up our minds to bid—in which manner, not three months back, I lost an excellent copy of Chappelow on Job. So it has come to pass that the preacher, instead of being a living force, has faded into an emblematic figure at christenings, weddings, and funerals. Or, if he exercises any other function, it is as keeper and feeder of certain theologic dogmas, which, when occasion offers, he unkennels with a staboy! "to bark and bite as 'tis their nature to," whence that reproach of odium theologicum has arisen.

Meanwhile, see what a pulpit the editor mounts daily, sometimes with a congregation of fifty thousand within reach of his voice, and never so much as a nodder, even, among them. And from what a Bible can he choose his text—a Bible which needs no translation, and which no priestcraft can shut and clasp from the laity—the open volume of the world, upon which, with a pen of sunshine or destroying fire, the inspired Present is even now writing the annals of God! Methinks the editor who should understand his calling, and be equal thereto, would truly deserve that title which Homer bestows upon princes. He would be the Moses of our nineteenth century; and whereas the old Sinai, silent now, is but a common mountain stared at by the elegant tourist and crawled over by the hammering geologist, he must find his tables of the new law here among factories and cities in this Wilderness of Sin (Numbers xxxiii. 12) called Progress of Civilisation, and be the captain of our Exodus into the Canaan of a truer social order.

THE ORIGIN OF "THE NEW JOURNALISM."

I feel to-day, as I transcribe these words, as if all my life long, ever since I read them, I had been doing little else but trying as best I could to circulate and propagate the ideas contained in this preface. All that is real and true in what Matthew Arnold called the "New Journalism," which he said I had invented, is there in germ. That great ideal of the editor as "the Captain of our Exodus into the Canaan of a truer social order" still glows like a pillar of fire amid the midnight gloom before the journalists of the world. But, alas! it may still be asked, as it was when the Rev. Homer Wilbur preached the sermon which led the editor of the Jaalam Independent Bhunderbuss unaccountably to absent himself from the meeting-house, of the thousands of mutton-loving shepherds who edit our newspapers, "How many have even the dimmest perception of their immense power and the duties consequent thereon? Here and there haply one. Nine hundred and ninety-nine labour to impress upon the people the great principles of Tweedledum, and other nine hundred and ninety-nine preach with equal earnestness the gospel according to Tweedledee."

HOW I FIRST GOT LOWELL'S POEMS.

It was three or four years before I again felt the kindling touch of Mr. Lowell's genius. Like many other youths in those days, I was in the habit of competing for the modest prizes offered for essays in the Boys' Own Magazine, which was then published by S. O. Beeton.

I wrote several, always under the name of W. T. Silcoates, and only succeeded once in gaining a prize. My solitary success was an essay on Oliver Cromwell, in compiling which I took a great deal more pains than in writing any book that I have since published, so at least it seems to me looking back twenty years and more, and I certainly enjoyed much more keenly that first triumph than any literary successes achieved in later years. The prize was one guinea, which had to be taken out in books published by the proprietors of the Boys' Own Magazine. I remember, as well as if it were yesterday, carefully going through the little catalogue making up my guinea's worth, and after selecting books valued at twenty shillings, I chose "The Poetical Works of James Russell Lowell" to make up the guinea. That little volume, with its green paper cover, lies before me now, thumbed almost to pieces, under-scored, and marked in the margin throughout, and inside there is written, "To W. T. Silcoates, with Mr. Beeton's best wishes." It was one of "Beeton's Companion Poets," and bore on its cover "Books of Worth." With the exception of the little copy of Thomas à Kempis, which General Gordon gave to me as he was starting for Khartoum, it is the most precious of all my books. It has been with me everywhere. In Russia, in Ireland, in Rome, in prison, it has been a constant companion.

II. HIS PASSION FOR HUMAN BROTHERHOOD.

That little book reached me at a somewhat critical time. I was saturated with the memories of the Puritans, and filled with a deep sense of the unworthiness of my old literary ambitions. My health, impaired by overstudy, affected my eyes, and for some terrible months I was haunted by the consciousness of a possible blindness. I had to give up reading at night-time and in the train, and by way of occupation I committed to memory long screeds of verse—Byron, Longfellow, Coleridge, and Campbell being special favourites. All chance of literary success seemed to fade and disappear with my dimming sight, and I looked out on life in a sadder and more serious mood than any I had formerly entertained. It was then that I came upon Mr. Lowell's little-known poem, "Extreme Unction," which I find marked in pencil—"This poem changed my life."

Go! leave me, Priest; my soul would be,
Alone with the consoler, Death;
Far sadder eyes than thine will see
This crumbling clay yield up its breath;
These shrivelled hands have deeper stains
Than holy oil can cleanse away,
Hands that have plucked the world's coarse gains
As erst they plucked the flowers of May.

Call, if thou canst, to these gray eyes
Some faith from youth's traditions wrung;
This fruitless husk which dustward dries
Has been a heart once, has been young;
On this bowed head the awful Past
Once laid its consecrating hands;
The Future in its purpose vast
Paused, waiting my supreme commands.

But look! whose shadows block the door:
Who are those two that stand aloof?
See! on my hands this freshening gore
Writes o'er again its crimson proof!
My looked-for death-bed guests are met;
There my dead Youth doth wring its hands,
And there, with eyes that goad me yet,
The ghost of my Ideal stands!

God bends from out the deep and says,
"I gave thee the great gift of life;

Wast thou not called in many ways?
 Are not my earth and heaven at strife?
 I gave thee of my seed to sow,
 Bringest thou me my hundredfold?"
 Can I look up with face aglow,
 And answer, "Father, here is gold?"
 I have been innocent; God knows
 When first this wasted life began,
 Not grape with grape more kindly grows,
 Than I with every brother-man:
 Now here I gasp; what lose my kind,
 When this fast ebbing breath shall part?
 What bands of love and service bind
 This being to the world's sad heart?

Christ still was wandering o'er the earth
 Without a place to lay His head;
 He found free welcome at my hearth,
 He shared my cup and broke my bread:
 Now, when I hear those steps sublime,
 That bring the other world to this,
 My snake-turned nature, sunk in slime,
 Starts sideways with defiant hiss.

Upon the hour when I was born,
 God said, "Another man shall be,"
 And the great Maker did not scorn
 Out of Himself to fashion me;
 He sunned me with His ripening looks,
 And Heaven's rich instincts in me grew,
 As effortless as woodland nooks
 Send violets up and paint them blue.

Yes, I who now, with angry tears,
 Am exiled back to brutish clod,
 Have borne unquenched for four score years,
 A spark of the eternal God;
 And to what end? How yield I back
 The trust for such high uses given?
 Heaven's light hath but revealed a track
 Whereby to crawl away from heaven.

Men think it is an awful sight
 To see a soul just set adrift
 On that drear voyage from whose night
 The ominous shadows never lift;
 But 'tis more awful to behold
 A helpless infant newly born,
 Whose little hands unconscious hold
 The keys of darkness and of morn.

Mine held them once; I flung away
 Those keys that might have open set
 The golden sluices of the day,
 But clutch the keys of darkness yet;
 I hear the reapers singing go
 Into God's harvest; I, that might
 With them have chosen, here below
 Grope shuddering at the gates of night.

O glorious Youth, that once was mine!
 O high Ideal! all in vain
 Ye enter at this ruined shrine
 Whence worship ne'er shall rise again;
 The bat and owl inhabit here,
 The snake nests in the altar-stone,
 The sacred vessels moulder near,
 The image of the God is gone.

REPENTANCE AND REMORSE.

It may seem somewhat fantastic that a lad of eighteen should have appropriated to himself the reproaches which the poet placed in the mouth of an octogenarian. But youth is a rare self-torturer. With my enfeebled health and failing eyesight, an oppressive sense of having lived for myself and my own ambitious daydreams, it did not seem unnatural then; it seemed only too terribly real. I don't think any four lines ever printed went into my life so deeply as these:—

Now here I gasp; what lose my kind,
 When this fast-ebbing breath shall part?
 What bands of love and service bind
 This being to the world's sad heart?

These questions used to ring in my ears night and day. And the only answer that came was Richard's bitter death cry—

There is no creature loves me,
 And if I die no one will pity me.

All this, I dare say, was very morbid. Probably few lads of eighteen had more relatives and friends to love and pity him. I was one of a large and singularly united family, and I had my Sunday-school class besides. But there was that guilty sense of having lived for myself, of having had my ideal of life on the plane of personal literary success, and I felt I deserved to feel all that Lowell's octogenarian felt.

INSPIRATION AND HOPE.

At the same time this remorseful horror would sometimes abate somewhat, probably owing to occasional better health, and then an immense inspiration thrilled me from the lines:—

On this bowed head the awful Past
 Once laid its consecrating hands;
 The Future in its purpose vast
 Paused, waiting my supreme commands.

If I recovered and my eyesight did not fail, perhaps, after all, I might yet live to better purpose. To what purpose? The answer came in the next verse:—

God bends from out the deep, and says,
 "I gave thee the great gift of life;
 Wast thou not called in many ways?
 Are not my heaven and earth at strife?"

The idea that everything wrong in the world was a divine call to use your life in righting it sank deep into my soul. And there, in the darkness and the gloom of that time of weakness and trial, I put away from me, as of the Evil One, all dreams of fame and the literary ambitions on which I had fed my boyhood. And resolutely set myself there and then to do what little I could, where I was, among those who surrounded me, to fulfil "the trust for such high uses given." It was one of the decisive moments in my life. Since then I can honestly say that I have never regarded literary or journalistic success as worth a straw, excepting in so far as it enabled me to strike a heavier blow in the cause of those for whom I was called to fight.

A PASSION FOR HELPFUL FELLOWSHIP.

The yearning for helpful fellowship with my fellows grew under Lowell's influence to control my life. Living in a village where you knew every one, and every one knew you, it was almost with a sense of positive pain I would find myself in a great city, and feel that of all the hundred thousands around me I did not know one. To meet and mingle with hurrying myriads and to know that of all those multitudes you knew none, had helped none, and that not a human being cared in the least whether you lived or died, maddened into despair or broke your heart in solitude, was appalling to me. There seemed something unnatural about it. How well I remember, night after night, looking down from the Manors railway station over the house-crowded valley at the base of All Saints' Church, Newcastle, which towered above them all, all black and empty, like the vast sepulchre of a dead God, and thinking that behind every lighted window which gleamed through the smoky darkness there was at least one human being whose heart was full of all the tragedies of love and hate, of life and of death, and yet between them and me what a great gulf was fixed! How could bands of love and service be woven between these innumerable units so as to make us all one brotherhood once more? There they sat by lamp and candle—so near, and yet, in all the realities of their existence, as far apart as the fixed stars. And there grew up in me, largely under Lowell's influence, a feeling as if there was something that blasphemed God in whatever interposed a barrier impeding the free flow of the helpful sympathy and confident intercourse between man and man.

LIKE THE BLAST OF A TRUMPET.

But how could anything be done? It was hard to say, beyond endeavouring, each in his own sphere, to be as helpful, as lovingkind, and as sympathetic as he knew how. Yet how trivial seemed everything you could do; how infinitesimal the utmost that any individual could achieve! But when in this desponding mood, Lowell's memorial verses to W. Lloyd Garrison inspired me as with the blast of a trumpet:—

"BEAVER BROOK," NEAR ELMWOOD.

In a small chamber, friendless and unseen,
Toiled o'er his types one poor, unlearned young man;
The place was dark, unfurnished, and mean;—
Yet there the freedom of a race began.

Help came but slowly; surely no man yet
Put lever to the heavy world with less;
What need of help? He knew how types were set,
He had a dauntless spirit, and a press.

Such earnest natures are the fiery pith,

The compact nucleus, round which systems grow!
Mass after mass becomes inspired therewith,
And whirls impregnate with the central glow.

O Truth! O Freedom! how are ye still born
In the rude stable, in the manger nursed!
What humble hands unbar those gates of morn
Through which the splendours of the New Day burst?

What! shall one monk, scarce known beyond his cell,
Front Rome's far-reaching bolts, and scorn her frown?
Brave Luther answered YES; that thunder's swell
Rocked Europe, and discharmed the triple crown.

Whatever can be known of earth we know,
Sneered Europe's wise men in their snail-shells curled;
No! said one man in Genoa, and that No
Out of the dark created this New World.

Who is it will not dare himself to trust?
Who is it hath not strength to stand alone?
Who is it thwarts and bilks the inward MUST?
He and his works, like sand, from earth are blow

Men of a thousand shifts and wiles, look here!
See one straightforward conscience put in pawn
To win a world; see the obedient sphere
By bravery's simple gravitation drawn!

Shall we not heed the lesson taught of old,
And by the Present's lips repeated still,
In our own single manhood to be bold,
Fortressed in conscience and impregnable will?

We stride the river daily at its spring,
Nor, in our childish thoughtlessness, foresee,
What myriad vassal streams shall tribute bring,
How like an equal it shall greet the sea.

O small beginnings, ye are great and strong,
Based on a faithful heart and weariless brain!
Ye build the future fair, ye conquer wrong,
Ye earn the crown, and wear it not in vain.

That is good healthy teaching, which helps to stiffen the backbone and encourage one to persevere. It is also a stepping-stone that brings us into the heart of the great Abolitionist campaign, which practically saved the soul of the American people.

III. THE CHRISTIANITY FOR OUR DAY.

Mr. Lowell was a Puritan by heredity, and the moral fervour of the men of the Mayflower was wrought into the inmost fibre of his being. But his Puritanism was a living force applied to the living issues of to-day. That is what constitutes his peculiar helpfulness to the present generation. There is a constant tendency in creeds to petrify. The living faith of one century becomes a mere sarcophagus in the next. To prevent this only one specific is known to man, and that is to be constantly in campaign against the evils of the world. One of the great uses of the devil is to keep the Church from the lethargy that ends in death. If there is but a sufficiently resolute warfare kept up against the wrongs, the abuses, and the miseries of the world, the living Spirit will perpetually renew, reshape, and revolutionise the methods adopted to achieve success. The Puritan revolt against ritual, the Quaker revolt against sacraments, were natural and necessary. But the same law of combat led in time to a revolt against the worship of the doctrine of the Puritans. Men are always prone to bow down and worship their nets and their bows and their spears, forgetting that they were fashioned not to be worshipped but to be used. It is not necessary to be disrespectful to the discarded rites or the suppressed doctrines. It is not necessary to prove that they are false; it is only obvious that they have become obsolete. To hear some good people talk you would imagine that it was necessary to denounce the inventor of the bow because Armstrong forges rifled cannon. The bow was very good in its day, but no degree of respect for the first bowmen would justify our substituting bows and arrows for the magazine rifle.

CHRISTIANITY OUT OF GEAR.

Mr. Lowell's poems are all instinct with help in this direction. There is nothing in his writings that repudiates or disowns any of the vital doctrines of the men of the Mayflower. He reverences his spiritual ancestry. But he refuses in his own phrase to make their creed his jailer, and protests against making

Their truth our falsehood, thinking that hath made us free,
Hoarding it in mouldy parchments, while our tender spirits flee
The rude grasp of that great Impulse which drove them across the sea.

The great, the central doctrine of the Christian religion, belief in Christ, with its development in the doctrine of justification by faith, is constantly getting out of gear. That is to say, it is, under the stress of circumstances, always exposed to the danger of being held in such a way as to make it of none effect as a practical motive force in life. Against this falsification of Christ's teaching I know no more effective, no more inspiring protest than is to be found in Mr. Lowell's poetry.

A SCENE FROM THE OLD SLAVERY TIMES.

We talk glibly about slavery, and few of us realise what it means. But if we want to understand the extent to which the Christian creeds, as interpreted by the Christian Church, have been harmonised with the most damnable negation of everything that Christ came to teach, it is necessary to recall such a scene as this, which I take from a remarkable little book, just published in America, by the Rev. Calvin Fairbanks, a stout old Abolitionist, who for his zeal in cause of the oppressed passed seventeen years in gaol, where he received no less than 37,000 lashes. It was a scene which he himself witnessed, and which fortunately did not terminate as most scenes of the kind did. But let him speak for himself:—

Early in May 1834, my sympathy and patriotism were roused on behalf of one of the most beautiful and exquisite young girls, only one sixty-fourth African. She was self-educated and accomplished, and her jealous mistress doomed her to be sold, hating her for her beauty and accomplishments. There were 2,000 people at the sale, representing the wealth and culture of America. A short, thick-necked, black-eyed Frenchman from New Orleans was determined to secure her. Upon the block stood the auctioneer by his victim, who seemed ready to drop to the earth. He directed attention to the valuable piece of property, calling particular attention to her exquisite qualities as a mistress for any gentleman. This he kept prominent in the vilest manner, outraging all decency. Bids began at 250 dollars and ran up to 1,400. The Frenchman from New Orleans alone bid against me. I bid 1,450. My contestant stood silent. The hammer rose, trembled, lowered, rose, fell, and the fiend flushed and quick as thought dropped his hammer.

"Look here, gentlemen! Who is going to lose such a chance as this? Here is a girl fit to be the mistress of a king!"

A suppressed cry of shame rose through that throng. Southern women blushed. Bids rose to 1,475. There was again a lull.

THE POET'S GARDEN AT ELMWOOD.

Then the auctioneer turned his victim's profile to that excited crowd . . . exclaiming, "Ah, gentlemen, who is going to be the owner of this prize? Whose is the next bid?"

The Frenchman bid 1,480. The hammer rose high, quivered, lowered. Eliza gave me an appealing agonised look.

"Are you all done? Once, twice, do I hear no more, three," and the hammer quivered as the Frenchman's face flushed with triumph, three, and the hammer fell down.

"Fourteen hundred and eighty-five!"

The Frenchman turned away. The hammer fell. She was mine. She fainted.

"You've got her d—d cheap, sir. What are you going to do with her?"

"Free her, sir," I cried.

That scene took place in a Christian State. All those who were present had probably been baptised. The auctioneer was in all probability a Church member. And throughout half the Union nearly every Christian church and Christian minister denounced those who protested against slavery as if they were the very worst of criminals. Every one sees to-day that the doctrines of grace, of the atonement, and of justification by faith had got sadly out of gear before such an infamy could be perpetrated in broad daylight in a Christian land. And the worst of it is that as soon as these doctrines get out of gear, they operate absolutely in an opposite direction to that in which they were instituted to work. It is not that they are false. They are only applied the other way on, and instead of acting as spurs to urge men to redress wrong, they act as opiates to their consciences, and hell is tolerated on earth because Christians imagine that they have secured themselves against hell hereafter.

"GOD'S NEW MESSIAH."

Against this hideous perversion of God's truth Mr. Lowell took up his parable, and in one pregnant line he pierced the hollow sham of a Christianity which maintained such horrors. It occurs in the "Lines on the Present Crisis"—

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide
In the strife of Truth with Falsehood, for the good or evil side;
Some great cause, God's new Messiah, offering each the bloom or blight,
Parts the goats upon the left hand, and the sheep upon the right,
And the choice goes by forever 'twixt that darkness and that light.

The only objection to make to this verse is that the choice does not come once only. It is of constant recurrence. Whenever a duty is shirked, there Christ is rejected. Whenever we act knowingly and deliberately as we know that Christ would not have acted had He been in our circumstances, then we proclaim our disbelief in Him. And whenever we refuse to try to remedy wrongs which degrade our brother or our sister, and render it impossible for them to lead a divine or even a decently human life, there also we deny Him, and crucify Him again in the person of the least of these His brethren.

A PREACHER OF THE LIVING CHRIST.

It was in thus harmonising the broadest humanitarianism with the strictest orthodox theories of the divine mission of Christ that Mr. Lowell was most helpful to me. For he enabled me to hitch on all that was best and noblest in human endeavour to the old, old doctrine of Calvary. He has been, and long will be, the most potent preacher of the living Christ that this century has produced. There is no denial of any of the older theories of the atonement in its supernatural invisible side. There is no questioning of the sacraments. They are all left just where they were. But the test is applied with loving but unsparring severity: "What are you doing with the least of these My brethren?" Doctrine, ritual, sacrament—all these may be unimpeachably correct; but if these "little ones" are being crucified, what does it avail? Nay, worse still, if they who were made in the image of God are being made again in the image of the brute and the fiend, what avails it? This is admirably put in Mr. Lowell's "Parable":—

Said Christ our Lord, "I will go and see How the men, My brethren, believe in Me."
He passed not again through the gate of birth,
But made Himself known to the children of earth.

Then said the chief priests, and rulers and kings,
"Behold, now, the Giver of all good things;
Go to, let us welcome with pomp and state
Him who alone is mighty and great."

With carpets of gold the ground they spread
Wherever the Son of Man should tread,
And in palace-chambers lofty and rare
They lodged Him, and served Him with kingly fare.

Great organs surged through arches dim
Their jubilant floods in praise of Him;
And in church, and palace, and judgment-hall
He saw His image high over all.

But still, wherever His steps they led,
The Lord in sorrow bent down His head,
And from under the heavy foundation stones
The Son of Mary heard bitter groans.

And in church, and palace, and judgment-hall
He marked great fissures that rent the wall,
And opened wider and yet more wide
As the living foundation heaved and sighed.

"Have ye founded your thrones and altars then,
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that building shall endure
Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?"

"With gates of silver and bars of gold
Ye have fenced My sheep from their Father's fold;
I have heard the dropping of their tears
In heaven these eighteen hundred years."

"O Lord and Master, not ours the guilt;
We build but as our fathers built;
Behold Thine images, how they stand,
Sovereign and sole, through all our land.

"Our task is hard—with sword and flame
To hold Thine earth for ever the same,
And with sharp crooks of steel to keep Still, as Thou leftest them, Thy sheep."

Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man,
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

These set He in the midst of them,
And as they drew back their garment-hem
For fear of defilement, "Lo, here," said He,
"The images ye have made of Me!"

SERVING GOD BY HELPING MAN.

The last two stanzas are texts which should be preached upon in every pulpit in Christendom, at least on one stated occasion every year. But their echo should never be absent from any Christian congregation. That is the Christianity that is wanted for our day, for every day—a Christianity that refashions the character of the individual and makes him feel and see in every departure from the divine ideal in his fellow-man or woman, a concrete blasphemy against God and His Christ. The helping of man is the best serving of God.

He's true to God who's true to man; whenever wrong is done
To the humblest and the weakest 'neath the all-beholding sun,
That wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves most base
Where love of right is for themselves and not for all their race.

It is the constant vibration of the same idea in all his more serious verse that will make Lowell the poet-prophet of the Christian Democracy. We may apply to him the observation he applied to another poet when he said:—

Wordsworth was not a great artist in the technical sense of the word, neither was Isaiah; but he had the gift, in some respects rare, of being greatly and suddenly inspired.

There is much in his poetry that is not poetry at all. There is a good deal of his artistic work which, although graceful and pretty, is mere filigree and polish. The real abiding power which dwelt in him when he was "greatly and suddenly inspired" lies in those poems where he reveals the Christ still wandering among men, seeking to help and to save.

THE SEARCH FOR CHRIST.

There are two other poems of his besides "The Parable" which express this thought very clearly and beautifully. One is "The Search," the other, "The Vision of Sir Launfal." In "The Search," Lowell tells us how he went to seek for Christ, "for Christ, I said, is King." He searched for Him in the solitude of nature, and found Him not; and then mid power and wealth I sought, but found no trace of Him. The churches had become the mere sepulchre of their risen Lord, and divine service a mere formal mustering as for roll-call of men in the empty tomb.

And all the costly offerings I had brought
With sudden rust and mould grew dim :
I found His tomb, indeed, where, by their laws,
All must on stated days themselves imprison,
Mocking with bread a dead creed's grinning jaws,
Witless how long the life had thence arisen ;
Due sacrifice to this they set apart,
Prizing it more than Christ's own living heart.

The post-seeker then turned to the heedless city, where he came, led by fresh-trodden prints of bare and bleeding feet, and found his quest—

I followed where they led,
And in a hovel rude,
With nought to fence the weather from his head,
The King I sought for meekly stood ;
A naked hungry child
Clung round His gracious knee,
And a poor hunted slave looked up and smiled
To bless the smile that set him free ;
New miracles I saw His presence do,—
No more I knew the hovel bare and poor,
The gathered chips into a woodpile grew,
The broken morsel swelled to goodly store.
I knelt and wept ; my Christ no more I seek,
His throne is with the outcast and the weak.

THE TRUE VISION OF THE HOLY GRAIL.

In "The Vision of Sir Launfal," a longer poem, which Lowell is said to have dashed off in a kind of inspired ecstasy of forty-eight hours, during which the subject of his work held a sort of spiritual possession of the poet, the same thought is worked out more fully. The poem is a great Christian parable, which should be read once a year in all the churches. Sir Launfal was a knight of the North Country, who made a vow to travel over sea and land in search of the Holy Grail. Before he departs he sleeps, and in the dreams of the night he sees a vision of what is and what will be. As from the proudest hall in the North Countree Sir Launfal flashed forth in his unscarred mail, he saw a leper crouching by his gate, "who begged with his hand and moaned as he sate." A loathing came over Sir Launfal : for this man, so foul and bent, seemed a blot on the summer morn. "So he tossed him a piece of gold in scorn." Years seemed to pass. Sir Launfal, old and gray, returns from his weary quest, to find his heir installed in his place. The seneschal rudely turns him away from his own hand-gate.

Little he recked of his earl's loss,
No more on his sword was blazoned the cross ;
But deep in his soul the sign he wore,
The badge of the suffering and the poor.

As Sir Launfal sits down in the snow outside and mimes of summer dimes he hears once more the leper's voice, "For Christ's sweet sake, I beg an alms." Sir Launfal turns to the scull, and sees again "the gruesome thing," the leper cowering beside him, lone and white "as the ice isles of the northern seas, in the desolate horror of his disease."

And Sir Launfal said, "I behold in thee
An image of Him who died on the tree ;
Thou also hast had thy crown of thorns—
Thou also hast had the world's buffets and scorns—
And to thy life were not denied
The wounds in the hands and feet and side :
Mild Mary's Son, acknowledge me ;
Behold, through him, I give to Thee!"

So he parted in twain his single crust, and broke the ice on the streamlet's brink, and gave the leper to eat and drink. Then, lo, a wondrous transformation!

As Sir Launfal mused with a downcast face,
A light shone round about the place ;
The leper no longer crouched at his side,
But stood before him glorified,
Shining and tall and fair and straight
As the pillar that stood by the Beautiful Gate,—
Himself the Gate whereby men can Enter the temple of God in Man.

And the voice that was calmer than silence said,
"Lo, it is I, be not afraid!
In many climes without avail
Thou hast spent thy life for the Holy Grail ;
Behold, it is here—this cup which thou
Didst fill at the streamlet for me but now ;
This crust is my body broken for thee,
This water His blood that died on the tree ;
The Holy Supper is kept, indeed,
In whatso we share with another's need ;
Not what we give, but what we share—
For the gift without the giver is bare ;
Who gives himself with his alms feeds three—Himself, his hungering neighbour, and Me."

The sequel tells how Sir Launfal woke from his dream exclaiming that "The Grail in my castle here is found." His armour is hung up on the wall, and the reign of an ideal socialism is established.

The meanest serf on Sir Launfal's land
Has hall and bower at his command.
And there's no poor man in the North Countree
But is lord of the earldom as much as he.

SPIRITUALISING THE OLD FORMULAS.

This method of interpreting the sacraments, of sublimating the outward and visible into the inner and invisible, is scouted by many on the same general principles that the Jews in the Gospel objected to the teachings of Jesus. Lowell's poems are full of this spiritualisation of the old formulas. Here, for instance, is "All Saints," new style :—

One feast, of holy days the crest,
I, though no Churchman, love to keep,
All-Saints,—the unknown good that rest
In God's still memory folded deep ;
The bravely dumb that did their deed,
And scorned to blot it with a name,
Men of the plain heroic breed,
That lived Heaven's silence more than fame.

Such lived not in the past alone,
But thread to day the unheeding street ;
And stairs to hell and famine known,
Sing with the welcome of their lost ;
The sea they enter grows a shrine,
The grimy sack an oral sermon,
Their cup of water warm like wine,
Their speech is filled from heavenly urns.

About their brows to me appears
 An aureole traced in tenderest light,
 The rainbow-gleam of smiles through tears
 In dying eyes, by them made bright,
 Of souls that shivered on the edge
 Of that chill ford repassed no more,
 And in their mercy felt the pledge
 And sweetness of the farther shore.

Like unto this is "Godminster Chimes," in which "The ages one great minster seem, that throbs with praise and prayer."

All the way from Calvary down
 The carven pavement shows
 Their graves who won the martyr's crown,
 And safe in God repose;
 The saints of many a warring creed,
 Who now in heaven have learned,
 That all paths to the Father lead
 Where Self the feet have spurned,

Is this not the essential principle of Christ's Gospel freed from the confused and often confusing tangle of many dogmatic theologies, the soul alike of the Westminster Confession, the Prayer Book, and the Catholic Missal?

A REAL GOSPEL WITH GRIP IN IT.

The usual objection made to these sublimated essences of religious belief is that they have no grip on the soul and heart of man, that they are as misty as they are ethereal, and that they are a miserable substitute for the rugged but substantial doctrines of the orthodox creeds. But is this so? Has not the Gospel according to Lowell a closer grip on the heart, a more close realising sense of the immanence of God and the presence of Christ, to say nothing of the brotherhood of man, than the older creeds which, as they have too often been taught, made Christianity consist primarily in the utterance of theological shibboleths, the performance of certain rites, or the conscious acceptance of a plan of salvation? I have no quarrel with the older creeds. They served their turn, and contain, no doubt, much saving truth. But if you try to save the soul of one of your sceptical friends by bringing him to Christ, you will probably find you can get more directly at your object by way of Lowell than by way of Calvin or Thomas à Kempis.

It is not orthodox! Perhaps. But is that not an argument in its favour? There is more truth than is generally recognised in the jesting couplet about Theodore Parker—

He's seized the idea, by his martyrdom fired,
 That all men—not orthodox—may be inspired.

Mr. Lowell was never weary of satirising the complacent conceit of those who "think the great God is theirs alone"; nor would he ever listen patiently to those who declare that the Good Shepherd is more careful for the fashion of His crook than for the salvation of His flock.

HIS PROTEST AGAINST IRRELIGION.

But he was not unmindful of the great services rendered to mankind by the narrowest and most intolerant of the Churches. No man ever paid a more eloquent tribute to the greatness of the Puritans. On one occasion the newspapers reported an outburst of his—provoked by the disdainful tone in which some agnostics of the sniffingly superior school had alluded to Christianity—which shows how far he was from sharing the supercilious attitude of many modern Liberal thinkers. The report says that after listening with some indignation to the sneers of the scornors, Mr. Lowell rose and spoke as follows:—

The worst kind of religion is no religion at all, and these men, living in ease and luxury, indulging themselves in the amusement of going without a religion, may be thankful that they live in lands where the gospel they neglect has tamed the beastliness and ferocity of the men who, but for Christianity, might long ago have eaten their carcasses like the South Sea Islanders, or cut off their heads, and tanned their hides, like the monsters of the French Revolution. When the microscopic search of scepticism, which has hunted the heavens and sounded the seas to disprove the existence of a Creator, has turned its attention to human society, and has found a place on this planet ten miles square where a decent man may live in decency, comfort, and security, supporting and educating his children unspoiled and unpolluted—a place where age is revered, infancy respected, manhood respected, womanhood honoured, and human life held in due regard—when sceptics can find such a place ten miles square on this globe, where the gospel has not gone, and cleared the way and laid the foundations and made decency and security possible, it will then be in order for the sceptical literati to move thither and ventilate their views. So long as these men are dependent upon the religion which they discard for every privilege they enjoy, they may well hesitate a little before they seek to rob the Christian of his hope, and humanity of faith in that Saviour who alone has given to man that hope of life eternal which makes life tolerable and society possible, and robs death of its terrors and the grave of its gloom.

THE IMMANENCE OF GOD.

At the same time he had but scant sympathy with those who blow old altar coals with the sole desire to weld anew the Spirit's broken chains. In "Rhecus" he says:—

God sends His teachers unto every age,
 To every clime, and every race of men,
 With revelations fitted to their growth
 And shape of mind, nor gives the realm of Truth
 Into the selfish rule of one sole race:
 Therefore each form of worship that hath swayed
 The life of man, and given it to grasp
 The master-key of knowledge, reverence,
 Infolds some germs of goodness and of right.

And again in his "Bibliolatres"—

God is not dumb, that He should speak no more;
 If thou hast wanderings in the wilderness
 And find'st not Sinai, 'tis thy soul is poor;
 There towers the mountain of the Voice no less,
 Which whoso seeks shall find, but he who bends,
 Intent on manna still and mortal ends,
 Sees it not, neither hears its thundered lore.

Slowly the Bible of the race is writ,
 And not on paper leaves nor leaves of stone,
 Each age, each kindred, adds a verse to it,
 Texts of despair or hope, of joy or moan.
 While swings the sea, while mists the mountains shroud,
 While thunder's surges burst on cliffs of cloud,
 Still at the prophet's feet the nations sit.

IV. THE RELIGION OF POLITICS.

I suppose every young person on making his first entry into active political life feels chilled and disheartened at the contrast between the mean banalities of wire-pullers and his visions of heroism and self-sacrifice. It is a far cry from the pages of Plutarch to the proceedings of a caucus. Nor is it always easy to hear the far-off thunders of Sinai in the lobbies of the House of Commons. But the lesson which every one has to learn is that the-heroic and the divine are still present with us, and that the issues which confront us at the polling booth and in the committee-room offer opportunities for serving God and man not less noble than those which have afforded our ancestors the means of making glorious the history of our race. Lowell helped in enabling English-speaking men to realise the inner soul of the great agitation against slavery which culminated at Gettysburg and Richmond. The abolitionist movement was ridiculed. It was unpopular. It was next door to seditious. Respectable society would have nothing to do with it. It was scouted by statesmen of both parties. It had, in short, all the credentials of Divine origin. Longfellow and Whittier, with clear true note, spoke much and well on the right side. But Lowell was the prophet-bard of the great cause. His poem, "On the Capture of Fugitive Slaves near Washington," and his "Lines on the Present Crisis" approach as nearly the prophetic fire of Isaiah and Ezekiel as any writing in prose or verse of modern time. They have all the insight of the seer, and blaze with the indignant passion of outraged humanity.

IN WAR TIME.

The uprising in Eastern Europe, which began in 1875 and culminated in the treaty of San Stefano of 1878, was one in which I reaped continuous benefit from Mr. Lowell's poems.

The analogy between the war of liberation in the East and the war of emancipation in the West was so close that there were few of Lowell's spirit-stirring poems which were not equally applicable to the crisis which led Russia to the walls of Constantinople as to that which ended in the fall of Richmond before the advance of General Grant. For slaves read Slavs, and the fiery appeals of the American abolitionist fit to a nicety the mood of the champions of Bulgarian independence. The English Government in those days played the same unworthy part which her ruling classes played in the days of the slaveholders' rebellion. I remember reading aloud most of his later war poems to Madame Novikoff when the fate of Plevna still hung in the balance, and the Russians were almost as indignant with Lord Beaconsfield for his support of the Turk as the Americans were with England at the time when the Alabama was destroying their mercantile marine; and we both marvelled to find how exactly the circumstances of the war in the West were reproduced in the East. The end fortunately was also identical. The protégés of the British jingo, alike in the Balkan peninsula and the Southern States, went down before the irresistible advance of the liberating hosts from the North. And in all the varying vicissitudes of the great struggle I found in Lowell's verse at once consolation and inspiration. When the Daily Telegraph and its allies were harping upon the "atrocities" of the Slav insurgents, sufficient answer lay ready in the first stanzas of the "Ode to France, Feb. 1848":—

THE REVOLUTIONISTS' EXCUSE.

So grew and gathered through the silent years
The madness of a People, wrong by wrong.
There seemed no strength in the dumb toiler's tears,
No strength in suffering; but the Past was strong:
The brute despair of trampled centuries
Leaped up with one hoarse yell and snapped its bands,
Groped for its right with horny, callous hands,
And stared around for God with bloodshot eyes.
What wonder if those palms were all too hard
For nice distinctions,—if that Mænad throng—

Whose chronicles were writ with iron pen
In the crooked shoulder and the forehead low.

Set wrong to balance wrong,
And physicked woe with woe?

They did as they were taught; not theirs the blame
If men who scattered firebrands reaped the flame:

* * * * *
What wrongs the Oppressor suffered, these we know;
These have found piteous voice in song and prose;
But for the Oppressed, their darkness and their woe,
Their grinding centuries,—what Muse had those?

"MAN IS MORE THAN CONSTITUTIONS."

When appeal was made to the letter of the treaties guaranteeing the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire, there was the ready reply:—

Though we break our father's promise, we have nobler duties first;
The traitor to Humanity is the traitor most accursed;
Man is more than Constitutions; better rot beneath the sod
Than be true to Church and State while we are doubly false to God!

While to those who trembled at the emancipation of Bulgaria as if it portended the general overthrow and the end of all things, there was the cheery confidence of the words Lowell placed in Cromwell's mouth:—

The time is ripe, and rotten-ripe, for change;
Then let it come: I have no dread of what
Is called for by the instinct of mankind;
Nor think I that God's world will fall apart
Because we tear a parchment more or less.

"ON THE PRESENT CRISIS."

For me at least Lowell supplied the psalms of the Crusade of 1876-8, and for nearly four years my leading articles—and in those days I had to write a leading article every day six days a week—all had as their constant refrain the substance of these familiar stanzas:—

Hast thou chosen, O my people, on whose party thou shalt stand, Ere the Doom from its worn sandals shakes the dust against our land?
Though the cause of Evil prosper, yet 'tis Truth alone is strong,
And, albeit she wander outcast now, I see around her throng
Troops of beautiful tall angels, to enshield her from all wrong.

Backward look across the ages and the beacon-moments see,
That, like peaks of some sunk continent, jut through Oblivion's sea;
Not an ear in court or market for the low foreboding cry
Of those Crises, God's stern winnowers, from whose feet
earth's chaff must fly;
Never shows the choice momentous till the judgment hath passed by.

Careless seems the great Avenger; history's pages but record
One death-grapple in the darkness 'twixt old systems and the Word;
Truth for ever on the scaffold, Wrong for ever on the throne—
Yet that scaffold sways the future, and, behind the dim unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above His own.

It was in that faith we fought and in that faith we conquered, and the verse which had rung as a clarion across the American continent was not less inspiring when it sounded on the ear of the Older World.

V. HIS FAITH IN HUMANITY.

There was another phase of Lowell's teaching which was not less helpful, and that was his inexhaustible faith in the inextinguishable "spark of God" in the human heart. In this he resembles Victor Hugo, whose novels are long treatises on the "never completely out-trampled divine." He ever sees "beneath the foulest faces lurking, One God-built shrine of reverence and love."

All that hath been majestic
In life or death, since time began,
Is native in the simple heart of all—
The angel heart of man

Evil, he insists, its errand has as well as good, and he proclaims that—

Art's fittest triumph is to show that good
Lurks in the heart of evil evermore,
That love, though scorned, and outcast, and withstood,
Can without end forgive, and yet have store;
God's love and man's are of the selfsame blood,
And He can see that always at the door
Of foulest hearts the angel nature yet
Knocks to return and cancel all its debt.

But the love of God is infinite, that of man is too often circumscribed and limited. That is the refrain of his touching poem, "The Forlorn." It is a simple tale of "One poor, heart-broken, outcast girl" who dies on the doorstep of a house on a wintry night where she heard a woman's voice within singing sweet words her childhood knew. "From out the want and cold, That song had borne her soul in peace"—

For whom the heart of man shuts out
Straightway the heart of God takes in,
And fences them all round about
With silence 'mid the world's loud din.

HIS FEALTY TO WOMANHOOD.

And here I may note, in passing, how uniformly true Lowell always was to womanhood. No woman, however "polluted or forlorn," is beyond the pale of sympathy. Nor did he hesitate to condemn the fragrant injustice of the social ban which crushes the woman who yields and suffers while the man who exults and triumphs escapes scot free. In "The Legend of Brittany" occur these noble stanzas:—

Grim-hearted world, that look'st with Levite eyes
On those poor fallen by too much faith in man
She that upon thy freezing threshold lies,
Starved to more sinning by thy savage ban,
Seeking that refuge because foulest vice
More godlike than thy virtue is, whose span
Shuts out the wretched only, is more free
To enter Heaven than thou wilt ever be!

Thou wilt not let her wash thy dainty feet
With such salt things as tears, or with rude hair
Dry them, soft Pharisee, that sitt'st at meat
With Him who made her such, and speak'st Him fair,
Leaving God's wandering lamb the while to bleat
Unheeded, shivering in the pitiless air:
Thou hast made prisoned virtue show more wan
And haggard than a vice to look upon.

"What hope of grace," he asks, "may the seducer win?" When Sir Charles Dilke ended his career in the Divorce Court, Mr. Lowell remarked to Mr. Julian Hawthorne, "The Dilke case did not greatly surprise me. I knew Dilke, and he had great ability, but there were traits in his character which prepared me even for what happened. As for Mrs. Crawford, one of the counsel for the defence told me she was the most remarkable witness who ever went on a stand. It was impossible not to believe every word she said."

This, however, is by the way. Mr. Lowell's sympathy for the masses was such that he would not even tolerate an aristocracy of the elect. God is on the side of the masses:—

Believe it, 'tis the mass of men He loves.
And, where there is most sorrow and most want
There most is He, for there is He Most needed.

The most extreme of all his writings is that revolutionary poem, "Hunger and Cold":—

You're not clogged with foolish pride,
But can seize a right denied;
Somehow God is on your side,
Hunger and cold!

But I have said enough to show why I regard Lowell as one of the prophets of the Latter Day. He has gone from amongst us, but, like his own Prometheus, he will be—

A great voice,
Heard in the breathless pauses of the fight
By truth and freedom ever waged with wrong,
Clear as a silver trumpet, to awake
Huge echoes that from age to age live on
In kindred spirits.

VI. PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

Although I had been a fervent disciple of Mr. Lowell from my boyhood, I only met him once. It was at his house in Lowndes Square, whither I went as a pilgrim to offer, with humility and gratitude, my tribute to my teacher. He received me with that simple cordial hospitality which characterised him, and I rejoiced to have an opportunity to thank him for all he had done for me. I had written him once before briefly in the same sense, and he had replied kindly, but saying that he did not care much for his own handiwork. It was a relief to me to find that he did not speak in that strain, although it was impossible not to be impressed by the difference between "His Excellency" the Minister and the fervid seer of the Abolitionist movement of 1840.

The later Lowell was more cultured and critical. He was an essayist rather than a poet, and he had exchanged his prophet's mantle for a court dress. He had troops of friends, and he made after-dinner speeches which filled those who heard them with despairing envy; but, with one exception, nothing of his later work left any deep impression on the public mind. The solitary exception, however, was very important, for it related to the greatest of all political problems before the world to-day—the reconciling of the two great branches of the English-speaking world.

THE PROPHET OF ENGLISH-SPEAKING UNITY.

Eight years ago, or more, I ventured to send Mr. Lowell the first article in which I had ventured to air the idea of the establishment of a permanent tribunal which would form the first substantial nexus between the Empire and the Republic. Mr. Lowell in reply wrote, saying, "It is a beautiful dream, but is none the worse on that account. Most of the best things in the world began by being dreams." He had written long before of another:—

And if it be a dream,
Such visions are of morning,
There is no vague forewarning;
The dreams which nations dream come true,
And shape the world anew.

No one has done more than Mr. Lowell to make the dream a reality. He is the author of the only title by which the unity of the race can be described. British is even more objectionable than English. Anglo-Saxon drives the Irish wild, but English-speaking covers all. And in a score of speeches he drove home to the mind and heart of the English-speaking world the idea, first, of its unity and, secondly, of the fact that London is the natural and historic centre of the new race.

ON ENGLAND AND AMERICA.

I will only make one extract from one of the best known of all his speeches, that which he delivered in 1888 to the Society of Authors:—

I also sympathise most heartily with what has been said by the chairman with regard to the increasing love for England among my countrymen. I find on inquiry that they stop longer and in greater numbers every year in the old home, and feel more deeply its manifold charms. They are also beginning to feel that London is the centre of the races that speak English, very much in the sense that Rome was the centre of the ancient world; and I confess that I never think of London, which I love, without thinking of that palace which David built for Bathsheba, sitting in hearing of one hundred streams—streams of thought, of intelligence, of activity. One thing about London impresses me beyond any other sound I have ever heard, and that is the low, unceasing roar one hears always in the air; it is not a mere accident, like a tempest or a cataract, but it is impressive, because it always indicates human will, and impulse, and conscious movement; and I confess that when I hear it I almost feel as if I were listening to the roaring loom of time. We, as well as you, have inherited a common trust in the noble language which, in its subtle compositeness, perhaps is the most admirable instrument of human thought and human feeling in cunning hands that has ever been unconsciously devised by man. Let our rivalries be in fidelity to that trust. We have also inherited certain traditions, political and moral; and in doing our duty towards these, it seems to me we shall find quite enough occupation for our united thought and feeling.

"Nothing can be more important," he was always saying, "than to preserve the friendliest relations between the two greatest representatives of this conquering and colonising race," and in this, although dead, he still speaketh. He, more than any man, has helped to undo the consequences of the great mistake of George III. Let it be for us who come after him to carry on the good work to its full completion.

A SPECIMEN DESPATCH.

Of the man of letters as ambassador much might be said if I had not exhausted my space with weightier matters. But I cannot resist giving one characteristic specimen of Mr. Lowell's despatches. It was written from Madrid in July, 1878, as a despatch to the Secretary of State at Washington:—

One of the devices of Fourcarde which came within M. Silvelo's own knowledge when in another department of the Government is so ingenious and amusing as to be worth recounting. The Frenchman's object was to smuggle petroleum into Madrid without paying the octroi. To this end he established storehouses in the suburbs, and then, hiring all the leanest and least mammalian women that could be found, he made good all their physical defects with tin cases filled with petroleum, thus giving them what Dr. Johnson would have called the pectoral proportions of Juno. Doubtless he blasphemed the unwise parsimony of Nature in denying to women in general the multitudinous breasts displayed by certain Hindoo idols. For some time these seemingly milky mothers passed without question into the unsuspecting city, and supplied thousands of households with that cheap enlightenment which cynics say is worse than none. Meanwhile, M. Fourcarde's pockets swelled in exact proportion to the Quaker breastworks of the improvised wet-nurses. Could he only have been moderate! Could he only have bethought him in time of the ne quid nimis? But one fatal day he sent in a damsel whose contours aroused in one of the guardians at the gates the same emotions as those of Maritornes in the bosom of the carrier. With the playful gallantry of a superior he tapped the object of his admiration, and it tinkled. He had "struck oil" unawares. Love shook his wings and fled. Duty retired frowning, and M. Fourcarde's perambulating wells suddenly went dry.

If there were many such despatch writers Blue-books would be as popular as three-volume novels.

MR. LOWELL AS MINISTER.

When Mr. Lowell was in England as Minister, he was quite irascibly touchy in asserting his rights, not as an individual but as Minister for the American Republic. While he was being abused in the States as unduly British, in England he was notorious for the excessive punctiliousness with which he insisted upon due respect being paid in the smallest affairs to the majesty of the Republic which he represented.

Mr. Lowell read classical literature four hours a day, and, like Mr. Balfour, paid little attention to the newspapers. At one time the only English newspaper that he ever read was the Pall Mall Gazette, a journal which in those days he was wont to say "edited England." He was always a keen politician, a convinced believer in democracy, but quite alive to its defects. Like most Americans, he was utterly unable to see why Ireland should be refused Home Rule, and unlike most Americans, he was a declared Free Trader.

A POET-SEER OF OUR TIMES.

But Mr. Lowell, however admirable as a man of letters, a diplomatist, a wit, and a diner-out, will live in the memory of the English-speaking race by virtue of his vision and faculty divine as the seer. He recognised that the serious moral element contributed by the Puritans and their descendants was the saving salt of the States where English is spoken, and as long as that element exists it will regard Mr. Lowell as one of the most vigorous and faithful of its exponents.

It may be glorious to write
Thoughts that shall glad the two or three High souls, like those far stars that come in sight
Once in a century;—

But better far it is to speak
One simple word, which now and then
Shall waken their free nature in the weak
And friendless sons of men;

To write some earnest verse or line,
Which, seeking not the praise of art,
Shall make a clearer faith and manhood shine
In the untutored heart.

He who doth this, in verse or prose,
May be forgotten in his day,
But surely shall be crowned at last with those Who live and speak for aye.

VII. A LAST INTERVIEW.

BY MR. RAYMOND BLATHWAYT.

This in no way professes to be anything more than a desultory conversation with the dead poet, but as the personal reminiscence of possibly the last Englishman with whom he really talked, it cannot fail of a certain interest. It is only a few short weeks since I walked up the pretty garden pathway that led me to the door of Mr. Lowell's simple, old-fashioned, quaintly English and home-like residence near Boston. A maid-servant opened the door and admitted me to the presence of the poet-ambassador himself. At the very first glimpse I saw how ill he was—the transparency of his complexion, the weak voice, the trembling hand, telling me the sad truth all too plainly. But he would not hear of my calling again. "On no account, Mr. Blathwayt," said he, "I want to hear the latest about England. You know the English and I are great friends."

THE DECAY OF DIPLOMACY.

I replied very heartily in the affirmative, adding that no ambassador had ever done so much in his own person to establish and to maintain an entente cordiale between two nations as he. We then discussed the duties and the office of an ambassador. I cannot forget his smiling remark, "But after all, it is a very 'clerkly' office nowadays. What with railways and telegraphs and steamboats, all the romance and much of the responsibility of the position of an ambassador has passed away. It may have its good side, it doubtless has; but now that a Minister is in such easy distance of his superiors, he never feels his own master; he is at every beck and call from the people at home; he has little or no chance of distinguishing himself; there is nothing now to call forth his dash and energy, no means now by which he can show the world what a nation, in the person of her ambassador, can do. Many a bold stroke of policy is left undone nowadays which in the old time would have electrified the world. It may be all for the best," said Mr. Lowell, with a slow, doubtful smile, "but too many cooks, you know, spoil the pudding, and I am quite sure they spoil the ambassadorial temper."

SCOTT, DICKENS, AND JOURNALISM.

An open volume was lying on the table. "You see," said he, taking it up, "one goes back to one's old loves as age creeps on. Scott is always fresh and new to me. I have been dipping into Dickens, too, but I don't like him as well even as I used to, and he never was a great favourite of mine. His humour always struck me as being forced, and his style was not always as refined as it might have been." We then fell into a discussion as to the influence of journalism upon literature—literature, that is, pure and simple—which most affected the other, and so on; the respective merits of English and American journalism. "Your papers," he said, "would be far too stately for us. In one respect you have borrowed from us, and, I may add, improved upon us. Your 'interviews' are vastly superior. It strikes me that an English interviewer does take the trouble to know something at least of the life and works of the man he is interviewing. And certainly you are much more discreet. I suffered once myself very severely, and at the hands of the son of a dear old friend. However, that is an old tale."

HIS EXCEEDING GENTLENESS.

At this moment the maid brought in his very simple luncheon—an egg beaten up in milk, I think it was, which he told me was almost the only thing he could take. He made many gentle apologies for dieting himself before a stranger. I rose to take my leave, but he would not hear of my doing so. "Oh, no! I have not nearly finished with you yet; you must have a cigar with me, and we will go on with our chat," and he handed me one of his special brand, remarking, as he did so, "you will find that most like your own English cigars." His gentle courtesy, his bright smile, were very winning; indeed, with an experience of many of the best-known people of the day, I can recall no one with such grace and exceeding gentleness.

IN MR. LOWELL'S STUDY.

As I write, a mental picture of the whole scene rises up before me. He is seated in an arm-chair with his back to that far-famed "study window," out of which he has so often gazed. He sits there and looks quietly at his visitor, now and again raising a delicate hand to stroke his beard and moustache, or to press down the tobacco ashes in the very small pipe he is smoking, and which he tells me is an old favourite. The room is very untidy: papers lie scattered about, there is a little bust in the corner, a dog lies sleeping on the hearth-rug. The great simplicity impresses me forcibly. I can scarcely realise to myself that I am sitting quite alone with one of the most famous of living men. The quaint, homely, farm-like surroundings, scholarly and refined though they be, do not strike me as carrying out the general idea of the surroundings of a poet of world renown. I recall but dimly the pictures on the wall. A portrait of Tennyson he specially valued. I commented upon the portrait of his own brother-in-law, the celebrated orator, George William Curtis, who is also the editor in Harper's "Easy Chair," and with whom I had very recently been lunching. "Ah," said Mr. Lowell, "I am glad you have met him; he is a man in a thousand, you ought to have had him and not me at St. James's."

GORDON, SALISBURY, AND BEACONSFIELD.

I asked him something about his English friends and the best known men he had met over here. He spoke very highly of Gordon. "Oh, why did you let him die?" said he; "he was a very Galahad." He was exceedingly enthusiastic in his praises of Lord Salisbury as a politician. "He always reminds me of Tennyson's still strong man in a blatant land; not that I mean," he added with a smiling bow, "that yours is a blatant land." "I never really knew Lord Beaconsfield," he went on, "and I regret it. I met him once shortly before his death. I am always sorry that I was unable to accept the invitation of Lord Cranbrook, who was then Gathorne Hardy, to spend a week at Hemsted Park, where Disraeli was a guest. It always seemed to me that 'Dizzy' was laughing in his sleeve at everything and every one. He was an Oriental to his finger tips. He used to give me the idea that he was living a chapter of one of his own novels, a perpetual incarnation of one of his own characters. He might have been an ancient Egyptian or a Roman Augur, or even an American, but never an Englishman."

THE CARDINAL AND CATHOLICISM.

"Cardinal Manning, again, he is a perpetual puzzle to me. An English gentleman, an Italian Cardinal, a prince and a courtier, a Radical reformer—there is a curious mixture—and yet one of the most winning of men." He was much interested in my telling him of some conversations I had had with the Cardinal.

"I asked his Eminence once," I said, "if he was not now and again conscious of the old leaven of Protestantism," and Mr. Lowell laughed heartily when I told him that the Cardinal smiled and laid his hand on my knee, and said, "Do you know that that is a very home question indeed?"

"I quite believe it," replied Mr. Lowell. "I can distinctly trace Puritan influence here in America in Roman Catholics."

He was evidently pleased when I told him that only a few days previously the Roman Catholic Archbishop of New York, Dr. Corrigan, had been regretting to me that the old spirit of Puritanism was dying out in America. "Did he, indeed?" said my host, "that is very interesting, and a very noble remark for him to make. But the decay of our Puritanism is only in creed; its influence amongst all classes is strong and healthy still. Referring to the Roman Catholics, it is essential to remember that we influence Rome quite as much as she influences us; it is perhaps a delicate political matter for me to discuss, but I must say that I think their demands as to the religious education of their children are not only natural but reasonable."

Drifting on in a conversation which in a very sketchy and "impressionist" manner included, amongst other things, a reference to Baron Hirsch and his scheme for the colonisation of the Jews, and his choice of Mr. Arnold White as a commissioner, a choice of which Mr. Lowell much approved; "Mr. White," said he, "seems to have done some very earnest work for your poor and destitute"—drifting on, I say, in such a manner, I happened to make a remark on the respective attitudes of the Southern whites and blacks, and I am afraid I more than half hinted that perhaps both parties were happier and more contented in the old days.

ENGLAND AND THE SOUTHERN SLAVEOWNERS.

"Oh, but," Mr. Lowell replied, "however that may have been, and I think you are quite wrong, you must not forget the principles involved. Nothing on earth can condone slavery. I never understood the preference of the English aristocracy for the Southerners, although living in England explained much to me that used to be quite incomprehensible. Your social differences, with their exact parallel religious inequalities, Church and Dissent, solved much of the mystery. But nowadays there would be much less of that very wrong sympathy with the South than there was thirty years ago."

"YOU CAN'T CHEAT OLD AGE."

I asked him, knowing well his love for England, which nation was dearest to him. "Well, my own land, of course." And yet I have more friends on your side than I have here. I can never pass Longfellow's house, which, as you know, is close by here, without a thrill. Then Emerson has gone too. We are all going, you know; the old order changeth, giving place to new, and yet it is all as it should be—all for the best. Oliver Wendell Holmes, gay youth that he is, often comes over to chat with me." I remarked that I had spent the previous afternoon with the old autocrat. I told him what he had said to me about his age: "There are times when I don't feel it, but you must catch the old man asleep, you must watch him come down the stairs. You can't cheat old age." "No," replied Mr. Lowell, "that is true, of course. I am many years his junior, but yet I don't feel old; I don't feel my age as I am told by books I ought to feel." I ventured to ask him how old he was. I could scarcely believe him when he replied, "Seventy-two years." His bright, easy manner, especially his voice, quite untouched by the influence of time—all these things pointed, despite his manifest delicacy, to the very prime and not to the sunset of life. I rose to take my leave. "Oh, must you really go? I am so glad to have seen you; try and come again on Friday."

ELMWOOD AND ITS MEMORIES.

As we stood a moment in the sunshine—for he himself came to the door with me—I commented on the very English aspect of his little home. "I am glad you think so, but it is easily explained. We have lived here for some generations. At the back of the kitchen fire-range you will find the Royal Arms of England and the monogram G. R. My grandmother, you know, was a loyalist to her death, and whenever Independence Day (July 4th) came round, instead of joining in the general rejoicing, she would dress in deep black, fast all day, and loudly lament "our late unhappy difference with his most gracious Majesty."

The strains of a distant waltz floated by on the summer air. Mr. Lowell smiled. "Dear me, that does remind me of England! I think I heard that last at Lady Kenmare's. How music can link the present with the past!"

It was a curious reflection—a reflection that lost none of its interest as I looked at him who had uttered it—the then and now linked by a passing strain of music.

As I passed down the little path I turned once again to look at the gentle figure, standing frail and delicate, with fast whitening hair and beard, illumined by the light of the westering sun. An unerring presentiment stole upon me that even then he was fast passing "to where beyond these voices there is peace"; and alas that now it is so.

MR. LOWELL'S LAST POEM.

The last poem of Mr. Lowell's, which was published in an American journal, is called "My Brook." It appeared in the New York Ledger's Christmas issue, December 13th, 1890. Mr. Lowell wrote the poem while he was in England, in the summer of 1890, and subsequently revised it on seeing the proofs. The amount paid for it was £200. Here is part of it:—

It was far up the valley we first plighted troth,

When the hours were so many, the duties so few;

Earth's burden weighs wearily now on us both—

But I've not forgotten those dear days; have you?

Each was first-born of Eden, a morn without mate,

And the bees and the birds and the butterflies thought

'Twas the one perfect day ever fashioned by fate,

Nor dreamed the sweet wonder for us two was wrought.

I loitered beside you the whole summer long,

I gave you a life from the waste-flow of mine;

And whether you babbled or crooned me a song,

I listened and looked till my pulses ran wine.

Ah, that was so long ago! Ages, it seems,

And now I return sad with life and its lore.

Will they flee my grey presence, the light-footed dreams,

And Will-o'-wisp light me his lantern no more?

* * * *

You are mine and no other's; with life of my life

I made you a Naiad, that were but a stream;

In the moon are brave dreams yet, and chances are rare

For the passion that ventures its all on a dream.

Leapt bravely! Now down through the meadows we'll go

To the Land of Lost Days, whither all the birds wing,

Where the dials move backward and asphodels blow;

Come flash your tomanauns again, dance again, sing!

Yes, flash them and clash them on ank'le and wrist,

For we're pilgrims to Dreamland, O Daughter of Dream!

There we find again all that we wasted or mist,

And Fancy—poor fool!—with her baubles supreme.

As the Moors in their exile the keys treasured still

Of their castles in Spain, so have I; and no fear

But the doors will fly open, whenever we will,

To the prime of the Past and the sweet of the year.

THE TWO SWISS FETES.

NAST month Switzerland, by its celebrations in honour first of the beginnings of Federation among the Cantons, and later of the birth of the Federal town of Berne, drew the attention of the whole world to its interesting political conditions. August 1 and 2 witnessed the fêtes in connection with the 600th anniversary of the foundation of the Confederation, for it was on August 1, 1291, that the men of Schwytz combined with the men of Uri and Unterwalden and formed a league for their common protection against the encroachments of the Austrian oppressor. The document drawn up by the alliance, the Magna Charta of the Swiss, is still treasured up among the archives of Schwytz, in the picturesque district of the Vierwaldstättersee, or Lake of the Four Cantons. The chief feature of the recent celebrations was of course the historical play illus-quent writer on Swiss subjects, suggests that Europe could not do better than reconstitute the Continent on the model of the Swiss republic. A great deal might be said in favour of such a suggestion, and no doubt the Swiss offers the oldest example of a federation of free states.

With regard to the German magazines, no topic could have called forth articles of greater interest in the minor periodicals, for the leading reviews have let the subject stand over for a month or two. Space will only permit brief mention of the chief notices. So far back as Heft 9, Alte und Neue Welt began a study of the Confederation, concluding it in Heft 11. Now, in Heft 12, the same magazine describes the recent fêtes. Another Catholic periodical, Deutscher Hausschatz, Heft 16, has a paper on the Confederation, while Velhagen gives particulars trating the struggle for Swiss independence. Another interesting item was the pilgrimage on the Sunday to the Rütli, a piece of historic ground on the shores of Lake Uri, and now belonging to the Confederation. Rütli is supposed to be the scene in 1307 of the patriotic oath of Walther Fürst of Uri, Werner Stauffacher of Schwytz, and Arnold von Melchthal of Unterwalden, and not the least impressive of the ceremonies was the choral rendering of the act from Schiller's "William Tell," set to music by Dr. Arnold, of Lucerne, and performed by a choir of 750 male voices, with three soloists to represent the patriots.

THE FESTIVAL AT SCHWYTZ.—"THE OATH OF 1291."

The magazines, as might be expected, vie with each other in telling the history of the Confederation and in describing the fêtes. In an interesting article in the Atlantic Monthly of August, Mr. W. D. McCrackan, a freof the historic origin of the famous Bund. Ueber Land und Meer seems to have laid itself out for festivals. There is the story of the Confederation, with a detailed account of the celebration, well illustrated. Another paper describes the enchanting scenery of the Vierwaldstättersee district.

The seventh centenary of the foundation of the city of Berne is also of historic interest. The main features of this second fête, which lasted from August 14 to August 17, were the great street pageant and the festival play, setting forth turning points in the history of the town. Dr. Weber, a Swiss priest, is the author of the historical play, which was most successfully performed in an open-air amphitheatre overlooking the Aar. But the historical procession proved the most attractive feature.

CARICATURES OF THE MONTH.

From a photograph by]

MR. ALFRED BRYAN.

[London Stereoscopic Co.

IN our last issue appeared the portraits of the leading Punch cartoonists. This month I publish the portrait of Mr. Alfred Bryan, of Moonshine. The following notes are by an old familiar :—

“A. B.’s method is not that of other men, for when surveying the faces which supply him with subjects, he gives no outward or visible signs of his scheme; he makes no notes at the time. The results of his observations are committed to wood or paper, as the case may be, when he gets home. Mr. Bryan is not a trained artist—I suppose he never received a drawing lesson in his life; but after looking at his achievements for the last twenty years, and knowing that some of these have been performed under the most trying conditions, I am persuaded that ‘A. B.’ can do more good work in his particular line and in a given time than any man of his generation. He is as modest, too, as he is gifted.”

The most notable caricature that is reproduced this month is the marvellously powerful cartoon illustrating the present phase of the Labour question in Australia. The drawing leaves much to be desired, but there is power and originality in every line. If the Melbourne Punch progresses at this rate, it will beat the Sydney Bulletin. The substitution of Labour with his hobnailed boots for the image which Nebuchadnezzar the king set up in the plain of Dura, is a very happy conceit, and the picture is full of rude force. Most of the foreign cartoons this month are devoted to the tempting subject of the Franco-Russian rap-prochement. The two Italian cartoons are fairly typical of the kind of comment Admiral Gervais’ visit has elicited on the Continent. The German caricaturist is more subdued. The French cartoon, representing France and Russia as outweighing all the other Powers, even with Holland thrown in, is not a bad illustration of the foolish hopes that have been excited by the Tzar’s civilities.

The artist of the Tory print that portrays the Catholic priesthood in the person of a pig in clerical guise, hits off what seems likely to be for some time to come the favourite fallacy of the Unionist platform. Punch has done so much harm in the past by this kind of malignant lampoon that it is much to be regretted his ill example should be followed by the penny comics.

I am glad to welcome the South African caricaturist to our pages. The artist of the new Cape Magazine, who depicts Mr. Rhodes trying to disperse the wild cattle of South African States, hits off the situation very happily. “Wait a bit,” says the Transvaal; “Natal is turning wild; it will take all Mr. Rhodes’s time to disperse that team.”

The following suggestion for Plimsoll’s disc marking the loadline reaches us from the Antipodes. There is a gruesome truth about the picture.

SUGGESTION FOR A NEW “PLIMSOLL MARK.”

From Melbourne Punch, June 18, 1891.

From Moonshine.]

SIR HY. ISAACS TO MR. LAWSON: “You tell us what to do for our children’s ears, and for our hands and our heads, but even you cannot tell us what to do with our noses.”

[August 15, 1891.]

From Il Fischietto. THE FRANCO-RUSSIAN UNDERSTANDING.

[August 22, 1891.]

From Il Pupazzo. AN ITALIAN VIEW OF THE EUROPEAN SITUATION.

From L'U.

NEW RUSSIAN NATIONAL ANTHEM.

Allons enfants de la patrie,
Les jours de gloire sont arrivés,
Contre nous de la tyrannie, etc.

From La Silhouette.

[August 2, 1891.]

THE BALANCE OF POWER IN EUROPE.

We shall equal you, whatever be your number.

From La Silhouette.

[August 16, 1891.]

THE RECEPTION AT PORTSMOUTH.

How I love the French Navy!

From Australian Life.

HOPE AT LAST.

[July 2, 1891.]

From Australian Life. THE RESCUE. [July 9, 1891.]
NEW SOUTH WALES: "Will you swear to be good and true?"

—FROM "THE LABOUR VOTE" A WEEK—

[June 25, 1891.]

"BOW OR BURN!"

("Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, set up an image, and commanded all people to bow down and worship it when certain musical instruments should give the signal. Those who did not obey were cast into a fiery furnace."—Historical Fact.)

WORKING-MAN REX (to the Ministry).—"Now make up your minds, gents; do as I tells yer or in yer goes. Which is it to be—grovel or grill?"

From the Melbourne Punch.

MAKE HIM KING—OF THE RING.

[June 18, 1891.]

Jo: "Yer R'y'l 'giness, I abdicate gladly, and herewith chuck yer the bloomin' dollar—excuse me—I mean Crown. 'Bre it is; wear it, and be as good and great and 'appy a king in Australia as I 'ave been."

From the Sydney Bulletin.

[June 20, 1891.]

H.R.H.'S RENUNCIATION.

THE OLD UN: "Be good, my dear friend, and you will—miss a lot of fun."

From Moonshine.

[August 29, 1891.]

WHILE RUSSIA DOES THE FIDDLING!

Digitized by Google

From Ariel.]

IN DARKEST AFRICA.
Ex Africa semper quid novi.

[August 1, 1891.

From the Melbourne Punch, June 18, 1891.

"General Booth has started a match factory," says the cable. Why, we thought he always ran one.

From the Cape Illustrated Magazine.]

INSPANNING.

VROUW HOFMEYER: "There's that young bull Natal looped it."

MYNHEER RHODES: "Oh, he'll come round as soon as I inspan these two; but kick that snarling cur away."

A TRANSVAAL PORTRAIT OF LORD R. CHURCHILL.

NATIVE CHORISTERS FROM SOUTH AFRICA.

I BRIEFLY referred in last month's issue to the South African Choir, who are now visiting this country for the twofold purpose of calling attention to the condition of the Christianised native population of South Africa, and for raising funds for the foundation of a Technical College which will supply industrial training to the aborigines of Cape Colony. A deputation from the Choir came down to Mowbray House to say "Thank you," and report progress. There were four of them: a Basuto, a native of Tembuland, a Boer, which so fascinates Mr. Froude, Dr. Clark, and others, seems to present itself in quite another guise to those who suffer from its disabilities. My visitors reported that throughout the Cape Colony the race antipathy was much stronger than in this country. They were overwhelmed with gratitude at the unwonted sensation of being treated as human beings on a footing of perfect equality with white men. In Cape Colony they had frequently been denied lodging in any of the boarding-houses of the towns. There is hardly an hotel in the Cape Colony which will open its doors to a coloured man;

From a photograph by]

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CHOIR.

[the London Stereoscopic Co.

Butlapin, and one smart little lad who would be a jewel of a page-boy for any fine lady who wanted a curiosity for her hall. They were accompanied by Mr. Letty, who is managing the party, and we had a very pleasant little gossip together over subjects common to both black and white in our South African Empire. As they are almost the first South African natives who have ever visited this country, they possess more than ordinary interest. Upon one point they are quite unanimous, and that is in preferring the rule of the Englishman to that of the Boer. In the Transvaal, and even in the Free State, they say that the black man is not regarded as a human being. He is denied the right to hold land, is ordered about with kicks and blows, and besides paying rent for permission to live on the land, from which the Boer has dispossessed him, he is compelled to render so much free labour to the Boer that he is unable to cultivate his own crops at the time they most need his care. The benevolent and patriarchal administration of the Transvaal and even Mr. Letty, who has not a drop of coloured blood in his veins, was sometimes denied shelter because he was travelling with natives. The prejudice against them was least in Cape Town, where they were treated in a much more reasonable manner than in the back country, where the white settler feels bound to put on any amount of "side" in order to hold his own against the encompassing and overwhelming majority of coloured people.

The Choir, after fulfilling several engagements in London, were about to make a tour through England, and before these pages will see the light they will have appeared at Peterborough, Bradford, and other places in the North. Wherever they have gone they have succeeded in creating widespread interest, and have produced a perfectly new sensation, which in itself is no small service to have rendered to the somewhat wearied public of the old country. Their concert, in which, clad in the costume of their ancestors, they go through the native dance, and "warble their native wood-notes wild," has proved very attractive, and is likely to prove one of the staple features of the coming season in the provinces. On Sunday they attend the ordinary services, habited like Europeans, and their singing attracts larger congregations than the preaching of the most eloquent minister. The damsel who came to see me is an expert linguist, speaking no fewer than four or five languages. The men were interesting and intelligent, one of them especially so. One day he wandered away from their lodgings, and was missing for some time. After some hours, however, he turned up safe and sound, and announced that he had not been able to rest until he had found his way to Paternoster Row and seen with his own eyes the place where our Bibles came from. The same pilgrim had gone off by himself, when the Choir was visiting Dover, to see the battlefield of Hastings, and he was much interested on being shown by the guide the exact spot where King Harold fell pierced by the Norman arrow. What material there is here for a poem, in this woolly-headed, swarthy-skinned Basuto making his pilgrim way to Paternoster Row, and then musing on the battlefield where eight centuries ago our ancestors had fled before the sword of the invader! Since the Jubilee Singers, of Fisk University, Tennessee, there has been no troupe to compare with them in interest, and compared with the South African Choir, the Jubilee Singers are nowhere. It may be mentioned that the proprietors of the Alhambra Music Hall offered the Choir £180 a week if they would consent to take part in the variety entertainments given in that well-known establishment. Considering that each member of the Choir has been trained in the strict Puritanism of the Presbyterian or Wesleyan missionary, it is easy to imagine with what horror the overtures of the music-hall manager were rejected. Mr. Letty, who has the management of the Choir in his own hands, is now travelling in the country, but letters addressed to him at 1, Endsleigh Gardens, London, N.W., will have immediate attention.

"Tell me," I said to the Kaffir maiden, who is black but comely, "tell me what you would like to say to the English people on behalf of your race?" She replied, "I have long wished for a chance to say my thought, and now, behold, it has come. This is what I would say: 'Let us be in Africa even as we are in England. Here we are treated as men and women. Yonder we are but as cattle. But in Africa, as in England, we are human. Can you not make your people at the Cape as kind and just as your people here? That is the first thing and the greatest. But there are still three other things that I would ask. Help us to found the schools for which we pray, where our people could learn to labour, to build, to acquire your skill with their hands. Then could we be sufficient unto ourselves. Our young men would build us houses and lay out our farms, and our tribes would develop independently of the civilisation and industries which you have given us. Thirdly, give our children free education. Fourthly, shut up the canteens, and take away the drink. These four things we ask from the English. Do not say us nay.'"

Justice, education, and deliverance from the temptation of strong drink: these are all they seek, and of the three, justice is at once the most important and, alas, the most unattainable. For they may as well attempt to carry St. Paul's to the Karoo as to attempt to make the Boer and the English colonist regard the coloured man with the respect that, from Her Majesty downwards, has been everywhere paid in this country to the South African Choir.

WHO WANTS A LIFE?

ONE of my Helpers, a young man of facts and energy, sends me the following remarkable appeal. I shall be glad to receive any communication from any one who, in my correspondent's phrase, "Wants a Life":—

The world sadly wants mén of thought, sympathy, and action. Though the idea presented by the present writer seems nothing but a gigantic self-advertisement, it is offered in all earnestness and forethought, and selfish considerations are sunk in the desire for the general good. The writer is one who, having long and deeply studied the problems of human life with its lights and deep, deep shades, offers himself for endowment in the service of humanity, one whose pulses are throbbing to aid in a large way in making this earth better and brighter, by combating poverty and sin, sickness and sadness, weariness and misery.

The people's conscience is dawning to its duties as largely responsible for the wellbeing, body as well as soul, of the common brotherhood of humanity. Communities rise or fall together, learned and ignorant, rich and poor. The duties of position and riches are being preached on all sides, and practical Christianity requires much from those to whom have been lent talents. And what are the saints more than the sinners if they do not get more goodness and a firmer footing for their less fortunate brethren out of their trusts?

Hundreds—nay, doubtless, thousands—of poor, desolate men and women—rich in stores of this world's goods, yet very poor in that which makes life so endurable, so bright even, to the poorest—are going down to their graves uncomfortable and unmourned, oppressed with an awful sense of the responsibility of their riches and advantages, desiring honestly to do something for others, yet deterred by distrust born of bitter disappointment, and justly fearing the common methods of charity and testamentary disposition. Others, it may be, are at work, but they sadly see that the work will outlast them, and want someone to take up their task and see it to a successful issue. Or again, some want men—young, with arms and heart and brains to do that for the world they themselves have not now the strength, the heart, or the time to do.

But, alas, the men are not to be had, and in default their wishes, ideas, riches—immense possibilities for good—go to waste. Their wishes or ideas are lost to themselves and to the world, and their riches, perhaps either run through in a few years, revert to the Crown, unclaimed and comparatively useless, or goes exclusively to some who have no greater claim to it, possibly less, than "the man in the street."

Here is waste, or folly, or worse.

Seeing and feeling thus, is there not here a field for intelligent men and women to give their lives in the service of others—to fulfil trusts, to complete works of charity or self-sacrifice, to utilise and turn into right channels the best instincts of our age and country? Some perish within sight and sound of deepest sympathy and human kindness, while yet there are—

Beautiful words never spoken,
Whispers of cheer that might save
Hearts drifting, weary and broken,
Down to the night of the grave.

Well, I, for one, offer myself to this work—I, who have served six long, toilsome, studious, lesson-learning and trouble-bearing years to man's estate, and yet am young, enthusiastic, experienced, healthy, not uneducated, possessing something of the insanity of noble minds, unfettered by conventionality in creed or habits, and willing to work hard and long, anywhere, in a cause to which I can give my heart, all the more heartily the wider its sphere or the narrower its reception. Is this a life worth losing? Dare any one trust the strong man's heart that is offering itself?

WANTED, A CENSUS OF GHOSTS!

AN APPEAL TO OUR READERS FOR STATISTICS OF HALLUCINATIONS.

I HAVE interviewed most sorts and conditions of men and women in my life, but I have never yet had the pleasure of interviewing a ghost. I spent most of my youth within a mile of one of the most famous haunted houses in the three kingdoms; but in those days I was not ambitious of spiritual acquaintances, and the chance having been lost returns not again. But so many of my friends and acquaintances have seen ghosts of one kind or another, that I feel somewhat solitary in the midst of the world of spectres, and I continue to live in hope that, sooner or later, I may have a bond fide straightforward interview with a ghost.

GHOSTS AND THE SCIENTIFIC SPIRIT.

Of course at this time of day it is supremely unscientific not to believe in ghosts. Such incredulity is practically impossible to any one who admits that the unbroken testimony of mankind in all lands and at all times can possess any weight. There is more evidence to establish the reality of ghostly apparitions than there is to convict most of the murderers who are ever hanged; and while it is right and proper to regard every fresh tale of spectral wonder with a wholesome scepticism, the more sceptically you weigh the evidence, and the more rigorously you reject nine-tenths of the tales of the countryside, the more irresistibly you will be driven to the conclusion that the truth of what are called supernatural visitations is as well established as any fact whose occurrence is occasional and intermittent. To reject all the mass of testimony upon which this assertion rests, out of deference to a preconceived theory, is absolutely opposed to the scientific spirit, and is on all tours the superstition which scouted the true theory of astronomy because it seemed at variance with the popular theory of the universe.

WANTED: FACTS FIRST, THEORIES AFTERWARDS.

Taking it, therefore, as conclusively established that such apparitions do appear, we are still as far off as ever from knowing the laws of their being. In the present condition of our fragmentary and imperfect knowledge of these shadowy and impalpable entities, it is too soon to attempt to formulate any theory of ghosts. Theories of ghosts have done immense mischief. They are at this moment the chief obstacle in the way of the calm scientific investigation of a mass of intensely interesting but very obscure phenomena, which of all others demand examination in the calm clear light of impartial reason. Hence the first duty of the inquirer is resolutely to put out of his head all questions as to theories, and confine himself strictly and judiciously to the collection and observation of facts. Afterwards, when a sufficient number of facts are collected, collated, and compared, we shall have the foundation upon which to construct some working hypothesis which may pave the way to the discovery of the true theory of ghosts. This is the principle on which the Psychical Research Society has for several years pursued its most interesting labours; and while we seem to be as far off as possible from the elaboration of a scientific theory of ghosts, the Society has at least succeeded in establishing beyond all gainsaying—first, that apparitions really appear; and, secondly, that they are at least as often apparitions of persons living at a distance from the place where the apparition is observed as they are apparitions of those who have died.

LATENT POSSIBILITIES IN MAN.

This discovery of the reality of what the Society calls Phantasms of the Living opens up such a fascinating field of inquiry, fraught with such awe-inspiring suggestions as to the nature and latent possibilities of human beings, as to occasion some marvel that the subject has not become a universal topic of discussion and of speculation. For while there may be some degree of creepiness about all discussion concerning the ghosts of the dead, there can be no nervousness about the ghosts of the living. If Mr. Smith at Madras can be proved to have appeared in actual bodily shape before Mr. Jones in his counting-house in Leadenhall Street, who can say to what development this latent capacity of the Ego may not attain if it is frankly recognised and intelligently cultivated? There may be here the clue to almost inconceivable triumphs of mind over matter, time and space. These fitful apparitions may be to the development of the faculty to which they are due what the lifting of the kettle-lid, which set Watt a thinking, was to the steam-engine. The fact can be no longer disputed by reasonable men. Let us, then, collect and observe facts which will help us to discover the law of the fact.

THE FEAR OF THE SUPERNATURAL.

It will be well at once to dismiss as misleading and confusing the term supernatural as applied to these apparitions. The savage who, when he first saw fire, declared that it was a god who bit those who touched it, constructed for himself a theory which was of all others most calculated to prevent him ascertaining the real nature of fire. It frightened him; and fear is one of the most disturbing influences that can affect the mind. It had a tendency to keep him at a distance, and to excite in him that sentiment of veneration and awe which would have for ever prevented the profanation of the use of a lucifer. As there is nothing sacred to a sapper, so there is nothing in the shape of phenomena that is sacred to the investigator in the sense of being tabooed as too holy for careful handling and vigilant examination. As long as men and women cannot rid themselves of the preconceived idea that any apparition is necessarily the spirit or soul of some defunct person, it is vain trying to get them to observe it coolly or examine it critically. Ghosts, like other things in this world, must bear looking at, and if they revisit the pale glimpses of the moon in these latter days, they must take the chance of being subjected to all the methods of the scientific period.

AN APPEAL TO THE READER.

This being so, I want to help the Psychical Research Society in their most useful and suggestive inquiries, and to that end I make an appeal to the half-million readers whose eyes will fall upon this page in all parts of the habitable world. Will you help those who are patiently accumulating and sifting evidence on this vast and abstruse subject, by taking the trouble to write out and to send in to me, with such verification as is possible, in the shape of exact names, places, dates, and whatever confirmatory evidence there may be available, of any apparition known to you, which has not yet, so far as you know, been recorded in the Reports of the Psychical Research Society? In cases where the facts have been published, the reference to any accessible publication would suffice. But when the phenomena have never been recorded, it will be well to write it in full and send it in to "REVIEW OF REVIEWS, London," marked Ghosts.

HOW TO REPORT A GHOST STORY.

For the guidance of those who may be willing to assist the work of the Society by collecting and preparing evidence on such spontaneous phenomena as phantasms of the living and dead, disturbances in haunted houses, clairvoyance, previsions and premonitions, the Council of the Psychical Research Society offer the following suggestions:—

(1) A written statement, dated and signed with the full name (not necessarily for publication) should be procured from the actual witness; or each of them, where more than one shared the experience. In the latter case it is important that, where possible, the several accounts should be written without previous consultation.

(2) Similar statements should be obtained from all persons in a position to give corroborative evidence, either as (a) having been present at the time of the experience, or (b) as having been told of it shortly afterwards, or (c) as having been witness to any unusual effect produced on the percipient by the experience. Where contemporary documentary evidence is in existence, in the shape of letters, diaries, notebooks, &c., it is important that this should at least be referred to; and we should be grateful for an opportunity of seeing the actual documents.

(3) It is further requested that all dates and other details may be given as accurately as possible; and that, where the experience relates to a death, the full name of the deceased may be given, together with that of the locality in which he died, in order that the occurrence of the death as stated may be independently verified.

(4) Lastly, in all cases where the percipient has experienced some unusual affection—such as a sensory hallucination, vivid dream, or marked emotion—he should be requested to state whether he has had any similar experience on any other occasion, whether coincidental or not.

Hallucination in this connection, it should be understood, signifies any impression made on the senses which was not due to any external physical cause.

Intending informants should in all cases be assured that no name or other particulars will be published without the express permission of the persons concerned.

THE CENSUS OF HALLUCINATIONS.

At the International Congress of Experimental Psychology, which met in Paris in 1889, it was resolved to collect as widely as possible answers to the following question:—

Have you ever, when believing yourself to be completely awake, had a vivid impression of seeing, or being touched by a living being or inanimate object, or of hearing a voice; which impression, so far as you could discover, was not due to any external physical cause?

For the general purposes of the census, negative answers are required as much as affirmative ones, since one object is to ascertain approximately what proportion of persons have the experiences described. Another object is to obtain details as to the experiences, with a view to examining into their cause and meaning.

These experiences are what psychologists would call casual hallucinations of sane persons, but it is desired to include in the census phantasmal appearances which many people would deny to be hallucinations because they believe them to represent spiritual realities.

The inquiry in England has been intrusted to Professor Sidgwick, of Cambridge, who is anxious to obtain as many answers as possible before making his report to the next meeting of the Congress, which will take place in London, in August, 1892. He will be very glad if any one willing to assist him by putting the question to twenty-five friends and acquaintances will send him his or her name and address, when the necessary forms with instructions to collectors, will be forwarded.

OUR CHRISTMAS NUMBER.

Having taken up this subject, I do not mean to abandon it with the mere publication of this appeal. I am now busily engaged in preparing the Christmas extra number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, which, with the exception of the necessary notices of Christmas literature, will be devoted to the publication of real ghost stories.

Of these there is already good store, but with the kind assistance of my readers, I hope to make that Christmas number one of the most interesting, as well as one of the most suggestive and useful, that has ever issued from the press.

I like to think of the innumerable readers of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS as constituting, in a very real sense, a vast, world-wide Association of Helpers, to most of whom life is more interesting and more alive because of the monthly appearance of this familiar visitor.

What the readers of this REVIEW don't know—if only we could pool all their knowledge—is not worth knowing; and if amongst them there are not many who have seen beyond all doubt an authentic apparition, then all the data hitherto collected on this subject are misleading. I had almost abandoned the hope of ever interviewing a ghost. The possibility of appealing to my readers has, however, revived the expectation that I may some day be privileged to meet a phantasm of the living or the dead face to face. In the meantime, next to seeing a ghost yourself is hearing at first hand from those who have had the opportunity hitherto denied to me, and I earnestly appeal to all such to send me as promptly as possible carefully authenticated narratives of their experience.

A Money-making Dream.—Somewhere in the last century, says a writer in the Strand Magazine, a Bristol mechanic named Watts, who was employed in cutting up strips of lead into small pieces for the purpose of shot, is said to have imbibed a little too freely. He went to bed in a muddled state, and as is, we should imagine, not improbable, dreamt various dreams. Having taken too much strong drink and too little water, he would naturally conjure up visions of the only ale with which Adam was acquainted. He saw it rain heavily, and as he watched, to his surprise the rain became lead, and the earth was covered with shot. Awaking to his sound senses, Watts is pictured dwelling on his dream until he came to believe there was something in it. He determined to make an experiment, and proceeded forthwith to the tower of St. Mary Redcliff in Bristol. He is said to have proved the correctness of the idea of the dream. Shot could best be made by dropping the lead from a great height. Watts by this discovery made, according to the chronicler, £10,000.

THE TRUTH ABOUT WALSALL ELECTION.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

ALDERMAN E. T. HOLDEN, M.P.
(From a photo. by Mr. J. A. Draycott.)

has, however, not been told by either. The facts are as follows:—

Walsall is one of the few Liberal constituencies which were not contested in 1886. In 1885 the Liberal majority was 1,677. In 1886 Sir Charles Forster was permitted to retain his seat without a contest. Last month the Liberals returned Mr. Holden, but their majority was only 538, showing a falling off in the Liberal majority of 1,139. Hence great jubilation on the part of the Unionists, which is not altogether without justification.

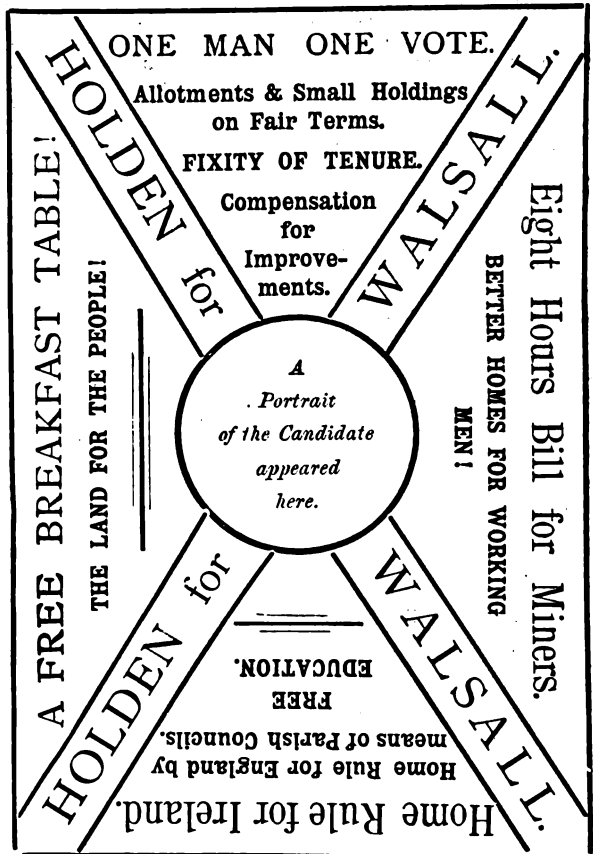

The first cause of this falling away from the Liberal high-water mark of 1885 is simple and obvious. Walsall was not contested in 1886. No constituency which votes on Home Rule for the first time ever polls up to the 1885 standard. It seems necessary that every constituency should show a Liberal decrease on the first occasion it votes on Home Rule. It is the second election that shows a reversion to the figures of 1885. This rule is almost universal, and Walsall was no exception.

The second cause, which is equally potent, is the fact that in the Midlands, in Birmingham, and in the area within which the Birmingham papers have the field to themselves, Liberalism is at a disadvantage, from which it is not likely to recover until there is a Liberal paper in the field. As long as the Birmingham district is served solely by Unionist journalists, so long will it fail to show any reversion to the figures of 1885.

A third cause is to be found in the fact that Walsall, in 1885, voted for Sir Charles Forster, not so much because he was a Liberal as because he had become in the course of years a kind of established institution. The personal element dominated the political. The Liberals profited by that in 1885, the Unionists in 1891.

To these general causes must be added local considerations upon which I have the advantage of a series of careful and interesting reports from my Helper in Walsall, who has kept me informed of every phase in the election. My Helper, although a stout Liberal, who worked energetically for his party, is yet too true to the Association of Helpers to allow his party predilections to blind him to the facts. From his reports I extract the following passages, which may be read with profit by the leaders of both parties. First, as to the issues on which the election turned. On this point our Helper is quite positive. The election, so far as the electors are concerned, did not turn upon Home Rule, but almost entirely upon personal questions. The following electioneering card issued by the Liberal candidate illustrates pretty clearly the position held by Home Rule in the contest:—

On the reverse of the card was printed—

The poor man's tea pays threepence in the shilling for taxation.

The rich man's tea pays a penny in the shilling for taxation!

The poor man's tobacco pays tenpence-halfpenny in the shilling for taxation.

The rich man's cigars pay a halfpenny in the shilling for taxation!

A shilling's worth of cheap beer pays threepence in taxation!

A shilling's worth of champagne pays a penny in taxation! Landlords get sixty-one millions per year from agricultural land!

The average wages of the labourers who till the land are 12s. a week!

Does any working man suppose he will help to right these wrongs except by voting Liberal?

On the Tory side the whole brunt of the attack was directed against the Liberal candidate, who, having been an active local public man, had of course his enemies, and was assailed most unsparingly on purely personal grounds. Our Helper writes :—

Politics proper were a very small factor in the contest. Home Rule, except as regards the Irish vote (which may be reckoned at 600) was a still less important factor, in spite of what may have been said or written on either side.

The "Unionists" proper in the borough, although we heard a great deal about them during the election, do not amount to more than fifty at the outside, and they had nothing whatever to do with the great decrease in the Liberal majority.

The undoubted cause of the reduction is that Walsall is not so Liberal as people have been accustomed to regard it.

Sir Charles Forster was greatly respected and honoured by the constituency, and so long as he remained people voted for him, not because they were Liberals, or because he was a Liberal, but simply because he had been their member for so long, and out of respect for him. Now that he is no more many people felt they were at liberty to vote as they liked, and therefore supported the most popular man. The truth is that the Walsall people, take them as a whole, are politically ignorant. Many of them have no politics, and do not even understand what politics are. All the talk of the Liberal speakers on Home Rule, or the various other items of the Liberal programme, was literally thrown away. Personalities on the Tory side went far further than all the arguments which the Liberals could and did bring forward.

Perhaps the most interesting feature in the election was the evidence which it afforded of the mischief which is being done to the Liberal cause by the impudent attempt of Sir Charles Dilke to thrust himself back into public life, in defiance alike of his own solemn pledges and the disgust of all decent people. One of the most effective, although one of the most unscrupulous, methods employed by the Tory party to discredit Mr. Holden was the following hand-bill, copies of which were circulated broadcast throughout the town :—

MR. HOLDEN'S INSULT TO NONCONFORMISTS.

Mr. Holden has openly insulted the Nonconformists of Walsall. Nonconformists at all their annual congressional assemblies have emphatically protested against the readmission of Sir Charles Dilke to public life; have declared it impossible that Christian men should consent to associate with him. Quite recently, at the Wesleyan conference, the president laid emphasis on the fact that while "public morality has been prominently before the country of late," there were "thousands resolved to put moral questions high above party." Mr. Holden is determined, so far as he dare, to prostitute politics by the introduction of a man utterly condemned in public estimation as supremely immoral—Sir Charles Dilke. He is too shrewd to place the name of Sir Charles on his placards, or engage him to speak at any of his big meetings; but, with his sanction, Sir Charles Dilke is holding informal meetings with the miners at Bloxwich, is staying at the principal hotel in the town, and has been brought to Walsall to try to catch a few miners' votes. NONCONFORMIST.

VOTE FOR FRANK JAMES,
"The Popular Candidate."

On this point our Helper reports as follows :—

Sir Charles Dilke had had an engagement of six months' standing to address the miners at Pelsall, three miles from Walsall, and outside of the Parliamentary borough. This engagement Mr. Holden or the local Liberals knew nothing about till the morning after his visit, when they saw the report of the meeting in the papers, and the only ground for the serious charge made by the Tories that Mr. Holden had invoked Sir Charles Dilke's assistance among the miners was that, as was natural, some of the speakers at the meeting urged those of the Walsall election present to support Mr. Holden, as pledged to the eight hours day for miners. All the rest of the Gazette's charges are sheer falsehoods. I can state on the very best authority that Sir Charles Dilke had no communication whatever with Mr. Holden or his agents. He did not stay in the town at all, and as far as any one to whom I have spoken knows, he was not even seen in the town. The matter was mentioned at the executive meeting on the morning that the charge appeared, and satisfactorily explained as above, and had there been the slightest truth in it, there were many on the committee (including two or three Nonconformist ministers), who, like myself, feel very strongly on this matter, who would have demanded that the Liberal candidate should have purged himself from any connection with Sir Charles Dilke on pain of losing our support.

The moral of this is that if the Liberal leaders wish to prevent their cause being tainted by this sinister influence they will urge Sir Charles Dilke not to come within fifty miles of any constituency in which a contest is going on for at least three weeks before the polling day.

Both the candidates replied to all the questions submitted to them by our Helper on behalf of our Association. It is noteworthy that both candidates declared themselves in favour of a Bill subjecting convicted adulterers to the same political disqualifications as fraudulent bankrupts.

The following is a brief analysis of their answers :—

Mr. Holden accepted the whole programme with only two limitations. As to the removal of the Irish members, he said, "I am in favour of Home Rule which should not impair the supremacy of the Imperial Parliament." He also demurred to the proposed establishment of municipal club-houses for social intercourse as a substitute for the taproom or the bar parlour. He thinks that the time is not ripe for this. To every other proposal he assents—the Irish Land question being struck out, as the Land Act has just been passed.

Mr. James, the Conservative candidate, is less satisfactory in his answer. He is opposed to the extension of full citizenship to women which Mr. Holden supports. He is only in favour of penny postage throughout the English-speaking world, if it can be carried without loss to the revenue. As to the opium question, he thinks the Chinese Government should prohibit the importation of poison from anywhere. He would reduce the representation of Ireland in the House of Commons. He opposes free meals for destitute scholars; thinks a six-days week law unnecessary, and evades the question as to the proposed Royal Commission to inquire into the means of promoting the civilisation of the common people. As to poor-law reform, all that he says is, "I am of opinion that a scheme for insurance or self-help can be formulated, by which every one would become entitled to a weekly allowance, not parish relief. I have long advocated some scheme of this sort in connection with friendly societies. I think, as a rule, every one should justify the necessity of his own existence."

With which enigmatical sentence I take leave of Mr. James.

The moral of Walsall is clear: (1.) Every seat should be contested at every election. The unopposed return of members leads to political lethargy. (2.) The Midlands must have a Liberal paper if they are to be kept or won back for the Liberal party; and (3.) the political education of Walsall should be vigorously taken in hand this winter. The Liberal Magic Lantern Mission could not find a more prosperous field.

LEADING ARTICLES IN THE REVIEWS.

THE CAUSE OF THE NEXT GREAT EUROPEAN WAR.

A PROPHECY BY M. DE BLOWITZ.

IN Harper's Magazine for September there is a remarkable article entitled "Germany, France, and General European Politics," by the Times correspondent in Paris. M. de Blowitz begins by telling us that he is not going to prophesy, and finishes by making a very remarkable prophecy, which, whether correct or not, is at least interesting, and has much plausibility about it.

WHY FRANCE HATES GERMANY.

M. de Blowitz tells us, what is undoubtedly true, that the open sore between France and Germany is not Alsace-Lorraine. If Germany were to give back Alsace to-morrow, France would hate her all the same, and still be determined to revenge the overthrow of 1870. But it is not in that direction that war will break out. Germany will not make war, because she has nothing to gain and everything to lose; and France will not make war because, victorious or vanquished, the Republic would disappear. From what quarter, then, must we look for the great European war which all anticipate but which may be indefinitely postponed?

AUSTRIA THE DANGER POINT.

M. de Blowitz answers his own question by asserting that the lawless love of Prince Rudolph, which hurried him into suicide, was the final act which made inevitable the coming war. The Emperor Franz Joseph is only sixty-one, and he may live some time. When he goes he will be succeeded by a man who seems to have been created for the express purpose of destroying the empire. M. de Blowitz says:—

Francis Joseph has a brother Charles Louis, who is the father of Francis Ferdinand Charles Louis Mary of Este, now considered presumptive heir of the Austro-Hungarian throne. Francis Ferdinand is twenty-eight years of age. He is unmarried. He is not known to have any friend of either sex. He is almost always seen alone. He has the long wan face of the Hapsburgs, sheepish, and without character; a leaden eye, a thin and expressionless mouth, a slow and tired gait. His physiognomy is at once timid, sly, and malicious. He hunts, he rides, he drives a four-in-hand, and that is about all he does. He is one of the most ignorant princes of the day. He can scarcely write even German; he writes meagre and worse than ordinary French; he has never been able to speak a word of English; and he is ignorant of all the various languages spoken on the soil of Austria. At eighteen, when he was emancipated, and when his professors bade him adieu, he burnt all his books, vowing that he would never touch another book in all his life, and he has so far kept his word. While in garrison at Linz one day, after a hearty lunch, he galloped across the fields, followed by a few officers who had been his guests. On the way he met a coffin carried by four peasants. He ordered it to be set on the ground, and made his horse leap over it, indulging in this horrible steeplechase in the presence of the bereaved family. The Bishop of Linz was angry, and went to complain to the Emperor. The latter sent for his nephew, struck him, and fined him 2,000 florins for the benefit of the outraged family, and the same sum for the Church, and banished him from court for twelve months.

A PAIR OF BROTHER BRUTES.

He was then eighteen. His brother Otho, who is younger than Ferdinand, but already married, is even worse. He, too, following the example of his elder brother, burnt his books at eighteen, vowing not to touch them again, and he too has kept his word. Of Otho this story is told: After a dinner, followed by the officers of his regiment, he wanted to enter the room where his wife was in bed to have tea made there. The commandant of the town objected to this unmannerly invitation. Otho complained. The Emperor approved the general. Thereupon Otho seized a dish of spinach and poured it over the bust of the Emperor which was in his dining-room. Summoned before the Emperor, he received the same treatment as his brother—the Emperor struck him, and banished him from court.

LIKE FATHER, LIKE SON.

Such are the two brothers, the elder of whom is to ascend the throne of the Hapsburgs, while the younger stands next in succession. I will not dwell on the anecdotes just related, notwithstanding their perfect accuracy. The Archduke Charles Louis, the father of these princes, has had three wives. He had no children by the first. By the second, Maria Annonciata, Bourbon of the Two Sicilies, he had three sons, Francis Ferdinand and Otho, already spoken of, and Ferdinand Charles, who at twenty-three is superior to the others, but has no prospect of the succession, Otho having already a son four years old. By his third marriage, with Maria Theresa, Duchess of Braganza, Charles Louis has two sons. This Maria Theresa has been anything but a good step-mother to the second wife's children. She is ambitious, and since the Crown Prince's death she dreams of the throne, and makes no secret of it. Her husband is a bigoted Russophil, two centuries behind his age, and the only maxim which he inculcated in his sons was this:—"Middle-class morality does not apply to you; you need take no account of it; the only opinion which you have to study is that of your family."

Attempts have been made recently to give Francis Ferdinand the demeanour of an heir to the crown; but his nature, refractory to all constraint, disheartens the most persevering; and the Emperor Francis Joseph, who tried to educate him politically, after a year's heroic persistency had to abandon the task.

PUPILS OF THE JESUITS.

In the face of these nullities, antipathetic and apathetic, ignorant and retrograde, unpopular and scornful, incapable and haughty, imagine this Austro-Hungarian Empire, a mosaic of eighteen or twenty provinces, districts, kingdoms or duchies, in which one hostile race elbows another—Magyar and Czech, Transylvanian and Carinthian, Illyrian and Tyrolian, German and Croatian—differing more widely than the poles in aspect, manners, habits, and language—and you will be able to form an idea of the outburst which will be imminent the day when Francis Joseph, the only now recognised symbol of unity, who ascended the throne at the eleventh hour of feudalism, shall have disappeared from this confusedly composed monarchy.

PRINCE FRANCIS FERDINAND.

Finally, it may be added, these three princes were educated by the Jesuits. In such conditions—namely, Jesuit education, paternal precepts such as the one just quoted, the harsh treatment of a step-mother, and the influence of an extremely Russophil father—were these three young men brought up, and developed into princes who would make even the firmest throne totter; and yet these are the princes who will be called upon to maintain a throne which for forty years has been threatening to collapse amid a general break-up of the empire.

Is it not evident that Russia, Germany, and Italy will immediately constitute a formidable band and league for dividing among themselves the spoils of the Hapsburgs?

LET GERMANY SEIZE ARGENTINA.

A SCANDALOUS PROPOSAL BY THE MARQUIS OF LORNE.

UNDER the title "Possibilities" the Marquis of Lorne publishes an article in the Deutsche Revue for September which Britons will read with amazement not altogether unmixed with indignation. It is hardly the duty of the son-in-law of our Queen, an ex-Governor-General of Canada, to go out of his way to spur the Germans into a policy of annexation, aimed avowedly at the seizure of territory which must inevitably gravitate into the hands of the English-speaking peoples. The Marquis of Lorne, not satisfied with the trouble and danger entailed upon us by the recent awakening of German colonial ambitions, devotes the greater part of his article to an attempt to goad the Germans into further efforts in the same direction.

GERMANS ABROAD CEASE TO BE GERMANS.

Here is the way in which he addresses himself to this mischievous task:—

Is it not surprising that the German nation, which has colonised half of the world, does not possess any colonies worthy of the name? Does it not sound something of a paradox when one considers this fact? On the whole east coast of England and Scotland the population is so Germanised by the mixture with Saxon blood that to-day many words and whole phrases are still in use just as they were brought over by the Angles and Saxons, and as they have been in use in Germany ever since that time. And our Anglo-Saxon language is now the language of intercourse for some 120 millions of persons who are scattered over the whole world, but of all this English-speaking territory not a single acre belongs to the German Fatherland. The Germans themselves are scattered about all over the United States. There are places there in which the Germans are so numerous that one may speak of German cities; but their descendants in the second or third generation speak nothing purely historical fact without practical value, and for which but English. Nay, more. As long as the German is at home he prefers to live under an energetic leader, to whom he gives every possible respect. How is it now that the Germans, when they emigrate from Fatherland, never take a leader with them, and that they prefer to leave their beloved officials quietly at home? All this is extraordinary and difficult to explain. As soon as the Germans turn their backs on their old country, their old governments, and their old officialdom, they go under as Germans.

THE FAILURE OF GERMAN COLONISATION.

This may, perhaps, be deplored by a German, but surely it is a consummation devoutly to be desired by every English-speaking man. This apparently is not Lord Lorne's opinion:—

I am quite certain that the German Empire is still capable of acquiring fame and advantage by its conquests warlike or diplomatic. If other nations can protect their traders with the force of arms, and send soldiers after the advancing merchant, till a new country has been added to the empire, Germany can do the same. But where? it will be asked. Where can such an attack be made with success and with honour? Can the colonies in New Guinea be further extended? Yes, if nothing more than disappointment is wanted. Or in Africa? There is nothing there but fever, midgets, and Portuguese. Or in the southern seas? There you would clash too much with your jealous cousins, and half a hundred South Sea Heligolands would not suffice to calm the rising wrath. Where then?

WHY NOT SEIZE THE ARGENTINE?

There is a country—which after recent events cannot easily be forgotten—the one country in which there is nothing but men to despise, the one country in which many citizens live who are not only of your blood, but who will also help you to cast your little crown, as our heralds say when a new throne is to be mounted. Yes, there is a country, of whose needs in every department of administration and finance we have heard enough lately, a country whose climate is pleasant and healthy, whose people have no self-consciousness and no eternal unity, and whose welfare depends on a foreign Power preventing them from knocking off each other's heads every few years, a pleasure they always take whenever they are left to themselves. There is a country with a beautiful capital, a splendid harbour, a good soil, in which everything is excellent except the government. This country—which only requires a European Protectorate to bring into it the long-desired order, and to make it an Eldorado—is Argentina. Here German rule, established in the form of a Protectorate or in any other form, would be welcome, because it would be capable of helping the country out of its distress. Now, I will be told that for that object it is too soon for Germany, and that we should of necessity be involved in a war; that it is work for volunteers, but not for the Empire, and so on; and that it is all good and beautiful, but then it is to be regretted if the Germans have not the means to enter upon the work to their advantage. One day another Power will come and do what must one time be done there, and the Germans at home, as well as our solitary friend on the Kilima-Njaro, will be angry; but then it will be too late.

Before a German flag is hoisted at Buenos Ayres, both England and the United States would have to be heard. And when they put their foot down the German flag would not go up.

In curious contrast to this article by the Marquis of Lorne in the Deutsche Revue, there is his brief paper, entitled "The British in East Africa," in the Nineteenth Century for September, the gist and object of which is to urge the English to exert themselves diligently in supporting the British East African Company for the sake of East Africa. More than four thousand slaves have been freed by the East African Company in eighteen months, and he asks whether it is manly or just to throw obstacles in the way of the regeneration and improvement of the natives among whom we have already established the pax Britannica. Lord Lorne says:—

The British Africa that will give our people another market for their goods will extend, for the purposes of commerce, from the Cape to Alexandria, from Zanzibar and Mombassa to the settlements at the mouth of the Congo. It will not be all under our flag; but our flag will fly on a continuous series of stations from south to north, whether our friends like the prospect or not, before another generation has come and gone.

FIRST STEPS TO ENGLISH-SPEAKING UNITY.

A SUGGESTION BY MR. CARNEGIE.

OF all the articles that are published in this month's magazines, the most helpful and hopeful is that which Mr. Andrew Carnegie contributes to the Nineteenth Century, entitled "An American View of Imperial Federation." Mr. Carnegie's paper consists of two parts. The first part, in which he attacks the programme of the Empire Trade League and generally vindicates the policy of unrestricted free trade for England, although clearly and forcibly written, is not the part of the paper that will do most good. The important part is the latter half, with which we are glad to find ourselves in very hearty concurrence.

A WIDER IDEAL THAN THE EMPIRE.

Mr. Carnegie objects to Imperial Federation on the very natural and sufficient grounds that the unity of the English-speaking races is a much higher and better ideal than that of the Imperial Federation of Great Britain and her colonies. In other words, Mr. Carnegie states, with his customary courage and lucidity, the great truth that—as we are accustomed to phrase it—very little will be done until the mischief that followed from the obstinacy of George III. has been counteracted by the establishment of an alliance between England and the United States. The English-speaking people outside the United Kingdom and the United States only number eleven millions, whereas the United States added twelve and a half millions to its population in the last ten years. Mr. Carnegie calculates that the child is born who will see more than four hundred million English-speaking people in the United States. Therefore any proposal to unite the English-speaking peoples which leaves the United States out is to attempt to play "Hamlet" with the part of Hamlet left out.

What kind of federation is that which leaves the Republic out? There is no obstacle to forming any tie with the Republic that can possibly be formed with the Commonwealth of Australia or the Dominion of Canada.

A RACE ALLIANCE.

Mr. Carnegie therefore asks all Imperial Federationists to consider some of the ideas that have been forced upon him from his study of the question. The first of these ideas is that Imperial Federation and Empire Trade Leagues should give place to Race Alliances, the only test being "if Shakespeare's tongue be spoken there, and songs of Burns still rend the air." Secondly, Mr. Carnegie thinks—and from this, of course, we shall all dissent heartily—that the parent land should urge her colonies to declare their independence. He thinks that we can do much to hasten the union of Canada with the United States by constantly reminding the Dominion of the union between England and Scotland and the happy results that have arisen therefrom. Thirdly—and here Mr. Carnegie is quite right—it would be well if English people would not continue to speak and act as if any State that did not adopt a policy of free trade was a fitting subject for an inquiry in lunacy. Fourthly, everything should be done to promote the assimilation of the political institutions of all English-speaking countries. That is to say, the nations enjoying the same language, literature, religion and laws, should also have the harmonising blessings of common political institutions.

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

Having thus cleared the ground, Mr. Carnegie proceeds to explain how he would give practical effect to the movement for the confederation of all the nations that have sprung from the race nurtured in these isles.

The first fruits of this movement would probably be seen in the appointment, by the various nations of our race, of international commissions, charged with creating a system of weights, measures, and coins, of port dues, patents, and other matters of similar character which are of common interest. If there be a question upon which all authorities are agreed, it is the desirability of introducing the decimal system of weights, measures, and coins; but an international commission seems the only agency capable of bringing it about.

CANADA THE LINK.

After this stage has been reached, and Mr. Carnegie, curiously enough, fails to insist upon the obvious point in his own favour that would be supplied by the merging of Canada in the United States, he sees clearly enough that it would remove a barrier, but he does not see that it would necessitate the establishment of a closer tie. Canada has grown up as part and parcel of the British system. Its law courts look up, not to Washington but to London, and when the shifting of allegiance comes, there will be endless chaos unless some court common to both countries can be established that will harmonise the difficulties that would otherwise be almost insuperable. Although he ignores this aspect of the case, Mr. Carnegie is fully alive to the necessity of establishing such a court on general grounds. War between English-speaking countries would now be regarded as fratricidal civil war, and therefore not to be thought of.

WANTED: A SUPREME COURT.

From this point Mr. Carnegie goes on as follows:—

Is it too much to hope that after this stage has been reached and occupied successfully for a period, another step forward would be taken, and that, having jointly banished war, a general council should be evolved by the English-speaking nations, to which may at first only be referred all questions of dispute between them? This would only be making a permanent body to settle all differences instead of selecting arbiters as required—not at all a serious advance—and yet it should be the germ from which great fruits should grow.

The Supreme Court of the United States is extolled by the statesmen of all parties in Britain, and has just received the compliment of being copied in the plan for the Australian Commonwealth. Building upon it, may we not expect that a still higher Supreme Court is one day to come which shall judge between the nations of the entire English-speaking race, as the Supreme Court at Washington already judges between States which contain the majority of the race?

The powers and duties of such a council once established may be safely trusted to increase; to its final influence over the race, and, through the race, over the world, no limit can be set; in the dim future it might even come that the pride of the citizen in the race as a whole would exceed that which he had in any part thereof; as the citizen of the Republic to-day is prouder of being an American than he is of being a native of any State in the Union.

A SECURITY FOR FUTURE PEACE.

This is a far look ahead, but Mr. Carnegie looks farther and sees in the federated English speakers a power that will be able to veto war throughout the world. Ours is the only race that is soon to become so much stronger than any other race or possible combination of races as if united to be omnipotent upon the earth. Mr. Carnegie's article concludes by declaring that—

Each member must be free to manage his own home as he thinks proper, without incurring hostile criticism or parental interference. All must be equal. Allies—not dependents.

But however numerous the children, there can never be but one mother of the English-speaking nations, and that mother, the great, honoured, and beloved by all her offspring, is: "This sceptred isle, my native island: God bless her."

HOW LARGE A MAJORITY SHALL I GET?

A CALCULATION BY MR. GLADSTONE.

IN "Electoral Facts—No. III.," Mr. Gladstone discusses the question of what will be the Home Rule majority in the next House of Commons from the data supplied by the by-elections of this Parliament. He reminds us that in November, 1878, on similar data he calculated that the Liberal majority of 1880 would be from 56 to 76. When the election came, it was proved that he had underestimated his majority, which rose to 115. Without claiming that he has underestimated his figures as much to-day, he subjects the 89 by-elections that have taken place in the present Parliament to four different methods by which their political significance can be estimated. These methods are all applied to Great Britain alone. The first is by comparing results of the by-elections solely with the results of the elections of 1886 in the same constituencies. By this method the Liberal majority for Great Britain in 1892 will be 46. By another computation on the same basis, by getting rid of the inconvenient fraction he raises the figure to 53. But by a third method, in which the standard of comparison is the result in these constituencies arrived at in the general election of 1885 he fixes the probable British majority at 85. His fourth criterion is the aggregate superiority at the polls which would bring the figures of the probable majority up to 97. To this solid working majority, varying from 46 to 97 in England, Scotland, and Wales, must be added the certain Home Rule majority in Ireland. At present that majority is 67, but supposing only a net 50 in the representation of Ireland, then the Home Rule majority in the next Parliament will be 96 or 147. Mr. Gladstone, of course, goes into particulars with his figures, and any one who demurs to the justice of his conclusions will find that he has his work set to answer them. For my own part, seeing the condition of the Midlands, and the fact that many constituencies were not contested in 1886, it would be unsafe to predict that the Liberal majority in 1892 will be much over 120 votes, but that it will be over 100, supposing that Mr. Gladstone lives, and that the baneful shadow of Sir William Harcourt is kept well out of sight, is about as certain as any electoral prophecy that has ever been made.

Mr. Gladstone's figures are worth while quoting. The total number of bye-elections from the end of August, 1886, to the end of August this year, excluding Lewisham, the result of which Mr. Gladstone did not receive in time, is 123—25 of which occurred in Ireland, and in nine of the constituencies there were two by-elections. This leaves Mr. Gladstone 89 constituencies which in 1886 returned 62 Unionists and 27 Home Rulers; in 1885, 45 were Liberal and 44 Tory. The result of the by-elections has been to bring back exactly to the figures of 1885, that is to say, the 62 Unionists have fallen to 44 and the 27 Home Rulers have increased to 45. Ministers, therefore, have lost two-sevenths of their seats in Great Britain since the general election. As they hold 389 seats altogether, they stand to lose, if the analogy of the by-elections holds good, at the general election, 107 seats, which will give the Liberals a majority of 46. Mr. Gladstone's second method of calculating is based on the rule of three sum. If 89 seats give the Liberals a gain of 18, how much will the 567 give them? Answer, 114; in that case the Liberals will have a majority of 53. Mr. Gladstone's method of calculating from the total polls is somewhat curious. The aggregate polled by the Unionists in 1886 was 75,182—this gives them a majority of 175; the Liberals on the 89 elections had a majority of 10,916 votes. If the electors poll at the General Election as they have polled at the by-elections all down the line, instead of there being a majority of 75,000 for the Unionists, there will be a majority of 68,501 for the Liberals. If a majority of 75,182 gives the Tories a majority of 175, what will the majority of 68,501 give to the Liberals? Answer, according to the rule of three sum, 157. Mr. Gladstone, however, thinks that there will be a total of 63 uncontested seats for the Unionists at the General Election. Deducting these 63 seats from the Liberal majority of 157, he arrives at his majority of 97. Mr. Gladstone claims that each of his calculations is like a separate strand of a rope—no one singly may be able to bear the stress, but when taken as a whole they come as near to demonstration as the subject matter will allow.

MODELS AND COSTUMES.

IN the Art Amateur, an American magazine devoted to art in the household, and published in London also by Messrs. Griffith, Farran and Co., there is an interesting chat on "Models and Costumes." According to Mr. Lamarche—

Artists living in cities or towns where it is impossible to obtain costumes that have been worn, and are not only correct in cut, but toned down and mellowed in colour by exposure to sun and air, should, before they paint them to represent the garments of the poor, put them on a dummy and set them in the sun, out of doors if possible. If they have no dummy, they can hang them in the sun; but in this way the draperies are more apt to fade in streaks, and not in the way they would if worn. The dummy is the best plan, as no free-born American or transplanted Hans or Bridget will put on a peasant's dress and fade it for you while he or she is hanging out clothes or weeding your flower beds.

On the other hand, Mr. J. G. Brown, in his careful study of the American gamin, has triumphed over the matter of costume, and in making his boys so much more interesting than their clothes, has become the recognised interpreter of one of the national types of the lower stratum. When asked how he got his subjects, he said he had to go out in the streets and look for them.

I find the most of them on the corner of Sixth Avenue and Thirty-second Street. When you have picked out your boy you don't always get him. Sometimes when you broach your business, he puts his thumb to the end of his nose, wags the fingers and jocosely remarks that you can't come that on him. When you tell him you will pay him a dollar a day for his services, he answers knowingly, "What er you givin' me?"

Some of my street boys are as good as old professionals at the business. They are obedient, pliable, will keep a difficult pose for a long time, and seem to be impressed with the seriousness of the work. But one I had very nearly drove me distracted. Arguing, coaxing, threatening were all utterly without effect; he would smile and smile and be a villain still. Finally, when worn out and exhausted with trying to do something with him—for the boy's face just suited the character I had in mind—I told him to get out; and he got out with the same smiling unconcern that had characterised his other feats during the day.

I never keep any costumes for such models; I want their clothes to look as if the models had lived in them. Besides, if I kept them in the studio, I should have to move out. I often have to have the windows open when the boys are posing.

HOW I SHALL START FOR THE NORTH POLE.

BY DR. NANSEN.

DR. NANSEN, who is well known on account of his journey across Greenland, has got an idea that he knows a way to the North Pole. Being young, comparatively inexperienced, and very courageous, he is going to put his theory to the test of experience, and next summer he intends to start for the North Pole via Behring Straits. His theory is an ingenious one, based chiefly upon the existence of a great polar current which runs southward along the east coast of Greenland. This current is at least 250 miles broad, and runs at least at the rate of two miles a day. Now, as this water runs out of the polar basin it must suck in water from the shores of Siberia and Behring Straits; that is to say, this east Greenland polar current drains the polar basin, carrying off the principal part of its current from Behring Straits, the Siberian rivers, the Nova Zembla current, and the rainfall of the region. The Nova Zembla current runs eastward and the Behring Straits current westward. These two currents unite in the neighbourhood of the New Siberian Islands, near the mouth of the river Lena, and then run the shortest way to the coast of Greenland. If so, this current will pass across or near the North Pole. This theory is supported, he thinks, by the direct evidence of the drift of the Jeanette, which, after having been abandoned north of the Behring Straits, drifted north-west for nearly two years, and ultimately sank north of the New Siberian Islands, near the place where the Greenland current is supposed to originate. Not only so, but a number of objects believed to belong to the Jeanette were found three years after she sank on the south-west coast of Greenland. Further, a "throwing-stick," of the fashion of Alaska, was found in Greenland, which must have drifted there in the same way as came the relics from the Jeanette. Another proof upon which he relies is the constant arrival of quantities of Siberian and American wood on the coast of Greenland. The accompanying map, reproduced from the Forum, will enable the reader to follow Dr. Nansen's speculations. Now, what Dr. Nansen is going to do is to have a wooden ship built as strong as it can be made, about 200 tons burden, with an engine strong enough to steam six knots an hour, and a hold capacious enough to carry food and coals for twelve men for five years. With this ship, which is to be steel sheathed, and so constructed as to be lifted out of the water when she is squeezed by the ice, he will proceed through Behring Straits to the New Siberian Islands, then he will push northward as far as he can in order to strike the current which carried the Jeanette to the north-west. By this means he hopes he will drift across the North Pole, and even if his ship is crumpled up he thinks they can live on the drift ice, and in any case a current must bring them out somewhere.

WHY DR. NANSEN WILL NOT REACH THE NORTH POLE.

General Greeley, of the Greeley Expedition, explains in the Forum that Dr. Nansen is all wrong in his data, that he will never get to the North Pole by the route which he suggests, and concludes by declaring that the latest North Pole Expedition is simply a scheme of self-destruction. Dr. Nansen's scheme, says General Greeley, seems to me to be based on fallacious ideas as to physical conditions within the polar regions, and to foreshadow, if attempted, barren results, apart from suffering and death among its members. After quoting twelve of the best authorities on Arctic navigation, General Greeley says he has no hesitation in asserting that no two of these believe in the possibility of Nansen's first proposition—to build a vessel capable of living or navigating in a heavy Arctic pack, in which it is proposed to put his ship. The second proposition is even more hazardous, involving as it does a drift of more than 2,000 miles in a straight line through an unknown region.

Further, General Greeley scouts the idea that the so-called Jeanette relics are genuine. Melville, who was the only surviving officer of the Jeanette, entirely denies their authenticity, and even if they were authentic there is no proof that they would come across the North Pole; they were much more likely to have come by Smith's Sound and Baffin's Bay. Further, General Greeley thinks that so far from there being open water across the North Pole, there is a cap of land which is covered with flat-topped icebergs. Nansen's ship also cannot be built strong enough to stand the nipping of the tremendous polar icebergs, which are 25 ft. thick and crumple up with a force measurable only by millions of tons. Not even if she were built solid could she escape destruction. As for the condition of her unfortunate crew, General Greeley says:—

Imagine, if one can, the horrors which a drift-journey in boats would entail, even in latitude 84 deg., with five months of unbroken night and continuous cold of extreme severity. Even if the travellers were spared by the ice-pack, disability of a single man from frost-bites, scurvy, or other disease would, in a critical situation, necessitate, as in De Long's case, sacrifice of the main party, or the heartless abandonment of a comrade.

The moral of the paper is that unless Dr. Nansen wishes to commit suicide, he had better remain at home.

THEOSOPHY MADE EASY;

OR, MILK FOR BABES. BY ANNIE BESANT.

In Lucifer for August 15 Mrs. Besant begins a series of papers entitled "The Seven Principles of Man," in which she promises to explain Theosophical doctrine in such a way that even the ordinary reader can understand it. For, as she says quite truly, "Inquirers attracted to Theosophy by its central doctrine of the Brotherhood of Man, and by the hopes it holds out of wider knowledge and of spiritual growth, are apt to be repelled when they make their first attempt to come into closer acquaintance with it, by the (to them) strange and puzzling names which flow glibly from the lips of Theosophists in conference assembled." Here is her introduction:—

Man, according to the Theosophical teaching, is a sevenfold being, or, in the usual phrase, has a septenary constitution. Putting it in yet another way, man's nature has seven aspects, may be studied from seven different points of view, is composed of seven principles. Whatever words may be used, the fact remains the same—that he is essentially sevenfold, an evolving being, part of whose nature has already been manifested, part remaining latent at present, so far as the vast majority of humankind are concerned. Man's consciousness is able to function through as many of these aspects, on as many of these planes, as have been already evolved in him into activity. A "plane" is merely a condition, a stage, a state; so that we might describe man as fitted by his nature, when that nature is fully developed, to exist consciously in seven different conditions, in seven different stages, in seven different states; or, technically, on seven different planes of being. To take an easily-verified illustration: a man may be conscious on the physical plane, that is in his physical body, feeling hunger and thirst, the pain of a blow or a cut. But let the man be a soldier in the heat of battle, and his consciousness will be centred in his passions, his emotions, and he may suffer a wound without knowing it, his consciousness being away from the physical plane and acting on the plane of passion and emotion: when the excitement is over, consciousness will pass back to the physical, and he will "feel" the pain of his wound. Let the man be a philosopher, and as he ponders over some knotty problem he will lose all consciousness of bodily wants, of emotions, of love and hatred; his consciousness will have passed to the plane of intellect, he will be "abstracted"—i.e. drawn away from considerations pertaining to his bodily life, and fixed on the plane of thought. Thus may a man live on these several planes, in these several conditions, one part or another of his nature being thrown into activity at any given time; and an understanding of what man is, of his nature, his powers, his possibilities, will be reached more easily and assimilated more usefully, if he is studied along these clearly defined lines, than if he be left without analysis, a mere confused bundle of qualities and states.

It has also been found convenient, having regard to man's mortal and immortal life, to put these seven principles into two groups—one containing the three higher principles and therefore called the Triad, the other containing the four lower and therefore called the Quaternary. The Triad is the deathless part of man's nature, the "spirit" of Christian terminology; the Quaternary is the mortal part, the "soul" and the "body" of Christianity. This division into "body, soul, and spirit," is used by Paul, and is recognised in all careful Christian philosophy, although generally ignored by the mass of Christian people.

Mrs. Besant then briefly describes Principle I., Sthula Sarira, the Physical Body. As Western science is almost ready to accept the Theosophical view that the human organism consists of innumerable "lives," which build up the cells, she dwells at more length on the second principle of the Astral Body or Linga Sarira, which supplies a working hypothesis that accounts for ghosts, clairvoyance, and other phenomena. Mrs. Besant is going to India in the autumn.

THE ETERNAL JEW ONCE MORE

BY PROF. GOLDWIN SMITH AND OTHERS.

The magazines still reek with the odour of the Ghetto. The first place unquestionably belongs to Professor Goldwin Smith's paper in the North American for August, in which he sets forth the other side of the case, of which very little has been heard for some time. Most of the papers that appear on the persecution of the Jews leave the impression that 200,000,000 of more or less civilised and Christianised Europeans have lost their senses, and in a lunatic sort of way, without even any plausible pretext, are persecuting the noblest and the best members of the community because they worship in the synagogue and not in the church. Professor Goldwin Smith's paper is valuable if only because it affords the ordinary reader some glimmering idea of the kind of arguments by which the Russians, the Germans, and the eastern Europeans persuade themselves that they are not only justified in legislating against the Jew, but are compelled to do so by the instinct of self-preservation. However mistaken they may be, it is at least a gain to have intelligibly stated the conviction upon which they are almost unanimously acting.

RUSSIA NOT GIVEN TO PERSECUTION!

Mr. Goldwin Smith vitiate his paper at the beginning by asserting that the Russian Government is not given to persecution. He says:—

Persecution is not the tendency of the Russian or of the Church to which he belongs. The Eastern Church, while it has been superstitious and torpid, has always been tolerant, and, compared with other orthodox Churches, free from the stain of persecution. It has not even been proselytising, nor has it ever sent forth crusaders.

That is all nonsense, and with regard to the last assertion—that about the crusaders—it is palpably ridiculous nonsense. So far from Russia never having furnished crusaders, she is the only crusading nation left in Europe at the present day. All her wars against Turkey were crusading wars. The assertion as to the tolerance of the Russian Government is less grotesque, but it is sufficient to mention the name of Pobedonostzeff, in order to show how far it is from being correct. What Dean Stanley said was true, but it was before that dark shadow of persecuting bigotry had fallen athwart the throne of the Tzar.

THE JEWS AS A PARASITIC RACE.

Leaving this, however, on one side, Mr. Goldwin Smith has a good deal to say, and says it very well:—

In Germany, in Austria, in Roumania, in all the countries of Europe where this deplorable contest of races is going on, the cause of quarrel appears to be fundamentally the same. It appears to be economical and social, not religious, or religious only in a secondary degree. That the Jews have had liberty of worship and education, the existence of 6,319 synagogues and of 77 Jewish schools supported by the State, besides 1,165 private and communal schools, seems clearly to prove. A Roman cardinal, before he flings his stone at the Russian Church for persecuting the Jews, should think of the records of his own Church and look into the Encyclical which he holds in his hand.

What, then, is the explanation of the mystery? Why are the Jews persecuted, if it is not on account of their religion? Professor Goldwin Smith answers the question from the reports of British Consuls on the persecution of the Jews, 1881:—

The explanation of the whole trouble, and of all the calamities and horrors attending it, past or to come, is that the Jews are, to adopt the phrase borrowed by Vice-Consul Wagstaff from natural history, a parasitic race. Detached from their own country, they insert themselves for the purpose of gain into the homes of other nations, while they retain a marked and repellent nationality of their own. The Jew is now detested, not only because he absorbs the national wealth, but because, when present in numbers, he eats out the core of nationality.

Mr. Smith reminds his readers that statements as to Russian atrocities should be accepted with a considerable grain of salt. Even as to the prisons and prison system he invokes the work of Mr. Lansdell—an apparently honest and sober writer, who, after thorough inspection on the spot, depicts the Russian prison system as simply like other things in Russia, below the level of advanced civilisation, while he vastly reduces the number and sufferings of political exiles. Of these exiles, many, it must be remembered, are members of a murder-club which assassinated the emancipator of the serfs. When the quarrel is Jewish, more than usual caution is required, since the press of Europe is to a great and increasing extent in the hands of Jews.

What, then, must be done? Mr. Smith has no hesitation in giving us an answer. The Jews must be derabbinised and denationalised, and they must cease to be circumscribed:—

The derabbinisation is far advanced, but the denationalisation will not be complete, or anything like complete, till the Jew gives up the tribal rite of circumcision, which must always carry with it tribal sentiment and a feeling of separation from the rest of mankind.

It is in eastern Europe and in Russia, where the Jews are massed and where they are still thoroughly Talmudic, that the trouble arises, and the end of it does not seem near. If the quarrel were religious, the preaching of religious toleration might allay it; but we have seen that it is not religious, but economic, social, and national. What the peasant wants is not that Jews should be forcibly converted, or that they should be prevented from worshipping in their own synagogues after their own fashion, but that they shall be freed from alien usury and domination. He would hardly desire anything so cruel as the expulsion of the Jews from the land which has long been their home, if it were possible that their habits and bearing should be changed. But it is not likely that the yoke of the Jew will become less galling, or that the sufferance of the people will increase.

In the Forum the Jews have it all their own way. Dr. Geffcken prophesies evil things concerning Russian finance. A Russian Hebrew barrister of the name of Hourwitch describes the severity and extent of the persecution in an article in which he indignantly denies almost every statement which Mr. Goldwin Smith makes. Among other assertions, he says that in the seventeenth century the Cossacks massacred 900,000 Jews in Little Russia, an assertion which causes us to receive with a considerable degree of caution the other statements of the writer. His theory of the action of the Russian Government is thus stated:—

Thus it appears clear that the persecution of the Jews is a constituent part of a calculated and well-planned scheme on the side of the government. By instigating the Ests and Lettonians against the Baltic Germans, the latter and the Poles against the Jews, and the orthodox Russian "nation" against all, the government intends to put one half of the population of the empire—the orthodox Russians—in the position of a "predominating nation" prevailing over all the rest through their all-powerful national autocratic government. Divide et impera!

But this does not account for the anti-Semitic movement in countries outside the Russian pale. There is almost as much detestation of the Jew at Berlin and at Rome as at St. Petersburg and Bucharest.

Baron Hirsch has another paper, in which he repeats what he has said before, but adds, however, one or two new facts, as this, for instance:—

In the lands where Jews have been permitted to acquire landed property, where they have found opportunity to devote themselves to agriculture, they have proved themselves excellent farmers. For example, in Hungary they form a very large part of the tillers of the soil, and this fact is acknowledged to such an extent that the high Catholics in Hungary almost exclusively have Jews as tenants on mortmain properties, and almost all large landholders give preference to the Jews on account of their industry, their rectitude, and their dexterity.

Anti-Semitism, he proclaims, is dying out in Hungary, and will die out in France for want of combatants. He says:—

Wealth has its obligations as well as its privileges. No class has ever been more ready to recognise and discharge those obligations than the Jews, who, in all countries where they have amassed sufficient property to free themselves from absolute want, have been foremost in works of philanthropy, irrespective of creed or race.

The Rothschilds and others have a good deal to do before they can make any adequate impression upon the human misery which exists among their poor compatriots.

From America.]

IS THERE NO SAFE REFUGE ON EARTH FOR THE WANDERING JEW?

DIAMOND DIGGING IN SOUTH AFRICA.

BY LIEUT.-COLONEL KNOLLYS.

ONE of the brightest and most interesting papers in the September magazines is Lieut.-Colonel Knollys' account of diamond digging in South Africa, which appears in Blackwood's Magazine for September. I do not remember to have ever read a vivid picture of that extraordinary treasure trove, the possession of which enabled the De Beers Company in 1887 to produce over £4,000,000 sterling worth of diamonds from four mines of a total area of 111½ acres. Such a crop was never before harvested from so small an area. The whole process of the harvesting is carefully but brilliantly described by Lieut.-Colonel Knollys. Fifteen hundred white men at £1 a day, and 12,000 natives at 5s. for twelve hours' labour, find constant employment at the diamond mines. They work in the diamondiferous region, which is enclosed and screened by means of high barbed wire-fencing and lofty corrugated-iron hoarding, as skilfully disguised as one of Vauban's fortresses; and is further safeguarded externally at night by numerous armed patrols, and by powerful electric lights casting a glare on every spot otherwise favourable to intending marauders.

IN A DIAMOND MINE.

At the bottom of a long incline, in tunnels nearly 800 feet below the surface of the earth, the mine runs through the very heart of the diamond-bearing stratum. It is hot, stifling, and intensely dark. The natives work as nude as statues, and as unconscious of their nakedness as Adam and Eve before the fall. The mine is sloppy and dirty, and every now and then a deafening roar announces that dynamite blasting is going on in a neighbouring chamber.

Almost the only fatal accident of magnitude recorded in the annals of these mines occurred three years ago, when some timber caught fire, and over three hundred imprisoned natives were choked to death. The ruling passion for gain then proved strong up to the last; many bodies were found in attitudes which showed that their dying gasps had been expended in efforts to plunder their comrades of the little leather purses which most of them wear suspended round the waist.

HOW THE DIAMONDS ARE PICKED OUT.

Lieut.-Colonel Knollys found members of well-known county families working as day labourers, and there is a tradition in the mines of a tallyman who employed the interval between counting trucks by reading an elaborate treatise on conic sections. The blue diamondiferous earth is sent to the top in trucks, each of which holds 1,600 lb. from which in due course of time 1½ carat weight of diamonds will be extracted. The diamondiferous earth is distributed over the open country to the depth of 2½ feet, where in six months the weather disintegrates the earth with the assistance of constant harrowing and watering. Then the disintegrated soil is taken to the washing machine, and the smallest diamonds are extracted with the most absolute certainty by an ingenous machine called the pulsator, which Lieut.-Col. Knollys describes as clearly as he knows how. £10 worth of diamonds are said to be stolen, chiefly by the English labourers, for every £100 worth discovered. Every visitor is watched carefully and constantly. The precautions taken to prevent natives from removing the diamonds are most elaborate.

THE DIGGERS IN THEIR COMPOUND.

Lieut.-Col. Knollys' account of the native compound, covering an area of one and a half acres, surrounded by a corrugated iron wall ten feet high and guarded by warders, and bolts and bars like a prison, is very interesting. Beer, spirit, and alcohol in any form is rigidly excluded. Gambling goes on without check. But there is not the slightest difficulty experienced in maintaining order. A certain number of tribal princelets, who receive wages but never do a stroke of work, contribute materially to maintaining the peace. The different tribes have different quarters assigned to them. Each native binds himself to remain a prisoner for three months at least, and during that period they are not allowed to quit the enclosure on any pretext whatever. They seem to be very happy, and have adopted a fashion of smoking their cigars with the lighted end in their mouths, a method which is said to be warm, comforting, delicious, and far superior to the usual mode. Lieut.-Col. Knollys was at the opening of the Wesselson Diamond Fields.

RHODES'S COUNTRY.

He praises the Beaconsfield Institute and Club and Boarding-house, where every provision has been made for supplying meals, washing, reading, writing, and recreation on a complete scale of civilised comfort. He has even greater praise for the Kimberley Town Hospital. In conclusion he says:—

In truth, Englishmen have every reason to be proud of this South African town as worthily representing our nation. Free from much of the rowdiness and sharp practice of many gold-mining districts, from the surly loutishness and savage treatment of natives which render odious certain Boer settlements, and from the bar-and-billiard propensities of a very considerable section of torpid Cape Town manhood, the law-abiding characteristics of Kimberley are unimpeachable, its energy and enterprise are incontestable, and the gentleman-like highly educated tone of its society is unsurpassed throughout this part of the world.

GOLDEN PRAGUE AND ITS JUBILEE EXHIBITION.

"GOLDEN PRAGUE!" That is how the Bohemian speaks of his capital, and indeed Prague not only has a glorious past to boast of, but it is one of the architecturally interesting cities of the world. It is now the scene of an industrial exhibition, which came into existence as a fitting commemoration of a similar exhibition at Prague a hundred years ago. As Bohemia has a reputation for its glass industry, specimens of its manufactures in glass are accorded a place of honour. Quite a number of pavilions have been built by the aristocrats of the country, and are called after them. They contain specimens of the products of their great estates. Prague is a city of churches and bridges. It has forty-seven Catholic churches, besides twenty-three chapels, three evangelical churches, ten synagogues, a Russian Orthodox church, and twenty-two convents and monasteries. In Ueber Land und Meer, Heft 2, Dr. Adolph Kohut describes Prague at length, while the Kritische Revue aus Oesterreich contends that the exhibition is a political affair.

Protestant Propaganda in Spain.—Mr. Meakin, writing, in the Missionary Review of the World for August, on the Bible in Spain, gives an account of the work that is being done in that Catholic country by Protestant missionaries.

No less than fifteen Protestant societies are at work in Spain, occupying 115 houses or rooms as chapels and school buildings. The American board has three missionaries and thirty-three native helpers, eighteen churches with 349 members, and 604 pupils in schools. The American Baptists in Spain and France together have eighteen missionaries and thirteen churches, with a membership of 900.

THE QUEEN'S PRIVATE GARDENS AT OSBORNE.

In the English Illustrated Magazine for September Mr. L. R. Wheeler describes Her Majesty's private garden at Osborne. The garden is the private property of Her Majesty and not under control of the Office of Works. It is here that are kept all the relics of the gardening pursuits of the present Royal family when they were small children, together with a museum of curiosities, from all parts of the world, collected by these same children after they had grown up.

"SWISS COTTAGE."

Osborne House, which has been added to frequently since the Queen first took possession, is some distance away from the private gardens. In the middle of this miniature paradise of flowers, a chalet called the Swiss Cottage stands surrounded by huge pines and other trees, such as one sees growing luxuriantly in Switzerland. To these gardens, morning and evening in summer, the Queen proceeds in her small pony phaeton, Princess Beatrice walking by her side, and the faithful henchmen in attendance.

Armed with special permission I had no difficulty in entering the gardens and enlisting the services of the head gardener, who had previously been in service with the late Lord Beaconsfield, at Hughenden, and Dean Stanley and Lady Augusta; and many were the affectionate reminiscences the gardener had to tell of both his previous employers. Every portion of the ground, some three acres in extent, under his charge was a blaze of colour.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AS A CARPENTER.

On the right of the entrance gate stands the children's toolhouse, built (as a slip of wood in the Queen's handwriting records) by the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh in 1857. It is still in splendid preservation, for the late Prince Consort always taught his children to do things well. Judging from the large toolhouse, the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh were no mean adepts at carpentering, the boarding of the sides being substantially put together and the gables of the roof mortised in true form; frequently when the Prince of Wales visits the gardens, he looks critically round this shed to see that the joinings are secure. It is kept exactly as it was when the Princes and Princesses were young; the barrows and garden tools being in an excellent state of preservation. Each child had a perfect set of tools with a barrow and waggon, and the Queen had a special waggon for herself, in which the children often drew her about. The initials of each of the Royal children are painted on the back of the implements, with the exception of those of Princess Beatrice and the Duke of Albany, who were then very young and had to put up with a toy horse-and-cart and a very small barrow.

PRINCE ALFRED AND PRINCE ARTHUR AS MASONS.

The Dukes of Edinburgh and Connaught were very fond of building stone and brickwork, and their handiwork can be seen in another part of the gardens in the shape of a miniature fortress called "the Albert Barracks," which was finished October 2nd, 1860. It was under the eye of the Prince Consort these fortifications were commenced, and splendid sham battles were fought here by the children, the Duke of Connaught and the Duke of Edinburgh defending their works against the combined attack of their brothers and sisters. It is an oft-repeated story that sometimes the attack, led by the Prince of Wales, was too much for Prince Alfred and Prince Arthur, who were driven off the battlements into the underground chamber which was proof against capture, and in which they had a separate store of arms. The fortress is kept in exactly the same order as it was then, and the Duchesses of Albany's and the Princess Beatrice's children often now scamper over the deep ditch in front and play again the games of their uncles and aunts.

THE MARRIAGE MYRTLE OF THE ROYAL FAMILY.

Close to the fortress grows a tree which has one of the most interesting of histories. It is a myrtle some 5 ft. high, growing luxuriantly, although nipped considerably by last winter's harsh winds. This tree, as the inscription tells us, was grown from a sprig of myrtle taken by the Queen from the Princess Royal's wedding bouquet on the day of her marriage with the late German Emperor. The inscription under the tree states "Myrtle grown from a sprig of the Princess Royal's Marriage Nosegay, January 25th, 1858. Planted by Queen Victoria, February 17, 1878, in honour of the marriage of her granddaughter, Princess Charlotte of Prussia." The latter was the eldest daughter of the Empress Frederick. Sprays from this tree have since done duty in the bouquets of other Royal brides and, to judge by its condition, the tree will provide bouquets for many years to come.

TREE PLANTING FOR DEATH AND MARRIAGE.

Every tree planted in these gardens seems to flourish, particularly the many trees planted by the Royal family in February, 1862, to perpetuate the memory of their father, the late Prince Consort, who died in December, 1861. These form an avenue in themselves of exceeding beauty.

What might almost be called a sacred grove of trees is in another part of the gardens, close to the museum, stocked with curiosities collected by the Royal Family in all parts of the globe; a crocodile from the Nile, shot by the Duke of Connaught; a huge eagle shot by the Prince of Wales in the East; huge tusks of ivory nearly eight feet long; a mummy in its case; and various shells, butterflies and pebbles. In front of this is the glade of trees which commemorates the marriage of each one of the Queen's children. First come two splendid firs in memory of the Prince of Wales's wedding, planted there by the Prince and Princess after their honeymoon; then two planted by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh; and near at hand the budding trees of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Henry of Battenberg and Princess Beatrice, and the Duke and Duchess of Albany. The Queen frequently takes her afternoon tea on the lawn amidst these emblems of the happy union of her children.

THE GARDENS OF THE ROYAL CHILDREN.

There is only one bed of flowers in this beautiful grass plot which is in summer fragrant with the scent of pinks and carnations, and this is always watched by the Princess Beatrice, who tends and cares for the flowers for the Queen's delight. The Queen loves gardening, and all her children were taught to dig and plant flowers, fruit and vegetables in season. Each child had a separate garden and each had exactly the same kinds of vegetables and flowers. These gardens are still kept up exactly as the Princes and Princesses cultivated them years ago.

Princess Beatrice is still very fond of her gardens and may often be seen with her children weeding and hoeing them. She has, however, another care in a field quite close, that takes more attention, and this is a huge pack of rabbits of the long-woolled or Angora species. Their wool is used by the Princess for spinning, and with it she weaves most beautiful articles, which she contributes to charity bazaars.

HOW TO AVERT LITIGATION.

A GOOD EXAMPLE FROM NORWAY.

"To relieve the courts from drudgery, without depriving the people of their rights, to obtain legal redress for legal wrongs, be they ever so insignificant, is the object of the Court of Conciliation in Norway and Denmark. It has served its purpose so well that it has become the most popular tribunal in each country." The following, says the Atlantic Monthly for September, is a reasonably full outline of the main features of this institution as it exists in Norway :—

Every city, every village containing at least twenty families, and every parish constitutes a separate "district of conciliation." The districts are small in order to make it as easy as possible for the parties to attend the court, as personal attendance is the main feature of the proceedings. The court, or commission, as the statute styles it, is made up of two members, one of whom acts as chairman and clerk. These officials are chosen for a term of three years, at a special election, by the voters of the district, from among three men nominated by the city or parish council. Only men above twenty-five years of age are eligible, and the law expressly provides that only "good men" may be placed in nomination. The court meets at a certain place, day, and hour, every week in the cities, and every month in the country districts. It is not public. The proceedings are carried on with closed doors, and the commissioners are bound to secrecy. Nothing of what transpires is permitted to reach the outside world. Admissions or concessions made by one party cannot be used against him by his adversary, if the case should come to trial in the regular courts. But a party willing to settle before the commissioners is entitled to their certificate to that effect.

The court of conciliation has jurisdiction in all civil or private cases. Appearance before the commissioners is compulsory in all such cases and the first step in a proceeding. The law court will dismiss, ex officio, every case of this class that does not come up to it from the court of conciliation with a certificate of the commissioners attesting that an effort at a reconciliation of the parties has been duly made before them.

The mode of procedure in the peace court is as simple as it could possibly be. The plaintiff states his case in writing, reciting in plain, everyday language the facts upon which he bases his complaint, and what he wants the defendant to do or refrain from doing, and requesting that the latter be cited to meet the plaintiff in the court of conciliation to try to reach an agreement in the manner prescribed by law. The senior commissioner writes the court's summons upon the complaint, citing both parties to appear at its next or second sitting, as the case may be. A fee of 25 cents is charged for issuing the summons, to which is added 50 cents in the event a conciliation is effected. These comprise all the costs in this court, and also all that this court costs. The commissioners receive no other compensation than these small fees.

The litigants must appear in person, except in cases of sickness or very pressing business engagements, when the use of a representative is allowed, provided, however, that he be not a practising attorney. Lawyers are rigidly excluded from the court of conciliation, except, of course, when they attend in their own behalf. If a party fail to appear in person without good excuse, he will be adjudged to pay the costs in the law court even if he should win the case. Rules and forms play only a secondary part. The character and object of the court make it pre-eminently a forum of common sense unfettered by legal fictions.

The very atmosphere of the lowly court room has a softening influence on those who enter it armed for a contest for legal rights. The judges are personally known to them, or are perhaps their friends, and are recognised as men in whose impartiality and integrity they can have implicit confidence. Even the humblest citizen feels that in this forum he treads upon firm and familiar ground. There are no intricate formalities to becloud the issue, no array of lawyers to confuse him, no crowd of curiosity-seekers to gloat over his discomfort. The judges and the contestants are the only ones present. Everything induces to an open, frank, and dispassionate discussion of the points at issue. Each party looks upon the commissioners as disinterested, trustworthy, and friendly counsellors, who will give him only such advice as will subserve his best interests.

Why cannot we establish such Courts of Conciliation throughout the English-speaking world?

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF RAILWAYS.

THE CASE STATED BY AN AMERICAN.

MR. C. WOOD DAVIS, of Goddard, Kansas, completes in the August number of the Arena one of the most thorough articles on railway purchase that has appeared in the magazines for several months.

OBJECTIONS TO NATIONAL OWNERSHIP.

In the July Arena Mr. Davis confined his remarks to an enumeration of the objections to national ownership of railways, the strongest of which, as given, were that such a change would necessitate an increase in the number of civil servants, and thereby might enable the dominant political party to perpetuate its power; that the service would be less efficient than under the present system of control; that government railroads would not be capable of any progressive improvements as are privately owned roads; that both lines and service would cost more, and that unnecessary lines would be constructed for political purposes in certain sections of the country, and other parts fail to secure needed lines on account of the red tape that would be in use.

THE ADVANTAGES OF NATIONAL OWNERSHIP.

The advantages of national ownership, which form the subject-matter of the second part of his paper, are given without modification or reservation. First among these advantages, it is held, would be a stability and uniformity of railroad rates which under the present form of management is impossible. National ownership would place the rate-making power in one body, with no inducement to act otherwise than impartially. In only two important countries besides the United States, namely, Great Britain and Canada, are corporations permitted to fix rates. Another advantage would be such an adjustment in rates that traffic would take the natural short route and not be sent "around Robin Hood's barn," as under corporate ownership. It is estimated that a saving of £5,000,000 per year could be effected if this change to national ownership had but this one result. £4,000,000 could also be saved, it is maintained, through the reduction in the number of men employed in towns entered by more than one line. One central station and one staff of officers would be quite enough in the ordinary town. Then, too, the expenses of railroad attorneys would be dispensed with. The present yearly expenditure of corporate-owned railways in the United States for attorneys' salaries is given as £2,800,000.

All told, Mr. Davis thinks £32,000,000 might be reasonably saved through the purchase and operation of railways in this country by the Government.

THE SEAMY SIDE OF AUSTRALIA.

BY MR. CHRISTIE MURRAY AND MR. F. ADAMS.

MR. CHRISTIE MURRAY, in the Contemporary for September, concludes his interesting papers on the Antipodeans. He is sympathetic, but faithful, and some of his facts are startling indeed. The Australians, he says, are among the best educated people in the world, but they are also the least commercially sound, the rowdiest, and the most drunken. In Victoria and New South Wales we find an insolvency to every 1,700 of the population, as against every 6,000 in the United Kingdom; twenty-nine convictions, as against seven in the United Kingdom; and seven deaths from alcoholism, as against three in the United Kingdom.

The figures for insanity, alcoholism, suicide, and crimes of violence are sadly large. In Victoria one person in every 105 of the population was in prison during some part of the year 1888. In the United Kingdom for that year the average of convictions in proportion to population was 3.64 per 10,000. In New South Wales it was 8.59, and in the whole of Australasia it amounted to 6.15, although South Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania showed a joint average of only 3.81. In the United Kingdom the average of suicide is 5.5 to every 100,000. In Victoria it is 11.6, in New South Wales 9.5, and in Queensland 13.7. In the United Kingdom the average of deaths from excessive drinking is 54 in a million. In Victoria it is 113.50—more than double. In New South Wales crimes of violence are almost four times as numerous as in New Zealand, where everything is tolerably normal from the British standpoint.

Western Australia consumes more alcohol than any other colony, and Queensland drinks three times as much per head as is drunk in England.

Parental control, as we know it in England, has faded out entirely. There is no reverence in the rising generation, and the ties of home are slight. Age and experience count for little. The whole country is filled with a feverish, restless, and reckless energy. Everybody is in a hurry to be rich.

Mr. Christie Murray laments that the slang of Australia is not good; it is ugly, and good for nothing but to be forgotten. The people confound courtesy with servility, and there is more swearing to the square mile than suffices for the crowded millions of Great Britain. The new racial type which is being produced in the country is less healthy and harder than the English, but taller, slimmer, more alert, and the best horsemen in the world.

As a kind of supplement to Mr. Christie Murray's article in the Contemporary, we have Mr. Francis Adams's paper on "The Social Life in Australia" in the Fortnightly for September. Mr. Adams is a good writer; his picture of Australia is clear and vivid, and although he exaggerates somewhat the genius and influence of the Sydney Bulletin, he says what he has to say clearly, and writes what he believes, qualifications not always combined. Speaking of the moral side of Australia Mr. Adams says that they have the taint of cruelty, and that they have a suppressed viciousness which is twice as dangerous as the outspoken wrath of the vigorous Anglo-Saxon.

Educated in a secular manner, even in the denominational grammar schools, our new-world youth is a pure positivist and materialist. Religion seems to him, at best, a social affair, to whose inner appeal he is profoundly indifferent. History is nothing to him, and all he knows or cares for England lies in his resentment and curiosity concerning London, with the tales of whose size and wonders the crowd of travelling "new chums" for ever troubles him.

Melbourne, he says, is in reality pagan with a raw Presbyterianism which closes its museums on Sundays. Sydney is equally pagan, minus Presbyterianism.

Sunday is rapidly becoming Continental. Public galleries are open; concerts are given; endless trips and picnics about the harbour and to pleasure resorts; boating and sailing in all sorts of yachts—more and more the characteristics of a careless, pleasure-loving race are developed as secularly educated Young Australia, the true religious Gallo, gets his own way.

Mr. Adams is a fearful pessimist concerning the greater ideals of our race:—

History is identified with religion, and as such excluded from the "curriculum"; so that the sense of the poetry of the past and the solidarity of the race is rapidly being lost to the young Australian. To the next generation England will be a geographical expression, and the Empire a myth in imminent danger of becoming a bogey.

He concludes his paper by telling us that the culture of the Antipodes is in as bad a way as its society.

A PROPHECY.
From the Sydney Bulletin.

In the Nineteenth Century for September, the Hon. John Fortescue, in an article entitled "Guileless Australia: A Rejoinder," replies to Mr. Willoughby's defence of Australian credit in an article in which he repeats many disagreeable things which he has carefully gleaned from the Australian press. He sticks to it that the Labour party will land Australia in bankruptcy, and that repudiation will necessarily follow.

UNDER the title of "Eve's Mission," the Westminster Review for September reviews Mlle. Deraismes' courageous and thoroughgoing defence of the right of women to full citizenship. The author declares that the differences between the two sexes are more formal than essential. The inferiority of women is not an act of nature; it is a human invention, a social fiction.

In the same Review Miss C. H. De Leppington discusses the question of woman's labour and woman's wages under the title of "Side Lights on the Sweating Commission."

The British Book Maker, Vol. iv. 1890-91 (Raithby, Lawrence and Co., Ltd., 25, Pilgrim Street, Ludgate Hill, E.C.)

In these days of rapid printing it is a real pleasure to handle a book of this character, bearing upon each page the marks of leisurely production. The book serves as a monument of the labours of the book printer, illustrator, cover designer, binder, and is therefore of interest to every book-lover.

MR. RUSSELL LOWELL.

BY MR. BRET HARTE AND OTHERS.

MR. BRET HARTE contributes to the New Review a criticism on Mr. Russell Lowell's place in literature which has only one fault—it is too short. As befits an American, Mr. Bret Harte is proud of Lowell, but proud of him with limitations. Bret Harte being a Californian, a native of the Pacific slopes, cannot help feeling that Lowell was too much of a New Englander, and perhaps too much of an Old Englander, if the truth be said. Still, this is forgiven him in death, although possibly, if he had been alive, Bret Harte would have put it more strongly. Mr. Lowell's chief achievement in literature, he declares, was the discovery of the real Yankee.

It remained for Mr. Lowell alone to discover and portray the real Yankee—that wonderful evolution of the English Puritan, who had shaken off the forms and superstitions, the bigotry and intolerance of religion, but never the deep consciousness of God. It was true that it was not only an allwise God, but a God singularly perspicacious of wily humanity; a God that you had "to get up early" to "take in"; a God who encouraged familiarity, who did not reveal Himself in vague thunders, nor answer out of a whirlwind of abstraction; who did not hold a whole race responsible—but "sent the bill" directly to the individual debtor.

Mr. Bret Harte also points out the extraordinary completeness of Mr. Russell Lowell's career.

A strong satirical singer, who at once won the applause of a people inclined to prefer sentiment and pathos in verse; an essayist who held his own beside such men as Emerson, Thoreau, and Holmes; an ironical biographer in the land of the historian of the Knickerbockers; and an unselfish, uncalculating, patriot selected to represent a country where partisan politics and party service were too often the only test of fitness—this was a triumphant record. His death seems to have left no trust or belief in his admirers betrayed or disappointed. The critic has yet risen to lament a wasted opportunity, to point out a misdirected talent, or to tell us that he expected more than Mr. Lowell gave. Wonderful and rounded finish of an intellectual career.

Mr. Sidney Low contributes to the Fortnightly for September an intelligent and appreciative criticism of Mr. Russell Lowell. He recognises the fact, ignored by so many of Lowell's superfine critics, that Mr. Lowell was at bottom a prophet and an apostle.

He was in no sense a mere scholarly dilettante, as some have chosen, with surely very little warrant, to consider him. His taste for experiment and imitation did not for a moment lead him to intellectual servility. If he sometimes played on other men's instruments, he played his own tune. It was the tune which he had heard in the Atlantic breezes as they swept through the trees round the old home at Elmwood. That the spirit of the Lord moves upon the face of the waters and over the dry land, that the mills of God grind exceeding small, that man is born to fulfil his destiny, and that it is his destiny to be "free," above all, that justice, and law, and righteousness are things for which any man with an immortal soul in him would willingly die—these formed the stock of axioms with which the son of the Massachusetts minister started in life. At the root of him there lay the earnestness, the gossipping fervour, of the New England Calvinist.

Mr. Low seems to prefer the later Lowell of cosmopolitan culture to the earlier Lowell of the anti-slavery struggle. Speaking of his earlier poems, Mr. Low says:—

The critic may point out that there is no great distinction in these poems, that the sentiment is shallow, and the style frequently thin and prosaic. It may be so; but, nevertheless, there is something in this kind of verse which appeals to many thousands of men for whom the voice of the best poetry is mute—something that comes home to them "striking upon the heart," to use a beautiful phrase of Hazlitt's, "amidst unquiet thoughts and the tumult of the world, like the music of one's native tongue heard in some far-off country." There is a good deal of Lowell's minor poetry, like a good deal of Longfellow's, which does convey that impression to many readers, however little it may satisfy the higher critical canons.

Those who prefer substance to semblance, and are more in sympathy with the vigorous soul of an earnest man than the fastidiously polished verse of a singer who has nothing particular to say, will naturally prefer the earlier Lowell to the later.

An anonymous writer in Blackwood's Magazine for September, who was apparently a personal friend of Lowell's, says:—

He was a remarkably accomplished linguist. He could read and converse fluently in several languages; and in the course of his miscellaneous studies he had attained to an exceptional knowledge of the old Provencal language and literature.

Lowell was one of the very few Americans whom England could ill afford to spare: and in some sense his death is an international loss. An American and an enlightened patriot of the sound old Puritan stock, he was a good deal of a cosmopolitan and entirely an Englishman.

Although he always seemed to take life tolerably easily, few men had studied more regularly. He generally devoted several hours each day to what may be called serious reading, and the more ephemeral literature that took his fancy was the favourite recreation of his leisure moments. His wonderful memory served him well, and a marvellous amount of miscellaneous knowledge had been carefully pigeon-holed in it. When writing in vein, and he seldom could write against his grain, he always knew where to look for the facts or the quotations which he had seldom occasion to verify. His essays are full of unfamiliar information, and moreover, he had the knack of bringing new and original treatment to brighten subjects that might seem to have been worn threadbare.

Have the Americans Improved the Breed?—

The following passage from General Walker's paper in the Forum for August is interesting, as showing the calm complacency of the American in his superiority to the stock from which he sprung:—

The climate of the United States has been benign enough to enable us to take the English shorthorn and greatly to improve it, as the re-exportation of that animal to England at monstrous prices abundantly proves; to take the English race-horse and to improve him to a degree of which the startling victories of Parole, Iroquois, and Foxhall afford but a suggestion; to take the English man and to improve him, too, adding agility to his strength, making his eye keener and his hand steadier, so that in rowing, in riding, in shooting, and in boxing, the American of pure English stock is today the better animal.

THERE are two short stories in the current magazines which are powerful, although disagreeable, reading. One is to be found in Cornhill for September, and describes how a wife killed her husband by causing her blind step-daughter to overturn a table and wake her father at a moment when any violent sound meant instant death. The other is in Belford's Magazine for August, and describes how a hideously ugly artist deliberately prevented his blind wife recovering her sight, lest she should discover his ugliness and loathe him. Both stories are well told, but both raise somewhat dangerous and disagreeable questions.

FIELD-MARSHAL COUNT VON MOLTKE.

BY LORD WOLSELEY.

In the United Service Magazine for September there is the first part of an article by Lord Wolseley upon the great military hero of modern Germany. Lord Wolseley begins by a characteristic protest against the philosophy which minimises the part played by individuals in the evolution of history.

A WORD FOR HERO-WORSHIP.

He asks whether any amount of thinking or philosophical writing could ever have created the Germany of to-day. Lord Wolseley maintains that Louis XVI. could easily have suppressed the French Revolution if he had had a little more grit in him, but he admits that this is rank heresy in the opinion of a very prominent school of philosophical theorists.

To hint that a hereditary Frederick the Great, or an upstart Napoleon in the place of Louis XVI. would have made short work of this wave of human thought, of philosophical aspirations and progress, is as repellent and obnoxious a notion as the notion that behind and above all is the directing though unseen hand of an omnipotent and all-seeing God. That the history of the world is, as Plutarch thought, the history of its great men is rank and abhorrent treason to the philosophical theorist.

Count von Moltke, says Lord Wolseley, directed and ordered events in a way and degree that has not fallen to any man's lot since Napoleon embarked upon the Belle-rophon. Moltke had two great advantages; he had an ancient lineage, the possession of which is at once a spur and a curb-chain to the righteously ambitious man, and he was brought up in that poverty which Napoleon declared was the best school for a soldier.

WHY YOUNG ENGLISH OFFICERS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD.

After describing his early studies and his visit to Turkey, where the Turks were beaten by refusing to take his advice, Lord Wolseley points out that although the campaign ended disastrously, Count Moltke's four years' service in Turkey was invaluable for him:—

He thus obtained what the great bulk of the English officers secure early in life by service in our colonies and in India. The grooves of ordinary regimental life, and even of staff work at home, are apt to stifle individuality and originality. The life led by our young officers on foreign stations is, on the other hand, calculated to develop self-confidence, quick perception, and sound judgment. Many indeed are the positions at our distant stations where young English officers have to think for themselves and to act "off their own bat," as we have lately seen in Manipur. This is one of the many causes which conspire to make our young officers by far the best in the world.

THE SECRET OF MOLTKE'S SUCCESS.

The disastrous defeat of Nisib was the only battle Count Moltke ever saw until he was sixty-four years of age:—

He knew all that books and study could teach him, and, above all things, his mind was full of deductions drawn from that study, and with well-thought-out, business-like schemes for their application to the altered conditions of the day. Therein lay the secret of his success in war.

Lord Wolseley, after bestowing a passing word of praise upon the histories of the German General Staff "as, without doubt, the most accurate, truthful, and, for the military student, the most usefully detailed reports of campaigns that have ever been published," eulogises the great things which Moltke accomplished in reforming the German army. It seriously needed reforming.

ENGLISH BOW-AND-ARROW GENERALS.

A contemplation of the work of Moltke and Von Roon leads Lord Wolseley to deliver himself of the following notable denunciation of our bow-and-arrow generals:—

When shall we succeed in thinking out for ourselves what changes are required in our military system, in our drill, training, tactics, and equipment, untrammelled by notions and prejudices which, sound and good a century ago, are now as out of date and behind the science and inventions of the day as would be the bows and arrows of the Middle Ages? We have now plenty of most intelligent and highly educated officers capable of modernising our army, but they are sat upon by the bow-and-arrow style of generals. Their initiative is too often crushed by our ignorant and intolerant military conservatism.

Lord Wolseley incidentally takes occasion to praise Moltke for being very properly most stern in exacting from the French, in 1871, those terms which he deemed the military necessities of the German Empire demanded.

MOLTKE'S CHARACTER.

Lord Wolseley's estimate of Moltke's character is to be found in the following sentences:—

Moltke's light shone before men from first to last with a clear, unclouded ray, and no shadows, no clouds, dim the lustre of his fame. . . . In this age of maudlin invertebrates, he was truly and eminently a strong man—strong in his convictions, and not ashamed of them, or afraid to make his nation fight for them when necessary. . . . A God-fearing man, full of real piety and deep sincere faith in his Maker. The hater of cant and of claptrap copy-book morality, he did not fear to shed blood when it was necessary to do so in the interests of the German people. He believed it to be right and just to do so in such a cause, as it had been for God's chosen people of old in the land of Canaan. . . . Merciless common sense, his heroic spirit held in supreme contempt the unctuous humbug to which the modern Pharisee of public life treats the people so copiously. He shuddered as he watched the effect of its blighting influence upon the patriotism of other nations.

THE POPE ON LABOUR.

FROM TWO POINTS OF VIEW.

In the Catholic World for August, the Rev. Father Brady speaks in warm eulogy of the Pope's Encyclical:—

There has been a little too much of the passive, some might be disposed to call it the contemplative, spirit of religion in certain schools of Catholic thought, and this earnest, energetic, advanced Encyclical of the Supreme Head of the Church is a rebuke to it. Religion must not be held in leash. It must be altogether free to fulfil its mission in the world, and to go about the Great Father's business in whatsoever direction that business may lead it. And next to the evangelisation of the nations, and as a necessary step towards it, religion has no higher work in the world to-day than to labour for the relief and elevation of the masses.

In the Andover Review for August, the editors recognise with satisfaction the attitude of the Pope:—

The authority of the Encyclical lies in its unqualified assertion of the doctrine of private property; its wisdom lies in its concessions respecting the present economic and social function of the State.

One can but read the Encyclical on Labour with interest and satisfaction. Its influence will be felt toward the freedom and elevation of the working classes. Its tone is seldom condemnatory, and it makes little account of past grievances. Something must be allowed to the perspective in which the Church of Rome sees all modern issues. It is much that in practical matters "His Holiness," as a recent journalist remarks, "has ranged himself unmistakably on the side of the new political economy."

DOWN WITH THE STATE!

OUIDA'S LATEST INVECTIVE.

IN the North American Review for September, Ouida has a paper on "The State as an Immoral Teacher," which will delight the heart of Mr. Auberon Herbert and Mr. Herbert Spencer. Every year she deplores that the State adds to its pretensions and its powers, and pro tanto diminishes the personal powers of the individual. The State is crystallised bureaucracy, whose ideal is a public—monotonous, obedient, colourless, spiritless—moving unanimously like a flock of sheep along a straight high road between two high walls. The State is brutalising and at the same time emasculating the nation over which it rules. The State, like the ancient despot, can sin forever and yet do no wrong. For one individual to take by force from another individual a single sixpence is theft punishable by imprisonment.

But the State breaks this law, derides it, rides rough-shod over it, when for its own purposes it requires the property of a private person: it calls the process by various names—condemnation, expropriation, annexation, etc.; but it is seizure, violent seizure, and essentially seizure against the owner's will. If private rights and the sacredness of property can be set at naught by the State for its own purposes, they cannot logically be held to be sacred in its courts of law for any individual. The State claims immunity for theft on the score of convenience; so then may the individual.

Ouida protests, and protests with cause, against the prevalent fallacy that the State is justified in doing any infamy in order to improve the health of the community.

In its strenuous endeavour to cure physical ills, it does not heed what infamies it may sow broadcast in the spiritual fields of the mind and heart. It treats altruism as criminal when altruism means indifference to the contagion of any infectious malady. The precautions enjoined in any such malady, stripped bare of their pretences, really mean the naked selfishness of the saure qui peut. The pole-axe used on the herd which has been in contact with another herd infected by pleuro-pneumonia or anthrax would be used on the human herd suffering from typhoid, or small-pox, or yellow-fever, or diphtheria, if the State had the courage to follow out its own teachings to their logical conclusions. Who shall say it will not be so used some day in the future, when increase of population shall have made mere numbers of trifling account, and the terrors excited by physiologists of ungovernable force? We have gained little by the emancipation of human society from the tyranny of the Churches if in its stead we substitute the tyranny of the State. One may as well be burned at the stake as compelled to submit to the prophylactic of Pasteur or the lymph of Koch. When once we admit that the law should compel vaccination for small-pox, there is no logical reason for refusing to admit that the law shall enforce any infusion or inoculation which its chemical and medical advisers may suggest to it.

The dissemination of cowardice is a greater evil than would be the increase of any physical ill whatever. To direct the minds of men in nervous terror to their own bodies is to make of them a trembling and shivering pack of prostrate poltroons.

All the State's edicts in all countries inculcate similar egotism; generosity is in its sight a lawless and unlawful thing: it is so busied in urging the use of disinfectants and ordering the destruction of buildings and of beasts, the exile of families and the closing of drains, that it never sees the logical issue of its injunctions, which is to leave the sick man alone and flee from his infected vicinity: it is so intent on insisting on the value of State education that it never perceives that it is enjoining on the child to advance itself at any cost, and leave its procreators in their hovel. The virtues of self-sacrifice, of disinterested affection, of humanity, of self-effacement, are nothing to it; by its own form of organism it is debarred from even admiring them. They come in its way; they obstruct it; it destroys them.

The State merely requires a community taxpaying, decree-obeying, uniform, passionless, enduring as the ass, meek as the lamb, with neither will nor wishes; a featureless humanity practising the goose-step in eternal routine and obedience.

When the man has become a passive creature, with no will of his own, taking the military yoke unquestioningly, assigning his property, educating his family, holding his tenures, ordering his daily life, in strict accordance with the regulations of the State, he will have his spirit and his individuality annihilated, and he will, in compensation to himself, be brutal to all those over whom he has power.

"THE LEAGUE OF THE ELDER BROTHER."

A CHINESE SECRET SOCIETY.

DURING the last month we have been disagreeably reminded of the existence of an anti-European ferment in China which may have very serious consequences. About three months ago an anti-missionary agitation broke out at Wuhu, on the Yang-tai-kiang, where the British consulate was attacked and the property of the French Jesuits totally destroyed. Riots of a similar character broke out in several of the towns in the neighbourhood, twenty Christian hospitals were burned, and two Englishmen were stoned to death at Wusueh, one being a Wesleyan lay missionary and the other a custom-house official. Nothing has been done to secure the punishment of the murderers, although the Emperor has issued a proclamation demanding their execution; and the situation is very difficult. The originators of the agitation are said to be the secret society of the Ko-Lao Hwey, of which there is the following interesting account given by Mr. Frederick Boyle in Harper's Magazine for September:—

Another powerful society is the Ko-Lao Hwey, or League of the Elder Brother. It dates only from the time of the Taiping Rebellion, when, as report goes, General Tseng-Kuo-fan himself established it during the siege of Nanking. This is a very dangerous association, said to be growing in strength continually. As the Tien-Ti has its home in Hok-Kien and the Wu-Wei Keaou in Nanking, so the Ho-Lao makes its headquarters in Hunan and Honan, the central provinces. It claims to represent the pure Chinese race, the sons of Han, to whom the inhabitants of the south and west are almost as much foreign as are the Tartars. These malcontents look behind the Ming dynasty, as the name "Elder Brother" implies, to the imperial line of Tang, which is supposed to be extinct long ago, but doubtless a scion will be forthcoming when the throne is vacant. The society consists of soldiers mostly, but it is understood that some affiliates occupy very high positions indeed, as we should expect when they advocate such a policy. A very desperate and disreputable band they are by all accounts, numbering a large proportion of the bad characters in those districts where they have influence. Mr. Balfour says, however, "There is not the slightest doubt that if one of their old generals were to raise the standard of rebellion, he might have a hundred thousand men about him in the time it takes to spread the news from Nanking to Hankow."

The Ko-Lao is, in fact, a military conspiracy. Its agents commonly travel as doctors, carrying news from one centre to another, and making proselytes as they go. The ceremonial of initiation is said to be elaborate, but I have heard no details. An association of old soldiers designed to overthrow the civil power is naturally turbulent. The Ko-Lao has broken out several times during its brief existence. In 1870 and 1871 it raised serious disturbances in Hunan, but the grand movement was disconcerted by a lucky chance. A secret letter containing the plan for blowing up the powder-magazine at Hukow was delivered to the wrong person. It named several of the chief conspirators, who were seized and promptly executed. In that neighbourhood the society was suppressed for a while. But its attraction for the men of the central provinces, who hate their kinsfolk all round, must be very strong.

THE SPANISH STORY OF THE ARMADA.

BY MR. J. A. FROUDE.

IN Longman's Magazine for September, Mr. Froude gives an account of the Spanish story of the Armada, which can now be written for the first time owing to the publication of a number of letters and documents which have just been published by Captain Fernandez Duro, an officer of the Spanish Navy. Mr. Froude begins his narrative with the presentation of the sacred standard to the commander-in-chief of the expedition. What strikes us most in the story is the exceeding great religious zeal of the men who equipped the Armada.

Masses had been said day after day on fifty thousand altars; and devout nuns had bruised their knees in midnight watches on the chapel pavements. The event so long hoped for was to come at last. But a regiment of priests dispersed through the various squadrons kept alive in most the sense that they were going on the most glorious expedition ever undertaken by man.

A SANCHE PANZA IN REAL LIFE.

Philip, according to Mr. Froude, was not unlike Don Quixote and the Duke of Medina Sidonia was very like Sancho Panza. The Duke wrote a pitiful letter objecting to his selection as the commander of the expedition. He said:—

My health is bad, and from my small experience of the water I know that I am always sea-sick. I have no money which I can spare. I owe a million ducats, and I have not a real to spend on my outfit. The expedition is on such a scale and the object is of such high importance that the person at the head of it ought to understand navigation and sea-fighting, and I know nothing of either. I have not one of those essential qualifications.

The King bade him not to fear; he was sacrificing himself for "God's service and mine, the cause being the cause of God, and you will not fail."

MORAL SAILING ORDERS.

Philip then drew up directions for the conduct of the expedition, paying particular attention to the morals of the crews:—

They were in the service of the Lord, and the Lord must not be offended by the faults of His instruments. The clergy throughout Spain were praying for them and would continue to pray, but soldiers and sailors must do their part and live like Christians. They must not swear; they must not gamble, which led to swearing. If they used low language God would be displeased. Every man before he embarked must confess and commend himself to the Lord. Especially and pre-eminently, loose women must be kept away, and if any member of the expedition fell into the pecado nefando he must be chastised to the example of the rest.

A BADLY EQUIPPED FLEET.

Unfortunately for the Spaniards, there was not a corresponding care taken to provide the necessary equipment for the expedition. When Medina Sidonia arrived at his command, this is the condition of things which he found:—

The casks of salt meat were found to be putrefying; the water in the tanks had not been renewed, and had stood for weeks, growing foul and poisonous under the hot Lisbon sun. Spare rope, spare spars, spare anchors—all were deficient. The powder supply was short. The balls were short. The contractors had cheated as audaciously as if they had been mere heretics, and the soldiers and mariners so little liked the look of things that they were deserting in hundreds, while the muster-masters drew pay for the full numbers and kept it.

The worst of these defects were remedied, but when the Armada put to sea it was short of powder.

"SINGING THEIR OWN DIRGE."

The following is an extract from the sailing orders sent round to every ship, which brings out the crusading element very strongly:—

Each morning at sunrise the ship boys, according to custom, shall sing "Good Morrow" at the foot of the main-mast, and at sunset the "Ave Maria." Since bad weather may interrupt the communications, the watchword is laid down for each day in the week:—Sunday, Jesus; the days succeeding the Holy Ghost, the Holy Trinity, Santiago, the Angels, All Saints, and Our Lady.

Thus, as it were, as Mr. Froude says, singing their own dirge, the doomed Armada started for the English coast, carrying with them 180 priests and friars, and not more than eighty-five surgeons and doctors in the whole fleet.

THE FIRST REVERSE.

They were driven back by head winds, and after a fortnight—

Instead of being in the mouth of the Channel, the Duke had to report that he could make no way at all, and, far worse than that, the entire ships' companies were on the way to be poisoned. Each provision cask which was opened was found worse than the last. The biscuit was mouldy, the meat and fish stinking, the water foul and breeding dysentery; the crews and companies were loud in complaint; the officers had lost heart, and the Duke, who at starting had been drawing pictures in his imagination of glorious victories, had already begun to lament his weakness in having accepted the command.

AN UNHEEDED WARNING.

When Medina Sidonia was driven back to Corunna he urged the king to abandon the expedition.

The crews are sick, and grow daily worse from bad food and water. Most of our provisions have perished, and we have not enough for more than two months' consumption. Much depends on the safety of this fleet. You have exhausted your resources to collect it, and if it is lost you may lose Portugal and the Indies. The men are out of spirit. The officers do not understand their business. We are no longer strong. Do not deceive yourself into thinking that we are equal to the work before us. You remember how much it cost you to conquer Portugal, a country adjoining Castile, where half the inhabitants were in your favour. We are now going against a powerful kingdom with only the weak force of the Prince of Parma and myself. I speak freely, but I have laid the matter before the Lord; you must decide yourself what is to be done.

THE PIETY OF THE SPANIARDS.

Philip, however, would not hear of the abandonment of the expedition, neither would the vice-admirals. Preparations were made to refit the fleet and supply the necessary stores:—

Tents were set up on an island in the harbour, with an altar in each, and friars in sufficient numbers to officiate. The ships' companies were landed and brought up man by man till the whole of them had again confessed and again received the Sacrament.

"This," said the Duke, "is great riches, and the most precious jewel which I carry with me. They are now all well and content and cheerful."

At this point Mr. Froude breaks off his narrative, and will continue it another day.

THE EVOLUTION OF DEMOCRACY IN SWITZERLAND.

ONE of the interesting articles of the month is the description given by M. Louis Wuarin, in the Revue des Deux Mondes, of the development of the representative system in Switzerland into something which is not far removed from the original self-governing democracy of ancient history.

THE REFERENDUM.

The first step after the establishment of a Federal Executive and Federal Tribunal, of which the existence was based upon unrestricted universal suffrage, was the conquest by the people of the form of plebiscite which is more generally known by the name of referendum. It was not enough for universal suffrage to choose its parliamentary representatives; it wanted to have the further rights of controlling their actions after they had passed beyond the immediate tether of the votes. The first attempt to gratify this desire was the constitutional veto which, from 1830 onwards, subjected all projects of constitutional reform to the sanction of the people. The legislative veto appeared a little later, but the governments of twelve various cantons, jealous of the infringements of their powers, found means to trammel its exercise to such an extent that it remained practically a dead letter. But from 1848 onwards the struggle continued, and gradually in the governments of the cantons and in the Federal government itself, the right of the people to veto any law of which they disapproved came to be an accepted principle of Swiss public life. With one exception, any law may now be submitted to the popular vote. The exception is for a law for which urgency has been voted, and this will, in M. Wuarin's opinion, undergo restrictions before long which will prevent the vote of urgency from being used by governing bodies for the purpose of escaping the necessities of the referendum. At present any law or decree which it is desired to pass without appealing to the people may be declared unjust. In the future it is probable that the class of laws to which a declaration of urgency is applicable will be strictly limited. At present also in many places the referendum is optional. But it will not always have this character. Already in certain cantons, amongst them two of the most important in Switzerland, namely, Berne and Zurich, the optional referendum has been changed into an obligatory law of appeal to the people. The tendency, in spite of opposition, is in this direction. The right of referendum was generalised after 1875. The only change which is ever likely to be tolerated by the people will be to make it in all cases obligatory.

THE RIGHT OF INITIATION.

The natural next step for a democracy to take, after asserting the general principle of its right to be consulted, is to determine when and how it will be consulted. If the referendum were in all cases obligatory, the people must needs be consulted about everything. The process would be cumbersome. In 1874, in the revised constitution which admitted the principle of the optional referendum into federal questions, provision was made that it should be exercised on the presentation of a petition to that effect, signed either by 30,000 citizens or by eight cantonal governments. That is to say, that the right of referendum, though nominally optional, should always be exercised as a serious request by the people. This provision carried with it almost necessarily a corollary which came to be known as the right of initiative. The referendum is a right of veto, the power simply to say yes or no to certain measures. The governing power which it confers is negative. The right of initiative confers the positive power of suggesting the case upon which the veto is to be exercised. There are three ways in which it can be used. Either the people can make their wishes in any fair question to the legislative authority and call upon it to draft a bill embodying the popular view, or the people may themselves draft a bill and simply pass it through the legislature to the referendum. Thirdly, the people may draft one bill and the legislature another, and the two may be submitted side by side to the popular vote. The right of initiative in one form or another is in existence almost all over Switzerland. It began in the Canton de Vaud in a primitive shape as early as 1845. Last July it was adopted in the Canton of Geneva by a majority of nine to one, and the entire Swiss people, voting for its adoption in the Confederation, gave it the sanction of a majority of 60,000 votes in an entire voting body of 300,000. It is therefore to be regarded as no less an immaterial point of the Swiss constitution than the referendum itself. Berne is one of the few cantons in which it has not been adopted for cantonal administration.

COMPULSORY VOTING.

The next step on this democratic ladder is an important one. If the people are to have direct governing powers, how is it to be guaranteed that they will exercise them. For to govern is not all privilege; it is also a duty, which the State cannot afford to see neglected. Swiss republicanism has recognised this principle by the introduction in certain districts of a law which renders voting upon political questions compulsory, under penalty of a small fine. The Canton of Zurich, which is pre-eminently progressist, is the only one which has actually put this law in practice. It is optional in each commune to introduce the law at will. Several have profited by the power, and propose a fine, varying from 60 centimes to a franc, upon defaulters.

PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION.

The end towards which these various reforms must evidently tend is towards the great but hitherto unrealisable ideal of justice embodied in the representation of minorities. The country, which is really in the hands of its inhabitants, cannot continue to be governed by the will of the half, plus one. The other half, minus one, refuses to abdicate its privileges. Hence the perception, rapidly spreading, of the necessity for the organisation of some system of proportional representation. There are many difficulties of a practical nature in the way, but the best brains of all parties in Switzerland are occupied with the means of getting rid of them, and one result of the insurrection of Ticino of last September has been the introduction of the new electoral doctrine into the constitution of that Canton. M. Ruchonnet, whose name is well known as a leading member of the Federal Council, was the medium by whom, at the instigation of the Federal Government, this solution was proposed. It was accepted by the Ticinois of both parties, and the only obstacle which has been raised is the question of whether the principle shall be applied to the municipal elections as well as to those of the Legislative Assembly. If the principle should obtain general application throughout Switzerland, the effect will be to return to the governing parliaments, on a sounder basis, some of the power which the referendum and the right of initiative have taken from them. The people, feeling that all parties are represented in the governing bodies, and having had experience of the cumbersome nature of popular struggles out of doors, will incline to leave discussion to their appointed delegates in the Assembly.

HOW WE BRIGHTENED OUR DREARY BACK ROOM.

In Cassell's Family Magazine for September there is an interesting household paper, describing the brightening of three dreary back rooms. The writer says:—Of the dull cold dreariness of their aspect there could be no question. Outside, a few yards from the windows, the blank walls of a great manufactory shut out light and air, and took away all chance of the sun shining into those dark bogie-like corners, and chasing the spiders away.

The first room was papered with an old-fashioned flock paper, dreadfully dark, in colours of brown and purple. I bought some yards of Japanese gold paper at eighteenpence the yard, and some of the Lincrusta bordering. This bordering was nailed round the top of the room just below the ceiling. The gold paper was cut into panels and was pasted upon the wall, great care having been first taken to tear off the flock paper beneath it. I then painted the walls a crimson lake. The first coat was of white paint; it is always well in painting flock papers to use white for the first coat, as it prevents the colours of the flock taking away the brightness of the paint, and it gives substance also to the Lincrusta border. Two coats of the crimson lake completed the work, and when some etchings in black and white frames were hung, the walls looked wonderfully well.

The mantelpiece was a dreadful wooden one, painted to represent marble. I could have had it scraped and repainted, but I was extravagant enough to take it down and put up one of polished pine. The mantelpiece and overmantel are all made in one, a little mirror of bevelled glass is let into the centre, while a motto is carved over the brass fireplace.

I bought a pierced brass fender for this room, costing nineteen and sixpence. The walls being finished, the carpet had to be considered, and I ended by having no carpet at all. I had the floor covered with parquet flooring.

But though all this was an improvement, the black walls of the manufactory still stared in at the windows in hopeless ugliness. What could be done?

I hunted the shops through till I found some very fine muslin with a very large pattern. I succeeded in getting exactly what I wanted—a pale cream ground with a faded-looking pattern of crimson flowers and leaves, edged, as in coloured glass, with olive green—it was fifty inches wide—at tenpence-halfpenny the yard. This I pasted on all the lower part of the window; I had to exercise great care in keeping it quite straight. I used fish glue, as I found it whiter and much stronger than gum.

The effect of muslin used in this way is wonderful. As it is pasted tightly on the glass, there are no folds, as in curtains, to obstruct the light; it does not soil for a very long time, and then it can easily be washed off with very hot water and a hard nailbrush, and the glass can be recovered. Over the top panes of these windows I pasted some dried fronds of ferns—the royal and bracken. I made them come from each side, and did not let them quite meet in the middle. They must be fastened on very carefully; each leaf should be lightly gummed down to the glass.

My windows looked very well when they were finished; but I have always found the top panes very difficult to keep clean, as it is so hard not to rub the dried ferns off.

For curtains I chose a very pretty "art tapestry." The ground was something the same colour as my floor, and it was worked in stripes of gold, with flowers in crimson and pale pink: it was a very nice material, and exceedingly cheap, as it was 52 inches wide, and only cost eighteenpence the yard.

The whole effect of the room when finished was one of brightness.

THROUGH SIBERIA IN WINTER.

BY MR. GEORGE KENNAN.

In the Century for September Mr. George Kennan describes a winter journey which he took in a sleigh from Irkutsk to St. Petersburg. There is nothing very remarkable in his paper, excepting the description of the hillocky nature of the road. The whole country was covered with waves of solidified snow, measuring from four to five feet from top to bottom, and fifteen to twenty feet from crest to crest; over this snow the sledge jolted and plunged until it had almost dislocated every joint in his body. There is another thing in Mr. Kennan's paper which is remarkable. At last he says a good word of a Siberian prison:—

We also made a careful examination on Wednesday of the Krasnoyarsk city prison, the exile forwarding prison, and the prison hospital; and I am glad to be able to say a good word for all of them. The prisons were far from being model institutions of their kind of course, and at certain seasons of the year I have no doubt that they were more or less dirty and overcrowded; but at the time when we inspected them they were in better condition than any prisons that we had seen in Siberia, except the military prison at Ust Kamenogorsk and the Alexandrofski Central Prison near Irkutsk. The hospital connected with the Krasnoyarsk prisons seemed to me to be worthy of almost unqualified praise. It was scrupulously clean, perfectly ventilated, well-supplied, apparently, with bed linen, medicines, and surgical appliances, and in irreproachable sanitary condition generally. It is possible, of course, that in the late summer and early fall, when the great annual tide of exiles is at its flood, this hospital becomes as much overcrowded and as foul as the hospital of the forwarding prison at Tomsk; but at the time we saw it I should have been willing, if necessary, to go into it for treatment myself.

The Krasnoyarsk city prison was a large two-story building of stuccoed brick resembling in type the forwarding prison at Tiumen. Its kameras, or common cells, were rather small, but none of them seemed to be crowded, and the inscriptions over their doors, such as "murderers," "passportless," and "politicals," showed that at least an attempt had been made to classify the prisoners and to keep them properly separated. There were wheel-ventilators in most of the cell-windows and ventilating-pipes in the walls; the stone floors of the corridors were clean; the closet fixtures and plumbing were in fairly good condition; and although the air in some of the cells was heavy and lifeless, and had the peculiar characteristic prison odour, it could be breathed without much discomfort and without any of the repulsion and disgust that we had felt in the overcrowded cells of the prisons in Tiumen, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and at the mines.

Mr. Kennan points out that sending the criminals to their destination on foot at all seasons of the year, instead of forwarding them by waggons, not only inflicts great misery upon the prisoners but costs the State £35,000 a year more than would be necessary under the more humane system. Mr. Kennan speaks forcibly but not too strongly concerning the circumlocution office into which all projects for remedying even such a manifest abuse as this are sucked, and in which they revolve endlessly as an astigean whirlpool without ever making any progress. Mr. Kennan concludes his article by declaring that there are many evidences to show that the basin of the Yenesei was once the home of a great and prosperous nation. Thousands of grave stones enclosing burial-grounds are the most prominent feature in the landscape, but living traces of the population which filled this valley can nowhere be found.

HOW CALVIN BURNT SERVETUS.

AN HISTORICAL STUDY BY A DUTCH PROFESSOR.

THE most interesting article in De Gids for August is Prof. J. G. De Hoop Scheffer's on "Servetus and Calvin." The former treats of what has ever been considered the great blot on the life of John Calvin, and relates the tragic story in a clear and impartial manner. Miguel Servet was a Spaniard of Navarre, who does not seem to have denied the divinity of Christ, though the view he took of it was neither that of the Reformed nor of the Roman Churches. But his want of soundness on predestination gave great offence to the Reformers, and the following passage—which occurs at the end of the book—would by itself have been sufficient for his condemnation in that age:—

I do not hold in all points with the Papists nor yet with the opposite party; nor do I look upon either the former or the latter as being in all points wrong. It seems to me that both have the truth in part, and are partly in error. It should not be so difficult to distinguish between truth and error, if only every man might without hindrance express his opinions in the congregation. . . . But our teachers dispute with one another out of selfish ambition. May the Lord destroy all tyrants of the Church!

His "Restitution of Christianity," which was finished in 1546, but not published till January 1553, led Calvin to write to Farel, dated February 17th, 1546:—

He wants to come to Geneva, if I think fit. But I will not pledge my word to him for a safe conduct, for if he comes here I will never suffer him to leave this place alive, if my authority can prevent it.

Servetus was lost sight of for some months, when, suddenly, on Sunday, August 13th, 1553, Calvin was informed that Servetus had been in Geneva since the day before and had been seen in church that very day. Calvin had no difficulty in persuading one of his friends on the town council to have Servetus thrown into prison. He then ordered one of his servants to appear as accuser, and spent the rest of the Sunday in preparing a detailed indictment of forty counts, which Servetus was to answer on the Monday, prior to his examination before the council on the following day. He was accused of having, by his writings, promulgated the most pestilent heresies "against the doctrines of the Trinity, the Eternal Generation, the Incarnation, the Divine Nature, and Infant Baptism." The magistrates of Geneva sent round to the authorities of all the Swiss cantons to collect their opinions on the case, and their answers arrived on October 23rd. Servetus had spent the whole of the intervening time in prison, in want of the commonest necessities of life, and had been examined eight times before the council. On the 26th, he was condemned to be burnt alive. The sentence was entirely unexpected, and his nerves gave way under the shock. He broke down and sobbed aloud, and, says Calvin, who was present, "in short, he behaved like one possessed, and at last cried aloud, in Spanish, smiting on his breast, 'Mercy, O God! be merciful to me!'" Yet he never lost his head so far as to deny anything he had said or written, in the hope of saving his life. "If I have erred in anything," he said to his judges, "it was in ignorance; for I believe what I have written to be in accordance with the Bible." And, indeed, this had been his constantly expressed conviction from the first. He earnestly requested that he might be beheaded and not burnt, "that the intolerable pain might not drive him to despair and make him lose his soul," i.e. deny his convictions. With regard to these he remained firm to the end. He asked to see Calvin, in the hope that, though they could not agree, they might part friends; but Calvin, finding he would not retract, refused to listen to him. He was led out to die on Friday, October 27th. Farel and other ministers walked with him on the way to the stake, to make a last attempt at persuasion. He only answered "that he died innocent, but asked God's pardon for his accusers." This so aroused Farel's indignation that he said "if Servetus continued to speak in this manner, he would leave him to the judgment of God and accompany him no further." Thenceforth Servetus was silent, except when he lifted his voice in prayer for forgiveness for "his mistakes, his ignorance, and his sins," and silently he died. The pile was formed of green wood, and the agony lasted half an hour. It is characteristic of the spirit of religious intolerance that Calvin found a new offence in his silence.

We have the opinions of many eminent men among the Reformers on Servetus's execution. Most of them were favourable—we need only name Melancthon, Beza, Farel, and Bullinger. On the other hand, adverse opinions were not wanting. The chief of them came from the Baptists, who had themselves known the bitterness of persecution. The Lutheran and Reformed Churches on the Continent had not as yet tasted of this cup—St. Bartholomew was yet in the future—nay, they enjoyed not only protection but power as State Churches—the former in Saxony, the latter in Switzerland.

For Calvin, the doctrine of the Trinity, as understood by him (and in no other form), was the corner-stone of Christianity, and from his point of view (granting, of course, that any human beings are the appointed guardians of truth, and that erroneous opinion can really be destroyed by force,) he was quite right in preventing the spread of Servetus's teaching by effectually removing the teacher. "Let us," says Professor Scheffer in conclusion, "while honouring Servetus, who laid down his life rather than forsake his faith, not refuse justice to Calvin, by not attributing to him any ignoble motives which we cannot prove, by respect for his steadfastness of purpose, but above all by pitying him." It was the reputation of Calvin, not of Servetus, that was blackened by the smoke of that green-wood fire in the execution place of Geneva.

LORD COLERIDGE AND THE PRINCE OF WALES.

IN quoting from General Badeau's article in the Cosmopolitan last month, on the Baccarat Trial, I spoke of his "curiously perverse comments on Lord Coleridge's summing up." I have received the following letter from Lord Coleridge's private secretary:—

Dear Sir,—I have been requested by the Lord Chief Justice to write to you and say that his attention has been called to an article in the Cosmopolitan, quoted in your REVIEW, signed by General Adam Badeau, on "Gambling in High Life," in which, discussing the recent Baccarat Case, the following statement occurs:—"Lord Coleridge had the honour of entertaining His Royal Highness at luncheon day after day during the trial." I am desired to inform you that there is no foundation whatever for this statement; it is absolutely untrue. The Chief Justice is unaware whether any one entertained the Prince at luncheon; most certainly the Chief Justice did not; and but for his experience in such statements, the ignorance displayed in it would be as surprising to him as its utter untruth.

I remain, Sir, faithfully yours,

GILBERT COLERIDGE

HOW CONSUMPTION IS SPREAD.

A PLEA FOR THE SPITTOON. BY PROF. TYNDALL.

In the Fortnightly for September Professor Tyndall has a very interesting and important article on the "Origin, Propagation, and Prevention of Phthisis." It is a condensed account of the result of the discoveries of Dr. Cornet, a colleague of Dr. Koch at the Imperial Sanitary Institute at Berlin. What Dr. Cornet has discovered practically amounts to this, that the tubercle bacilli or the infective matter of consumption is almost entirely propagated by the conversion of the sputum of consumptive patients into dust, which is afterwards breathed by the people. Hence the true way to prevent the spread of consumption is to induce all consumptive patients to use a spittoon and never to expectorate at large.

DEATH IN DUST.

Dr. Cornet found that the consumptive germ retained its virulence for at least six months. The dust of the room in which a consumptive patient has lived contains the seeds of the disease which when taken into the lungs of a healthy man may produce consumption. The real cause of consumption running in families is not because it is inherited, but because there is family infection due to the breathing of the dust of the dried expectoration of the consumptive patient. In the room in which a consumptive patient has lived who has not used a spittoon, the walls and all the furniture are covered with virulent bacilli, whereas the dust in rooms where the spittoon is constantly used is absolutely free from the deadly germ.

THE LAW OF THE SPITTOON.

The first law, therefore, which must be laid down for consumptive patients is, never use a pocket-handkerchief and never spit on the floor, and always and everywhere use a proper spittoon. Dr. Cornet would have spittoons in all offices, workshops, all public buildings, corridors, and staircases. In fact, to read Dr. Cornet's suggestions we seem to be within measurable distance of the time when if a consumptive patient is found spitting upon the floor or into his handkerchief, he will promptly be sent to a gaol or hospital for a period not exceeding two months.

THE MASSACRE OF NURSES.

Prof. Tyndall gives some very remarkable figures as to the mortality of nurses in Germany as the result of their liability to tuberculosis. More than one half the deaths of Catholic nurses in thirty-eight German hospitals were due to this disease. Nursing is one of the deadliest occupations known to man, or rather to woman; a healthy girl of seventeen devoting herself to hospital nursing dies on an average twenty-one and a half years sooner than a girl of the same age in the general population. A woman of twenty-four will live twenty-two years longer in the outside population than what she would do if she were a nurse in a hospital. This extreme mortality, Dr. Cornet thinks, might be reduced by the rigorous use of the spittoon.

HOW CONSUMPTION IS SPREAD.

The following is Prof. Tyndall's summary of the German investigator's conclusions:—

It is universally recognised that tuberculosis is caused by tubercle bacilli, which reach the lungs through the inhalation of air in which the bacilli are diffused. They come almost exclusively from the dried sputum of consumptive persons. The moist sputum, as also the expired breath of the consumptive patient, is, for this mode of infection, without danger. If we can prevent the drying of the expectorated matter, we prevent in the same degree the possibility of infection. It is not, however, sufficient to place a spittoon at the disposal of the patient. The strictest surveillance must be exercised by both physicians and attendants to enforce the proper use of the spittoon, and to prevent the reckless disposal of the infective phlegm. Spitting on the floor or into pocket-handkerchiefs is the main source of peril. To this must be added the soiling of the bed clothes and the wiping of the patient's mouth. The handkerchiefs used for this purpose must be handled with care, and boiled without delay. Various other sources of danger, kissing among them, will occur to the physician. A phthisical mother, by kissing her healthy child, may seal its doom. Notices, impressing on the patients the danger of not attending to the precautions laid down in the hospital, ought to be posted up in every sick-room, while all wilful infringement of the rules ought to be sternly punished. Thus may the terrible mortality of hospital nurses be diminished, if not abolished, the wards where they are occupied being rendered as salubrious as those surgical wards in which no bacilli could be found.

THE STORY OF THE HEART OF MONTROSE.

SIR M. E. GRANT DUFF, in his paper in the Contemporary Review for September, entitled "A Month in Southern India," tells a curious story of the "Heart of Montrose," being tempted thereto by the finding of a golden coin in the Madura district of the Indian Empire, which Claudius, the Roman Emperor, struck to commemorate his conquest of Britain. This is the story of the "Heart of Montrose":—

After the execution of the great Marquis o. Montrose, his heart was rescued and brought to his connection, Lady Napier, who had it enclosed in a gold box, said to have been given by a Doge of Venice to the Napier who invented logarithms. This again was placed in a steel case which was kept in a silver urn. Of the silver urn history makes no more mention; but the steel case and the gold box containing the heart were sent by Lady Napier to the second Marquis of Montrose, who was then in Holland. There they disappeared but came later into the possession of the fifth Lord Napier, who gave them to his daughter, Mrs. Johnston, the wife of a Madras civil servant. She, her husband, and a child, who afterwards became Sir Alexander Johnston, were on board an Indiaman when it was attacked off the Cape Verde Islands by a frigate belonging to the squadron of Suffren. Mrs. Johnston insisted on remaining upon deck along with her husband, who, though a civilian, was fighting four guns there. She had in her hand a bag, containing some of her most precious possessions, including the heart. The bag was carried away by a splinter, and dashed on the deck with so much violence that the delicate gold-box was broken, though its steel case resisted the shock.

The Indiaman having made a stout resistance, the frigate was called off, and the Johnstons pursued their way to India. A goldsmith at Madura made a box, as like the broken one as possible. This was placed in the steel case, and the whole enclosed in a silver urn, having upon it in Tamil and Telugu a brief abstract of the story of Montrose. The urn stood long on an ebony table in Mr. Johnston's house known as the Tunkum, at Madura; thence it was stolen, and bought from the thieves by a Polygar of those parts, who had no idea when it came. Mr. Johnston's son, afterwards Sir Alexander, went to stay with this man, became a great favourite of his, and told him that the urn had been stolen from his mother. The Polygar gave him the precious relic, and it returned with the family to Europe. They found themselves on their way to England at Calais in 1792. At that time no bullion was allowed to be exported from France. The urn with its contents was left in charge of an Englishwoman until that tyranny was overpast. She died, and the heart of Montrose has never again been heard of. There were some curious and pathetic circumstances connected with the end of the Polygar; these, with the story which I have recounted, Sir Walter Scott intended to have worked up into a novel.

THE CONQUEST OF LIFE.

BY INCREASING THE PRODUCTION OF PLANTS.

THE "Conquest of Life" is a proposal formulated by M. Emile Gautier in the Nouvelle Revue to approach the problem of the always increasing consumption of food from the opposite end of the scale to that chosen by Malthus. He does not claim originality for his points of view, he assimilates only the discoveries and theories of some of his predecessors. Here is the problem as stated by the Malthusian School:—

When population is not arrested by any obstacle it doubles itself in twenty-five years, and increases by geometrical progression thus: 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, 32, 64, 128, 256, etc.

Means of subsistence, on the contrary, under the most favourable circumstances can only increase by arithmetical progression thus: 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, etc.

In other words, consumption grows quicker than production. M. Gautier does not deny the first part of the statement. It is with the second that he quarrels. It is a mistake, he asserts, to suppose that the last word has been heard upon production, and that society is right to devote itself to a consideration of how to bring consumption down to a level with production. We have been fighting with the wrong end of the stick, and the real object of consideration is how to bring production up to consumption. He has no doubt that it can be done.

THE FABRICATION OF PLANTS.

We can make everything else, but we have allowed ourselves to imagine that we cannot make corn and fruit. Here is our primary mistake. We have not given a sufficiently intelligent attention to agriculture. What is needed for any ordinary industry? Raw material, intelligence, and labour. With these we have the habit of saying that anything may be made. Yet regard the process a little more closely. The most that manufacturing industry can do is to transform; that is, out of one material into another. Agriculture multiplies. One match-box will not produce two. One grain of wheat will produce many. But the days of miracles are passed. Nothing, therefore, is made out of nothing. Wheat making is no less transformation than match-box making. Here again raw material and labour are required.

THE RAW MATERIAL OF ALL PLANTS.

M. Gautier deals first with the raw material of plants. It appears that the result of chemical analysis has been to prove that

In the essential composition of all vegetation, without exception, of lichens, seaweeds, and mosses, of humble shrubs and giant trees, of the mushroom as of the olive, of the beet-root as of the haricot, of rye as of clover, of the potato and the heliotrope, there are comprised, not, as we might have imagined, millions of different elements, but simply fourteen substances—not one more and not one less.

These fourteen original substances are to plants as the letters of the alphabet are to literature. By their infinite variety of combination the infinite of plant life is produced. They subdivide themselves into the two categories of organic and mineral elements, and the completed list is as follows:—

First. Organic Elements: Carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and azote.

Second. Mineral elements: Phosphoric acid, sulphur, chlorate, silica, iron, magnesia, manganese, lime, soda, potash.

THE PROBLEM OF RE-COMBINATION—

The first four are called organic because they are found in living creatures; the other ten are mineral because they are found in the mineral husk of the globe. You may do what you will with any plant: "burn it, pound it, chop it small, boil it, distil it, let it rot," never by any process can you find anything more in it than these four organic and ten mineral elements. These facts once fully taken in, the first step in the desired course of instruction has been taken. We know, at least, what is the raw material needed for every plant. The next question is, how to procure them? With regard to ninety-seven hundredths, we need give ourselves no trouble. They are everywhere present in the earth, air, and water, which nature supplies. The remaining three hundredths may have to be artificially given. These three are made up in part of one organic element and three mineral elements which are not invariably present. They are: azote, lime, potash, and phosphoric acid. Give the soil enough of these and it will "never be weary of producing."

—TO BE SOLVED BY SCIENCE—

M. Gautier works out his proposition with detail and in figures which limitation of space renders it impossible to reproduce. But amongst the figures none are more interesting than those relating to the labour which is to be employed in converting the collected raw material into food. He quotes them from his prophet, M. Georges Ville. First, the mind must be cleared of the notion that the labour is to be supplied by men. The part of the workman is simply to prepare the soil and the seed, as in many industries his part is merely to feed a machine with its material.

—AND EXECUTED BY THE SUN.

In agriculture the machine is the plant itself, the energy which works it is the sun. In order to appreciate the force of this working energy—take a conical mirror, in the centre of which you have placed a little boiler communicating with a steam engine. If the sky is bright the solar rays collected in the mirror will heat the boiler and cause the water to boil and set the machine in motion. Here the sun furnishes the heat of which the mirror concentrates the effect, and which the boiler utilises. Light is transformed into mechanical labour

Substitute a plant for the mirror and the process is reversed, the plant absorbs the working energy of which the existence was demonstrated by the mirror. Under its influence dead chemical substances become wheat or apples, as the case may be. All that human intelligence has to do is to supply the raw material in due succession. What is the amount of working energy given by the sun in ordinary bright weather to realise one harvest? "8,000 days of steam horse power per hectare, which is equivalent to 40,000 days of men's labour." Thus upon fourteen millions of hectares, which represents a quarter the surface of France, a mechanical force equal to the labour of 560 milliards of men, or five times the entire human race, is every year available. But, for the want of the human intelligence to supply all the raw material which is required, this immense force is in great parts allowed to go to waste. The article is not intended as an advertisement of chemical manures, but it is scarcely possible to read it without a desire to set to work at once upon the earth and see what an intelligent system of artificial feeding would produce.

WHY NOT NATIONALISE THE CATHEDRALS?

A SOCIALIST JOURNALIST'S IDEAL.

MR. MASSINGHAM, in the Contemporary for September, puts in a plea for what he calls the "Nationalisation of the Cathedrals." He points out, truly enough, that Disestablishment has, for the present, somewhat lost ground.

THE DECADENCE OF THE CHURCH.

Disestablishment as a party watchword has largely lost its magic, and if the Church had within her the seeds of a genuinely recuperative movement she might safely have been given another half-century's life. But this is precisely what she will not and cannot show, not so much through any inherent vice of her own, as because the stream of modern tendency is more and more bent to sweep all fertilising influences from her ancient walls. In the Middle Ages, at all events, the Church had a monopoly of culture, and a directing hand in all the progressive movements of the times, political, social, intellectual.

To-day the teaching of the chief branches of modern learning, civil law, moral philosophy, chemistry, astronomy, anatomy, modern history, botany, biology, and natural history, which in 1843 was the absolute monopoly of the Church, is entirely confined to laymen. To take one great subject, I may mention that in all England and Wales there are fourteen professors of history attached to the Universities of Cambridge, Oxford, and London, and the various University Colleges. Only two of these—viz, Professor Boase and Professor Bright—are clergymen. Here, then, is signal proof that the Establishment has long ago ceased to control the springs of national culture. It is not simply that the Anselms, the Becketts, and the Butlers have gone and left no successors. The Church has largely lost her able administrators, her scholars, and her thinkers, as well as her statesmen, her poets, her saints, and her heroes.

HOW TO MEND MATTERS.

By way of helping the Church back to its old position, he suggests that the evil of an illiterate clergy in possession of the sinecures of the Church is to be remedied, not by relaxing, but by modifying the control of the State. He calculates that the deans of the cathedrals have an income of £35,000 a year, and the canons £77,000, making a total of over £100,000 a year, which is available for utilisation in other directions. He says:—

Why then should not the nation be restored to its share in the rich endowments of leisure which the Church has accumulated, and which she cannot wisely use? In other words, why should we not have laymen deans at Norwich or Canterbury, as well as in Oxford or Cambridge Colleges, and laymen canons of distinction in literature, in art, in science, in travel, and in philosophy, to fill the places of the University passmen who now crowd our cathedral stalls.

Historically the change would not be in any way an abrupt departure; it would rather be a reversion to older usage, as well as a distinct revival of the earlier notion of the Church as a meeting-place and centre of local and secular business. Indeed, a fairly long list might be made of laymen who have actually been deans and canons of cathedral churches in England and Ireland during the last 300 years.

CANON BUCKLE OF WESTMINSTER AND "THE TIMES."

It is surely not extravagant to forecast the time when a Huxley, a Tyndall, a Tennyson, a Stainer, a Sullivan, or a Lecky would be deemed not unworthy occupants of a stall or a deanery. A canonry of Westminster might even be attached to the blue-ribbon of journalism, the editorship of the Times, as well as to the passman from Oxford, the fussy partisan, or the obscure writer of half a dozen sermons which nobody reads. If this plan to revive our cathedrals be carried out, no revolutionary change need at once be contemplated in the ritual or doctrine of the Church. The services might go on as before, under the superintendence of the minor canons. As for the duties now attaching to the deans and canons, they might very well be discharged by laymen—including the preaching of sermons. The late Mr. T. H. Green, layman as he was, successfully asserted his right to preach at Oxford, and his sermons are rich contributions to latter-day theology. What cathedral would not have been dignified by the presence in its pulpit of the great Dr. Martineau, of Carlyle, of Faraday, of Darwin, or of Mr. Gladstone? The cathedral, which is to-day a school of music, might also become a school of art, of architecture, and science. Its walls, adorned with examples of local schools of painting and natural curiosities, would hold within them the elements of the new life as well as the solemn memorials of the past. Local energies would revive, the tone of the local newspaper would be improved, and the sluggish atmosphere of the cathedral city would be quickened with a new breath. "I have often fancied," wrote Kingsley to Maurice, "I should like to see the great useless naves and aisles of our cathedrals turned into museums and winter gardens, where the people might take their Sunday walks, and yet attend service." The time is surely coming when the effective nationalisation of cathedrals will be seen to be necessary to the organisation of the democracy, and a valuable aid to the enrichment of its provincial life.

WAS LORD BEACONSFIELD THE SUN?

A BURLESQUE ON THE SUN-MYTH THEORY.

IN the Gentleman's Magazine for September Mr. J. A. Farrer has a humorous paper, which parodies the favourite methods of the advocates of the sun-myth theory by putting into the mouth of a philosophic historian of the year 3,000 A.D. an elaborate demonstration that no such person as Lord Beaconsfield existed, and that, in reality, the so-called Beaconsfield was a mythical personage, whose adventures were a dramatic representation of the course of the sun through the heavens. In the first place, he points out that the name gives a clue to the solar origin of the story, for what beacon that was ever set in a field but refers obviously to the great solar beacon that moves majestically across the azure fields of space? Beaconsfield, in the myth, is always represented as having been a Jew and not an Englishman. That is a popular way of alluding to his rising in the east with the morning sun. Like the sun herose in obscurity in mist clouds, and his progress went on to glory and splendour. Even the fact that he is said to have entered Parliament for Aylesbury, the centre of a great cheese-making district, seems to cover an occult allusion to the solar origin of the myth, for what is cheese but a round object like the wheel of the sun turned by Buddha?—in other words, it is an allusion to the real source of the Beaconsfield myth. As in all the solar myths the sun has his great antagonist in the cloud-demon, whose darkness occasionally obscures the effulgence of his rays, so Beaconsfield is represented as being constantly opposed by Gladstone. Gladstone is clearly mythical. Even if we pass over the obvious allusion to the soft splash of the rain-cloud in the legends of his persuading eloquence, the clearest proof is afforded us of his real character in the fables about his felling trees with a gleaming axe. Obviously the swift flashing steel of the axe-head is a happy symbol of the bright lightning which flashes from the cloud. The Russo-Turkish war is only a version of that ever-absorbing story of the contest between light and darkness. As the sun sets in the west, so Beaconsfield dies at the end of his career; and as the stars come out in the twilight, so we have the so-called Primrose League, which arises on his grave. The primrose, whose colour resembles the hazy English sun, has five petals, as there are five vowels in the name Beaconsfield, and five primary gases in the composition of the sun. All this is very clever fooling, and not one whit more far-fetched than many of the favourite demonstrations of the fanatics of the solar myth.

THE WELL-BRED WOMEN OF JAPAN.

THE general impression with regard to the well-bred Japanese woman is that she does not exist. The European traveller's ideal has been formed in the tea-house and other places of public resort, and the impression has been more sympathetic than respectful. M. Tinseau introduces his readers, with some unnecessary apology, into the more sacred precincts of the Tokian home.

EARLY EDUCATION.

The age at which the little Japanese girl's education begins is about the same as our own. At about six or seven years of age she passes from the hands of servants to the care of a governess, who does not teach much herself, but whose business it is to conduct her charge to classes where she must, if possible, be made to learn. The schools are usually under the superintendence of the Government, and education is conducted on a strictly scientific graduated principle. Quite young children are taught a good deal in the open air, and their course of instruction resembles that of the Kindergarten of the West. They learn to sing childish songs, to use their fingers in making little objects of folded paper, etc., and from the beginning to appreciate flowers and plants. They also learn by degrees to read and write and to recite fables. To this extent the course of public instruction is the same for rich and poor. At home the governess never leaves her pupil's side. The little girl's food, dress, health, and deportment are all the objects of her care. She also watches over the preparation of lessons, and is appreciated by the parents of her charge in proportion to the place taken by the child in public classes. The amount of private cramming to which the system must give rise is painful to reflect upon, for as the young lady advances in age and leaves the elementary school she enters upon a course which is by no means child's play. It includes history, geography, mathematics, physics, chemistry, botany, zoology, modern languages—of which French and English are the ones most usually taken up—music, painting, embroidery, "all feminine occupations," national literature, and in addition to all this the essential accomplishment of writing in prose and verse. Calligraphy, which is carried to a high degree of perfection, is taught in the most advanced classes. The schools in which this course of study may be pursued are very various. The most aristocratic is that known as the School of Nobility, at Tokio. This is patronised by the Emperor and regularly visited by the Empress, but establishments of a less exclusive description are not wanting, and it is estimated that altogether there are about 850,000 girls undergoing instruction in Japan.

BEFORE AND AFTER MARRIAGE.

The course which has been described is continued usually into her early teens. On the completion of it there is still a further course, which takes place at home. The Japanese young lady must now learn fine manners, the etiquette of society, and, above all, the arrangement of flowers. The passion of the Japanese for flowers is well known. The mistress of a house who was unable to arrange them would be regarded as absolutely incompetent to take her place in the world; and not only must she have the artistic sense of colour and form, she must be learned in the deeper science of their allegorical significance. Flower language is one of the tongues in which she must be able to converse. Her previous education has to some extent prepared her for the acquisition of these graceful accomplishments. One year is devoted to them, and before the question of her matrimonial establishment is opened, one more year must be given to the serious study of housekeeping. Upon this it is felt that her future happiness may depend. Throughout the whole there is one supreme maxim upon which the conduct of a well-bred woman is made to turn, and this is "obedience." Life, the Japanese girl is taught, divides itself into three stages of obedience. In youth she is to obey her father, in marriage her husband, in widowhood her eldest son. Hence preparation for life is always preparation for service. The marriage of the Japanese girl usually takes place when she is about seventeen. It is contrary to all custom that she should have any voice in it. Once married, she passes from her father's household into the household of her husband, and her period of self-abnegation begins. Her own family is to be henceforth as nothing to her.

THE POWER OF THE HUSBAND'S RELATIONS.

Her duty is to charm the existence of her husband and to please his relations. Custom demands that she shall always smile upon him, and that she shall carefully hide from him any signs of bad humour, jealousy, or physical pain. His house must also be beautifully kept, and especial care paid to the meals. For it is not only the husband who has to be satisfied. His father, his mother, his brothers and his sisters must be considered, and if their tastes are not satisfied they have the right not only to complain, but, in the case of the parents, to demand a divorce. It is, in fact, only when the young lady is married that the full necessity for her elaborate education becomes apparent. She may love her husband. M. Tinseau asserts that, such being the native goodness of the Japanese woman, she invariably does. If so, the parents' power of divorce becomes only the more terrible. A careful perusal of the article may be conscientiously recommended to all young English wives who are disposed to grumble at their lot.

Portraits of Russian Female Nihilists.—In the Cosmopolitan for September there is an interesting paper by Ella Norraikow, which contains portraits of Sophia Perovskaya, Vera Zassulitch, and Sophia Bardin, and half a dozen other Nihilist heroines. Vera Zassulitch has the face of a saint. The portraits afford an interesting study in physiognomy.

What it Costs to go Round the World.—The article on the great steamship lines of the world, in Scribner for September, describes the lines which serve the four ocean thoroughfares, and gives some interesting particulars as to the cost of long sea journeys. There are 11,000 steamers traversing what the writer calls the four great ocean routes. The first is that across the Atlantic, another by Suez to India, China, and Australia. To go round the world that way takes eighty to ninety days, and covers 23,000 miles. The passage money is £200, and the traveller who wishes to go in comfort and ease should have another £200 with him. Another sea route described is that by which you start from San Francisco, and sail round the American continent to New York. The journey is 16,500 miles long, it takes 100 days to cover it, and the fare is about the same as that round the world, namely, £200 for the ticket and £200 for other expenses. To go round the Cape of Good Hope to Australia and back round Cape Horn is about 25,150 miles, and can be covered in eighty-one days. The cost is only £150.

THE FOUNDER OF THE BRAZILIAN REPUBLIC.

A POSITIVIST REVOLUTIONIST.

THE Nouvelle Revue is to be congratulated in having secured from the pen of M. Arango the sketch, short as it is, of the founder of the Republic in Brazil while his memory is still fresh in the hearts of his family and his friends.

MAGALHÃES.

Benjamin Constant Botelho de Magalhães was born in 1833 in a Brazilian farm in the neighbourhood of Rio Janeiro. His father was Portuguese, his mother was Brazilian. Both were poor. From early youth their son gave evidence of both talent and energy. His father died when he was a boy, and he entered the army because it was, on the whole, the profession which was the most accessible to his limited choice. He entered the army in 1852, and eagerly seized the opportunities of instruction which were offered by the various military courses and schools open to the intelligent young soldier. M. Arango says comprehensively of this part of his life:—"His studies were brilliant, and he took part in all revolts against all tyrannies."

HOW HE BECAME A POSITIVIST.

While he was yet a student he eked out his slender resources by giving private lessons, and managed to support both himself and his mother. The special bent of his mind was determined by coming one day in the course of his mathematical studies upon the work of Comte upon the Calculus. From this he was led to study the philosophy of the great Positivist. It answered to his increased needs. He became and remained to the end of his life a Comtist. From 1863 to 1865 he studied in the Astronomical Observatory of Rio Janeiro. In 1868 he became a captain and took a brilliant part in the war with Paraguay. But he was essentially a modern soldier, that is a man over whom science and humanity had far more influence than the love of adventure and the brute belief in force. On leaving the theatre of war he returned to his scientific studies, and after an interlude of what strikes the European mind as a strange occupation for a soldier, namely, presiding over an institution for the blind, he obtained the professorship of mathematics in the Military College. It was in 1870, just after the foundation of the third French Republic. Republicanism was much excited in Brazil, and feeling ran so high that a portion of the Conservative party objected to a Positivist holding any post under the Imperial Government. The professorship went by competition.

AN UNCOMPROMISING COMTIST.

It was feared that Magalhães would not be permitted to compete. On the day of the opening of the competition he made a public declaration, before the deciding jury, of his Positivist principles, and added that if he obtained the professorship he intended to use his position for the purpose of teaching the doctrines in which he believed, in so far as they related to the science he professed. Further, he declared his conviction that the social outcome of Positive philosophy would be a republic. He was determined to live under no false colours, and desired to know whether under these circumstances it was open to him to compete. Permission was granted, and he won the prize. It could not, however, be expected that such an official would be regarded with favourable eyes by the Ministers of Dom Pedro's Court. He took part in many competitions, won many a first place, but never was again appointed to an advantageous position. His promotion was barred. His scientific studies perhaps benefited, and in these years he became a recognised authority in the world of mathematics. He also devoted himself more and more to the spread of Positivism throughout Brazil, thus consciously or unconsciously preparing men's minds for the days of action which were to come. Amongst the other scholastic achievements of this period of his life was the foundation of the Ecole Normale of Rio Janeiro, over which he presided up to the moment of the Revolution.

HOW HE MADE THE REVOLUTION.

It was not until the threatened Monarchy, awake to the dangers which invaded it on all sides, confided the duty of saving the dynasty by means of extreme measures against Republicanism to the Ouro Preto Ministry in 1889, that Magalhães became definitely a politician. The parallel currents of action and contemplation which had hitherto run separately in his being now joined their forces and produced a man capable of organising and carrying out a revolution for which he was convinced that his countrymen were ready. He flung himself into the struggle with the same ability, force, and, above all, readiness for self-sacrifice which had hitherto distinguished his private career. He organised the co-operation of army and navy, he put himself in touch with the political leaders of the Republican party, with the press, with civilian feeling generally. He studied, organised, and proposed the plan of the Revolution. He did not fear to support his views by public speech. On the 15th of November he was at General da Fonseca's side at the head of the troops which besieged the headquarters of the Monarchic Government. He harangued the people. So long as there was a danger to run, or a point still unconquered, he exposed himself without a second thought. When the Revolution was an accomplished fact, and the Republic safely established, he withdrew. He wanted nothing for himself.

MINISTER OF WAR.

The people conferred upon him the rank of Brigadier-General, by the same act which raised General da Fonseca to the post of Commander-in-Chief. He declined the honour. Afterwards he was forced to accept it, with the portfolio of Minister of War, and he devoted the last year of his life to the reorganisation of the army, which presented itself in the light of a bit of serious work yet waiting to be done. His conception of the right direction of military reform may be divined by the introduction to his report on reorganisation, in which he sketches the ideal of the citizen soldier of the future, who shall represent the incarnation of national honour and shall be the intelligent centre of "peace, progress, and reform." Working busily to the last moment, he died of heart disease on the 22nd of January of this year. The honours which he rejected in his lifetime as being "entirely opposed to the plan of conduct" which he had traced for himself, were heaped upon him at his death, and his name goes down to posterity respectfully inscribed upon the records of Congress as the Founder of the Brazilian Republic.

THE Cosmopolitan for September proclaims itself a Woman's Number, having contributions from no one but ladies, with the exception of the writers of the chronicle and the critical article. The editor has also introduced the plan of giving a small portrait, the size of a postage stamp, with a brief biographical sketch of the writer, on the first page of each article.

AN ITALIAN VIEW OF TOLSTOI.

THE study of the Gospel according to Tolstoi has spread into Italy, and the well-known critic, G. Boglietti, discusses the subject with considerable ability in the pages of the Nova Antologia, under the somewhat forcible heading, "The Damnation of Tolstoi." He describes the doctrines of the greatest of living Russians as they appear in "Ma Religion," "Ma Confession," and the more recent of his novels, as being "a form of evangelical humanitarianism which is the natural reaction against the depressing conclusions of modern science on the value of personal existence and man's destiny on earth. It is a desperate effort to reconstruct on a basis of faith the harmony of the world, giving to life a meaning which it had lost through the influence of pessimistic philosophy." In order to understand rightly the developments of his later teaching, it must be remembered that Tolstoi was a pessimist, not only in his youth, but even up to his fiftieth year. "Occupying a prominent social position, and gifted with unusual physical and intellectual qualities, he drank deeply at the fountain of life. He possessed love, riches, glory, and a refined appreciation of the arts; but everything was flavoured with the bitter sap of scepticism. It was not long before he realised the emptiness of such a life. Life, as he understood it, and as the majority of men understood it, appeared to him devoid of sense. . . . In the end he concluded with Schopenhauer that life was an unmixed evil."

After describing Tolstoi's conception of faith, his Italian critic points out how of necessity the Russian peasant is the man predestined to incarnate his idea of a religious renovation.

"The moujik has all the qualities requisite for the task—faith, ignorance, simple habits, resignation, suffering. How curious is the fate of the Russian moujik! Fifty years ago Alexander Herzen, and with him all the Russian Hegelians, presented the moujik to the world as the fortunate being who was to represent in himself the new era of the social revolution heralded by Hegel. And here is Tolstoi holding up this same moujik as the instrument of a religious revolution! I do not myself believe that the moujik will be any more fortunate in this new mission assigned to him than he was half a century ago."

"But how do Tolstoi's doctrines of universal love and non-resistance to evil lead him to the gruesome teachings of the 'Kreutzer Sonata'?"

"After having attacked all the other individual impulses of mankind as causes of pain and misery, he could not make an exception for love, the most egotistical of all the passions. He was obliged at all cost to destroy love in order to create that mystical unity of the human race of which he dreamt. From sexual love there sprang up the family, a group of families, the city, the State, all of which imply personal and particular interests and tendencies, all the thousand things which exist to-day before our eyes, and which Tolstoi wishes to destroy. Sexual love must therefore be placed under the ban. This Tolstoi does by taking his stand once again on the Gospel, and armed with a verse from St. Matthew (v. 28) declares matrimony to be mere adultery . . . . The 'Kreutzer Sonata' is in fact a violent and bitter tirade against continuous adultery under the name of matrimony. The profound knowledge of the human heart which Tolstoi displays in his most successful books, and his marvellous literary skill, serve him admirably in his present task of throwing discredit, shame, and abuse at matrimonial unions. These are represented in the 'Sonata' as a succession of miseries, torments, profound dissimulations, and ferocious and implacable hatreds, the whole crowned, be it understood, with deception and a second adultery . . . . It is by voluntary chastity that we shall prepare for the end of the world, an end which has been foretold by science as well as by Scripture."

There is much more of his early pessimism in his latest utterances than Tolstoi himself supposes.

TEMPERANCE EDUCATION IN AMERICA.

In Our Day for August there is a review of Mrs. Mary Hunt's account of temperance education in the United States, which contains some remarkable facts.

All but nine States out of the forty-four in the American Union now make scientific temperance education compulsory in their common schools. This great result has been brought about almost exclusively by the devoted labours of Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, of Hyde Park, Massachusetts, and of her assistants in the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Ten years ago no public school taught temperance in the United States. Now the accompanying map, which is reduced from that published in Our Day, affords a bird's-eye view of the progress of the movement in the United States. Those areas shown in black have no temperance laws. The following is an explanation of the marks:—

× The cross signifies that scientific temperance is a mandatory study in public schools,

* The star signifies a penalty attached to the enforcing clause of this statute in the State or territory to which it is affixed.

† The dagger signifies that the study is not only mandatory, but is required of all pupils in all schools,

‡ The double dagger signifies that the study is required of all pupils in all schools, and is to be pursued with text-books in the hands of pupils able to read.

|| The parallel indicates that the study is to be taught in the same manner and as thoroughly as other required branches.

§ The section mark indicates that text books on this topic used in primary and intermediate schools must give one-fourth their space to temperance matter, and those used in high schools not less than twenty pages.

¶ The paragraph indicates that no teacher who has not passed a satisfactory examination in this subject is granted a certificate or authorised to teach.

The success of temperance reformers in the United States in making temperance an indispensable part of the education of youth should encourage temperance reformers in other English-speaking countries to follow their example. Judging from Mr. Christie Murray's paper on the Australians, there is even more need for such education in Australia than in the old country.

CAVALRY ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

WHAT WILL BE THEIR RÔLE IN FUTURE WARS?

In the Journal of the U.S. Cavalry Association Lieutenant R. H. Wilson gives a translation from the Journal des Sciences Militaires of the portion of Major Nigote's "Great Questions of the Day" which deals with the effect of small-calibre arms and smokeless powder upon cavalry operations of the future. This article should be read in juxtaposition with the remarks by Captain Maude, R.E., on "Cavalry on the Battlefield," which appeared in the July number of the United Service Magazine. The point in dispute between the rival schools is whether cavalry should or should not renounce all idea of charging on the battlefield.

Major Nigote, in his article, goes very fully into the question of infantry fire, and quotes the outcome of experiments carried out with the 1886 rifle, from which it appears that the probable results of collective infantry fire, directed at lines of cavalry drawn up in two lines, vary with the Gras rifle from 21 hits per 100 shots fired at 800 to as many as an average of 64 hits at 100 yards. Leaving aside the great superiority of the Lebel rifle, he maintains that he will be a bold man indeed who attempts to prove the correctness of the theory of the "shock" by charging a regiment of infantry, even if posted at the extremity of the line. Moreover, he asks where will you concentrate such a mass of cavalry as would be required to execute the charge with any probability of success? At St. Privat the front of the Prussians was twelve miles long. How will you be able to concentrate your cavalry if an opportunity offers for a charge on one of the enemy's wings? If you hold it massed at one point, where will the point be? In the centre or behind a wing? If it should be far from the point where the necessity for its action is developed, the time requisite for moving such an immense mass, for the manœuvres in connection with the formation for the attack, will be such that the opportunity for its employment will have vanished. How will you manœuvre such a force of cavalry and, at the same time, conceal it from the view of the hostile artillery, now so efficient both as regards extreme range and accuracy of fire? Apart, however, from these crucial questions, the conditions under which battles are likely to be fought in future will render modern fields of battle, cut up by fieldworks and long lines of trenches, altogether impracticable for cavalry charges. Only by dint of successive, long, and laborious efforts, and by taking advantage of the accidents of the ground, and also of fieldworks, will the attacker succeed in even approaching his objective. The armies will, as it were, be nailed to the ground, and the final success will result in favour of the army having the greatest tenacity and the greatest energy remaining after a succession of partial engagements. But a new horizon opens out before mounted men. Cavalry alone, by the rapidity of its movements, can surround a column on the march and overwhelm it with its fire without showing itself. Cavalry patrols alone, for the same reason, are able to rush at full speed upon the enemy's outposts and collect the information which hitherto could only be revealed to the eye and ear by the sight of the smoke and the sound of the firearms, and in many cases it may be able to dismount and successfully engage the enemy's infantry with its own arms. Far in advance of its own army, alone or in connection with the other arms, it will put in a state of defence defiles, bridges, fords, etc., and may often be able to retard the advance of the enemy, and prevent the guns of his advance guard from coming into battery. In the protracted and severely contested battles of the future cavalry will obtain results of the greatest importance by moving in great masses on the flanks or rear of the enemy, and often by fighting on foot. Its mobility and rapidity of movement will enable it to attempt concerted attacks on different points, and to threaten the enemy's line of retreat. Whenever the presence of infantry is needed at a point so distant that it cannot be reached without subjecting it to great fatigue, cavalry can be substituted with great advantage. It will repair to the place with celerity, and will create a diversion as efficacious as any that it could hope for from any charge, for which, during long and anxious hours it awaits the opportunity that never comes. A division of cavalry can put 2,000 troopers in line, after reserving 400 for holding horses. This is almost the effective strength of a French regiment of infantry, and Major Nigote claims to have proved that no force of cavalry, no matter what its strength, can hope to attack such a force with reasonable prospect of success. Captain Maude, on the other hand, hopes that our future cavalry leaders will never accept the idea that they must never dare to ride at unshaken infantry without the visible certainty that it is already shaken.

HOW TO SAVE COAL AND GAIN WARMTH.

At the British Association last month, one of the important papers discussed once more the obligations which we owe to posterity on account of the reckless rate at which we are consuming the coal supply of the world. By way of diminishing to an appreciable extent the waste of household coal, a Newcastle man, Mr. Steele by name, has patented a simple invention by which, if the servant can but be induced to light the fire at the top instead of the bottom of the grate, the consumption of coal is diminished by 50 per cent. I cannot guarantee the percentage, but this I can say, after having made a trial of the invention both at the office and in my own house, that it answers very well when it is properly attended to, and that it is very unpopular when it is neglected. When the fire is properly laid and lighted from above—and Mr. Steele declares that he can kindle a fire hot enough to boil a kettle in ten minutes after lighting—the fire burns much more slowly than in ordinary grates. The smoke passing through the red-hot coals at the top of the fire is converted into heat, and the incandescent mass remains red-hot for longer than would be believed to be possible by those who have not made the experiment. The invention is a very simple one. It consists of a corrugated plate, fitting the bottom of the grate, pierced with holes for the admission of air down the top of each corrugation or fold. By this means the admission of air is regulated, it enters the fire about an inch above the level of the grate; the ash, of which there is very little, can be cleared out so as to leave the air passages free without disturbing the fire. The disadvantage of the patent is that if the fire is not properly laid from the first it deadens and dulls the fire. There is not so much coal burnt, but the fire is so dull that the economy is bought too dear. When a fire is needed to be kept on all night without tending Mr. Steele's patent is simply invaluable. It costs five shillings and can be fixed to any grate. The inventor's address is Newcastle Hotel, 103, Euston Road, N.W.

The Italian Ministry.—An anonymous writer in the Westminster Review for September writes an article on the Italian Ministry, giving biographical details concerning most of the Italian ministers for which we look in vain elsewhere.

WHICH IS THE CLEVEREST STATE IN THE UNION?

SOME time ago an industrious compiler published an article in the Nineteenth Century showing the distribution of ability in England according to counties and occupations. Mr. Cabot Lodge has written an article in the Century for September, in which he prosecutes the same inquiry on similar lines in the United States. He takes the six volumes of Appleton's "Encyclopædia of American Biography," and classifies all persons therein mentioned according to birthplace, occupations, and race extraction. The number of names so tabulated, excluding immigrants, is 14,243, and it includes virtually all the men and women who, by their ability, have risen even a little above the general level. The net result of his inquiry is that Connecticut has produced a larger percentage of able people in proportion to its population than any other State in the Union. Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania have supplied one-half of the 14,000 able persons mentioned in the "Encyclopædia," while the six New England States and the three Middle States furnish three-quarters of the ability of the country. Among the newer States Iowa leads, Virginia has easily the first place in the South States, New York, Mass., Virginia, and Pennsylvania furnish more than one-half of the distinguished soldiers of the Union. The following is a table of the categories of ability recorded in Appleton:—Statesmen, 2,150; soldiers, 1,892; clergy, 2,164; lawyers, 1,500; physicians, 859; literature, 2,051; art, 462; science, 564; education, 586; navy, 482; business, 559; philanthropy, 221; pioneers and explorers, 183; inventors, 169; engineers, 174; architects, 43; musicians, 82; actors, 102.

Mr. Lodge says:—

The ability of the South, less in amount than that of the New England and Middle States, was confined to three or four departments. In the Middle States and New England ability sought every channel for expression, and was displayed in various ways. All the States, in not very widely varying proportions, produced statesmen, soldiers, lawyers, pioneers, and clergymen, and the seaboard States naval officers. But almost all the literature, art, science, business, philanthropy, and music; almost all the physicians, educators, inventors, engineers, architects, and actors were produced by the Middle and New England States. This is a most significant fact. It shows a wide difference between the two civilisations; that of the New England and Middle States on the one side, and that of the Southern States on the other; for the surest tests of civilisation in any community are the amount of ability produced and the variety of directions in which that ability has been displayed. The thirteen original States were with one or two variations settled, and they were all controlled, by men of the same race-stocks and of like traditions. The cause of the wide difference in amount and variety of ability shown by these tables is a fresh proof, if proof were needed, of the pernicious results of slavery upon even the finest races. There never was a more complete or a worse delusion than the one once so sedulously cultivated, that in this age of the world aristocracy in the best and truest sense and a high civilisation could be compatible with slavery. No finer people ever existed than those who settled and built up our Southern States, but when slavery became, in the course of the world's progress, and in a free country, nothing less than a hideous anomaly, it warped the community in which it flourished, limited the range of intellectual activity, dwarfed ability, and retarded terribly the advance of civilisation.

The figures as to the race origin of men of ability bring out many interesting facts. Mr. Lodge says:—

I believe that in proportion to their numbers the Huguenots have produced more and the Germans fewer men of ability than any other races in the United States. I think there can be no doubt as to the Germans, for their immigration was larger than any other in the colonial period except that of the English and possibly of the Scotch-Irish. If we add the French and the French Huguenots together we find that the people of French blood exceed absolutely, in the ability produced, all the other races represented except the English and Scotch-Irish, and show a percentage in proportion to their total original immigration much higher than that of any other race. The Dutch suffered slightly, I have no doubt, in the same way and from the same causes as the Germans, while the other immigrants, from Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, did not suffer at all and had no barriers of language to overcome.

The race table shows the enormous predominance of the English in the upbuilding of the United States, and if we add to the English the people who came from other parts of Great Britain and Ireland that predominance becomes overwhelming.

This is all very well, but fifty years hence some future Mr. Lodge will have a very different tale to tell. It is noticeable what a very great difference in ability there is between the Ulster Irish who are called Scotch-Irish and the Irish proper. The latter, in proportion to their numbers, contribute very little to the sum of American ability.

Wanted: a new Translation of the Gospel.—I have received from two correspondents, who have been simultaneously engaged in the task of translating the Gospel narrative from the original into nineteenth-century English, an appeal for help from those who are in sympathy with their object. What they urge is, that the English even of the Revised Version is somewhat archaic, and gives a sense of unreality to the narrative in the Bible, which stands in the way of its realisation by the ordinary reader. Those who are interested in the subject, and are willing to help in the translation, are asked to send their names and addresses to me, which I will communicate to the translators in question.

DR. SAMUEL KENNEDY, whose name has been much before the public in connection with the advocacy of the Mattei remedies, has been deprived of his F.R.C.S. by the College of Surgeons of Edinburgh for practising a secret remedy. He read a paper, which he will shortly publish in his forthcoming volume, in which he set forth his justification for using Mattei remedies that cured, although their ingredients were not known to him. The Fellows listened to what he had to say, and then by a majority withdrew his Fellowship. His licence to practice—thanks to the statute law of the land—they could not touch. They could bark, but they could not bite. A question was asked whether they would deal in the same way with those who had experimented with the secret remedy of Dr. Koch, and the answer was that the College would deal with such cases when they were formally brought before their attention. They refused, however, to inquire whether the statements made by Dr. Kennedy as to effect of the Mattei remedies was or was not founded upon fact. They neither denied nor confirmed. The position which they took up would logically justify the expulsion of any Fellow who effected the most miraculous cures by the use of a medicine the precise nature of which he could not explain. This may be all very well from the point of view of professional etiquette and the rules of the trade, but as doctors exist for the benefit of their patients and not for the maintenance of the trade union rules of their profession, the vital question is one which the public and the practitioners regard from very opposite standpoints.

THE STATESMEN OF HUNGARY.

In the Leisure Hour for September the statesmen of Hungary have their turn. The article, which is longer than most in this series, is illustrated with portraits of Count Szechenyi, Kossuth, Francis Deák, Tisza, Szapary, APPONYI.

Szilagyi, Von Baross, and Count Apponyi. Of all these statesmen by far the most interesting is the fallen chief-tain Tisza, of whom a very interesting, and on the whole appreciative, account is given :—

This man, who for many years has filled a large place in the public life of his country, was by his personality in no ways suited to inflame their ardent Oriental imaginations. Whoever has beheld the small thin figure, clad in curiously fitting garb, with its long flowing hair, thin beard, and large blue spectacles, would imagine with difficulty that he saw in this undignified form the Prime Minister of a people devoted to show and pomp. Tisza has neither the glowing temperament of Gladstone, nor the wise moderation of Deák. He does not possess the art of winning over the crowd; he is not a great man, and nevertheless he is a remarkable one. In order to get to know him, it was necessary to frequent Parliament and the party clubs; both here and there he showed himself ever ready for combat, a debater who was never at a loss for a reply, surveying his domain with sure looks, detecting in cool blood the weaknesses of his adversary, and utilising them with patience and self-possession.

He was ousted upon a trumpery question about the citizenship of Kossuth, but, says the writer :—

Tisza knew well that the cause of his fall had been a mere pretext, that it was the clerical aristocracy who had wielded this weapon against him, angered at the law concerning mixed marriages that he had allowed to pass. The aristocracy, the clergy, high-born ladies, all agitated against this law, which, though it passed the House, has remained a dead letter. This agitation gave a new power to the aristocracy, who had ever been irreconcilable foes of the Cabinet, and of the rigid Calvinist at its head, who remained apart from all the social diversions of the rich landowners, whose frugal, modest mode of living contrasted unfavourably with that of the spendthrift nobles with whom he was surrounded. Tisza loved work; they loved idleness.

The "General," as Tisza was popularly called by the people, retired entirely from public life to become a simple soldier in the ranks of his party. Never had he seemed greater or more dignified than at the moment of this self-imposed renunciation.

His successor, Szapary, found no difficulty in settling the Kossuth question, and showed the strength of his hand in dealing with the vexed question of the baptism of children born of mixed marriages :—

It was the Hungarian law that the boys had to follow the religion of the father and the girls that of the mother; but of late the Catholic priests had obtained the upper hand, and, refusing to obey the law, claimed all children born of mixed marriages as belonging to their creed. This obliged Count Csaky to put forth an edict saying that if the law continued to be disobeyed, he should fine the clergy very heavily. The Opposition, hoping to gain favour with the populace, tried to rouse fanatic ill-will; but their efforts were vain; Csaky, Szilagyi, and Szapary showed themselves true patriots of the Deák stamp; they declared that if this opposition against the course of the laws was not dropped they would take the offensive. And quite recently in the Chamber the Minister of Justice has declared that he is busy with a law which will regulate these questions, and will put both marriage and the registration of children into the hands of the civil authorities. These declarations on the part of the Ministry proved a bitter disappointment to all those who hoped that, with the retirement of Tisza, Liberalism in Hungary was laid in the grave for ever.

KOSSUTH.

Of those whose portraits are given, there are brief descriptions; but few of them are of any interest to Englishmen, with the exception of Count Apponyi, the leader of the clerical and aristocratic party in Hungary.

A few lines should be devoted to directing attention to the Musical Times' article on "Jumbomania." The word is not pretty, but it expresses not inaptly the present craze of composers and concert-givers for long compositions and monster performances. In literature a step has been taken in the right direction by the increasing attention given to short stories, and it is pretty certain that if composers, and, above all, concert-givers, were to pay a similar attention to the art of condensation they would find their reward in increased popularity. This is a busier age than any of its predecessors, and a very large number of people who would patronise music are deterred from doing so by the inordinate length of the entertainments devoted to the art. Music loses its recreative quality when it outlasts the patience of the hearer.

CAN RAILWAY FARES BE CHEAPENED IN ENGLAND?

NO. BY MR. W. M. ACWORTH.

THERE is a very interesting article in the Nineteenth Century for September on Railway Passenger Fares, in which Mr. W. M. Acworth discusses the possibility of England following the example of Hungary in reducing her railway fares. He examines the zone system and thinks it could not be applied to this country. The real significance of the Hungarian reform is not the issue of tickets by zones, but the reduction of the price of tickets, and this has led to a widespread movement in the same direction throughout the civilised world.

Hungary has fired the match, and the train has exploded all over Europe, Roumania has followed suit. Austria has adopted a modification of the Hungarian system, known by the name of the Kreuzer tariff, but involving even more sweeping reductions from the old fares than its predecessor. Russia is said to be on the eve of moving in the same direction; in the Swedish and Dutch Parliaments there have been animated debates on the subject, and the adoption of the Hungarian system, with some modifications, is expected before long. The Prussian Ministry of Railways has circulated throughout the kingdom a project of reform involving very large concessions in passenger fares; which, however, has been received in some quarters with outspoken disapproval, on the express ground that the concessions do not go far enough. The French Government is negotiating with the great railway companies for a reduction of about 30 per cent. in the third-class passenger fares, in return for the abandonment of some portion of the very heavy taxes to which the companies are at present liable.

The following is the German official statement as to the comparative costliness of third-class travelling in the various countries of the world:—

The price at which it is possible to travel third class ranges downwards (I leave the figures in their German form, as the ratio between them is the only point of importance for our present purpose) from 5.5 pfennings per kilometre in England and 4.52 in France, to 4.25 in Holland, 4.16 in Switzerland, 4.07 in Italy, and 3.92 in Sweden. It varies from 4.67 to 3.0 on the various German railways. It is 3.24 in Hungary, 3.0 in Belgium, 2.81 in Russia, and finally falls to 2.0 in Austria; while in North Germany there are fourth-class fares, ranging from 2.5 in Oldenburg to 2.0 in Prussia, Saxony, and Hesse, for carriages without seats, that are made use of on occasion for the conveyance of cattle.

Mr. Acworth points out that, measured by the wages a penny a mile is cheaper in England than a fifth of a penny a mile, which is all that is charged in India. He does not think that fares could be much reduced in this country, for the reason that no reduction of fares would fill up the carriages that are now run empty. What it would do would be to overcrowd the carriages which are already full. All business people wish to go to London in the morning and return at night. To reduce the fare would simply overcrowd the morning trains in and the evening out. It would not fill the empty carriages out from London in the morning or the empty trains to London in the evening. All that the cheapening of fares would do would be to increase the congestion of traffic which already exists, necessitating more station accommodation and duplication of the line where property is the dearest and most difficult to obtain. Hence as a financial operation Mr. Acworth does not think the railways could materially reduce their fares all round and continue to pay a dividend. His only suggestion is that local authorities should cease to levy rates on railway property, exacting in return for this forbearance greater facilities and cheaper rates for the conveyance of population from the centres of towns to the country outside. Mr. Acworth is somewhat of an optimist, but his paper is very intelligently put together, and, although compacted full of facts and figures, has sufficient thought in it to prevent the information degenerating into a mere babel of statistics.

The following illustrations from Kladderadatsch aptly illustrate Mr. Acworth's prediction as to the result of adopting the zone system:—

BEFORE THE ZONE TARIFF.

AFTER THE INTRODUCTION OF THE SYSTEM.

"Journalistic Heathenism."—In the King's Own for September there is an article under this title by an anonymous writer, who gives the following curious reminiscence of the stirring times before the passing of the Criminal Law Amendment Act in 1885:—

During the time that "The Maiden Tribute of Modern Babylon" was appearing in the Pall Mall Gazette, the circulation of one London paper fell off thirty thousand. Of course, the poor masher had spent his penny and could not afford the additional luxury of buying the "Daily Crammer." Other papers suffered proportionately, and hence there went up a cry from Fleet Street which has never been equalled since the night when the first-born were slaughtered in the land of Egypt. Those powerful engines of journalistic warfare—the leader writers—were set to work. They declared that Stend was corrupting the nation, and was purveying moral filth in order to raise the circulation of the Pall Mall Gazette. During the time this fever of indignation was at its height, I happened to meet an old journalistic friend and pointed out to him the extraordinary phenomenon. "It's all bosh, my boy," he said. "It's merely a case of, 'Whose sins ye envy ye don't abhor!' I'll guarantee that there is not one of these papers now indulging in this moral tall-talk that would not give a thousand a day for the privilege of reporting a divorce case held in camera, provided, of course, the case were sufficiently filthy and the right were exclusive."

THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT IN AMERICA.

UNCLE SAM'S DEBT TO THE LAND OF THE KANGAROO.

AFTER four years of agitation, says Mr. W. B. Shaw, in the American edition of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, twenty-eight ballot reform laws have been placed on the statute-books of as many States. It is significant of the growing internationalism of the time, that distant British colonial governments have contributed the essential features of the new system as generally adopted in America. It is the voting system of South Australia transferred and adapted to American institutions. The whole English-speaking race is indebted to the land of the kangaroo for one of the most useful and practical lessons in the art of politics which any people in modern times have been privileged to learn. Its opponents may jeer and jibe at the "Kangaroo reform," but the abiding

This is the plan now followed in eight States. Of the comparative advantages and disadvantages of the two methods, not much can be said. Party grouping impairs secrecy to a certain extent. Only an instant of time is required to vote a "straight" party ticket, as the laws do not require each name to be checked, but a mark at the top, after the name of the party, suffices.

In Massachusetts, each ballot-box is furnished with a bell and mechanism for registering and cancelling. This apparatus was adopted several years before the new ballot law was proposed. It has proved to be not only a triumph of Yankee ingenuity, but a most useful and practical arrangement, and has only recently been adopted by the New Hampshire Legislature as an accompaniment of the new ballot law of that State. The register indicates the number of ballots deposited, each one of which is cancelled. If by any means two should be deposited at once, only one could be cancelled or indicated by the register.

THE SHADED STATES ARE THOSE WHICH HAVE ADOPTED THE AUSTRALIAN BALLOT.

common sense of the Anglo-Saxon masses everywhere will not be deceived. Right-thinking Americans will rejoice, above all, that they are living in the midst of such world-movements in democracy as ignore all national bonds.

Only English-speaking peoples have as yet copied the Australian regulations in detail. Canada followed the mother country in adopting them. Then State after State followed.

In the United States there are two distinct methods of grouping the names of candidates: (1) The original Australian and English rule of alphabetical arrangement under the title of the office. This is followed by thirteen States—California, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, Oregon, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont, Washington, and Wyoming. (2) The Belgian system of grouping all names and offices by parties.

In California, in the nominating arrangements, no political party is recognised which polled less than three per cent. of the total vote at the last preceding election. Hence the only refuge for independent movements, in many cases, must be in the "nomination papers," as in other States, but here the California statute is peculiarly obstructive, for it demands that the number of signers of such a paper shall be not less than five per cent. of the total vote of the State or district. A nomination paper thus would require 12,500 signers for any State office. Each new political organisation, such as labour parties, in order to put a State ticket in the field, will be compelled either to secure 12,500 signers to nomination papers, or to bear the entire expense of printing and circulating "posters" for their candidates.

It now seems settled that more than one-half of the votes cast for President in 1892 will be cast under the Australian system.

POETRY IN THE PERIODICALS.

FRANK THE FIREMAN.

OPEN the door, will yer, Bill? Hush! take the gentleman's dicer.

You're the reporter, ain't yer? Can't say we're happy to know yer.

Bill, light some more of them candles. That's Frank, a-lookin' much nicer

Than he looked last night—all smoky. Here, stick this chair below yer.

Good-lookin' feller, weren't he? That's his kid in the corner.

Like him? Here, little Snooks, this gent's going to write about father.

Wife? Well, she isn't here, and I guess she won't be a mourner;

Took her last night to the hospital, hurted—or frightened rather.

Frank was our engine-driver; allus a-jokin' and singin'.

Married a week when he j'ined us. Brought her down onct—what a daisy!

Quiet and bashful and sweet; blushed when we smiled at her clingin'

Tenderly on to Frank's arm. Face as 'ud set yer half crazy.

Well, he'd been married two years (that's about right, Billy, ain't it?)

When, spinnin' one night to a fire, the engine-wheel bumped on a boulder,

And Frank, as was leanin' so for'ard he hadn't no show to prevent it,

Got pitched on the edge of a curb, and fractured his arm near the shoulder.

Bill there grabbed hold of the leathers: I stayed behind to assist him:

Wanted to ring for an ambulance, but Frank swore he'd never forgive it;

Bet yer he'd got in his head, if she tucked him in nicely and kissed him,

His arm 'ud be set in the mornin' and he'd be as sound as a trivet.

So I puts Frank in a cab and drives to the flat in a hurry,

And—well, yer see, she thought as he was good till the mornin' on duty,

And—hang it, I can't say the rest! Can't yer guess? There's a scream and a scurry,

And Frank a dead weight in my arms, and she—in her shame and her beauty!

Soon as he fetched round a bit he axed me to wrap up the baby;

Begged me to keep him awhile, and then for the hospital started;

Arm hangin' limp by his side (pain didn't trouble him, maybe);

Give a last look at the home, then walked away—broken-hearted!

When he reported again, my! what a change in the feller! Never once asked where she'd gone: seemed half the time to be sleepin'.

Eyes was as dull as a stone, face of the sickliest yellor.

Frank, he was hit pretty bad—hit much too heavy for weepin'.

Well sir, last night about ten, clang went the gong in the station.

All of us counted the strokes—clang! till it come to our figger.

Hosses was hitched in a jiff, then we was off like tarnation, Frank bendin' over the box, lashin' 'em up like a nigger.

Lors, how we rustled along! People a-runnin' and yellin';

Gong cryin' "Look out ahead!" street in a fiery sprinkle;

Cabs swingin' out of the way: whoa! this Fifth Avenue dwellin';

Ha! not a moment too soon; hose is run off in a twinkkle.

Engine starts in with a snort. Woman up there at the winder,

Where the flames crackle and dance (oh, sir, the sight was a sad un).

Frank, he looks up, rubs his eyes like he'd been hit with a cinder;

Makes a quick grab for an axe, goes up the stoop like a mad un.

"Up with the ladder!" he yells. Sping! and the door's off its hinges;

Frank disappears in the smoke. Bill there was first to go skyin'.

Flames from the winder below? Horror! the ladder—it sings!

Jump, woman! Merciful God! see, in Frank's arms she's a-lyin'!

Look! he's a strokin' her hair—kissin' and huggin' and kissin' (Guess every eye in that crowd felt in a bit of a quiver);

Strokin' and patten' her cheek, right where that hell is a-hissin',

Then drops her safely to Bill, crying, "Good-bye—I forgive her!"

That's all, sir; fun'ral's to-morrow. Frankey, the gent wants to kiss yer:

Says yer the son of a hero, grand as they puts in a story.

Good day. Us firemen ain't much: yer die and the world doesn't miss yer;

But Frank there's gone some'rs, you bet, where they gives out big medals for glory!

THOMAS FROST, of New York.

Belford's Magazine, August.

IN the Catholic World (New York) for August, Mr. James Buckham publishes the following poem, entitled "The Unknown Bound."

I watched a sail until it dropt from sight
Over the rounding sea. A gleam of white,
A last far-flashed farewell, and, like a thought
Slipt out of mind, it vanished and was not.

Yet, to the helmsman standing at the wheel
Broad seas still stretched before the gliding keel.
Disaster! Change!—he felt no slightest sign;
Nor dreamed he of that dim horizon line.

So may it be, perchance, when down the tide
Our dear ones vanish. Peacefully they glide
On level seas, nor mark the unknown bound.
We call it death—to them 'tis life beyond!

MISS WERNER contributes the following Sonnet to the Scotts Magazine:—

Nor when the sunshine lies upon the lea,
Nor only when the stormy heavens are bowed
In lightning's leap and crash of thunder-cloud,
Or 'mid the hurricane's wild revelry—
Not then we need strong faith to trust in Thee;—
But when the mist wraps round us as a shroud,
And chill and bitter skies above have bowed
The heart and will to leaden stagnancy,—

Then would we cry:—Smite through the dark, O Sun,
Cleave it with Thy sword-beams,—and from the grave
Raise up the heart that doubts in sick despair;
That waves of light may roll aside the dun
Death-fog;—or, if this be too much to crave,
We only pray to know the Light is there!

THE REVIEWS REVIEWED.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

THE Contemporary Review is one of the best of the reviews for September. It contains only nine articles, but they are almost all above the average. I notice elsewhere Mr. Christie Murray's paper on Australia, and Mr. Massingham's "Plea for the Nationalisation of Cathedrals."

GRANT DUFF REDIVIVUS.

The article on "A Month in Southern India" reminds us that there are malefactors whose crime against society is not the less heinous because it cannot be brought within the scope of any criminal code. Sir M. E. Grant Duff, who some twenty years ago used to furnish the British public every twelvemonth with a lucid survey of European politics, is apparently still in the full possession of his faculties. His paper, "A Month in Southern India," shows him to be as capable as ever of expressing his ideas in admirable English, lit up with brilliant illustrations and weighted with many profound aphorisms, and yet for the last ten years he has been almost a dumb dog. It is nothing less than a sin against mankind for such a man, with such an eye and such a pen, to deprive his countrymen of his ripe experience and extended observation. "A Month in Southern India" is a charming paper—optimist no doubt, as befits an ex-Governor of Madras, but full of information and a realistic vividness of description which is very rare. Sir M. E. Grant Duff shudders like an old official at the English agitation about the age of consent, saying that it is the worst of all methods of reform, which may be. But bad as it is, it is the only method possible, and as such it is infinitely better than none. It is impossible to summarise the paper, but it cannot be too widely read.

IBSEN AS A POET.

Mr. Wicksteed breaks new ground with Ibsen. Hitherto we have been dosed to death with Ibsenism, and have been invited to contemplate Ibsen as a freethinker, a social reformer, a moralist, and a dramatist. Mr. Wicksteed says nothing about Ibsen's plays; he takes us straight to his poems and gives translations of a dozen specimens of the Norse poet's verse. Judging from Mr. Wicksteed's translations it is possible that Ibsen will command the admiration of the general reader more as a poet rather than as a dramatist. Mr. Wicksteed's paper suggests that it would be much more to the purpose if, instead of worrying each other about the merits and demerits of Ibsen, some of his admirers would give us, in a handy, accessible form, a translation of all his works, dramatic and otherwise.

A GOOD WORD FOR THOMAS LAKE HARRIS.

Miss Julia Wedgwood, in her review of Mrs. Oliphant's "Life of Laurence Oliphant," remarks with perfect justice that the person who declined to meet Mr. Harris was not the person to write the biography of Laurence Oliphant. Speaking of Mr. Harris's discourses on the Millennium, Miss Wedgwood says:—

We must be content with recording our conviction that the appeals here given come straight from the heart of a true man, and embodied some vital power to elevate and purify the hearers, not through the suggestion of fresh thought, or through the expression of some commanding force of character, so much as through the intensity of yearning aspiration which breathes through every page, the upward longing of a heart that groans under the pressure of sin as most men groan under the pressure of pain. We may say that the impression made by Mr. Harris on other members of English society—equal or superior to Laurence Oliphant in worldly advantages—was rather of uncourteous independence than of interested assiduity.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE FOURTH GOSPEL.

There is a very elaborate paper by Prof. Emil Schurer, of Kiel, which occupies nearly thirty pages and is devoted to setting forth, with much lucidity and emphasis, the arguments against believing that the Fourth Gospel was written by the Apostle John. Prof. Schurer says:—

Unmistakably, then, the conscientious labour of theological science has strengthened the suspicion against the Johannine authorship of the Fourth Gospel, and the number is constantly increasing of those who believe it in the highest degree improbable that the Apostle wrote the Gospel.

Prof. Schurer concludes his demonstration with the consolatory assurance that—"even if this Gospel must fall more and more behind the Synoptics as a source of history, it will always have its worth as a witness of the Christian faith."

BACH.

Mr. W. F. Apthorp waxes eloquent in praise of Bach. The temper in which he writes may be inferred from the following extract:—

Take Bach home with you and commune with him there over your own pianoforte; study him with loving diligence, taking first what happens most to strike your personal fancy—for even in Bach there are some things which almost anyone can like—and thus habituate yourself to his style. I know of no finer, deeper, nor higher musical education. In a word, sweeping as the statement may seem, I make it circumspectly and with complete conviction, that there is no more trustworthy gauge of a man's musical nature and culture than his appreciation and love of Bach. In him you find what is highest, noblest, and best in music; and furthermore, it is through him that the other great composers are best to be appreciated.

Development of the Mythic Dragon.—In the Magazine of Art, Mr. John Leyland traces the development of the dragon of mythology, legend, and art. The mythic dragon, he sums up, began as an oppressor of man, depriving him of that which was his birthright and necessary for his sustenance; he was hated and feared as the universal enemy: he became the object of propitiation or even of worship, for the avoidance of his malevolence, or the procuring of that which he could bestow; he was assailed for the possession of his secret hoard; by him was man deprived of those who were fairest and most dear; and at length he was slain or led captive by the might of the champion's arm. He passed thus into the folk-lore and literature of every nation, and was adopted almost universally as a symbol, a grotesque, or a decorative feature in art. But, when the yard-ward of the sixteenth century natural philosophy was applied to him, the dragon, like all things built up of mythology and poetry fell away at that stern touch of reality.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

In the Fortnightly for September there are three articles to which reference is made elsewhere—Professor Tyndall's paper on the "Prevention of Consumption," Mr. Low upon Mr. Lowell, and Francis Adams on "Social Life in Australia." The other articles are somewhat out of the way.

MR. FREDERIC HARRISON ON THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY.

Mr. Harrison prints as a paper the lecture which he addressed to the University Extension students at Oxford on "The Thirteenth Century." Speaking of the thirteenth century, Mr. Harrison says that it was an abortive revival: it was a failure, but a splendid failure. It was impossible that society might be saved by some regeneration of the Church, whereas the real force of Catholicism was exhausted, and the intellectual wisdom of the age was transferred from the Churchmen to the doctors. The following passage upon the cathedrals in the thirteenth century may be quoted in support of Mr. Massingham's contention in the Contemporary that the cathedrals should be nationalised:—

These glorious fanes of the thirteenth century were far more than works of art: they were at once temples, national monuments, museums, schools, musical academies, and parliament halls, where the whole people gathered to be trained in every form of art, in all kinds of knowledge, and in all modes of intellectual cultivation. They were the outgrowth of the whole civilisation of their age.

A BALKAN FEDERATION.

Mr. James Bouchier publishes a full explanation of the views of the leaders of the movement now on foot for the confederation of the Balkans. He says he has it from an authentic source, and he gives the information, although he concludes his paper by declaring that the initial difficulties are insurmountable, and that the scheme, which is generally attributed to M. Tricoupis, is hopelessly impossible. The idea is that the Balkan States, if they would unite together, might without the aid of any foreign power compel the Turks to clear out of Europe, although they would allow the Sultan still to rule his Asiatic Empire from Constantinople. They calculate that Europe would keep the ring and see fair play. M. Tricoupis, however, says Mr. Bouchier, will utterly fail to induce the Greeks to abandon their preposterous claims to Macedonia. The only Balkan Confederation that is possible would be a defensive league in which Turkey would be allowed to take part.

SWISS ATHLETIC SPORTS.

Mr. J. A. Symonds describes the Federal Athletic Sports, celebrated every three years in Switzerland. He had just been writing six chapters of his "Michael Angelo," and he went to take a rest at the Athletic Festival at Geneva. With his mind saturated with Michael Angelo's art, he sought among the athletes at Geneva the type of the great Italian artist's male form. He discovered him in a young fellow from the Jura, and by comparing the living reality with the artist's ideal he arrived at various conclusions for which we must refer the reader to his paper. I quote the following out-of-the-way and suggestive observation from Mr. Symond's paper:—

I asked a friend of mine—a stag-like youth from Graubünden, tall and sinewy, like young Achilles on a fresco at Pompeii—how all the gymnasts in this country came to be so brotherly. "Oh," he replied, "that is because we come into physical contact with one another. You only learn to love men whose bodies you have touched and handled." True as I believe this remark to be, and wide-reaching in its possibilities of application, I somehow did not expect it from the lips of an Alpine peasant.

MR. FRANK HARRIS'S THIRD EFFORT.

Mr. Frank Harris, who has abandoned politics for art—the literary art of writing short stories—gives us a third sample of his peculiar genius in three sketches of life in a western mining camp, entitled "A Triptych." The third is better than either of those which preceded it for one reason, because it is not disfigured by the presence of a woman, and hitherto Mr. Harris has only given us women whose room is very much better than their company. There is life, character, and colour in this Triptych. Mr. Harris's range is wide, and we look forward with pleasure to his further efforts in this new line. It is somewhat odd Mr. Harris should only seem to feel at home in society which reeks either with murder or adultery.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Mr. William Archer describes the work of Maurice Maeterlink, a Belgian dramatist, whose grim and grisly plays fill Mr. Archer with admiration. Fate—a blind, non-moral fate—is the beginning and end of his philosophy. Mr. Karl Blind describes Pytheas, an early Greek explorer who visited England and the northern seas about 320 years before Christ. Mr. Edward Delille describes the works of M. Maurice Barres, a modern French writer, with whom art and feeling go hand in hand. We miss the continuation of Miss Schreiner's South African papers. It is surely about time we had number two.

Literary Men as Husbands.—Mr. Andrew Lang, in Longman's Magazine, makes the newly-published life of Mrs. Carlyle the text for the following remarks as to the reason why literary men make bad husbands:—

The moral for ladies is, "Don't marry literary men." The marriages of authors have been wretched, out of all proportion to the common lot. The reason is not only that authors are vain, and irritable, and flighty, and absorbed, like artists, in their work; the true, or chief, cause of married misery among writers is probably this: they do their work at home. Now, bricklayers, soldiers, doctors, barristers, clerks, and most men, do their work away from home. Domestic troubles about servants, children, butchers, dressmakers, cannot be launched on them while they are occupied with their business. Nor do they, in turn, bring preoccupation with briefs, or bricks, or clients, or what not, into their domestic circle. But Mrs. Literary Man is apt to rush in upon the solitude of Genius with some "terrible tale from the baker's," while Genius, when summoned to his meals, has his head full of rhymes, or of the persons in his novel, or, to take Mr. Carlyle's case, of Frederick the Great or Oliver Cromwell. His mind is absent when he should be lending the pleased ear to feminine prattle, and, later, when examined therein, he is miserably plucked. He is convicted of not having attended to what was said—a crime of insult. The unlucky pair, as Mrs. Carlyle said, had thinner skins than other people, and were profusely profane to begin with. But if Mr. Carlyle had been wise enough to keep his books and papers in a remote studio, and to walk thither every morning, he and his wife would have given less handle to the gossip and the biographer. Young ladies about to marry literary men, young men engaged to literary ladies, should ponder on these things, and arrange to do their work away from home, unless they have much better tempers and digestions than the Carlyles enjoyed. "Home industries" may be salutary when they are mechanical, but not when they are mental, especially if the labourer has the irritability of some, luckily not of all, geniuses.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

THE most interesting paper in the Nineteenth Century is Mr. Carnegie's on "An American View of Imperial Federation," which is dealt with elsewhere. Mr. Acworth's article on Cheap Railway Fares and Mr. Gladstone's calculations as to the precise majority that awaits him in the next Parliament are also dealt with elsewhere. The number is full of interest, and contains many articles that are very readable.

ARCHIBALD FORBES AND HIS REMINISCENCES.

The first in vivid interest probably of any paper in the magazines of the month is Mr. Forbes' reminiscences of his adventures as a war correspondent in the Bulgarian, Zulu, and Afghan campaigns. No man living can pen such brilliantly vivid pictures of what he has seen on the battlefield as Archibald Forbes. His account of the battle of Ulundi and of the abortive attempts to storm Plevna are very fine pieces of work indeed. His three pictures of Tzar Alexander II. are very striking, and his estimate of the Emperor's character is marked by candour and insight. His account of the scene of the massacre of Isandhlwana, four months after the Zulus had slaughtered a thousand of our men, is very vivid:—

All the way up the slope I traced, by the ghastly token of dead men, the fitful line of flight. It was like a long string with knots in it; the string formed of single corpses, the knots of clusters of dead, where, as it seemed, little groups had gathered to make a hopeless, gallant stand, and so die fighting.

WHAT TO DO WITH WORN-OUT PARSONS.

Dr. Jessopp discusses what should be done with the superannuated parson, and makes the suggestion that every clergyman should be compelled to pay ten per cent. of his income as provision against old age when he becomes incapacitated for the active discharge of his duties. He would levy the ten per cent. not on the clergyman, but on those who pay the clergyman, so that no clergyman would ever draw more than 90 per cent. of his nominal salary. This money would be put to his credit as a premium upon the policy of insurance standing in his name, while the sum would go on increasing at compound interest. On retiring from the profession he could withdraw his money, but would there and then become ineligible for resuming holy orders. Dr. Jessopp says that the time has now come for some decisive step to be taken in this matter, and he puts forward his scheme as the result of much practical thinking upon the subject.

FERDINAND LASSALLE.

Mrs. Arthur Kennard gives an account of Ferdinand Lassalle, the brilliant and handsome Hebrew who half-converted Bismarck to Socialism, and who forms the central figure in Mr. George Meredith's "Tragic Comedians." Lassalle's idea was that the State should be the organisation in which the whole virtue of man should realise itself. Mrs. Kennard quotes some passages from Bismarck's speeches when he was under the influence of Lassalle, which may be recalled with advantage to-day:—

People talk about State Socialism (he said on one occasion) as if such things were to be disposed of in a phrase. State Socialism will have its day, and he who takes it up will assuredly be the man at the wheel. It is the outcome of an urgent necessity; we must find some means of relieving the indebted poor on the part of the State, and not in the form of alms.

Contentment among the disinherited classes (he says on another occasion) would not be dearly purchased by an enormous sum. They must be made to understand that the State is of some use, but that it does not only take, but gives as well. . . . If the result enables us to secure the future of our operatives, uncertainty respecting which is the chief cause of their hatred to the State, the money will be well invested, for by spending it thus we may avert a Social Revolution which may break out fifty years hence, or ten, and which, however short a time it lasts, will assuredly swallow up infinitely larger sums than those we now propose to spend.

MOHAMMED AND WOMAN.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali, in an article on "The Real Status of Woman in Islam," eulogises Mohammed for the work which he did in raising the status of the sex. So far from degrading woman he did far more for them than many of the early Fathers of the Christian Church, many of whom wrote and spoke habitually of women in terms which constitute a black and abiding stigma on the character of the times in which they lived. In India ninety-five per cent. of the Mohammedans are monogamists, and in Persia ninety-eight per cent. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali writes vigorously, and makes out a very good case for the Arabian prophet. It is a good sign of the times that the founders of religious systems are being tested by the extent to which they have helped to emancipate woman. He says:—

The teacher who, in an age when no country, no system, no community gave any right to woman, maiden or married, mother or wife—who, in a country where the birth of a daughter was considered a calamity, secured to the sex rights which are only unwillingly and under pressure being conceded to them by the civilised nations in the nineteenth century—deserves the gratitude of humanity. If Mohammed had done nothing more, his claim to be a benefactor of mankind would have been indisputable. Even under the laws as they stand at present in the pages of the legists, the legal position of Moslem females may be said to compare favourably with that of European women.

A REFORM BILL FOR THE NEW FOREST.

Mr. Auberon Herbert, in an article entitled "The Last Bit of Woodland," once more pursues, with tomahawk and scalping knife, the luckless Mr. Lascelles of the New Forest. He has got a complete reform bill in six heads. First, he would promptly forbid any cutting or meddling with the old woods of the New Forest, no thinning on any account, no planting, no nothing, except the unrestricted growth by natural law. Secondly, the expenses of the Forest should be mercilessly cut down. Thirdly, the mischievous privileges of the Crown with regard to shooting should be done away with. Fourthly, the larger fuel rights should be bought up and the smaller ones left. Fifthly, the recent plantations, which have been much neglected, should be carefully attended to. And, sixthly, the New Forest should be transferred to the Board of Works. There are 4,600 acres of old wood in the Forest which Mr. Herbert regards as one of our most precious heritages, upon which he would not allow Mr. Lascelles or any one else to lay a finger.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Prof. Geffcken writes on "Compulsory Insurance in Germany," and M. J. J. Jusserand, in a paper entitled "A French Ambassador at the Court of Charles the Second," quotes from the correspondence of Count de Comings. Lord Brassey sets forth his view of Imperial Federation from the English point of view in an article which does not shine in comparison with Mr. Carnegie's, with which it is bracketed. Mr. Knowles has transferred his publication from Kegan Paul to Sampson Low, Marston and Co.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

THE most important paper in the National Review is that of Mr. Charles Lowe, late Times correspondent in Berlin, on "The New Emperor and His Chancellor." There is not very much that is new in it, but it pieces together many things which are interesting and helpful to a due understanding of the situation. Every one must devoutly wish that Chancellor Caprivi was right when he said some time ago: "Gentlemen,—We have very dull times ahead of us." But he would be a bold man who would calculate an immunity from exciting sensations when such a born sensationalist as William the Second is on the German throne.

LADY PAGET AND VIVISECTION.

Lady Paget, who last year excited so much interest by calling attention to Count Mattei's remedies, breaks a lance in defence of the anti-Vivisectionists. Her article is written with intense feeling, and with a whole-hearted abhorrence of the practices of many of our latter-day doctors. Here is a passage which is well worth quoting:—

I wonder no more at the terror of the poor when the dreaded place is named, for they are not looked upon as patients to be cured, but as material to be experimentalised upon. "The material" is the accepted word for patients in many hospitals abroad. (I cannot speak of England in this respect, as I have no experience.) I should like to tell one story as illustration. A friend of mine sent his keeper's little daughter to the hospital. It became necessary to insert a canula into her throat, which the professor did without giving her much pain. After this, however, he returned once or twice a day, with a troop of students, whom he allowed to pull out and insert the canula at their pleasure. The poor child entreated with tears the professor to do it himself; but he said "The students must learn!" The child's father, who could not bear to see his daughter's sufferings, asked my friend to write to the professor begging him to perform the slight operation himself for the days that it was necessary. My friend did so, asking at the same time how much he would take to do this. The answer was "A fortune."

When one hears and sees things like these one must agree with the late Sir William Fergusson, who told a lady (in whose handwriting I have it) that "the permission to practise vivisection would tend to rear a nation of young devils." He told the same lady that vivisection was useless, that he bitterly regretted ever having practised it, and that it ought to be put down by Act of Parliament.

Mr. G. W. Bulman, in an article entitled "The Fittest or Luckiest: Which Survives?" takes exception to the orthodox Darwinian hypothesis that it is the fittest that comes out the winner in the struggle for existence. He maintains that it has not been proved that the question of survival is decided by slight individual differences. It is governed much more by accident.

A PLEA FOR FREE LAW.

One of the most interesting papers in the Review is G. Acton Lomax's scheme for providing the civilised world with its law free of cost. There is something amiable and attractive in the mild optimism in the mind of the man who could write the following sentences:—

Three primary desiderata, then, must be satisfied by any scheme in order that it may be efficient:—(1) The transference of the payment of fees from the individual to the State. (2) A fair assignment of work to each and every member of the Bar. (3) A provision against frivolous or malicious prosecution.

Those advantages might be obtained, and, at the same time, all the necessary safeguards secured, in a comprehensive system of Colleges or Departments.

Mr. Lomax proposes that, as succession duties are levied varying from 3 to 10 per cent., so the cause of this system of free law might be met by levying a similar percentage on money or property recovered on his suggested scheme. Court of censorship also is to be empowered to inflict a fine on any unfounded, vexatious, or malicious claims.

There is a gossip article on "Woman's Life in Old Italy," in which there is curious information as to the morals of the Italian ladies. A lady's lover in aristocratic families had his functions specified in a special legal document, together with his salary at a time when his mistress was married. In 1588 there were 18,000 women of ill-fame in Venice. So numerous did they become that it was ordered in 1596 that they should only frequent certain back streets, wear full trousers, be mounted on stilts two or three feet high, and moreover veil their faces with silver tissue, and bare their breasts.

Mr. H. D. Traill, who surely must be the son of a duke, if we may judge from his lordly contempt for the bourgeoisie, writes some nonsense about County Councillors, which has no other basis than the protest made by the London Council against scandalous indecencies on the stage and on hoardings in the street.

Mr. T. E. Kebbel writes pleasantly upon "Partridge Shooting in September," and an anonymous Unionist defends Mr. Balfour's Irish Local Government Scheme on the ground that there is no disguising of the fact that, at a critical time such as the present, the first duty of a Conservative Ministry is to be popular.

THE NEW REVIEW.

THE New Review is a better number than usual. I quote elsewhere from Mr. Bret Harte's paper on Mr. Russell Lowell.

M. JULES SIMON ON WOMAN'S WORK.

Writing on "Women and Work," M. Jules Simon declares that if the factory laws are not strengthened—the religious feeling, transmitted and kept up by women, is destined to diminish year by year, and finally to disappear. What we ask is a very simple reform in factory regulations which would permit a woman to clean her modest room, to make the beds, to prepare the dinner, to attend to the clothes, to see her children in broad daylight, to assure herself of the progress of their education, and, by her mere presence, prepare their hearts to love goodness. To ask this is to ask society to protect itself against the greatest danger it has incurred for many centuries.

The mother of a family can do in an hour as much work as a servant would do in a day. The money value of that work, estimated according to the method of Le Play, is higher than the factory wages. The family would thus be better off by this deduction of an hour from the day's pay.

At Elberfeld, the wives of the manufacturers have established an interesting institution. Each of them takes a factory girl for a year and teaches her the work of a servant. These poor girls knew how to join on, to card, to comb, but could not light a fire or thread a needle. Now they can marry. Having learnt how to be servants, they have learnt how to manage a house. Before a young girl thinks of marriage she must pass through this course of instruction, this voluntary service, for a year.

SIR MORELL MACKENZIE ON TRAINING.

In the course of a very sensible paper on training, Sir Morell Mackenzie gives the following dietary scale of the Oxford crew when training for the boat race:—

On getting up at 7.15 a.m., they take a biscuit and glass of milk, then they go for a gentle walk for a mile. Breakfast, at 8.30, consists of tea or cocoa (two cups at the most), sole, or some other kind of fish, chop, with a poached egg on it, and some green food. No marmalade (for which Oxford men, unless they are much belied, have a weakness) is allowed till two weeks before the race. At luncheon they have cold meat with one glass of beer. At dinner, the menu includes fish, chicken, turkey, or joint (always some kind of fresh meat); milk pudding, and stewed fruit (rhubarb by preference); two glasses of beer are allowed, and after dinner one orange and a glass of port may be taken. At 10 p.m. they go to bed. This seems to me a very sensible dietary, with plenty of muscle-forming elements in it, but not too carnivorous.

THE DECADENCE OF AMERICA.

In a lugubrious article on "Literature in the United States," Mr. Lathrop thus laments the decadence of his country:—

Dishonesty crops out in all parts of our system; in the worship of mere crafty "smartness" dissociated from principle, whether in business or in political life; in the buying and selling of elections, openly defended by rich and intelligent representative men; in the recognised purchase of legislators by the highest bidder, and the cynical indifference of the people to this kind of barter; and in the abject, humiliating dependence of our politics on foreign agitation. Still greater ills of violent disorder awaits us in the immediate future.

FRENCH HYPOCRISY.

A Frenchman, who for obvious reasons does not sign his name, gives a very savage description of French manners and morals. He says:—

Every Frenchman considers a woman fair game, which he has a right to pursue at his risk and peril whenever opportunity is favourable, merely taking care to act with prudence. This is what is called being "galant." Such is the state of the public conscience in this matter that whenever there is any talk in France of a bastardy law, compelling the father to contribute towards the support of his illegitimate children, a formidable and almost unanimous opposition is raised by public opinion. This is a case of special hypocrisy—sentimental hypocrisy.

As to the more serious aspects of life, France is one of the most illiberal of countries in everything relating to the civil status of women. They enjoy none of the political rights accorded to them by English law. Their subordination in the marriage state is complete, including their dependence in money matters, even in regard to their own property.

OTHER ARTICLES.

Lady Lindsay gossips about swallows and sparrows. Miss O. Black describes how women workers are robbed by fines and deductions, and Mr. Schutz Wilson writes an account of Korner, the centenary of whose birth occurs September 21, 1891.

THE CENTURY.

THE writer of the article on "Country Newspapers," in the Century for September, gives some interesting details of what we should call the provincial press of America. There are 18,000 newspapers in the United States. Of these 18,000 papers there are 6,000 which are made up from sheets printed at a common centre. How many there are that are made up from stereotype plates the writer does not say. There is one interesting remark in this paper apart from the special subject with which he deals—namely, the average county seat town, in almost any State, has almost exactly the same population, from 1,500 to 1,800. They all have two newspapers, two railroads, the same number of banks, stores, mills, doctors, dentists, and hotels. The average circulation of 6,000 of the country newspapers of America is not more than 600 copies.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW.

PROFESSOR GOLDWIN SMITH's paper upon the Jews in Russia, and Ouida's on the State as an Immoral Teacher, are noticed elsewhere. The rest of the papers in the August number are not of much interest to English readers. The Hon. James R. Soley, assistant-secretary of the Navy, writes on the value of naval manœuvres, describing what has been done in the English Navy, and exhorting the Americans to follow suit. There is an article on Trades Unions for Women. The Governor of Oregon writes on the Farmers' Alliance, advocating an income-tax and the loaning of money by the Government at four per cent. upon improved real property, the adoption of a policy of changing currency into bonds and bonds into currency. Some such system prevails in the State of Oregon, where the amount of the loan is fixed at one-third of the value of the farm. Mr. William A. Hammond, in a holiday paper, "How to Rest," maintains that the average American is incapable of self-amusement; and the women, in this respect, are worse than the men. Such rest as the mind and body need can never be obtained in the way the average American sets out to obtain them. The true rest is change of occupation, and the greatest mistake of all is for an active man, who is away on his holiday, to dawdle round all day reading novels. Mr. Raum, in a paper entitled "Pensions and Patriotism," states strongly the claim of the old soldiers of the Union for pensions. The following figures will be of interest:—

It is estimated that 1,208,707 soldiers of the Union are now living, and that 1,004,658 soldiers were killed in battle and died during and since the war. Of these survivors 478,356 are now on the pension rolls, and 120,522 widows and dependents are on the rolls. So it appears that 730,451 survivors are not pensioned, and 884,136 deceased soldiers are not now represented on the pension rolls.

The present payment of pensions is twenty-three millions a year. Next year it will be about twenty-five millions. Mr. Comstock, writing on "Vampire literature," pleads eloquently for measures to protect twenty million youths in the United States from the pollution of unclean literature. Mr. Herreshoff, describing the possibilities of the steam yacht, says that a yacht which will run twenty-eight miles an hour for five hours is quite within reach. He thinks that some alloy of aluminium and copper will soon be used in boiler-making. The engines of the torpedo boat Cushing exercise a horse-power for each 15 tons weight. The natural limit of speed of a boat 40 ft. long is about 10 miles an hour; a vessel 60 ft. will show 12½ miles; one 100 ft., 15½ miles; one 200 ft., 22 miles.

The only other paper claiming notice is Mr. Thurston's "Scientific Basis of Belief."

THERE are two stories concluded this month, namely, Marion Crawford's "Witch of Prague" in the English Illustrated, and Frank R. Stockton's "Squirrel Inn" in the Century.

IN contrast to these two disagreeable stories, there are two excellent tales in the Century for September, one entitled "Elder Marston's Revival," and the other "Zek'l." In both the motive is as good as in the others it is bad and disagreeable.

THE ARENA.

THE Arena for August makes a speciality of having papers from eight prominent women in America, England, and France, for the righteous zeal of the editor in the cause of the weaker sex carries him sometimes a little too far. There is occasionally discernible in the women's movement in America an attempt to redress the balance of injustice* which women have suffered by claiming for them a position of ascendancy and monopoly that is quite as unjustifiable as that which has been so long usurped by the male. Excellent as is the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, it labours under the ineradicable defect of being a woman's union pure and simple—that is to say, of being confined to one half of humanity and excluding the other half from its counsels.

"THE ERA OF WOMAN."

Mr. Flower is an idealist who, in his paper on the "Era of Woman," indulges in a beatific vision of the glories which are to come when the splendid spirit of altruism which distinguishes women is brought into politics and social life. There is an element of truth in all that, but it is a mistake to assume too confidently that all women have wings under their stays; as a matter of fact they have not, and a good many of them are quite as deplorable from the point of view of the reformer and moralist as any number of their brothers and husbands. That, of course, is no reason why they should not be admitted to the fullest citizenship, their right to which does not rest upon their possession of all the virtues, but upon the mere fact of their existence as human beings.

THE SPIRITUALISTIC EXPERIENCES OF A MATERIALIST.

Of the women who write in the Arena the most interesting is Mrs. Underwood. Mrs. Underwood is an agnostic and the wife of an agnostic. She and her husband have been leading materialists, and they have been apparently converted, to a belief in the existence of the soul after death by spiritualism. Judging from Mrs. Underwood's paper, she may be numbered among the few to whom spiritualism has brought help and light. She and her husband sit together, to the exclusion of other mediums, and their manifestations came by way of automatic writing. The intelligence which used Mrs. Underwood's hand for the purpose of establishing communication with them and the unseen world has constantly shown itself to be in possession of information which neither she nor her husband had any means of obtaining. She says she cannot in this paper "give one-tenth part of the many strange and surprising revelations, or statements, philosophical and other, which we have gained from this strange source." Like all other experimenters in this occult region, Mrs. Underwood receives frequently false and mischievous statements purporting to come from spirits—predictions which did not come to pass, descriptions which were wholly wrong, and sending credulous believers on wild-goose chases after hidden treasure, etc.

Mrs. Underwood's paper will probably help to increase the growing interest which is felt in this mysterious and somewhat unpromising branch of inquiry.

MISS AMELIA EDWARDS' METHOD OF WORK.

After Mrs. Underwood's paper the most interesting is Miss Amelia Edwards' pleasantly written account of her home life at Westbury-on-Trip, about four miles from Bristol. She gives a copious description of the interior of her library, but the most interesting part of her paper is that in which she describes her method of working. She always walks half a mile before breakfast and half a mile after it, and then one mile in the afternoon. This habit of walking two miles a day she adheres to in all weathers. As to her hours of work, she says:—

I live with the pen in my hand, not only from morning till night, but sometimes from night till morning. I have, in fact, been a night bird ever since I came out of the school-room, when I habitually sat up reading till long past midnight. Later on, when I adopted literature as a profession, I still found that "To steal a few hours from the night" was to ensure the quietest time, and the pleasantest, for pen and brain work; and, for at least the last twenty-five years, I have rarely put out my lamp before two or three in the morning. Occasionally, when work presses and a manuscript has to be despatched by the earliest morning mail, I remain at my desk the whole night through; and I can with certainty say that the last chapter of every book I have ever written has been finished at early morning. In summer-time, it is certainly delightful to draw up the blinds and complete in sunlight a task begun when the lamps were lighted in the evening.

HOW TO BEGIN THE REFORMATION OF THE HUMAN RACE.

Mrs. Cody Stanton, whose portrait appears as the frontispiece, has a brief paper in which she tells us where lasting progress must begin. The following is a summary of her ideas:—

The object of all our specific reforms is to secure equal conditions for the whole human race. The initiative step, to this end are—

1. Educate our upper classes, our most intelligent people, into the belief that our present civilisation is based on false principles, and that the ignorance, poverty, and crime we see about us are the legitimate results of our false theories.

2. They must be educated to believe that our present conditions and environments can and will be changed, and that, as man is responsible for the miseries of the race, through his own knowledge and wisdom the change must come.

As the only hope for the lasting progress of the race and a radical reform in social life lie in the right education of children, their birth and development is the vital starting-point for the philosopher.

ARE WE GOING BACKWARDS?

After Mrs. Stanton tells us how to begin progress, Mrs. Wischniewetzky gives the following lamentable description of ten years' retrogression in New York:—

During the ten years which ended with 1889, the great metropolis of the western continent added to the assessed valuation of its taxable property almost half a billion dollars.

In all other essential respects save one, the decade was a period of retrogression for New York City. Crime, pauperism, insanity, and suicide increased; repression by brute force personified in an armed police was fostered, while the education of the children of the masses ebbed lower and lower. The standing army of the homeless swelled to 12,000 nightly lodgers in a single precinct, and 40,000 children were forced to toil for scanty bread.

Her moral is Socialistic.

A NEW IDEA IN EDUCATION.

Miss Dickinson, in her paper pleading for individuality in education, predicts that—

The day will come, though it may be long in coming, when every institution of learning will have, besides its technical teachers, its lecturers and its conductors of recitations—one man or one woman, or as many men and women as are needed, whose special province it will be to study the individual temperament, to discover native tendencies, tastes, and capacities of the mind, and whose knowledge will be true wisdom in the sense that they will know not only how to ascertain, but how to supply real needs.

OBJECTIONS TO SOCIALISM.

The Rev. Minot J. Savage thus briefly summarises his objections to the nationalistic socialism that has been popularised by Bellamy's "Looking Backward":—

1. The world began in socialism. In the barbaric period the tribe was all and the individual nothing. Every step of human progress has kept pace with the rise of the individual.

2. Military socialism, such as Mr. Edward Bellamy advocates, would be only another name for universal despotism. It would be the paradise of officialism on one hand, and helpless subordination on the other.

3. Nobody is ready to talk definitely about any other kind of nationalism; for nobody has outlined any working method.

4. Nationalism, as commonly understood, could mean nothing else but the tyranny of the commonplace. And there has never been a time in the world's history when the most important things that were being done were of apparent utility in the eyes of the crowd. Consider Homer and Virgil, Isaiah and Jesus, Dante, Shakespeare, Angelo, Copernicus, Galileo, Goethe, Luther, Servetus, Newton, Darwin, Spencer, Galvani—had nationalism been dominant in their days, how long would it have been before the "intelligent public opinion" of the governing board of their departments would have had them up to show cause why they should not "go to work for a living"?

THE FINANCIAL IDEAS OF THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Mr. R. B. Hassell, in a paper entitled "The Independent Party and Money at Cost," thus describes the three financial ideas that are prominent in the movement:—

First, a desire that the Government supersede avaricious man and blind nature in the creation and distribution of money, in order that money may be a stable purchasing power. Second, a determination that money shall no longer be a commodity to be bought, and sold, and manipulated, a leech upon labour in the hands of a few, but a convenience of trade, accessible to the many at first cost. Third, a demand that the misnamed national bank system of the present shall have its spirit of greediness exorcised, so that it may hereafter serve the people instead of its management. Are these ideas indefinite? Do they not mean "money at cost"?

OTHER ARTICLES.

Mr. Wood Davies on "Should the Nation Own the Railways?" is noticed elsewhere. Mme. Blaze de Bury's paper on the "Unity of Germany" is chiefly devoted to a review of Prof. Bruhl's book on "The Development of a National Conscience in Germany." The sum and substance of her article is in the following sentence:—

The unity of Germany was the creation of no individual. German unity and the imperial unity sprang from the whole past of German history and German thought. The State existing now is the outcome of Germany's own self, of the idea, of the soul of Germany.

Helen Campbell's paper on "The Working Women of To-day" says the average wage of the American woman in the twenty-two cities from which statistical returns have been taken averages 5½ dols. Very few of the working women proper go upon the streets. The average age at which they begin work is fifteen years and four months.

THE FORUM.

The papers by Dr. Nansen and General Greeley on the suggested new route to the North Pole, and the three papers on Russia and the Jews, are noticed elsewhere. The rest of this number is not very noteworthy, as these articles take up sixty out of the one hundred and twenty pages of the magazine.

DOES IMMIGRATION DECREASE POPULATION?

General Walker, of the United States Census Bureau, has a very interesting article upon "Immigration and Degradation," the gist of which is that if there had been no immigration whatever to the United States of America the population would have been greater than it is to-day. During the forty years ending 1830 only 151,000 immigrants crossed the Atlantic, and the population increased 227 per cent. during that period. The rate of increase has ever afterwards fallen, and it has fallen largely in proportion to the number of immigrants who have come into the country. The reason for this seeming paradox, General Walker thinks, is the disgust of the native American with the conditions of life introduced by the swarm of immigrants. He does not care to breed children who will have to battle for existence in the midst of the hordes of European paupers who are overflowing the Continent.

GENERAL WALKER.

THE ORIGIN OF THE CHILIAN WAR.

Mr. Trumbull, agent of the Chilian Congressional Government, gives a very simple explanation of the origin of the Chilian War. It arose, he says, from the desire of President Balmaceda to become a millionaire:—

The nitrate beds of Tarapaca, owned by the Government, presented the most promising field for speculation. If a rich syndicate could be formed to buy these beds, and if a large amount could be distributed among the promoters of the scheme, his ambition would be satisfied, for he intended to be the chief promoter. In order, however, successfully to carry out this project a congress favourable to its promotion was necessary, as well as a successor who could be depended on. He could not find a fitter instrument for the consummation of his plan than his confidential agent and broker Señor Enrique Sanfuentes, a man without political experience and with a reputation acquired in questionable transactions. The candidacy of Señor Sanfuentes now became the one object of his administration.

After having failed to secure the consent of Congress to his design he declared himself a dictator, suspended the laws that embarrassed him, closed all the courts, suspended all the newspapers, and seized all the property of his opponents. Hence the war.

THE COMMERCIAL MOTIVE IN LITERATURE.

Mr. George E. Woodberry, writing on literature in the market-place, maintains that we are not likely to have any classical literature produced, at any rate under present conditions, by the stimulus of good pay. The first condition of success is to throw away all thought of money in the present and to refuse to work for money unless it comes in the way of work.

The reading public is now such, so far as can be judged, that the mass of readers is too imperfectly cultivated to impose such standards, either in matter or style, as would make a national literature of the first order. Our national life has been rather of the Roman cast.

THE PROFITS OF FRUIT CULTURE IN CALIFORNIA.

There is an interesting paper by ex-Governor Sheldon upon the "Profits of Fruit Culture in California." From the figures that he gives it would seem that he is within the mark in saying that if a young man of twenty-one plants an orange orchard he will have a comfortable income in six or eight years, and afterwards a princely revenue for the rest of his life, and for the lives of his children. Vineyards yield about £20 per acre where wine-grapes are grown, raisin-grapes yield from £30 to £80 an acre, walnuts from £50 to £80 an acre, figs yield £120 net on two-thirds of an acre, while lemons yield at the rate of £150 per acre. The net yield of prunes is about £100 an acre; of apricots the net yield is about £80 an acre. Oranges bear from £70 to £200 an acre.

PRESIDENT LINCOLN AND WOMEN'S SUFFRAGE.

In the Westminster Review for September Mr. Theodore Stanton concludes his interesting series of papers upon Abraham Lincoln. In the course of his paper he calls special attention to the peculiarly high reverence which Lincoln had for women:—

Unlike many of those who are chivalrous in defending individual women from insult, Abraham Lincoln was logical enough to see that this chivalry justified woman's claim to full and free citizenship.

His secretaries offer this reflection on this point:—"No Hamlet, dreaming amid the turrets of Elsinore, no Sidney creating a chivalrous Arcadia, was fuller of mystic and shadowy fancies of the worth and dignity of woman than this backwoods politician. Few men ever lived more sensitively and delicately tender towards the sex." Thus, while "clerking it" in a shop at New Salem, a rural bully having made himself especially offensive one day when women were present, Lincoln requested him to be silent. A fight in the street was the result. But Lincoln quickly threw the fellow, and gathering a handful of dog fennel, rubbed the ruffian's face and eyes with it until he howled for mercy. Then the kind-hearted disciplinarian himself brought water to bathe the culprit's smarting face.

When he was up for re-election to the Illinois Legislature in 1836, he published in the journals, as was then the custom, a statement of his principles. We there read this rather remarkable paragraph: "I go for all sharing the privileges of the Government who assist in bearing its burdens. Consequently I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms (by no means excluding females.)" Commenting on this final phrase, his friend and law-partner for twenty years, Herndon, says: "His broad plan for universal suffrage certainly commends itself to the ladies, and we need no further evidence to satisfy our minds of his position on the subject of 'women's rights,' had he lived. In fact, I cannot refrain from noting here what views he in after years held with reference to the great questions of moral and social reforms, under which he classed universal suffrage, temperance, and slavery. 'All such questions,' he observed one day, as we were discussing temperance in the office, 'must first find lodgment with the most enlightened souls who stamp them with their approval. In God's own time they will be organised into law and thus woven into the fabric of our institutions.'"

"THE REVIEW OF THE CHURCHES."

WHEN the REVIEW OF REVIEWS was a little more than three months old, I was driven by the exigencies of space to suggest the publication of a supplemental review, which I proposed to call Gesta Christi, and which would deal more exclusively with the altruistic development of human activity, regardless of dogmatic or ecclesiastical differences. The need remains as great as ever, but the occasion has not yet come for the publication of Gesta Christi. From the idea thus thrown out there has appeared first the Religious Review of Reviews, a publication which has endeavoured to live by making somewhat strenuously feeble efforts to assail the original upon which it was modelled, but has otherwise hardly succeeded in realising the anticipations of its proprietors. A more serious publication, which seeks for its success neither in the appropriation of the ideas of others nor in the denunciation of those from whom it has conveyed its stock-in-trade, is announced to appear in October. This is a six-penny monthly, the Review of the Churches, which is to be brought out under the joint editorship of a committee representing the five great leading denominations. Dr. Henry Lunn will be the general editor, while the various departments allocated to the leading denominations will be divided as follows:—The Church of England, under the Ven. Archdeacon W. F. Farrar; the Methodists, Mr. Percy Bunting; the Congregationalists, the Rev. Dr. Mackennal; the Baptists, the Rev. John Clifford, D.D.; the Presbyterians, Dr. Donald Fraser. The ruling idea of those who are concerned in this venture is to embody an appreciative chronicle of all that has taken place of pure human interest in their respective Churches during the preceding month. There will be other features of interest, but the fundamental principle of unity of spirit with diversity of opinion will permeate the whole review. The Review of the Churches will start with the hearty good wishes of good men of all denominations who have a soul which overleaps the narrow party walls of their own sect; and its appearance will mark one more step taken towards the reunion of Christendom.

LANTERN LECTURES ON CONTEMPORARY HISTORY.

THE duty of educating our masters, frequently asserted and universally recognised, is still very imperfectly fulfilled. During school age and in school hours we do something, but after we leave school and become our own master we do nothing, or next to nothing. The difficulty, no doubt, is great. Our master is his own master also, and in most cases he refuses to come within range of any educator. A picked few—a very small minority compared with the millions of our working population—attend University Extension lectures, and when a by-election occurs, the majority of the electors receive, under high pressure, from canvassers, platform speakers, and the like, some modicum of political teaching. But of systematic instruction in contemporary history there is none, save what may be found in the newspapers, and the majority of our people do not read newspapers. It is only a minority of newspaper buyers who read anything but local news, sporting, the current sensation, and the markets. Hence, if the masses are to take an intelligent interest in the political, moral, and social movements of our time, it must be brought about, like everything else, by “the foolishness of preaching”—that is to say, by the spoken word. Yes, will be the reply; but what is the use of speaking if they will not come to hear? The answer to that is that the Lantern, with its brilliantly coloured pictures, will attract those whom you most wish to reach, and when once you have got your audience you can teach them what you please.

What I propose, therefore, is that there should be started in every centre of population in the land, wherever there exists a man or woman with sufficient intelligence, public spirit, and leisure, a course of Lantern Lectures on Contemporary History. Every month a lecture could be delivered based upon the history of the preceding month, and in this way an intelligent interest could be developed in the progress of the world, which would in time exercise an immense educational influence upon the democracy of our lands.

In order to contribute to this desirable end I offer, for the next six months, to produce every month thirty coloured lantern slides illustrating the history of the previous month, and to accompany them with a brief outline lecture, which could either be used as it stands, or employed as the mere suggestive framework of an independent lecture. The first set of slides illustrating, not the history of August, but the history of the year, are now ready together with an explanatory lecture. They will be lent every month to any member of the National Lanternist Society (annual subscription, £1), or to any one who will pay five shillings a night for their use and the cost of carriage both ways.

The current number of Help is entirely devoted to the Lantern Mission, and contains the suggested rules, together with the names of those who have intimated a desire to join the Society of Lanternists. There is also a mass of other matter relating to this attempt to popularise education among the masses. The following statement appears as to some of the advantages of members of the National Lanternists Society:—

1. The loan for one night of thirty new slides every month, specially photographed and coloured for the Mission, from the best pictures of the illustrated press, for the purpose of illustrating lectures on contemporary history, based on the current number of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS.
2. The right to hire slides in stock at 2s. 6d. plain, and 3s. 6d. coloured, per set of 50.
3. The right to have any portrait or picture reproduced on slide at 2s. each plain, or 2s. 6d. coloured.

IS THERE A CURE FOR LEPROSY?

A CHALLENGE FROM THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

I HAVE received from the Sandwich Islands a newspaper, from which it would seem that the controversy as to the Mattei remedies is raging pretty briskly in the leper settlement of Molokai. The Bishop of Honolulu has been much impressed by the reports of the cure of leprosy said to have been effected by the Jesuit fathers at Mangalore, and he desires to subject them to an experimental test on the lepers at Molokai. This is opposed by the regular practitioners. They are unable to cure the lepers themselves, and they seem to object to allow any one else to try what he can do. The following passage will be read with interest, even by the members of the College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, who recently deprived Dr. Samuel Kennedy of his Fellowship because he made use of the Mattei remedies. The writer is the Rev. W. H. Barnes, Rector of St. Andrew's Cathedral, Honolulu, who writes to the Weekly Bulletin of Honolulu. After referring to the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, “which lies on the table of the reading-room of the Library and Reading Room Association,” Honolulu, Mr. Barnes says:—

I smiled when I first heard of this latest panacea. I smiled again when I saw the phials of sugar pellets, like so many charges of small shot, and believed that these would be about as effectual in the battle with disease as duck shot would be in modern warfare. But I have smiled again since, and it is no longer a lofty smile of disdain. For I have seen these little globules cure a severe case of grip in my own household in less than twenty-four hours. I have seen them reduce a feverish child's temperature in a decidedly short space of time. I have seen old and obstinate cases of asthma amongst the natives considerably relieved. I have seen a most seasick journalist, whose trip to the Leper Settlement the other day was one long drawn-out period of misery and woe, on the return voyage, through the action of the little sugar pills sleep sweetly and peacefully. I have seen the native kane disappear as if by magic from the faces of boys. I have seen a girl now at the Leper Settlement so much improved after six weeks of the globules, that her eyebrows, which had entirely disappeared, had begun to grow, and had grown very perceptibly. Other cases more surprising I have heard of here, but I speak now of what has occurred under my own at first sceptical observation. But these are small results to put forward, you will say. They may be, but I mention them because a small cure achieved before one's own eyes goes farther towards conviction than hundreds of wonderful cures in a prospectus.

Take what discount you please off these allegations, and enough is left in my opinion to make it not only desirable but a positive duty for the nation to give the system a trial, however unscientific and antiquated its phraseology may be said to be.

It is not asked to inflict any additional financial burden upon the taxpayer. The request is simply that some cases shall be placed at the disposal of those willing to superintend the experiment. It is true some patients at the settlement are trying the system. But the instructions require a very constant effort, which, unless properly superintended, the patients are not likely to make; regularity in taking the medicines and the baths is all important. Cannot the Bishop's simple request be granted? A house, a bath, an attendant, the same allowance for the patients' support as is now given them at the settlement, the cost (merely nominal) of the medicines—is that a great deal to ask in so important a matter? And yet it has been asked now for several months without avail.

Could not Mr. Rhodes secure a fair trial for the Mattei remedies among the lepers of Robben Island?

THE BOOK OF THE MONTH.

COUNT MOLTKE'S HISTORY OF THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR.*

THE classical history of the war which delivered Europe from the domination of the French Empire has just been published. It was written by Count Moltke in response to the urgent appeal of his nephew in 1887, who pointed out that the General Staff History of the Campaign was much too detailed for the mass of the people, and ought to be rewritten in the form of a précis. The précis is written from the point of view of the man who organised and directed the armies which gave Germany the leadership of Europe. In this brief account of the new standard history of the greatest modern war it is impossible to give, even in the most condensed form, the Field Marshal's narrative of the campaign. All that is possible is to quote some of the more suggestive passages of general interest. Of these the first, bearing upon the fallacy of supposing that popular government is a panacea for peace, is perhaps the most important. Count von Moltke says:—

The days are gone by when, for dynastic purposes, small armies of professional soldiers went to war to conquer a city, or a province, and then sought winter quarters or made peace. The wars of the present day call for wholenationstoarms; there is scarcely a family that does not suffer by them. The entire financial resources of the State are appropriated to the purpose, and the different seasons of the year have no bearing on the indefatigable progress of hostilities. As long as the nations continue independent of each other there will be disagreements that can only be settled by force of arms, but in the interest of humanity it is to be hoped that wars will become less frequent as they have become more terrible.

Generally speaking, it is no longer the ambition of monarchs which endangers peace; the passions of the people, their dissatisfaction with interior conditions and things, the strife of parties, and the intrigues of their leaders are the cause. A declaration of war, so serious in its consequences, is more easily carried by a large assembly, of which none of the members bear the sole responsibility, than by a single man, however high his position, and a peace-loving Sovereign is less rare than a Parliament composed of wise men. The great wars of the present day have been declared against the wish and will of the reigning powers. Nowadays the Bourse has assumed such influence that it has the power to call armies into the field merely to protect its interests. Mexico and Egypt have been swamped with European armies simply to satisfy the demands of the haute finance. To-day the question, Is a nation strong enough to make war? is of minor importance to this, Is its Government powerful enough to prevent war? Thus united Germany has up to now used her strength only to maintain European peace. A weak Government at the head of our neighbouring State, on the other hand, must be regarded in the light of a standing menace to peace.

MOLTKE IN THE PARK AT KREISAU.

The war of 1870-71 arose from just such relations. A * Collection of the Writings of Field-Marshal Count Helmuth von Moltke. Vol. III. History of the Franco-German War, 1870-71, together with a memorandum "on the supposed council of war in the campaign of King William I." Berlin: E. S. Mittler und Sohn; London: Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.

KREISAU CASTLE

Napoleon on the throne of France was bound to establish his rights by political and military successes. Only for a time did the victories, won by French arms in distant countries, give general satisfaction; the successes of the Prussian armies excited jealousy, they were regarded as arrogant, as a challenge; and the French demanded revenge for Sadowa. The liberal spirit of the epoch was opposed to the autocratic Government of the Emperor; he was forced to make concessions, his civil authority was weakened, and one fine day the nation was informed by its representatives that it desired war with Germany.

As to the conduct of the war which was thus begun, Count Moltke leaves us in no doubt as to the fact that it was he and he alone who was responsible for the preparations for the war, and also for all the details of its execution. He says:

I can assert that never during the campaigns of 1866 and 1870-71 was a council of war held.

Except on marching or fighting days a daily report was made at 10 a.m. to his Majesty, at which I, in company with the Quartermaster-General, read the news and reports received to him, and made fresh proposals based on them. The Chief of the Military Cabinet, the War Minister, and, in Versailles, as long as the headquarters of the Third Army were there, the Crown Prince also were present, but only as listeners. Sometimes the King asked them for information on some point or other, but I never remember his having asked them for advice as to the operations or the proposals made by me.

These, which I had previously carefully talked over with my officers, his Majesty used to weigh personally and usually very carefully. With military instinct and correct judgment of the situation he used to point out all the obstacles in the way of their execution; but as in war every step is attended by danger, the original proposals were in the end always accepted.

From the moment of the mobilisation being ordered, the Chief of the General Staff has the full responsibility for the marches and transports, for the concentration of the army which has been already arranged for in peace, and for the employment of the forces in the field, for which he has to receive the orders of the superior commander alone—i.e., with us, the King.

The following is his account of the manner in which he organised victory:—

The means of mobilising the North German army had been reviewed year by year, in view of any changes in the military or political situation, by the Staff, in conjunction with the Ministry of War. Every branch of the administration throughout the country had been kept informed of all it ought to know of these matters. The Berlin authorities had likewise come to a confidential understanding with the military authorities of the South German States on all important points. It had been conceded that Prussia was not to be reckoned on for the defence of any particular point, as the Black Forest, for instance; and it was decided that the best way of protecting South Germany would be by an incursion into Alsace across the central part of the Rhine, which could be backed up by the main force assembled at that point.

As soon as this understanding was arrived at, the other preparations could be made. The orders for marching and travelling by rail or boat were worked out for each division of the army, together with the most minute directions as to their different starting points, the day and hour of departure, the duration of journey, the refreshment stations and place of destination. At the meeting-point cantonments were assigned to each corps and division, stores and magazines were established, and thus, when war was declared, it needed only the Royal signature to set the entire apparatus in motion with undisturbed percussion. There was nothing to be changed in the directions originally given; it sufficed to carry out the plans prearranged and prepared.

MOLTKE'S BEDROOM.

At the same time, Count von Moltke is careful to point out the absurdity of drawing up cut-and-dry plans of campaign in advance.

In his plan of war, submitted by the Chief of the General Staff and accepted by the King, that officer had his eye fixed from the first upon the capture of the enemy's capital, the possession of which is of more importance in France than in other countries. On the way thither the hostile forces were to be driven as persistently as possible back from the fertile southern states into the narrower track on the north.

But, above all, the plan of war was based on the resolve to attack the enemy at once, wherever found, and keep the German forces so compact that a superior force could always be brought into the field. By whatever special means these plans were to be accomplished was left to the decision of the hour; the advance to the frontiers alone was pre-ordained in every detail.

It is a delusion to believe that a plan of war may be laid for a long period and carried out in every detail. The first collision with the enemy's army changes the situation entirely, according to the result. Some things decided upon will become impracticable; others, which originally seemed impossible, become feasible. All that the leader of an army can do in a change of circumstances is to decide for the best for an unknown period and carry out his purpose unflinchingly.

There is much valuable criticism of the conduct of the French. Count Moltke regarded General Chanzy as the most capable general that France produced. Of Gambetta he speaks thus:—

The forces called out of Sedan, animated by a spirit of enthusiastic patriotism, would offer a protracted resistance if a strong will put them in motion. And such a will was found in the person of Gambetta. According to the system obtaining in France, as War Minister he was intrusted with the conduct of the operations, and certainly he dared not let the command pass out of his own hands. For, in such a republic, a victorious general at the head of an army would soon become dictator in his stead. Under him another civilian, M. de Freycinet, acted as a sort of chief of the general staff, and France had to pay dear for their energetic but dilettante system of conducting operations. With rare strength of will and immovable fixity of purpose, Gambetta understood how to arm the whole population of the country, but not how to direct the masses thus formed according to one uniform plan. Without giving them time to solidify into troops fit for the field, and before they had been properly equipped, he hurled them, without regard to consequences, and without any general plan, against an enemy before whose superior leadership all their bravery and devotion were of no avail. He prolonged the struggle at the price of great sacrifices on both sides, without in any way turning the tide of fortune in favour of France.

I conclude with one brief extract, which is perhaps the most significant of all. After discussing Bazaine's inaction in Metz, and its possible political causes, Count von Moltke says:—

But ere long a number of men combined in Paris, who, without consulting the nation, constituted themselves the Government of the country, and took the direction of its affairs into their own hands.

That is the German conqueror's succinct version of the birth of the Third Republic.

SHOULD FREEMASONS BE SENT TO GAOL?

YES! SAYS DR. JOSEPH COOK.

IN Our Day for August the Rev. Dr. Joseph Cook takes up his parable against Freemasonry, and maintains that members of that order should be excluded from Church fellowship, should be fined for the administration of illegal oaths, and, in case of contumacy, should be sent to gaol. It is very interesting to discover this recrudescence of the hostility to Freemasons which characterises the Church of Rome in the free Republic of the West, and in the mind of one who is a fanatical enemy of Papistry. In fact, Dr. Cook seems to have arrived at his conclusions about Freemasonry by the necessity of logical consistency. The real objects of his detestation are the Jesuits, who are a secret association bound together by oath, and who, he maintains on that account, ought to be put outside the pale of citizenship. He was, however, immediately confronted by the dilemma that Freemasons are also members of a secret order, bound by oath. He must either excommunicate Freemasons or abandon his chief piece of artillery against the Jesuits. Dr. Cook did not hesitate for a moment. He goes against both. He insists that there is no place in a modern State for secret societies bound by oaths, and, oddly enough, he discovers in the laws of the State of Vermont a legislative weapon which affords a precedent for the law by which he proposes to banish Freemasonry from America.

Vermont puts a penalty of 50 dols. to 200 dols. upon every secret oath not authorised by public law. Here is the red thread in the centre of the cordage. Put an end to secret oaths, and you put an end to all societies founded upon them. Vermont has made secret oaths, not provided for by her statutes, illegal and punishable by fine, and so has legally uprooted all societies founded upon such oaths.

The origin of this legislation appears to have been the popular distrust of Freemasonry. The law has not remained a dead letter. Dr. Cook says:—

Vermont repealed the charter of one of these grand lodges. She took away from each chapter of that State all power to hold property. The law was aimed at Freemasonry as well as at other organisations, and aimed chiefly at Freemasonry in 1833. That law, if carried out everywhere, would sweep Freemasonry out of this country.

When challenged to define what he means by an order bound by a secret oath, Dr. Cook replies:—

I mean by a disloyal secret oath, an oath that is not authorised by the public law, or that tramples on the authority of the State or of the Church, or of both together. I maintain that a secret oath of that sort ought to be illegal, and ought to be regarded by the Church as reprehensible.

He decides that no one who is bound by such oaths can be admitted to church fellowship, and so far is this from being his own private opinion alone that he is able to publish the following list:—

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies, or by constitution to the exclusion of Freemasons from church membership: United Presbyterians, United Brethren, Seventh-Day Adventists, Christian Reformed Church, Primitive Baptists, Seventh-Day Baptists, Scandinavian Baptists, German Baptists or Dunkers, Friends, Norwegian Lutherans, Danish Lutherans, Swedish Lutherans, German Lutherans of Synodical Conference and General Council, Mennonites, Moravians, Plymouth Brethren, Associate Presbyterians, Reformed Presbyterians, Free Methodists, Wesleyan Methodists, Hollanders of the Reformed Church, and various State and local associations.

It will be interesting to see how long we shall have to wait before Dr. Cook's anathema against the Freemasons is extended to this side of the Atlantic.

PHOTOGRAPHS OF THE MONTH.

For the convenience of subscribers any photograph in this list can be sent post free to any address on receipt of 2s. 2d.

ROYAL.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

H.R.H. Prince George of Wales (in naval uniform), T.R.H. the Duke and Duchess of Teck and Family, H.R.H. Prince Francis of Teck, H.R.H. Prince Adolphus of Teck.

SOCIAL.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Lord Truro, Lady Henry Somerset, Earl of Pembroke, Duchess of Sutherland, Lord Tolemacha.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Hon. Miss Selater Booth, Marchioness of Cholmondeley, Dowager Duchess of Newcastle, Lady L. Hicks-Beach, Lady Maud Wilbraham, Countess of Coventry, Earl of Durham, Viscountess Newport, Lady Fletcher, Countess of Galloway, Miss M. J. Dicksee, Lady Helen Stewart.

LEGAL

AND POLITICAL.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Mr. William Johnston, M.P., Hon. T. A. Brassey, Sir Alfred Maloney, K.C.M.G., Sir C. M. Grant Duff, K.C.B., Lord Arthur Hill, M.P., Sir Henry Fletcher, Bart., M.P., Hon. Arthur Brand, M.P., Mr. Justice Hawkins, Right Hon. Cecil Raikes

MESSRS. RUSSELL & SONS.

Mr. Campbell Bannerman, M.P., Mr. R. H. McCall, Mr. Justice Denman, Mr. Justice Kay, Mr. S. Melmoth-Walters, Mr. Thomas Feilden, M.P., Mr. Alfred Cock, Q.C., Mr. Atherley-Jones, M.P., Mr. E. R. P. Moon.

MESSRS. BONING AND SMALL.

The late Duke of Cleveland.

NAVAL AND MILITARY.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Admiral Waddilove, General Sir Owen Williams, Admiral Saumarez.

LITERARY, ARTISTIC, AND SCIENTIFIC.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Mr. William Watson. An excellent and striking likeness of the subject of Mr. Grant Allen's article in the August Fortnightly—“A New Poet.” (See Reproduction.)

Mr. Charles Booth, Mr. J. M. Barrie, Mr. Holman Hunt, Mr. E. Burne-Jones, A.R.A., Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, Professor Munro (of Manchester), Professor Marshall (of Cambridge), Mr. W. S. Gilbert, Mr. J. MacLaren Cobban, Mr. Richard Le Gallienne.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

Mr. Thomas Terrell.

CHURCH.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Rev. A. J. Robinson (of Whitechapel), Bishop of Hull, General Booth, Archdeacon Smith (of Canterbury), Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, Rev. Dr. Bevan, Colonel Olcott (the Theosophist).

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SONS.

The New Weigh House Chapel, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

MESSRS. ELLIOTT AND FRY.

Miss Elizabeth Robins, Mr. Clifford Harrison, Miss Agnes Yanson, Mdm. L. Schirmer-Mapleson, Miss Snyder.

MESSRS. RUSSELL AND SON.

Herr Johannes Wolff, Mr. Joseph Holmann, Miss Snyder (in “Nautch Girl” costume).

Miss Jessie Bond (in “Nautch Girl” costume).

MR. ALFRED ELLIS. Madame Laura Schirmer-Mapleson. Six excellent portraits—taken in different positions and costumes.

From a photograph by]

MR. WILLIAM WATSON.

[Elliott and Fry.

The September number of Men and Women of the Day (Eglington & Co.) contains excellent portraits (by Mr. Herbert Barraud), accompanied as usual by biographical sketches, of Mr. Frank Lockwood, Q.C., M.P., Countess of Cadogan, and Mr. Clifford Harrison.

The Theatre for September contains photographs of Mlle. Nesville and Mr. David James in “Miss Decima” (by London Stereoscopic Co.), and Miss Elizabeth Robins (by Mr. Alfred Ellis).

THIS list is a continuation of the one given in the "ANNUAL INDEX" of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS. That list contained particulars of 219 of the most interesting lecture and educational sets with readings, and of twenty-three large collections of educational slides not arranged for lecture purposes. The present list contains only such subjects as have been published since Christmas, 1890, and subjects published by firms whose lists were not included in the "ANNUAL INDEX."

ADDRESSES AND PRICES.

YORK AND SONS, 87, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, W. (trade only).—Prices, 18s. per dozen plain; 38s. per dozen coloured. Complete catalogue.

A. PUMPHREY, Stanhope Street, Birmingham.—Prices, 6s. per dozen plain; 12s. and upwards per dozen coloured. List, 6d.

VALENTINE AND SONS, Dundee (through trade).—1s. 6d. each. Complete catalogue. Every set has descriptive lecture.

G. W. WILSON AND CO., Aberdeen (through trade).—1s. 6d. each, 15s. dozen. Complete sets at the rate of 1s. per slide, with no charge for reading, if any is published. Lists free.

RILEY BROTHERS, 5, Cheapside, Bradford (and trade).—1s. each, plain; coloured, 1s. 6d. List, 6d. Slides on loan.

R. AND J. APPLETON AND CO., 58, Manningham Lane, Bradford (and trade).—1s. each, plain; coloured, 1s. 6d. to 2s. 3d. List, 6d. Slides on loan.

NEWTON AND CO., 3, Fleet Street, E.C.—Mostly 1s. 6d. each, or 15s. per dozen for plain slides. List, 3d. Slides on loan.

E. G. WOOD, 74, Cheapside, E.C. (also Horne, Thornthwaite, and Wood, 418, Strand, W.C.).—1s. 3d. each, 15s. per dozen, plain. Coloured at variety of prices. List. Slides on loan.

J. H. STEWARD, 406 and 457, Strand, W.C., and 54, Cornhill, E.C.—Various prices. List. Slides on loan.

JAMES BAMFORTH, Station Road, Holmfirth, Yorks.—Sold through trade.

W. LAWRENCE, 5, 6, and 7, Upper Sackville Street, Dublin (and trade).—Plain slides, 1s. 6d.; per dozen, 15s.; or in lecture sets, per dozen, 12s. Coloured, 2s. 6d.; per dozen, 27s.; or in lecture sets, per dozen, 24s.

ALFRED UNDERHILL, 23A, Clarendon Road, West Croydon, Surrey (and trade).—Plain slides, 1s.; coloured, from 2s.

PHILIP H. FINCHAM, Myton Road, West Dulwich, S.E. (trade only).—Does not give prices in his list.

WILKINSON AND CO., 15, Holmside, Sunderland (through trade).—Hand-painted slides, mostly without photographic basis.

THIS YEAR'S PUBLICATIONS (A SELECTION).

Adelaide.—Recent views of the City. 50 slides. Reading 6d. York.

Antiquities at Athens, an enlargement of the set published under same name last year. With plan of Athens showing position of the various objects. 18 slides. Reading. Wilson.

Architecture of Scotland; from the earliest times to the present. 50 slides. Reading. Wilson.

Bells of Shandon. 8 slides. Reading 6d. York.

British Museum.—Mansell and Co. are preparing, and have to a great extent ready, a "selected collection" of British Museum subjects, from which lantern slides may be had at 1s. 6d. each. Any other subjects will be made into slides at 3s. each, or 30s. doz. Mansell and Co. Oxford Street, W., and trade.

Caledonian Canal.—Lecture 6d. Wood. Catastrophes. (Comic.) 50 new subjects, in pairs and triplets. York.

Cathedrals, English. Durham, 19 slides; Gloucester, 24 slides; Worcester, 22 slides; Westminster Abbey, 15 slides. Short reading with each. Wilson.

Cats at Play.—Five instantaneous studies from life. Wilson.

Church of England, an hour with the. 50 slides. Reading 6d. York.

Comics.—Tale of a dog's tail, 6 slides. Miscellaneous cats, 6. The monkey and the elephant, 6. Riley.

Comics.—That everlasting cat, 8 slides. The revellers, 6. The children and the wagoner, 4. The troublesome baby, 2. The frolicsome dogs, 8. Mr. Simpkins and the hawser, 2. The P.P. man, 4. Matilda Jane's back hair, 4. Tit for Tat, 7. An awkward exchange, 4. The amateur sweep, 8. The lion couchant and the lion rampant, 3. Honesty rewarded, 10. The fatal sausage machine, 7. The wonderful telescope, 4. Tabbie and the paint-pot, 8. All the foregoing have readings. Four other sets, The catricide, 4. Rinaldo and Rinaldo, 7. The nine o'clock bus, 2; and the thirty tramp, have wording on the slides. Bamforth.

Comics.—The absent man, 12 slides; reading 6d. The world inverted, 12 slides; reading 6d. Poor Pa's trousers, 9 slides; reading 6d. A clergyman's adventures in Norway, 6 slides; reading 6d. Aurelia's unfortunate young man, 5 slides; reading 6d. Cat studies, 12 slides; no reading. York.

Comics.—Set of three comic animal studies. 3s. Wilson.

Comics.—Circus-ring, horse-riding, clowns, etc. 24 slides. An evening party and the fun thereat. 24 slipping slides. All hand-painted. Wilkinson and Co., Sunderland.

Congo, one thousand miles up the, 50 slides; reading 6d. York.

Costumes, Moorish. Many excellent examples are included in series of Tangiers and Tetuan. They are photographed from costumes actually used by the wearers, not from studio models, and many of them are types almost extinct. The whole series, Tangiers and Tetuan, contains 120 slides. Wilson.

Crimea and Caucasus, Through the.—Reading 6d. Wood.

Cruise of H.M.S. Albatross (as played by the sons of Neptune), 20 slides. See "Nautical." West and Sons.

Cutlass and field guns drill. By seventy sailors of H.M.S. Excellent, 8 slides. See "Nautical." West and Sons.

Curtains, Mottoes, &c. 21 new subjects. Bamforth.

Easter, Ascension, and Whitsuntide. 28 slides. York.

Effect Slides. The village church, summer, winter, and moonlight. "Repose," evening and moonlight. Bamforth.

English Church, Story of: to the granting of Magna Charta. 80 slides. Reading. Riley.

English Reformation, Story of. 60 slides. Reading. Riley.

English Scenery.—Derbyshire dales, Matlock, Buxton, Chatsworth, Haddon Hall, Wingfield Manor, Stratford-on-Avon, Warwick, Leamington, Kenilworth, Scarborough, London, &c. Plain (wet plate) slides, 1s. each. W. Potter, Matlock Bath, Derbyshire, and trade.

Frost and Snow Scenes. 10 beautiful slides. No reading. Wilson.

Germany.—50 slides; reading, 6d. York.

Germany.—50 slides, taken this summer. Reading 6d. Fincham.

Gibraltar.—New series. Wilson.

Gold Coast and its missions, from negatives recently taken by Rev. J. T. F. Halligey, F.R.G.S., by whom also the lecture is written. 50 slides. A second set entitled "Scenes of mission work on the Gold and Slave coast," 50 slides. Lists in a few days. Riley.

Grace Darling, the heroine. Portrait of the heroine, and views of birthplace, scenery, etc. 20 slides. Reading. Wilson.

Granada and the Alhambra.—Series taken just before the Alhambra here, including many parts now destroyed. Wilson.

Hop-picking in Kent. 12 slides; reading 6d. York.

India and the East.—252 slides. Wilkinson and Co., Sunderland.

India (Northern).—52 slides. Wilkinson.

Kingsley's Home at Eversley. 8 slides. Reading. Wilson.

Lent and its events. 24 slides. York.

Life Models.—Ten Nights in a Bar-room, 24 slides; reading 6d. The Parish Clerk, by Chas. Dickens, 12 slides; reading 6d. Jane Conquest (new set), 17 slides; reading 6d. The Fireman's Wedding, by W. A. Eaton, 7 slides; reading 1d. The Bridge of Sighs, by Tom Hood, 4 slides; reading 6d. In His Keeping, a temperance story, 10 slides; reading 1s. York.

Life Model Sets, with readings. — One Winter Night, poem by G. R. Sims, 9 slides. The Village Blacksmith: service of song, 24 slides; reading 3d. Belle across the Snow: story by Fanny Eden, 38 slides; reading 1d. Little Jamie: service of song, 37 slides; service 4d. For Mother's Sake: temperance story by J. T. Allen, 40 slides; reading 1d. Lost Gipsy: service of song, 36 slides; reading 4d. Bamforth.

London and neighbourhood. Seven recent additions. York.

Madagascar. "Pictorial Madagascar." With lecture by Rev. Charles Collins. In three parts. 54 Slides. List. Riley.

Madeira, Visit to. 50 slides; reading 6d. York.

Madeira.—50 slides, taken this summer. Reading 6d. Fincham.

May Queen, The. Tennyson. 10 slides; reading 1s. York.

Melbourne. Recent views in the city and suburbs. 52 slides, reading 6d. York.

Microscopy. A most important collection of hundreds of slides. All photo-micrographs, classified as follows:—ANIMAL KINGDOM, Normal tissues: Human (49). Lower Animals (51). Pathological tissues (23). Bones and Teeth (12). Animal hairs (5). Blood discs (15). Spermatozoa (4). Animal parasites (25). Tongues of gastropods (4). Sponge spicules (10). P. lycistina (1; group, from Barbadoes). Foraminifera, &c. (12). Holothuridae (6). Whole insects (18). Insect parts (70). VEGETABLE KINGDOM: Botanical (86). Algae (12). Diatoms (40). MINERAL KINGDOM, &c. (80). Lantern slides in the American size, viz.: 4in. by 3½in. Price 60 cents, or 6 dols. per doz. Complete list. W. H. Walmesley, Limited, 1,022, Walnut Street, Philadelphia.

Monkey, Mechanical. 7s.; superior, 8s. York.

Nautical.—Yachts racing, and under various rigs; men-of-war, at anchor and under sail and steam; cruisers; troopships; representative and historical vessels; sailor life, afloat and ashore, including all the drills; torpedo warfare; royal yachts, etc., etc. Plain, 18s. per doz.; coloured, from 30s. per doz. G. West and Sons, Southsea; and through trade. Wholesale agent, Joseph M. J. Nock, Tooting Junction, S.W.

Naval Battle.—As shown at R.N. Exhibition. 4 slides. See "Nautical." West and Sons.

Nelson and H.M.S. Victory. 17 slides. See "Nautical." West and Sons.

Nile, A thousand miles up the. 70 slides. Reading. Wilson.

Pacific, the Paradise of the. Hawaii and the home of the lepers, including portrait of Father Damien on his deathbed. 58 slides. Reading. Wilson.

The Passion, or Stations of the Cross. 14 slides; reading 2d. York.

Pyramid, the Great. 48 slides; reading 6d. York.

Riviera, the. 110 slides; reading 6d. York.

Royal Launch.—H.M. the Queen launching the Royal Sovereign, and the electric launching apparatus. 2 slides. See "Nautical." West and Sons.

Saint Paul in Rome. With lecture by Rev. H. B. Workman, M.A. In five parts. 60 slides. List. Riley.

Slipping Slides.—50 new subjects. York.

Southern Spain.—San Roque, Castella, Malaga, etc. Wilson.

Sports and athletics. Chiefly from instantaneous negatives by Mr. Louis Meldon. 24 slides. Wilson.

Stories and Poems, including Songs and Tales, Tony's the Boy, The Old Sundial, Three Beggars, Ivy Green, The Hop-pickers, etc. etc. List. Wood.

Tangiers and Tetuan. 120 slides. Wilson.

Wesley, Scenes from the life of. 60 slides. Reading 6d. York.

Wesley, John.—A set compiled, and lecture written by the Rev. George Beebe. 60 slides, in box, with reading, 43 net; coloured, 25 5s. Reading, separate, 6d. Riley.

THE NEW BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

NOTICE.—For the convenience of such of our readers as may live at a distance from any bookseller, any Book they may require, whether or not it is mentioned in the following List, will be forwarded post free to any part of the United Kingdom, from the Office of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, on receipt of Postal Order for the published price of the Book ordered.

BIOGRAPHY.

Muncker, Franz. RICHARD WAGNER: A SKETCH OF HIS LIFE AND WORKS. (Williams and Norgate.) 8vo. Paper covers. Pp. 106. Illustrations, portraits, and facsimiles. Price 2s.

This cheap biography of the great musician is translated from the German by W. D. Landman and revised by the author. The reproductions include handwriting and "scores."

TWENTY MODERN MEN. (Edward Arnold.) 8vo. Paper covers. Pp. 118. Price 1s.

A series of character sketches reprinted from the National Observer. The subject of an Observer sketch is never very gently handled, and there is always a certain family likeness between the articles. Still the collection is well worth dipping into. Lord Tennyson and Mr. George R. Sims—the juxtaposition of names in the National Observer's own—Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Irving, Mr. George Lewis, Mr. George Du Maurier, and Lord Salisbury are among the "modern men" discussed.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL WORKS.

A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL CATALOGUE OF MACMILLAN AND CO'S PUBLICATIONS FROM 1843 TO 1899. (Macmillan and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 716. Price 10s. net.

Bibliographers will no doubt find this catalogue useful; but we cannot fancy that it will ever possess much attraction for the general reader. A year by year list of books is given, together with full information as to size, price, number of editions published, and so on. There is also an index of titles and of authors' names.

CATALOGUE OF THE LIBRARY OF THE LATE CHARLES BRADLAUGH. (Mrs. Bradlaugh Bonner, 20, Circus Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.) Paper covers. Pp. 138. Price 1s.

The late Mr. Bradlaugh's library is being dispersed privately, book by book, at prices indicated in the catalogue before us. It was thought that this would be the more profitable way of getting rid of it, and that, at the same time, many people would like to keep the catalogue in memory of the man.

ECONOMICS, POLITICS, AND LAW.

Coit, Stanton. NEIGHBOURHOOD GUILDS. (Swan Sonnenschein.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 150. Price 2s. 6d. Social Science Series.

Starting with the assumption that General Booth's scheme of social salvation is incomplete and dangerous, the author proceeds to point out the many claims which "Neighbourhood Guilds" have on the attention of social reformers. Such a guild is really a large club, modelled, in fact, on the principle of the family, to which all the inhabitants of one street or neighbourhood would belong, and would work together for their own and for the common good, not, as in so many clubs which have already been established with philanthropic aims, devoting themselves to one branch of knowledge or of recreation only, but giving to each subject its proper place and proportion, pursuing each and all at the same time, and allowing each to become supreme as occasion demands. In such a way the people would gradually become educated, and the work of the guilds would become preventive rather than curative.

HANSARD'S PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES FOR SESSION 1891. Volume V. Containing Debates in both Houses from May 4 to June 8, 1891. (The Hansard Publishing Union.) 8vo. Boards. Pp. 1,922. Price 21s., or £5 5s. for set of eight vols.

Ogilvie, William. BIRTHRIGHT IN LAND. (Kegan Paul.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 436. Price 7s. 6d.

Professor Ogilvie believed land to be as much the natural right of every man and woman as air and water, and this work, which was written between the years 1776 and 1781, but never before published, seems, to a large extent, to have anticipated the writing of Mr. Henry George and the advocates of land nationalisation.

ESSAYS, CRITICISMS, AND BELLES LETTRES.

Bunyan, John. THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. (Macmillan and Co.) Sm. 8vo. Cloth. Price 2s. 6d.

This is a volume in the cheap reissue of the "Golden Treasury" series, and forms the ninth edition of the book in this form alone. It could not be presented in a daintier or more attractive form.

Burd, L. Arthur. "THE PRINCE" OF MACHIAVELLI. (Oxford: The Clarendon Press.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 403. Price 14s.

The Italian text of "The Prince," together with illustrative and explanatory notes. Lord Acton contributes a short introduction, and the editor, besides giving an article on early criticism of the work, has summarised at some length its purpose and aim, together with the results at which Machiavellian studies have now arrived.

Jerrold, Walter (Editor). THE HANDBOOK OF SWINDLING AND OTHER PAPERS. By Douglas Jerrold. (Walter Scott.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xxiv. 292. Price 1s.

A reprint of some of Jerrold's best known papers, together with a biographical sketch by his grandson. A volume in the "Camelot Series," now issued bi-monthly.

Macleod, Norman, D.D. WORKS. (Charles Burnet and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Price 3s. 6d.

Five stories and sketches, which have previously appeared separately at sixpence, are here bound together in cloth. The volume contains "The Old Lieutenant and His Son," "The Starling," "Reminiscences of a Highland Parish," "Character Sketches," and "Eastward."

Sharp, Amy. VICTORIAN POETS. (Methuen.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xx. 204. Price 2s. 6d.

A volume of the new "University Extension Series." It consists of chapters on Tennyson, Browning, Mrs. Browning, Clough and Matthew Arnold, Rossetti, William Morris, and Swinburne, and on some minor poets. We cannot cordially recommend the book. It is pretentious and inaccurate; and there is at least one grave omission. Has Miss Sharp, the University Extension Local Secretary for the Rugby centre, never heard of George Meredith?

FICTION.

Bremont, Anna, Comtesse de. THE GENTLEMAN DIGGER. (Sampson Low.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 304. Price 6s.

Considered apart from its merits as a story, which are by no means inconsiderable, this work possesses special value as being a vivid and accurate picture of life in the modern South African goldfields in Johannesburg.

Campbell, Sir Gilbert, Bart. A FAIR FREELANCE. (Routledge.) Picture boards. Pp. 308. Price 2s.

Harris, A. L. THE FATAL REQUEST. (Frederick Warne.) Picture boards. Pp. 398. Price 2s.

Kipling, Rudyard. LIFE'S HANDICAP. (Macmillan.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 352. Price 6s.

This volume, uniform with those of Mr. Kipling's writings which have preceded it, contains the majority of the short stories which have appeared in the magazines since their author's name has become a household word: some, however, make their appearance here for the first time. It would be difficult to say which is the best—the reader must choose for himself—for all are good, and the majority are almost perfect examples of what a short story should be. The appearance of the volume deserves a word of praise.

Potapenko, N. M. A RUSSIAN PRIEST. (T. Fisher Unwin.) Long Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 214. Price 1s. 6d.

This is a volume of the "Pseudonym Library." A young priest, seeing the corruption into which his Church has fallen, rejects the certainty of a brilliant future and elects to minister in one of the poorest parishes of rural Russia, where he hopes to better the ignorance and poverty of the moujiks, who have only five years been released from serfdom. The story is a very powerful one, although entirely devoid of sensation, but the translation is hardly adequate.

MR. BARRY PAIN.

Pain, Barry. IN A CANADIAN CANOE. (Henry and Co.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 210. Price 2s. 6d. Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour.

The majority of the papers in this volume are reprinted, with considerable additions, from the pages of the Granta, the Cambridge University Magazine, where they attracted considerable attention for their novelty and original humour. They do not in the least resemble the work of the American humourists, bolsterous and oftentimes vulgar, but they belong to a distinct class of themselves. Their humour is quaint and quiet, relieved here and there by a touch of pathos, making some of the most laughable and the most readable pages in the whole of our not inconsiderable comic literature. Lately, however, with the solitary exception of Mr. Anstey, the English public have had to look for their humour to the other side of the Atlantic; but in Mr. Barry Pain they have an original worker, a man who copies no one either in treatment or style, and this his first volume should find a wide popularity. Lately Mr. Pain has been contributing to the Speaker the series of "Home Pets" and "Open Questions," and to the Illustrated London News, "Other People's Letters."

HISTORY.

Dymes, T. J. ARISTOTLE'S CONSTITUTION OF ATHENS: TRANSLATED FOR ENGLISH READERS AND STUDENTS. (Seeley.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 147. Price 2s. 6d.

The authors and the publishers who have given to the world within a month three translations of that new "Constitution of Athens" which is ascribed to Aristotle, must think rather better of "English readers" than we do. Mr. Dymes's version is perhaps the plainest and the closest to the Greek of the three; but it is not unpleasant reading, and if people who cannot use the original really want some new information about Themistocles, they may turn with confidence to Mr. Dymes.

Newman, John Henry, Cardinal. HISTORICAL SKETCHES. (Longmans, Green and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. 3 vols. Price 3s. 6d. each.

A new edition in the "Silver Series." Vol. I. contains "The Turks in their Relation to Europe," "Marcus Tullius Cicero," "Apollonius of Tyana," and "Primitive Christianity"; Vol. II. "The Church of the Fathers," "St. Chrysostom," "Theodoret," "Mission of St. Benedict," and "Benedictine Schools"; and Vol. III. "Rise and Progress of Universities," "Normans in England," "Medieval Oxford," and "Convocation of Canterbury."

Saint Amand, Imbert de. MARIE LOUISE AND THE INVASION OF 1814. (Hutchinson and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 302. Portrait. Price 5s.

This chatty volume, which is translated from the French by Mr. Thomas Sergeant Perry, belongs to a series which Messrs. Hutchinson are publishing under the title of "Famous Women of the French Court." It contains a good deal of history in a pleasantly readable form.

MILITARY.

Colleton, Captain Sir Robert. NOTES ON FIRE CONTROL, DISCIPLINE AND INDIRECT FIRE. 6 Figs. (Gale and Polden.) Cloth. Pp. 84. Price 1s. 6d.

The immense importance of controlled compared with uncontrolled fire has been so amply proved by our own sad experiences in Afghanistan and Egypt that the value of a short work which deals exclusively with fire discipline without entering into technical details cannot be over-estimated.

Darbishire, Captain Russell N. POCKET TACTICS FOR OFFICERS OF MILITIA DESIROUS OF ENTERING THE ARMY, AND MILITIA AND VOLUNTEER OFFICERS DESIROUS OF PASSING IN TACTICS. 3 Plates. (Gale and Polden.) Cloth. Pp. 102. Price 2s.

An elementary little manual on minor tactics, well within the capacity of officers who have but little leisure to devote to a more thorough study of the subject.

Hutchinson, Major H. D. FIELD FORTIFICATION. Notes on the text-books specially designed and arranged for the use of officers preparing for Promotion Examinations. Illustrated with 29 plates. (Gale and Polden.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 144. Price 4s.

Contains within a brief compass everything required to assist officers in passing examinations for promotion in all subjects relating to field fortification.

Malet, Captain J. W. HANDBOOK TO FIELD TRAINING. Illustrated with 21 plates. (Gale and Polden.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 218. Price 3s.

A thoroughly practical hand-book to the field training of infantry.

POETRY AND THE DRAMA.

Archer, William (Editor). ROSMERSHOLM; THE LADY OF THE SEA; HEDDA GABLER. By Henrik Ibsen. (Walter Scott.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xvi. 364. Price 3s. 6d.

The fifth and last volume of the authorised English edition of Ibsen's Prose Dramas. The first-named play is translated by Mr. Charles Archer, the second by Mrs. Archer, and the third by the Editor himself, who also contributes an interesting prefatory note.

Buchanan, Robert. THE OUTCAST: A RHYME FOR THE TIME. (Chatto and Windus.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 200. Illustrations. Price 8s.

The first of a series of poetical tales dealing with the Amours of Vanderdecken. The poem is essentially modern, and full of much interesting and trenchant criticism of contemporary life and thought. Mr. Buchanan, in a "letter dedicatory," expresses himself as certain that the book will be either universally boycotted or torn into shreds, that its purpose will be misunderstood, and that, above all, it will be impeached on the ground of its "morality." Non videtur.

Buchheim, C. A., Ph.D. (Editor). BALLADEN UND ROMANZEN. (Macmillan and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xxxiv. 318. Frontispiece. Price 4s. 6d.

A selection of German ballads, intended as a companion volume to Professor Buchheim's "Deutsche Lyrik," already published in the "Golden Treasury" series. The poems are arranged in three periods, (1) Bürger to Chamisso, (2) Uhland to Heine, and (3) Freiligrath to the present time. There is a critical introduction, as well as numerous notes.

Dickinson, Emily. POEMS (Osgood, McIlvaine and Co.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 158. Price 5s.

The preface states that these poems were written with no idea of publication, and were only issued after the author's death at the earnest wish of appreciative friends. The quality of the verse is such as to make one wonder on what possible pretext the author's wishes were not observed.

Douglas, Sir George, Bart. (Editor). POEMS OF THE SCOTTISH MINOR POETS FROM THE AGE OF RAMSAY TO DAVID GRAY. (Walter Scott.) 12mo. Cloth gilt. Pp. xlii. 328. Price 1s.

A volume of the "Canterbury Poets" series, containing specimens of the best Scottish minor poetry, together with a critical introduction and biographical notes.

Morley, Henry, LL.D. (Editor). PIKE COUNTY BALLADS AND OTHER POEMS. By John Hay. THE VISION OF DON RODERICK AND THE FIELD OF WATERLOO. By Sir Walter Scott. (George Routledge and Sons.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 192. Price 1s.

This is a "Companion Poet," and will no doubt be welcomed by many. The reason why Hay's poems are followed by a few pieces by Sir Walter Scott is, according to Professor Henry Morley, who prefixes the customary introduction, because "there was room."

O'Hara, J. Bernard. SONGS OF THE SOUTH. (Ward, Lock and Bowden.) Post 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 147. Price 3s. 6d. A volume of Australian verse, full of promise.

Rhys, Ernest. THE GREAT COCKNEY TRAGEDY. (T. Fisher Unwin.) Paper Covers.

A reprint of a powerful poem, originally published in the Pall Mall Gazette, dealing with the tragic life of a sweated East End Jew. Some curious illustrations are supplied by Mr. Jack B. Yeats.

Shakespeare's "MEASURE FOR MEASURE." (Cassell and Co.) 12mo. Cloth. Pp. 192. Price 6d.

A volume in Cassell's National Library, in which is bound up "The Historie of Promos and Cassandra." Other recent volumes in this excellent series have been "My Ten Years' Imprisonment" (Silvio Pellico), "Lives of the Poets" (Johnson), and "Much Ado About Nothing."

SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS. (Routledge and Sons.) Narrow 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 528. Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

The fifth volume of the Mignon Shakespeare—a pre-eminently pocketable edition—containing "Macbeth," "Timon of Athens," "Hamlet," "Troilus and Cressida," "Cymbeline," and "Coriolanus." The illustrations are reduced from drawings by Sir John Gilbert.

Tolstoi, Lyof. THE FRUITS OF ENLIGHTENMENT. (Heinemann.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 276. Price 5s.

A comedy in four acts, translated from the Russian by Dr. E. J. Dillon. Mr. A. W. Pinero, the dramatist, contributes a prefatory note, in which he speaks with pleasure of the reviving public interest in dramatic literature—an interest which, he says, must prove of decided benefit to the stage itself.

Tutin, J. R. A WORDSWORTH DICTIONARY. (Hull: J. R. Tutin.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 216. Price 4s. 6d. net.

A fairly successful attempt at a Wordsworth concordance, containing an index to all the places, people, beasts, birds, and flowers mentioned in the poet's writings, together with a selection of familiar quotations and a chronological list of those poems which are generally considered most representative of his genius.

Whittier, John Greenleaf. POETICAL WORKS. (Warne and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 576. Price 3s. 6d.

The "Albion Edition"—a cheap and presentable reprint. Whittier's "Poems" can now be obtained also in the "Chandos Classics" series at 2s. and 1s. 6d.

POLITICS AND SOCIETY.

Webb, Sidney. THE LONDON PROGRAMME. (Swan Sonnenschein and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. viii. 218. Price 2s. 6d.

Describes the more important of those reforms in the administration of the metropolis which are often known as the London programme. The various chapters of the work discuss the County Council, vestrydom, the water, gas, markets, docks, tramways, hospitals, police, ground rents, etc., of the metropolis. It forms a volume of the Social Science Series.

REFERENCE BOOKS.

Skelton, H. J. ECONOMICS OF IRON AND STEEL. (Biggs and Co., Salisbury Court, E.C.) Illustrated. Pp. 344. Price 5s. This book should be in the hands of all connected with the iron and steel industries of to-day. Its chief value lies in the fact that the many complicated chemical processes necessary to the manufacture of iron and steel are explained in the plainest of language. The pages are penned entirely from a practical point of view.

Tregear, Edward. THE MAORI POLYNESIAN COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY. (Lyon and Blair, Wellington, New Zealand.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 665. Price 21s.

RELIGION, PHILOSOPHY AND PHILANTHROPY.

Cunningham, Rev. W. THE PATH TOWARDS KNOWLEDGE: DISCOURSES ON SOME DIFFICULTIES OF THE DAY. (Methuen and Co., 18, Bury Street, W.C.) Pp. 241. Price 4s. 6d.

A collection of discourses upon many vexed questions of the hour—Marriage, Socialism, Education, Faith, etc. The author deals with each subject from the standpoint of the English Churchman, and his arguments are set forth with considerable force and ability.

Kingsland, William. THE ESOTERIC BASIS OF CHRISTIANITY. (Theosophical Publishing Society.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 42.

A paper read before the Blavatsky Lodge of the Theosophical Society.

SCIENCE, MEDICINE AND EDUCATION.

Bert, Paul. FIRST YEAR OF SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE. (Relfe Brothers.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 344. Numerous Illustrations. Price 2s. 6d.

It will be sufficient merely to chronicle the publication of a tenth edition of this work, which has sold in enormous numbers both in France and in this country. There is no better book of its kind.

Chambers, George F., F.R.A.S. PICTUREAL ASTRONOMY FOR GENERAL READERS. (Whittaker and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xvi. 268. Price 4s.

The initial volume of Whittaker's Library of Popular Science. A brief and interesting presentation of the main facts of modern astronomy, suitable to the general reader.

Syme, David. ON THE MODIFICATION OF ORGANISM. (Kegan Paul.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 164. Price 5s.

An attempt to disprove Darwin's theory of Natural Selection, with all its attendant consequences and corollaries.

SOME RECENT MAPS.

CENTRAL EUROPE. From latest Surveys, one of a world series of Travelling Maps. Price 2s.; mounted on Cloth 3s. (J. Bartholomew and Co., Geographical Institute, Edinburgh.) Sure to be in great demand in these days of Continental travel.

PEPPING FOREST. From the new 6-inch Ordnance Maps. (G. W. Bacon and Co., Limited, 127, Strand, London.)

KENT WATERING PLACES. Price 1s.; mounted on Cloth 2s. Scale, 2 miles to an inch. (J. Bartholomew, Edinburgh.) One of the handiest maps published, and especially useful for the holiday-making and health-seeking Londoner.

TRAVEL, GEOGRAPHY AND TOPOGRAPHY.

Bennett, Arthur. JOHN BULL AND HIS OTHER ISLAND. (Simpkin, Marshall.) Two volumes. Crown 8vo. Cloth. Price 7s.

A new and improved edition of a work which we have described favourably on more than one previous occasion. It describes Ireland from the English point of view, the author not having allowed the fact of his being a Unionist to interfere with his judgment and sense of fairness.

Cotes, V. Cecil. TWO GIRLS ON A BARGE. (Chatto and Windus.) Crown 8vo. Cloth. Pp. 177. Price 3s. 6d.

In planning out the town, concerning which this book is written, it was the object of these two heroines to get away from the "conventionalised idea." This they certainly succeeded in, for they chartered a canal-boat and, together with two young men, started out on a fortnight's trip northward from London. However, the record of their journeying is not particularly interesting, the author's style being somewhat obscure and wearisome, but it is given an extra interest by Mr. F. H. Townsend's illustrations, which are excellent.

LIFE IN THE ROYAL NAVY. By A "Ranker." (G. Chamberlain, Landport, Portsmouth.) Paper covers. 171 pp. Price 1s. (Illus.)

A brightly written record of twenty years' experience in the naval service of to-day which will be eagerly read by all interested in the lot of our men afloat. In answer to the query, "Shall we send our boys to the navy?" the author replies emphatically, "Yes!" And a perusal of its pages cannot fail to be sufficient inducement to hundreds of young men to cast in their lot with the Royal Navy.

Stone, Percy P. THE ARCHITECTURAL ANTIQUITIES OF THE ISLE OF WIGHT. Part II. (Stone, 16, Great Marlborough Street, W.) Folio. Price £3 3s. for four parts.

Contains historical and architectural details, illustrated with sketches, maps and plans, of a number of the old country and farm houses of the Isle of Wight.

WESTON-UPPER-MARE: A HOLIDAY GROUND. (Weston: Lawrence Bros.) Paper covers. Pp. 43. Price 1s.

This guide is chiefly notable for its illustrations, which in the form of photographic prints—are both numerous and excellent.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURE.

Brassey, Lady. A VOYAGE IN THE "SUNBEAM," OUR HOME ON THE OCEAN FOR ELEVEN MONTHS. (Longmans, Green and Co.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xx. 492. Price 3s. 6d.

A cheaper edition, printed from the stereotype plates, and bound up to form a volume of the "Silver Series." It contains sixty-six illustrations.

Roche, James Jeffrey. THE STORY OF THE FILIBUSTERS. (Fisher Unwin.) 8vo. Cloth. Pp. xiv. 374. Price 5s.

The history and the epitaph of a "brave, lawless, generous anomaly on civilisation." The volume belongs to the "Adventure Series," and also contains "The Life of Colonel David Crockett."

SOME FRENCH BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

I. LITERATURE.

Nac, Paul. VINGT JOURS EN SUISSE (Librairies-Reunies). Guide to Switzerland by a member of the Alpine Club. One hundred illustrations.

Neukomme, Edmond. L'ALLEMAGNE A TOUTE VAPEUR. (Ernest Kolb.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c.

New volume on modern Germany, by an author who has already written several books; style Max O'Rell, on that country.

Kneipp, Séb. MA CURE D'EAU. (V. Retaux et Fils.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c.

Work by the celebrated Bavarian priest, explaining the wonders of his water-cure system.

Saint-Amand Imbert de. LA JEUNESSE DE MARIE-AMELIE. (Librairie E. Dentu.) 8vo. Price 3fr. 50c.

Early life of Queen Marie Amélie, wife of Louis Philippe. Interesting addition to the history of the first part of the century.

II.—FICTION, POETRY, AND THE BELLES LETTRES.

Loti, Pierre. LE LIVRE DE LA PITIE ET DE LA MORT. (Calmann Levy.) 8vo. Price 3 fr. 50.

First book published by Pierre Loti since his election to the French Academy. The volume consists of a collection of short stories and sketches, some of which have already appeared elsewhere.

Hepp, Alexandre. LE LAIT D'UNE AUTRE. (Librairie E. Dentu.) 8vo. Price 3 fr. 50.

Novel by well-known Parisian journalist.

SOME BLUE BOOKS OF THE MONTH.

The following list comprises all the more important Blue Books issued during the month of August. A complete list may be obtained of Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, Queen's Printers, East Harding Street, E.C.

I.—COLONIAL POSSESSIONS.

Four numbers of the series of Annual Colonial Reports have been issued during the past month:—

No. 12. Turks and Caicos Islands. Pp. 10. Price 1d.

No. 13. Gibraltar. Pp. 18. Price 1d.

No. 14. Zululand. Pp. 8. Price 1d.

No. 15. Sierra Leone. Pp. 20. Price 1½d.

AUSTRALASIAN FEDERATION. Proceedings of Convention. Official Record of the proceedings and debates of the National Australasian Convention, held in the Parliament House, Sydney, New South Wales, in the months of March and April, 1891. The speeches are reported verbatim. (Pp. cxlviii. 392. Price 4s. 3d.)

STATISTICS. Tables.

Statistical tables relating to the Colonial and other possessions of the United Kingdom. Part xix. 1885-86-87. Gives figures as to agriculture, area, births and deaths, crime, debt, education, expenditure, exports, imports, population, prices, revenue, shipping, wages, etc. etc., of various colonies. (Pp. 659. Price 5s. 2½d.)

II.—DOMESTIC.

COURTS-MARTIAL. Returns.

Returns of the number of Courts-martial held and small punishments inflicted on the seamen of the Royal Navy, etc., during the year 1890; gives the total number of offences (251), their nature, the sentences awarded, the punishments inflicted, etc. etc. (Pp. 14. Price 2½d.)

CUSTOMS. Report of Commissioners.

Thirty-fifth Report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs on the Customs for the year ended 31st March, 1891. The gross receipts for the financial year 1890-91 amounted to £19,749,530—a decrease of £95,862 as compared with that of 1889-90. This decrease is said to be mainly due to alterations in the tariff with regard to the duties on tea and currants, and to the abolition of the plate duty. The Report is followed by numerous tables. (Pp. 44. Price 2½d.)

LONDON SCHOOL BOARD. Superannuation Bill.

Report from the Select Committee on the School Board for London (Superannuation) Bill, together with the proceedings of the committee, minutes of evidence, appendix and index. The Committee thought it undesirable to proceed with the Bill referred to them, and accordingly reported it to the House without amendment, recommending their re-appointment next session. (Pp. xiv. 168. Price 1s. 6d.)

LONDON WATER SUPPLY. Report.

Special Report from the Select Committee on the London Water Commission Bill; together with the proceedings of the committee, minutes of evidence, appendix and index. The committee (which proceeded upon the assumption that in the opinion of Parliament it is desirable to establish a single public representative water authority for the metropolis) have come to the conclusion that the two bills promoted by the London County Council did not appear calculated to effect a satisfactory solution of the problem, though both were promoted in the public interest and to considerable public advantage. (Pp. xxvi. 164. Price 2s.)

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY. Report.

Thirty-fourth annual report of the trustees of the National Gallery, 1891, gives a list (in full descriptions) of the portraits which has been acquired by the Gallery during the past year; as well as statistics as to loans, attendance, etc. (Pp. 20. Price 2½d.)

PUBLIC WORKS LOAN BOARD. Report.

Sixteenth annual report of the Public Works Loan Board, 1890-91. 451 advances have been made during the financial year for sums amounting to £290,068, as against 458 advances for £255,742 in the previous year. Full particulars concerning these advances are given in the appendix. (Pp. 102. Price 11d.)

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS. Report.

General Report to the Board of Trade upon the accidents that have occurred on the railways of the United Kingdom during the year 1890. The number of persons killed in the working of railways during the year was 1,074, and the number of injured 4,721. The proportion to the total number of travelling passengers were one in 6,930,034 killed, and one in 600,840 injured. (Pp. 32. Price 3d.)

REFORMATORY AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS. Report.

Thirty-fourth report, for the year 1890, of the Inspector appointed to visit the certified reformatory and industrial schools of Great Britain. The total number of schools under inspection is 255. In these were detained at the close of 1890 28,549 children—23,509 boys, and 5,040 girls. The figures show an increase of 504 boys and 8 girls as compared with the previous year. The general conduct of the inmates has been satisfactory. (Pp. 470. Price 1s. 11½d.)

SAVINGS BANKS. Return.

An elaborate Return from each Savings Bank in England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland, setting forth inter alia the names of officers, salaries, number of accounts open, total amount owing to depositors, rate of interest paid, etc. etc. (Pp. 9.. Price 9½d.)

III.—FOREIGN.

The following are among the few Diplomatic and Consular Reports on Trade and Finance (annual series) issued during August:—

No. 934. Japan, Trade of Nagasaki. (Pp. 10. Price 1d.)

No. 935. Japan, Trade of Hakodate. (Pp. 18. Price 1½d.)

No. 936. Bulgaria, Trade of Bulgaria. (Pp. 5d. Price 3d.)

No. 937. Germany, Trade of Frankfurt. (Pp. 26. Price 3d.)

ITINERANT STREET MUSICIANS. Reports.

Reports from Her Majesty's Ambassadors in Europe and Her Majesty's Minister in the United States on the regulations for the control of itinerant street musicians. One of the most interesting Government publications of the month. (Pp. 22. Price 2½d.)

IV.—IRELAND.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT BOARD. Report.

The Annual Report of the Local Government Board for Ireland. Gives full particulars concerning poor relief, seed supply, lunatics and idiots in workhouses, orphans and deserted children, emigration, vaccination, sanitary acts, burial grounds, sewerage, water supply, &c. (Pp. 284. Price 2s. 3d.)

LUNACY. Report.

Fortieth Report, with appendices, of the Inspectors of Lunatics (Ireland). There were in Ireland on the 1st January last 16,251 persons of unsound mind under care, being an increase of 225 on the number at the commencement of 1890. It does not appear that they are, upon the whole, so well looked after as they might be. (Pp. 206. Price 1s. 2½d.)

PRISONS. Report.

Thirteenth Report of the General Prisons Board, Ireland, 1890-91, with an appendix. The Board is of opinion that short sentences are utterly inefficient for good, whether viewed as a punitive or as a deterrent influence. (Pp. 15.. Price 8d.)

QUEEN'S COLLEGE. Report.

Report of the President of Queen's College, Belfast, for the session 1890-91. The total number of students in attendance at the College was 451, among them being 14 young ladies. "They were among the most attentive and diligent of the students," says the President, who deprecates the fact that they are not eligible for scholarships or prizes. (Pp. 50. Price 3d.)

REFORMATORY SCHOOLS. Report.

Twenty-ninth Report of the Inspector appointed to visit the Reformatory and Industrial Schools of Ireland. Sir Rowland Blennerhassett has produced an interesting report, though he appears to be a little too fond of displaying his erudition. Quotations from and references to Dante and Victor Hugo scarcely seem in place in a Blue Book. (Pp. 76. Price 4½d.)

V.—SCOTLAND.

PRISONS. Report.

Thirteenth Annual Report of the Prison Commissioners of Scotland. A general examination of the statistics for the year 1890-91 shows that there has been an increase in the daily number of prisoners. The number of female prisoners is decreasing rapidly—indeed, according to the Commissioners, they form a class which is likely ere long to become extinct. (Pp. 58. Price 1s. 6d.)

THE CONTENTS OF REVIEWS AND MAGAZINES AT HOME AND ABROAD.

- Amateur Work. September. 41.
Design for an Overmantel in Carved Wood. (Illus.) Robert Coxon.
Winkles for Amateur Wood Engravers.
- Andover Review. August. 35 cents.
Poetry and Philosophy. (The teaching of Arnold and Browning.) Professor Dewey.
Alexandre Vinet. Prof. Pollens.
What Value has Goethe's Thought of God for Us? Miss Julia H. Gulliver.
Slavery as it Appeared to a Northern Man in 1844. Rev. A. P. Peabody.
The Papal Encyclical on Labour. The Editor.
Pauperism. Professor Tucker.
- Antiquary. September. 1s.
Pompeii Revisited. Professor Halbherr.
Alchemy in England. Robert Steele.
Some Queer Names. H. Barber, M.D.
- Arena. July. 50 cents.
The Unity of Germany. Mme. Blazé de Bury.
Should the Nation Own the Railways? C. Wood Davis.
Where Must Lasting Progress Begin? Elizabeth Cady Stanton.
My Home Life. Amelia B. Edwards.
The Tyranny of Nationalism. Rev. Minot J. Savage.
Individuality in Education. Prof. Mary L. Dickinson.
The Working Woman of To-day. Helen Campbell.
The Independent Party and Money at Gt. B. B. Hassell.
Psycho Experiences. Sara A. Underwood.
A Decade of Retrogression (In New York City). Florence Kelley Wischniewetzky.
- Argosy. September. 6d.
Twe Bretons at Home. (Illus.) Charles W. Wood, F.R.G.S.
- Atlanta. September. 6d.
What America does for her Girls. (Illus.) L. Toulmin-Smith.
In the Sunny South of France. (Illus.) C. J. Willis.
Atlanta Scholarship. ("Cymbeline"; "The Winter's Tale"; "The Tempest.") Dr. Garnett.
- Atlantic Monthly. September. 1s.
The Disturber of Traffic. (Story.) Rufyard Kipling.
Speech as a Barrier between Man and Beast. E. P. Evans.
A Study of Analogy. John Burroughs.
Europe and Cathay. John Fiske.
Courts of Conciliation. Nicolay Grevstad.
A Modern Mytic: Oliphant.
- Belford's Magazine. August.
Tabernacle and Man. The late General Gordon.
Athletics: Their Use and Abuse. Champion Bissell.
How the Confederacy Changed Naval Warfare. General Danney H. Maury.
Characteristics of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. James McCarroll.
An American Mecca. (Concord.) Mary J. Safford.
- Blackwood's Magazine. September. 2s. 6d.
Diamond Digging in South Africa. Lieut. C. H. Henry Knollys, R.A.
The Songs and Ballads of Pife. Æneas Mackay.
Macbeth as the Celtic Type. Moira O'Neill.
Eton Montem. A Memory of the Past. G. C. Green.
Early Settlers in English America.
A Country Town. Annie S. Swan.
A Black Stag in Monar. A Note on Skilking.
James Russell Lowell.
- Board of Trade Journal. Aug. 6d.
State of the Skilled Labour Market.
Public Lighting in Eastern Europe.
Development of Indian Railways.
New Russian Customs Tariff.
Tariff Changes and Customs Regulations.
- Boy's Own Paper. September. 6d.
Notes from My Log; or, True Stories of Adventure and Peril. Rear-Admiral W. R. Kennedy.
First Steps in Photography. R. A. R. Bennett.
- Cape Illustrated Magazine. July. 9d.
How to Loaf. (Written for the benefit of convalescents resident in South Africa.)
Notes on Demerara.
- Cassell's Family Magazine. September. 7d.
The Proposed Scotch Waterway (the Forth and Clyde Ship Canal). (Illus.)
How Shall I Make Him Pay? A Family Lawyer.
The Brightening of Three Dreary Back Rooms. I. (Illus.) E. H. Fitchew.
- Cassell's Saturday Journal. Sept. 6d.
Interview with Captain Byre M. Shaw. (Illus.)
Entertainers upon Sand and Beach.
- Catholic World. August. 35 cts.
The Pope and the Proletariat. Rev. R. B. Brady.
The Warfare of Science. Very Rev. Augustine F. Hewitt.
The Life of Father Hecker. Rev. Walter Blotch.
The Witness of Science to Religion. Rev. William Barry, D.D.
Professor Briggs on Authority in Religion. Rev. H. H. Wyman.
- Century Magazine. September. 1s. 4d.
A Winter Journey through Siberia. (Illus.) George Kennan.
The Poems of Thomas Bailey Aldrich. With Portrait. F. D. Sherman.
To California in 1849 through Mexico. (Illus.) A. C. Ferris.
The Distribution of Ability in the United States. H. C. Lodge.
The Government of Cities in the United States. Seth Low.
A Painter's Paradise. Play in Provence. (Illus.) Elizabeth R. Pennell.
Italian Old Masters. (Illus.) W. J. Stillman.
Treatment of Prisoners at Camp Morton. (Illus.)
I. A Reply to "Cold Cheer at Camp Morton." W. R. Holloway.
II. Rejoinder. John A. Wyneth.
Country Newspapers. E. W. Howe.
The Possibility of Mechanical Flight. S. P. Langley.
- Chautauquan. September.
Frontispiece. John G. Whittier.
Russia and the Russians. (Illus.) Mrs. C. B. Corson.
The American Association for the Advancement of Science. Marcus Benjamin, Ph.D.
Modern Methods of Social Reform. Lyman Abbot, D.D.
A Poet's Town. (Illus.) (Marblehead and J. G. Whittier.) Margaret B. Wigot.
The Hawaiians. J. N. Ingram.
What English Women are Doing in Art. Elizabeth Roberts.
Playing with Hearts. (The Love Stories of some Eminent Men.) Sarah K. Bolton.
- Clergyman's Magazine. September. 6d.
The Clergyman and the Prayer Book. Rev. H. C. G. Moule.
The Kingdom of Humanity. Very Rev. the Dean of Armagh.
- Contemporary Pulpit. September. 61.
Golden Brass: Sermon by Bishop Warren. (Methodist Episc. Ch., U.S.A.)
- Contemporary Review. September. 2s. 6d.
A Month in Southern India. Rt. Hon. Sir M. E. Grant Duff.
Henrik Ibsen's Poems. Philip H. Wilested.
Laurence Oliphant. Julia Wedgwood.
The Nationalisation of Cathedrals. H. W. Massingham.
Pictor Sacrelegus, A.D. 1482. Vernon Lee.
The Fourth Gospel. Professor Emil Schurer, D.D.
Johann Sebastian Bach. William F. Apthorp.
Modern Astronomy. Sir R. S. Ball, LL.D., F.R.S.
The Antipodeans. II. D. Christie Murray.
- Cornhill Magazine. September. 6d.
Advertising in China.
The Battle of Copenhagen. A Danish Account of the Action.
Cousins German.
- Cosmopolitan. September 25c. A Woman's Number.
France's Greatest Military Artist. (Détailleur) (Illus.) Lady Dilke.
A Forgotten City. (Soluntum in Sicily.) (Illus.) Eleanor Lewis.
The Ladies' New York Club. (Illus.) Julia Hayes Percy.
The Evolution of the Society Journal. (Illus.) Mrs. Roger A. Pryor.
Society Women as Authors. (Illus.) Anna Vernon Dorsey.
Tabernacle. (Illus.) Elizabeth Bisland.
Woman's Share in Russian Nihilism. (Illus.) Ella Noralkow.
- Education. September. 6d.
Interview with R. D. Roberts, D.Sc., on University Extension. (Illus.)
- Expositor. September. 1s.
Dr. H. H. Wendt on the Fourth Gospel.
Rev. Professor James Iverach.
The Christology of the Earlier Chapters of the Acts of the Apostles. Rev. W. Lock.
- Fireside. September. 6d.
An Ascent of Mont Blanc. (Illus.) W. Bertram Miller.
- Fortnightly Review. September. 2s. 6d.
On the Origin, Propagation, and Prevention of Phthisis. Professor Tyndal.
Lowell in his Poetry. Sydney Low.
A Survey of the Thirteenth Century. Frederic Harrison.
A Pessimist Playwright. William Archer.
An old Greek Explorer of Great Britain. Karl Blind.
A Balkan Confederation. James Buchner.
M. Maurice Barres. Edward Delille.
Social Life in Australia. Francis Adams.
A Tip ych. The Editor.
- Forum. August. 2s. 6d.
Russian Finance: A Bad Investment. Dr. F. H. Geffcken.
The Jewish Persecution: Its Severity and Extent. L. A. Hourwich.
Methods and Places of Refuge. Baron de Hirsch.
Immigration and Degradation. President Francis A. Walker.
The Chilian Struggle for Liberty. Ricardo L. Trumbull.
Literature in the Market Place. George E. Woodberry.
Profits of Fruit Culture in California. Ex-Governor L. A. Shelton.
Does Public Life give Long Careers? Edward P. Clark.
The Greathead Electric Underground Railway. Simon Sterne.
A New Route to the North Pole. Dr. Fridtjof Nansen.
Will Dr. Nansen Succeed? General A. W. Greeley.

- Gentleman's Magazine. September. 1s.
On Some Extincts from Harriet Shelley's Letters. By Annie E. Ireland.
Zoological Retrogression. By H. G. Wells, B.Sc.
Was Lord Beaconsfield the Sun? By J. A. Farrer.
A Day at the Meydoun Pyramid. By Rev. H. D. Rawnsley, M.A.
John Aubrey of Wilts. By Rev. B. G. Johns, M.A.
Notes on the Lias and Trias Cliffs of the Severn. By C. Parkinson.
Some London Streets. By E. K. Pearce.
Jean Chouan, a Tale of La Vendée. By O. E. Meekkerke.
- Girl's Own Paper. September. 6d.
Elizabeth Tudor. Sarah Tytler.
The Recreations of Eminent Women. Rev. W. Cowan.
Wood Carving: How to Carve and What to Carve. Horace Townsend.
Cheese and Butter Schools for Girls. Fanny L. Green.
- Good Words. September. 6d.
Among the Straw-Plaiters. F. Travers.
In Genoa. John G. Dow.
Charles Grant (the Indian Philanthropist). Dr. George Smith.
The Christian Ideal of Human Life. The late Archbishop of York.
"Ye Mariners of England." Robert Walker.
Our Lady Hymn-Writers. J. Cuthbert Hadden.
- Greater Britain. August. 6d.
The West Indies for Young Englishmen. J. J. Vickers.
The Trade Aspect of Imperial Federation. James Rankin, M.P.
Tasmania. A. K. C.
A Man of the Month (Sir George Baden-Powell, M.P.).
- Great Thoughts. September. 6d.
Portraits and Biographies of President Harrison, Max Müller, H. D. Thoreau, Jean Ingelow, R. F. Horton.
A Sunday Evening with the Sailors. Countess of Meath.
- Harper's Magazine. September. 1s.
Much Ado About Nothing. (Illus.) Andrew Lang.
The New York Chamber of Commerce. (Illus.) Richard Wheatley.
Letters of Charles Dickens to Wilkie Collins. Part I. Edited by Laurence Hutton.
Glimpses of Western Architecture. Chicago. (Illus.) Montgomery Schuyler.
Germany, France, and General European Politics. M. de Blowitz.
Chinese Secret Societies. Frederick Boyle.
London Plantagenet. II. Prince and Merchant. (Illus.) Walter Besant.
Under the Minarets. (Constantinople.) (Illus.) F. Hopkinson Smith.
- Help. September. 1d.
Special Lantern Number.
The Lantern Mission—What it is, and what it hopes to be.
The National Society—Proposed Rules.
First List of Members—A Classified List of Lanternists and Lecturers.
Practical Hints for Beginners—Specially Written by Experienced Lanternists.
The Mission at Home and Abroad—Reports from California, Japan, and Melbourne.
- Homiletic Review. August. 1s.
The Inerrancy of Scripture. Prof. Llewelyn J. Evans.
The Preacher's Use of Illustration. A. J. Gordon, D.D.
Elements of Pulpit Power. Robert F. Sample.
Preaching Politics. D. W. C. Huntington, D.D.
The Hiding of God in the Book of Esther. A. T. Pierson, D.D.
- King's Own. September. 6d.
The British Weekly and Dr. Goodwin
Journalistic Heathenism. By Outis.
The Perils of Assyrian Research. (Illus.) By Rev. Samuel Kinns, Ph.D., F.R.A.S.
The Rev. Canon Liddon. With Portrait. By Veritas.
The "Arethusa." (Illus.) By Our Own Correspondent.
- Knowledge. September. 6d.
Gnats, Midges, and Mosquitoes. E. A. Butler.
The Mineralogy of Meteorites. Vaughan Cornish.
Swimming Animals. R. Lydekker.
- Leisure Hour. September. 6d.
Statesmen of Europe—Hungary: Szecsenyi, Louis Kossuth, Francis Deak, Tisza, Szapary, Szilagyi, Von Baross, Apponyi. With Portraits.
The Snuff-Box in Literature. I. W. J. Gordon.
Reminiscences of Ary Scheffer and His Time. With Portrait. A. Laby.
The Common Case of the Professional Prodigal. Mrs. Mayo.
The Handwriting of our Kings and Queens. With Facsimiles. W. J. Hardy.
The Montyon Prize: Its Heroes and Heroines. E. H. Barker.
- Lippincott's Magazine. September. 1s.
Carlotta's Intended. Complete Novel. Ruth McEury Stuart.
Real People in Fiction. William S. Walsh.
Derby Day on Clapham Common. Thomas P. Gill, M.P.
Society in Different Cities. M. E. W. Sherwood.
- Little Folks. September. 6d.
Toys and Games of the Past. (Illus.)
- Longman's Magazine. September. 6d.
The Spanish Story of the Armada. I. J. A. Froide.
Across the Kalahari Desert to the Botlet River, N'Gamiland. H. A. Bryden.
- Lucifer. August. 1s. 6d.
The Blessings of Publicity. H. P. B.
"H. P. B.'s" Departure. H. S. Olcott.
What H. P. B. did for Me. Bertram Kelightly.
The Beatrice of Dante. Katherine Hillard.
The Kabbalah. W. Wynn Westcott.
The Seven Principles of Man. Annie Besant.
- Ludgate Monthly. Sept. 3d.
Hampton Court. (Illus.) Davenport Adams.
Lord's Cricket Ground. (Illus.) Percy Cross Standing.
Mashonaland. (Illus.) F. E. Harman.
- Macmillan's Magazine. September. 1s.
Henri Pestalozzi. (The Swiss Educational Reformer.) C. J. Hamilton.
Fruit-Growing in Florida. Arthur Montefiore.
The Humours of Baccarat.
The Ladies' Wrath. (Mrs. Hale's volume of specimens from British and American Poetesses.)
A Sermon in Rouen. W. F. Stockley.
- Magazine of American History.
The Spartans of Paris. Leaves from my Autobiography. Part I. (Illus.) General Meredith Read.
The Fifteenth State—Kentucky. John L. Heaton.
The Right Rev. Samuel Provost, D.D. First Bishop of New York, 1787—1815. Rev. Isaac Smithson Hartley, D.D.
- Methodist New Connexion Magazine. September. 6d.
Memorial Sketch of Mr. A. Thomson. W. Gillis.
John Greenleaf Whittier. (Concluded.) G. Cruchley.
- Missionary Review of the World.
Miracles of Missions. Day Dawn at the Hawaiian Group. Editor-in-Chief.
A Call to New Prayer and Effort. Editor-in-Chief.
Prayer and Missionary Work. Helen L. Burnett.
Eugène Bersier and the Huguenots. Alice Bertrand.
The Gospel in Spain. Rev. J. E. Badgett Meakin.
The International Missionary Union. Report of Eighth Annual Meeting. Dr. Gracey.
- Month. September. 2s.
Cardinal Newman as a Musician. Edward Bellasis.
Among the Otchipwes (or Chippewas). Rev. E. J. Devine.
The Gothenburg Licensing System. Rev. James Halpin.
Jesuits in England before 1581. Rev. F. Goldie.
Anglo-Roman Papers. Rev. John Morris.
- Monthly Chronicle of North Country Lore and Legend. September. 6d.
Major-General Sir John G. Woodford, Derwentwater Veteran and Recluse. W. W. Tomlinson.
Sir Walter Scott in the North.
Allan Ramsay. M. S. Hardcastle.
Wordsworth and the Lake District. Charles J. Dean.
- Monthly Packet. September. 1s.
Women's Medical Work in India. Mrs. Frank Penny.
Charles Kingsley. C. M. Yonge.
Near Batticaloa, Ceylon. C. F. Gordon-Cumming.
- Murray's Magazine. September. 1s.
Calvary and the Tomb of Christ. Rev. Haskett Smith.
Amongst the Cage-dwellers. (The Afshahs of the Plain of Cilicia.) J. Theodore Bent.
Social Bah' in the Last Century. Mrs. A. Phillips.
- National Magazine of India. June.
The Re-Marriage of Low-caste Hindu Widows. By a Graduate.
Tukaram, the Saint and Poet of the Deccan. Deena Nath Ganguli.
The Eurasian Problem. Demetrios.
A Hindu Colony in Ancient Armenia. N. C. B.
A Note on the Indian Congress. Chandra Ghose.
- National Review. September.
Democracy and Irish Local Government. By "Unionist."
An Unscientific View of Vivisection. Her Excellency Lady Paget.
The New Emperor and his New Chancellor. Charles Low.
September. T. E. Kebbel.
Fifteen or Luckiest: Which Survives? G. W. Bulman.
Ernest Daudet on Coblenz. Lord Colchester.
The County Councillor: A Study. H. D. Trall.
Woman's Life in Old Italy. Richard Davey.
Free Law? A Scheme. G. Acton Lomax.
- Nature Notes. August. 2d.
The Kew Museums. J. R. Jackson.
Some London Birds. A. Holte Macpherson.
- Newbury House Magazine. September. 1s.
Church Progress in America. T. B. Preston.
The Crozier and the Crown. (Historical Sketch.) Canon Pennington.
Jacqueline Pascal. F. Bayford Harrison.
An Unclassified Class. Factory Girls. Eleanor Holmes.
Are High Churchmen Disloyal? What Our Great Divines Say.
II. The Eucharistic Sacrifice. H. Ormonde.

The New Review. September. 9d.
A Few Words about Mr. Lowell. By Bret Harte.
Women and Work. 1. By M. Jules Simon. 2. By Clementina Black.
Training: Its Bearing on Health. No. 1. By Sir Morell Mackenzie.
Russia under Alexander III. By Professor Geffcken.
Literature in the United States. By G. Parsons Lathrop.
Theodore Körner. By H. Schutz Wilson.
French Hypocrisy. By a Frenchman.
Swallows and Sparrows. By Lady Lindsay.

New South Wales Educational Gazette. July. 6d.
Preparation of Object Lessons.

Nineteenth Century. September.
Electoral Facts—No. 3. The Right Hon. W. B. Gladstone, M.P.
The British in East Africa. The Marquis of Lorne.
The Last Bit of Natural Woodland. The Hon. Auberon Herbert.
Ferdinand Lascelles. Mrs. Arthur Kennard.
Compulsory Insurance in Germany. Professor Geffcken.
The Real Status of Women in Islam. The Hon. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali.
Can Railway Passenger Fares be Lowered? W. M. Acworth.
A War Correspondent's Reminiscences. Archibald Forbes.
Guileless Australia. The Hon. John Forster.
Our Worn-out Parsons. The Rev. Dr. Jessopp.
A French Ambassador at the Court of Charles II. J. J. Jusserand.
Imperial Federation—
1. An English View. The Right Hon. Lord Brassey.
2. An American View. Andrew Carnegie.

North American Review. August. 50 cents.
New Light on the Jewish Question. Prof. Goldwin Smith.
The Value of Naval Manœuvres. The Hon. James R. Soley, Assistant Secretary of the Navy.
Vampire Literature. Anthony Comstock.
Possibilities of the Steam Yacht. Lewis Herreshoff.
The Scientific Basis of Belief. Prof. R. H. Thurston.
The State as an Immoral Teacher. Ouida.
Pensions and Patriotism. General Green B. Baum, Commissioner of Pensions.
How to Beat. Dr. William A. Hammond.
The New Political Party. The Governor of Oregon.
Trades Unions for Women. Lady Dilke.
The War: Some Unpublished History. The Hon. Charles A. Dana.
The Failure of the Jury System. Charles A. Thatcher.
A Terrible Possibility. Edward P. Jackson.
"Greater New York." Emerson Palmer.
Harnessing the Rain Cloud. Walter J. Grace.
Are we Anglo-Saxons? John C. Fleming.

Our Day. August. 25 cents.
Disloyal Secret Oaths. Joseph Cook.
Fruitful Faith as held by Apostles and Martyrs.
Christianity a Philosophy, a Kingdom, and a Fellowship.
Mrs. Hunt's Scientific Temperance Instruction: a brief history of the first decade.
Tenth National Temperance Convention. Papers on the Mischiefs of High Licence and on Church Partnership in the Liquor Traffic.

Outing. September. 6d.
Running High Jumping. (Illustr.) Malcolm W. Ford.
The Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. (Illustr.) Captain D. M. Taylor.
Yacht Clubs of the East. (Illustr.) Captain A. J. Kenesly.
Some Modern Achievements of the Camera. W. F. L. Adams.
The Home of the Red Deer in England. (Illustr.) Charles Turner.

Phrenological Magazine. September. 6d.
Captain Shaw (with Portrait).
Reminiscences of L. N. Fowler. IV.
Primitive Methodist Magazine. September. 6d.
Sketches in the Isle of Man. (Illustr.) F. N. Shimmis.
The Pentateuch: Moses or the Critics. T. H. Richards.
Welsh Worthies. John Elias. John Bailey.

Quiver. September. 6d.
A Noble Work in Germany: A Village for Epileptics. Countess of Meath.
Homes of Some Foreign Reformers. II. (Illustr.) S. W. Kershaw.

Scots Magazine. September. 6d.
The Offspring of the Moors: Haworth and the Brontës. II. James Wylie.
John Jameson, D.D. J. H. Napier.
Tunbridge Wells. By the Author of "Matthew Dale."
Allan Cunningham. Thomas Duncan.

Scottish Geographical Magazine. August. 1s. 6d.
Britannic Confederation. III. The Commerce of the Empire. G. G. Chisholm.
How Maps are Made. (Illustr.) W. B. Baikie.
Rawa River, Fiji. With map. H. H. Thiele.
Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society.

Scribner's Magazine. September. 1s.
Deck Quits on a "P. and O." Liner. (Illustr.) Ridgely Hunt.
Steamship Lines of the World. (Illustr.) Ridgely Hunt.
Our American Homes. (Illustr.) John R. Spears.
The City of the Sacred Bo-Tree—Anuradhapura. (Illustr.) James Hicallton.
Adventures among Books. Andrew Lang.
A China Hunter in New England. (Illustr.) Alice Morse Earle.
Browning's Asolo. (Illustr.) Felix Moscheles.
Present Ideals of American University Life. Josiah Royce.

Strand Magazine. August. 6d.
Henry Stacy Marks, R.A., interview. (Illustr.) Harry How.
Cats. (Illustr.) J. M. Cobban.
Celebrities at Play. (Illustr.)
Portraits of Duke of Norfolk, German Emperor and Empress, J. Asbby Sterry, Miss Fortescue, Augustus Harris, Hall Caine, and H. Labouchere.
In and about Newmarket. (Illustr.)
The Music of Birds. (Illustr.)

Sun Magazine. September. 6d.
Masters of Music. III. Brahms and Grieg. R. F. Sharp.
The Great Fire of Rome. Professor Church.
Art in the Provinces. Kinston Parkes.
The Kingdom of the Hellenes. Andrew T. Sibbald.

Sunday at Home. September. 6d.
The Adoration of Buddha's Tooth. Constance F. Gordon-Cumming.
Jews in London. Resident Jews. Mrs. Brewer.
Rev. William Tyler, D.D.: Preacher and Philanthropist. Rev. J. Braunwhite French.
Heroes of the Goodwin Sands. The Frederick Carl. Rev. T. Stanley Treanor.

Sunday Magazine. September. 6d.
Whitefield as a Preacher. Archdeacon Farrar.
The Fortunes of Hexham Abbey. Canon Talbot.
A Home Circuit. Rev. Harry Jones.
A High-born Roman Lady (Gala-Placidia, Queen of the Visi-Goths). E. W. Carter.

Sydney Quarterly. June. 1s.
Portrait of the Countess of Jersey.
Womanhood Suffrage. A Reply. Charles Mackay.

Theosophy. Countess of Jersey.
German Customs, Manners, and Characteristics. B. Schwarzbach.

Temple Bar. September. 1s.
Science and Society in the Fifties. Mrs. Andrew Cross.

St. Petersburg to Sebastopol. Walter B. Paton.

Action Home of Best for Horses. Rhoda Broughton.
Henrik Ibsen.
Chinese Cookery.

Theatre. September. 1s.
"The Drama of the Moment"—and the Moment After. An Open Letter to Mr. H. A. Kennedy. "Oliver Bluff."

Tinsley's Magazine. September.
Madame de Maintenon. (Illustr.) Rosa Niederhauser.

Meteorological Pseudo-Science. Hugh Clements.

Thomas Winter Wood, Poet. With Portrait.
Reminiscences of Pisa. (Illustr.) Charles T. J. Hiatt.

United Service Magazine. Sept. 1s.
Field-Marshal Von Moltke. General Viscount Wolseley.

Russian Central Asia. O. Biddulph.
Military Literature and the British Army. Spenser Wilkinson.

Our Mercantile Reserve. H. L. Swinburne.
1806 v. 1870: Anther View. Capt. Walter H. James.

Naval Prize in War. III. Capt. Charles Johnstone, R.N.

Military Criticism and Modern Tactics. II. By the Author of "The Campaign of Fredericksburg."

French Officers. Otto Walldau.
The Recruiting Question. VI.

Westminster Review. September.
The Italian Ministry.
Eve's Mission. (Review of Mdlle. De Raismes's Book.)

Abraham Lincoln. Theodore Stanton.
"A Cheapened Paradise." Linda Girdiner.
Side Lights of the Sweating Commission. C. H. d'E. Leppington.

The Malthusian Doctrine. A. J. Ogilvy.
Hodge. Joseph J. Davies.

Telescope and Camera. William Schooling, F.R.A.S.
"Christopher North." Rando'ph Lee.

Wilson's Photographic Magazine. August 1. 30c.

Proceedings of the Buffalo Convention and Exhibition of the Photographers' Association of America.
Report on the Progress of Photography. A. H. Elliott.

August 15.
Proceedings of the Buffalo Convention, etc.

The Illustration of Poems by Photography. Catharine W. Barnes.

Work. September. 6d.
Smoky Chimneys and How to Cure Them.
The Safety Bicycle: Its Practical Construction, etc.

Knitting, Splicing, and Working Cordage. A Practical Paper for Smiths.

Young Man. September. 3d.
On the Learning of Languages. Prof. John Stuart Blackie.

The Religious Uses of Hardship. Dr. Parker.
St. Paul K. Hooking. Character-Sketch with Portrait. J. M. Mather.

GERMAN MAGAZINES.

Alte und Neue Welt (Catholic), Einsiedeln. 50 Pf. Heft 12.
The Superstition of Philipp Melancthon. Dr. B. Kraus.
 From Lake Constance to the Adriatic. (Concluded.) (Illus.) P. Hopf.
The Holy Coat of Trèves. (Illus.) S. Bessel.
New Torpedoes and Submarine Boats. (Illus.) F. Hochländer.
Edelweiss and Alpine Race. (Illus.) T. Berthold.
The Tzar Alexander III. and his Court. Prof. S. Przewsky.
The Schwytz Celebrations. (Illus.) G. Baumberger.
Prince Frederick Augustus of Saxony and his Bride. With Portraits.
Dr. Simar, New Bishop of Paderborn. With Portrait.
Archiv für Catholisches Kirchenrecht Mayence. July-August.
School and Church in Holland, Luxemburg, and Belgium. F. Geigel.
The Law of Marriage in the Spanish Civil Statute Book of 1889. Dr. R. E. von Scherer.
Aus Allen Welttheilen. (Geographical.) Leipzig. 80 Pf. August.
A Ride through North-Eastern Tunis. (Concluded.) R. Fitzner.
Reminiscences of Travel in Bosnia. (Continued.) G. Pauli.
Life in Japan. (Illus.) Clara Nascentes-Ziese.
Catholic Missions in Polynesia. Dr. A. Vollmer.
Through Mesopotamia and Kurdistan. (Concluded.) H. Apel.
Daheim. Leipzig. 2 Marks. Quarterly. August 1.
The Historical Origin of the Swiss Confederation. A. Balzamus.
 August 8.
Karl Thielen, New Prussian Minister of Public Works. With Portrait.
Launch of the Elector Frederick William. German Ironclad. (Illus.)
 August 15.
Reval. (Illus.) W. Neumann.
 August 22.
On Beethoven Playing.
Niobe, Training Sulp. (Illus.) F. Lindner.
The late Oskar von Redwitz, Poet. With Portrait. R. König.
Deutscher Hausschatz. (Catholic.) Regensburg. 40 Pf. Heft 18.
The Nightingale. L. Scheidt.
The Swiss Confederation. E. Wyler.
Danzig. Illus.
Dr. T. Simar, New Bishop of Paderborn. With Portrait.
The Daughter of the House. A. Hahn.
Deutsche Revue. Breslau. 2 Marks. September.
Moltke and the Bombardment of Paris. Letter from Count Wilhelm Moltke, Nephew of the late Field-Marshal Count von Moltke, to the Editor of the Deutsche Revue, correcting certain statements made by Count Albrecht von Boon.
Count Albrecht von Boon. XXVIII.
The Prussian Poles.
Possibilities: Marquis of Lorne.
The Vienna School of Medicine. (Concluded.) A. Kronfeld.
Is Belief a Duty? I. J. Kaffan.
State and Politics. By a Realist. III.
Deutsche Rundschau. Berlin. 2 Marks. August.
On the Relationship of the Individual to the whole Community. From the Psychological Point of View. W. Wundt.
English Ports on the Way to India by Canada. Major O. Wachs.
Museums. O. Seekk.
August von Goethe's Autograph Album. II. Dr. W. Vulpius.
Leopold von Ranke; His Letters, Journals, and Reminiscences. Dr. J. Rottenberg.
Political Correspondence: The Triple Alliance. Origin and Development of Hohenzollern Art in Southern Italy. E. Frey.
 September.
The Arrangement of Large Museums. K. Möbius.

Wolfram von Vachenbach, Medieval Poet. A. G. Schönbach.
The Flora of Heligoland. J. Reinke.
The Present Condition of Egypt under English Law.
Frauenberuf. (Woman Question.) Weimar. 2 Marks yearly. No. 7.
Women in Literature. Dr. Clara Kühnast.
The Woman Movement in Finland, Switzerland, Austria, and America.
The Second Position of the German Frauenverein's Reform to the German Reichstag. April 18, 1891—Women and Medicine.
The Petition to the Prussian House of Deputies. The Founding of a School for the Higher Education of Girls.
Life of Women in Ancient Egypt. Dr. Scheff.
Die Gartenlaube. Leipzig. 50 Pf. Heft 9.
Burg Wolfstein. (Illus.) H. Arnold.
The Invention of the Microscope. Alice Barbi, Italian Singer. With Portrait.
Luxemburg. (Illus.) P. Clemens.
More Light in Our Houses. Dr. J. H. Baas.
The Fun Exhibition at Karlsruhe. (Illus.) F. Luthmer.
The City of London's Present to the Emperor. (Illus.)
Die Gesellschaft. Leipzig. 1 Mark. Heft 8.
Love in Contemporary German Literature. I. von Troll Borstanyi.
Sonja Kowalewski. With Portrait. G. von Vollmar.
Psycho-Philosophy. G. Ludwigs.
The Education Question. A. Winter.
Friedrich Stoltze, Frankfurt Poet and Humorist. O. Morth.
Poems by Karl M. Heide. E. Albrecht and others.
Der Gute Kamerad. (For Boys.) Stuttgart. 2 Marks quarterly.
No. 43, Rare Postage Stamps. (I. Ius.)
Nos. 44, 45, and 46, Alfred Krupp and his Factory at Essen. (Illus.)
Katholische Missionen. Freiburg (Baden). September.
Jakob Müller and the Goa Mission. (Continued.) (Illus.)
The Latest Indian Troubles in America. (Illus.) P. Jutz.
Pictures of Mexico. (Concluded.) (Illus.)
Das Kränzchen (for girls). Stuttgart. 2 Marks quarterly.
No. 43, Precious Stones.
No. 46, Garden Insects.
Kritische Revue aus Oesterreich. Vienna. August 15.
A Political Exhibition—Prague Jubilee Exhibition.
Political Crises in Hungary. J. Weiss.
The Vatican and the Great Alliances.
Der Kyffhäuser. Salzburg. 1 Mark 50 Pf. quarterly. August.
The Mozart Centenary. Dr. Kilcher.
Weather Superstitions in the Alps. L. von Hörmann.
Körner Celebration in Vienna.
Litterarischer Merkur. Weimar. 1 Mark 50 Pf. quarterly.
August 1, American Literature of 1890: a Retrospect. E. Ackermann.
August 8, Carmen Sylva: A Literary Study. W. A. Castner.
Litterarische Rundschau für das Katholische Deutschland. Freiburg (Baden). 9 Marks yearly. August.
New Works on Philosophy and Theological Speculation. II. M. Glasner.
Magazin für Litteratur. Berlin. 4 Marks quarterly. August 1.
Pierre Loti, New Academician. H. Tovote.
Wine-drinking and Tobacco-smoking. Count L. Tolstol.
 August 8.
Three Months as a Factory-Worker—Paul Göhre's Book. P. von Gilycki.
 August 15.
The House of the Vienna Society of Authors. J. Wiener.
Paul Göhre's Book. (Continued.)

Moderne Rundschau. Vienna. 50 Pf. Heft 9.
Beethoven's "Pathétique." Poem. V. von Kohlenegg.
The Communal Protection of Workmen. III. Dr. J. Joachim.
Marie Eugénie Delle Grazie and Sophie von Khuenberg. Austrian Possessions. R. Specht.
Ballooning. II. R. Schmidt.
 Heft 10.
Communal Protection of Workmen (continued).
Hermann Conrad, Lyric Poet. G. Eggestorf.
Musikallische Rundschau. Vienna. 16 Kr. August 1.
The Mozart Celebration at Salzburg. Dr. M. Dietz.
The Bayreuth Festival. E. von Hartmann.
 August 10.
Bayreuth Festival. (Continued.)
Nord und Süd. Breslau. 2 Marks. Sept.
Profrío Diaz, President of Mexico. With Portrait. Paul Lindau.
Carl Gottlieb Svarcz (concluded). E. Schwartz.
Socialism and Darwinism. R. Koesman.
The Last Napoleon and his End. G. Zornin.
The Jesuits. G. Diercks.
Artist and Man. R. Falkenberg.
Preussische Jahrbücher. Berlin. 1 Mark 50 Pf. August 1.
"Mr. Isaac" (in German). F. Marion Crawford.
The Lyric Drama in the Eighteenth Century. Dr. A. Koster.
Harnack's History of Dogmas. A. Lassar.
How the Cape became English.
Political Correspondence—The German Emperor's Visit to England and the French Squadron's Visit to Russia: Lord Salisbury and English Affairs; Russian Affairs, Cardinal Lavigne, etc.
Romanische Revue. July-August. The Reply of the High School Youth to the Bucerius Memorandum.
Schorer's Familienblatt. (Salon-Ausgabe.) Berlin. 75 Pf. Heft 14.
The Cactus Family. (Illus.) E. Jurgenson.
From Berlin to Hamburg by Water. (Illus.) A. Rubemann.
The Monument to Gustav Nachtigal, Explorer, at Stenad. (Illus.)
Monuments to Ludwig Anzengruber and Ferdinand Raimund (Austrian Poets) at Vienna. (Illus.)
Stimmen aus Maria-Laach (Catholic). Freiburg (Baden). 10 Marks 80 Pf. yearly.
Wrong Views of Social Conditions in the Encyclical of Leo XIII. A. Lehmkühl.
The Holy Coat of Trèves. S. Bessel.
Dr. Julius Kaftan's New Dogma—Review of his "Belief and Dogma," the Protestant reply to Dreyer's "Undogmatic Christianity." T. Granderath.
The British Bible Society at Work.
Ueber Land und Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mark. Heft 2.
The Swiss Celebrations. (Illus.) W. Kaden.
Goethe and Lake Zurich. J. Herzfelder.
Golden Prague. (Illus.) Dr. A. Kohut.
The Electric Light. (Illus.) Dr. T. Wimmer.
The Portuncula Festival in Hohenhausen. (Illus.) B. Rauchenegger.
The Berne Celebration. (Illus.)
Prince Frederick Augustus of Saxony and his Bride. With Portraits.
Fruit and Fruit Cures. Dr. O. Gotthilf.
Wilhelm Henzen and his Drama "St. Elizabeth." (Illus.)
Karl Thielen, New Prussian Minister of Public Works. With Portrait.
The Upper Palatinate. (Illus.) M. Schusiler.
Helene Vacaresco. With Portrait.
The Hermann von Wissmann Steamer on the Victoria Nyanza. (Illus.) S. Steinberg.
The New Scheffel Monument at Heidelberg. (Illus.)
Unsere Zeit. Leipzig. 1 Mark. Heft 3.
Russia and Finland.
Land Reform. O. Beis.

Salzburg and Neighbourhood in Winter. B. von Werner.
The Relations of the German Protectorates to the Empire. A. Fleischmann.
China at the Parting of the Ways. Introduction of Railways. G. Krenke.
 Heft 9.
A Comparative Study of the High Mountains of the World. R. E. Petermann.
Local Government in England and Wales under the Local Government Act of 1883. A. Win'er.
Jaroslav Vrchlicky. Czech Poet. E. Giron.
The Question of Responsibility—Parliamentary. Dr. J. von Hed.
A Modern Ideal. A. von der Lahn.
Veihagen und Kiasing's Neue Monatshefte. Berlin. 1 Mk. 25 Pf. August.
Old German Burial Rites and Celebrations for the Dead. Dr. O. L. Jiriczek.
J. L. E. Meislonier, with Portrait and other Illustrations. Dr. O. Doering.
The Historic Origin of the Swiss Confederation. A. Aal'amus.
The Angustenburg Family in Schleswig-Holstein. Contribution to the Family History of the Empire of Germany. (Illus.) Dr. E. Wasserzieher.
Max Grube: Actor in the Meinings Company, with Portrait and other Illustrations. J. Hart.
Marine Sketches. (Illus.) R. Werner.
The Imperial Printing Works at Berlin. O. Feising.
"Uncle Piper" (in German). (Concluded) "Tasma."
 September.
Franz von Lenbach, Portrait Painter. Illus. H. E. von Berlepsch.
Capri. Poem. Frida Schanz.
Travelling in the East. H. Brugsch.
Remembrance. Poem. F. Bottenstedt.
Panoramas. (Illus.) H. Bohrdt.
Vom Fels zum Meer. Stuttgart. 1 Mk. Heft 13.
What's Fishing in the Spitzbergen Sea. Buffalo City. (Illus.) Max. L'vitzing.
The Autograph Album at the Beginning of the Century. Z. von Reuss.
The Coldest and the Warmest Places in the World—Verchojansk in Yakutsk, Siberia, and Masowah on the Red Sea. Dr. W. J. van Beebe.
Schludersbach in South Tyrol. (Illus.) I. Wundt.
The Electric Light. L. Silberstein.
The Newest Military Guns. N. von Engelstedt.
Birds' Voices. (With Illustrations from Harper.) Dr. B. Willy.
Travelling. Dr. B. Neubaur.
Pis'Agorsk, a Watering Place in the Caucasus. F. de Mojean.
The Education of Children among the Ancients. P. Ess.
Filasken—Polish Jews engaged in the Timber Transport Trade. (Illus.) B. Wichert.
Westermann's Illustrierte Deutsche Monatshefte. Brunswick. 4 Marks quarterly. September.
Count Borromel in the Service of the Church and the State. (Illus.) A. Kleinschmidt.
Eastern Algeria. (Illus.)
The Tournament. (Illus.) A. von Heyden.
Wiener Literatur-Zeitung. Vienna.
 2 Marks yearly. August 15.
International Copyright. Bertha von Suttner.
French Literature: The Moral and the Immoral, and the Novel of the Future. R. Lothar.
Der Zeitgenosse. Dresden. 50 Pf.
 August 1.
Carl Baron Torressani, Austrian Story-Writer. A. G. von Suttner.
Three Poems, by R. Zozmann.
Lyrics, by Oskar Linke, E. Presber, and others.
 August 15.
Lyrics, by H. C. Jungst, C. Liebhag, and others.
Two Poems, by R. Zozmann.
New Fiction—New Criticism. Study of Guy de Maupassant's Essay on the Novel. Dr. G. Manz.

Das Zwanzigste Jahrhundert. Beilin.
 1 Mark. August 22.
Poems by Theodor von Grienb'rgger, and others.
Old and New Ways in Music. Dr. H. Pudor.
Bismarck in the Reichstag.
 The following periodicals and papers have also been received:—Der Bär, Dichterstimmen der Gegenwart, Der Katholik, Das Kunstgewerbe, Der Kunstwart, Lothar Megendorfer's Humouristische Blätter, Der Hausfreund, Schweizerisches Familien-Wochenblatt, Die Theologisch-Praktische Monatschrift, Deutsche Kunst und Musik-Zeitung.
 [Parts 9 and 10 of the new edition of Dr. Felix Fügeli's "Universal English-German and German-English Dictionary" (Asher and Co., Covent Garden), and Part 2 of Mürtz's Encyclopaedisches Wörterbuch of the English and German Languages (Langenscheidt, Beilin) are also to hand.

FRENCH MAGAZINES.

Bibliothèque Universelle et Revue Suisse. Lausanne. August.
Works Common to all Christendom—Temperance, Anti-Slavery, &c. I. E. Naville.
Pavia de Chavannes, &c. A. Michel.
Across the Caucasus. Notes and Impressions of a Botanist. IV. E. Levier.
The Literary Movement in Spain—During the Last Two Years. E. Rios.
Parisian, German, English, Swiss, Scientific, and Political Chroniques.
Chretien Evangelique. Lausanne. August.
The Thirst after Righteousness. Biblical Study. H. Mouron.
A History of Christian Benevolence. By Dr. G. Uhlhorn. Reviewed by C. Correson.
Gazette des Beaux Arts. August.
Gothic Art. M. L. de Fourcand.
Thomas Lawrence and the English Society of his Day. M. T. Wyzema.
Notes on Meislonier. Edmond Bonnafte.
Decorative Art in Old Paris. M. A. Champeaux.
Napoleon the First's Tapestry Furniture. M. G. rapach.
Notes on the Dijonnaise Artists of the Fifteenth Century. M. Bernard Prost.
L'Initiation. Paris. 1 fr. August.
The Idea of God Incompatible with Science. A. Franck.
The Evolution of the Idea. Papus.
Jesus of Nazareth, from the Historical, Scientific, and Social Points of View. By Paul de Régla. Reviewed by G. Montlière.
Nouvelle Revue. August 1st.
Paris on Horseback. Croqueville.
The Founder of the Brazilian Republic. M. O. d'Arango.
Dilmat's. Paul Melon.
Nowadays. J. du Tillot.
Shakespeare's Sonnets. M. S. Arnaud.
The Well-bred Women of Japan. Leon de Tinsau.
The Truth about Meadames de Sainte Amaranthe. Mme. Mary Sumner.
Michel Bakounine. M. A. Mathey.
French Moscow Exhibition.
French Yachting. M. G. De Wally.
The Neutrality of Siam. P. Lahault.
Foreign Politics. M. A. Adam.
 August 15.
Great and Small Causes of Revolution. Don Cesare Lombroso.
Paris on Horseback. Croqueville.
A Seduction of the Eighteen Century. Frederic Delacroix.
Nowadays. M. J. Du Tillot.
The Conquest of Life. Emile Gautier.
The Manufacture of Seres during the Revolution. Edward Garnier.
The Reflections of a Workman. M. Jean Fache.
A Sweetheart. Mr J. D. Ulm.
Prejudices and Conventionalities. Mdlle. Marie Anne de Bouett.
The Swiss Sex-centenary. M. E. Tissot.
Empire Furniture. H. De Chennivière.
Military Books. G. G.
Paris and Jerusalem. Aristide Astrude.
Lake Tohad. G. Du Wallay.
Foreign Politics. M. A. Adam.

Revue d'Art Dramatique. Paris. 1 fr. 30c. August 1.
Tzemma. Lyric Drama in One Act. P. Gaut'iez.
The Modern Greek Theatre. III. G. Bourdon.
Oscar de Redwitz. Poet. A. Wagnon.
 August 15.
L'Ombre (The Shadow). Drama by Paul Lindau. French by A. Wagnon.
The Theatre in Old Lille. H. Jouin.
Naïveté at the Theatre. M. Doublemain.
The Theatrical Press of New York. J. Rousseau.
Revue Bleue. Paris. 60 centimes. August 15.
Emily Brontë. T. de Wyzema.
 August 22.
Prince Bismarck and the Crown Prince before 1866.
Bayreuth Festival. René de Récy.
Revue des Deux Mondes. August 1st.
Art and Nature (3rd part). V. Cherbuliez.
A Girl's Love. III. Madame Pauline Caro.
The Spanish War. Colonel V. Roussillon.
A New Form of Education. G. Boissier.
Lens. Leon Barrasand.
The Evolution of Democracy in Switzerland. Louis Wuarin.
Studies in the Seventeenth Century (Bosuet). F. Brunetiere.
Count Alexander Hübner. G. Valbert.
 August 15.
Art and Nature (last part). V. Cherbuliez.
A Girl's Love. IV. M. de Pauline Caro.
Explosive Substances in Antiquity and the Middle Ages. Marcelin Berthelot.
Court Attresses. Victor du Bled.
Historic French Landscapes. E. Schure.
The Spanish War. Colonel V. Roussillon.
 August 29.
Revue Encyclopedique. Paris. 1 fr. August 1.
Marcel Prevost and his Novel, "La Confession d'un Amant." With Portrait. G. Pellissier.
Lithography. (Illus.) G. Hedlard.
The Talleyrand Memoirs: Their Character and their Authenticity. With Portrait. P. Bertrand.
Cou t von Moltke. With Portrait.
 August 15.
Art Exhibitions at Paris. (Illus.) L. Bourdeau.
The Division of Africa. With Map. R. d'Aunis.
The Birth of Art in Prehistoric Times. (Illus.) E. Bordaeg.
Revue Generale. Brussels. August.
The Social Problem and the Encyclopaedical. A. Cas elein.
The Independence of Belgium and Talleyrand's Mission to London in 1830. A. de Ridder.
The French Catholic Economists and the Social Question. C. Clément.
Corisca. B. Marcel.
Revue de l'Hypnotisme. Paris. 75 centimes. August.
The Theoretical and Practical Study of Suggestion. J. Stumbo.
The Relations of Hysteria to Hypnotism.
Revue des Revues. Paris. 1 fr. August.
Italy, France, and the Papacy. Signor Crispi.
Revue Scientifique. Paris. 60 centimes. August 15.
Industries of the Primitive Populations of Alsace-Lorraine. M. Bleicher.
The Mineral Waters of France. D. Bellet.
 August 22.
Aptitudes and Actions. L. Manouvrier.
 August 29.
Madagascar. M. d'Anthouard.
Université Catholique. Lyon. 11 fr. half-yearly. August 15.
The Real Inside Condition of the Anglican Church. R. paratus.
An Ecclesiastical Law Case in 1844. A. Ricard.
Father Grou and Christian Spirituality. C. Denis.
The Inquisition. G. Can't.
Inspiration: A Biblical-Historical Study. By P. Dauch. Reviewed by E. Jaquier.

ITALIAN MAGAZINES.

La Civiltà Cattolica.

August 1st.

The Origin of the Triple Alliance. (In which it is described as a "monstrosity of Christian servitude to the occult power of Marronic Judaism.")

The Encyclical of Leo XIII.

Biblical-Assyrian Chronology.

A Working-man Apostles. (Continued.)

August 15th.

Christianity Excluded from Elementary Instruction in Italy. (A bitter attack on State education.)

On the Migration of the Hittites.

The Encyclical of Leo XIII. (Continued.)

The Movements of the Stellar System.

La Nuova Antologia.

August 1.

The Factions of the Sierra Republic. C. Paoli. (An Historical Sketch of Sierra in the fourteenth century.)

The Galleries of Rome. A. Venturi.

The Damnation of Tolstol. G. Boglietti.

A Confession. L. Capuana. (A powerful but very painful novelette.)

The Grand Old Men of the British Empire. B. Castellani (Short sketches of Sir John Macdonald, Sir George Grey, and Sir Henry Parkes.)

August 10.

The Persecution of the Jews. B. Bonghi. (An excellent article on the anti-Semitic movement on the Continent.)

The National Prehistoric and Ethnographic Museum in Rome. L. Pigorini.

The Fools, Dwarfs, and Slaves of the Gonzaga Family. A. Luzio. (The first part of a collection of curious historical anecdotes.)

A Venial Sin. (Novelette.) U. Fleres.

Gaspardo Salo and the Inventor of the Violin. G. Livio.

An article by Francesco Crispi—An Ex-Diplomat. (An answer to Crispi's article in the Contemporary Review.)

La Rassegna Nazionale.

August 1.

Goethe and Hamlet. Carlo Segrè. (An article founded on the analysis of Hamlet contained in Wilhelm Meister.)

The Holy Land. Carlo del Pezzo. (Reminiscences of travel.)

From North America. Egisto Rossi. (A resumé of a recent address by Dr. Talmage on the social vices of American life.)

For Honour's Sake (continued): A story translated from the English by S. Santarelli-Fortini.

Commentators on the Creation. (Continued.) A. Stoppani.

August 16th.

The Painter Antonio Ciseri. G. E. Saltini. (A biographical sketch of a recently deceased artist.)

Anglo-American Opinions on Divorce. (Reprinted from the North American Review.)

Conclusions Drawn from Anglo-American Opinions on Divorce. C. F. Galva. (The author rejoices that so many Protestant writers should be opposed to the present marriage laws in America.)

La Scuola Positiva.

July 31.

Administration of Justice in Italy in 1890. F. S. Arabia.

Public Life in the Sicilian Communes. G. Alongi.

Provocation and Premeditation. E. Ferri.

A Critical Table of Penal and Civil Jurisprudence.

SCANDINAVIAN MAGAZINES.

Samtiden.

Bergen, published by J. Brunchorst and Gerhard Gran. Yearly subscription, 5 kr. post free.

August Strindberg. III. IV. Ola Hanson.

A Hindoo Child-wife's Story. F. Max Müller (Contemporary Review).

Christiana Theatre, 1890-91. Harald Hansen.

Bergen Theatre. Irgens Hansen.

Ur Dagens Kronika.

Stockholm, Verner Landgren. Yearly subscription, 12 kr.

The Gifts of the Fairies. Georg Nordensvan.

Musical Review. Volontaire.

Four Days. W. Garschlin.

"Les fleurs du mal." Charles Baudelaire reviewed by Sven Ulf.

An Attempt at Metrical Land-taxation. O. C.

Theatrical Reviews. Volontaire.

Foreign Reviews. Macf—n.

Literature. Th. J'n.

Tilskueren.

Copenhagen. Published by N. Neergaard.

Yearly subscription 12 kr. July.

Who is Rembrandt? Karl Madsen.

Five Poems. Herman Bang.

Lost and Rediscovered Greek Literature. Dr.

V. Pingel.

Autumn Letters from Skagen. H. C. Bering-

Lusberg.

W. Garschlin. Ola Hansson.

MILITARY PERIODICALS.

AMERICAN.

Journal of the U.S. Cavalry Association.

The Cavalry at Chancellorsville, May, 1863.

Lieut.-Col. W. L. Heermance.

The Proper Employment of Cavalry in War.

Captain A. E. Wood.

The Effect of Small-calibre Arms and Smokeless Powder upon Cavalry Operations of the Future. From the Journal des Sciences

Militaires.

Further Remarks on the Cavalry Fight on the Right Flank at Gettysburg. Lieut.-Col.

W. B. Rawle.

Firing at Breastworks of Snow with the Berdan Rifle in Russia.

Some Thoughts on Equipment. Captain M.

Harris.

Letters on Cavalry. Translation of Prince

K zu Hohenlohe's 17th Letter.

The Stoneman Raid of 1885. Brig.-General

L. S. Trowbridge.

A Confederate Cavalry Officer's Views on "American Practice and Foreign Theory."

T. T. Munford.

FRENCH.

Journal des Sciences Militaires.

The Preparatory Military Schools for Soldiers' sons.

The Campaign of Caius Marius against the Teutons. Captain Dervieux.

The Campaign of 1814: The Cavalry of the Allied Armies, from documents in the Imperial Archives of Vienna. (Continued.)

Commandant Weil.

Reasoned Instruction in the Infantry.

Lieutenant de Clésey.

The French Army in 1890. (Continued.) Commandant Belhomme.

Souvenirs of the Tonquin Campaign. XIV.

Captain Carteron.

Historical Notices on the General Staff—

Lieutenant-General, and Generals of Division. L. Hennet.

Revue Maritime et Coloniale.

The Electric Light Installation on board the

Marceau. 12 Figs.

Extracts from the English Naval Estimates

1891-2. Lieutenant Delage.

Historical Studies on the War Navy of France.

The French Navy under the Regency and under the Ministry of de Maurepas. XII.

Captain Chabaud-Arnauld.

Text of the English Naval Defence Act, 1889.

Report on the Landing of 14 cm. 3½ ton Gun.

4 Figs. Lieutenant Heilmann (describes how the gun was landed with the available means on board).

Le Spectateur Militaire.

The Territorial Army when under training in the spring of 1891. L. Brun.

History of the Cavalry—the Hussars. The Chasseurs d'Afrique and the Spahis. (Continued.) Captain H. Choppin.

The Arms and Tactics of the Greeks before

Troy. VI. VII. J. de la Chauvelay.

Annuaire of the French Army, 1819-1890. III.

C. Boissonnet.

The Sheltered Offensive. L. Brun.

Cavalry Uniforms. Captain H. Choppin.

The Campaign in the Argonne, 1792.

Revue Militaire de l'Etranger.

Military Trains and Convoys in the German

Army.

The Mobilisation of the Russian Reserves.

The Fortifications of Copenhagen. (With Map.)

Gratuities to German Non-Commissioned Officers.

La Marine Française.

The French Naval Manœuvres in the Mediteranean.

The Philosophy of the Naval Manœuvres.

Opinions of the French Press and of Admiral

Béville on M. Brissot's Report on the French Navy to the Budget Committee.

On the Coast of Guinea.

Dunkirk, Brest, and Cotentin. Rear-Admiral

Béville.

GERMAN.

Internationale Revue über die gesamten

Armeen und Flotten.

Germany: Considerations on the Hall of Fame at the Arsenal in Berlin.

Historical Details of the Ancient Fortress of Torgau-on-the-Elbe. Chaplain E. Schild.

The Organisation, Distribution, and Employment of Field Artillery belonging to the Army Corps. III. Lieut.-Col. von Nieustaedt.

Italy: Italian Correspondence, by Pellegrino.

England: The English Field Artillery.

Russia: The Russian Army Manœuvres for the Current Year.

Switzerland: The New Drill Regulations for the Swiss Infantry.

France: Special Tactics for Artillery on the Field of Battle.

Servia: The New Organisation of the Servian

Army.

Mittheilungen aus dem Gebiete des

Seewesens.

The Transmission of Electric Power. 17 Figs.

M. Burstin.

The Ships of Christopher Columbus. (Six illus.)

The 52 cm. Canet Gun. 2 Figs.

The Recler Revolution Indicator. 3 Figs.

The Experiments on Board the United States'

Dynamite Cruiser, Vesuvius.

The Latest Trials of the Submarine Boat,

Comet.

Jahrbücher für die Deutsche Armee und

Marine.

Cavalry in Modern Warfare.

Tactical Retrospects on the Fights of the Franco-German War, especially in regard to the Employment of Artillery. (Continued.)

The Training of Reserve Officers of the Austro-

Hungarian Army in connection with the Military Academy at Vienna-Neustadt.

Captain le Juge.

Military Strollings in the Region of the Great

Russian Manœuvres of 1890.

Aquatic Sports and their Influence on the manly Development of the Young. Vice-

Admiral Von Henk.

Remarks on some Gunnery Experiments carried out in China with a 24 cm. Krupp gun.

ITALIAN.

Rivista Marittima.

The German Mercantile Marine. VII. Salvatoro Rainero.

The Electric Light on Board Italian Ships of War. (Continued.) 5 Plates. Lieut. A.

Pouchain.

Naval Colleges in Italy and Abroad. D.

Parenti.

Naval Architecture. 7 Plates. Giuseppe

Rota.

The Naval Duel. Lieutenant F. Moro-Lin.

Naval Battle between the Turks and Venetians, and the Capture of Scio, Feb.

1895. F. Cerasoli.

Rivista di Artiglieria e Genio. (Special Number.)

Experiments on the Resistance against Crushing of Stone and Cement Works. 5 Figs.

pp. 174.

SPANISH.

Judicial Inquiries into Wrecks and Casualties.

Captain Don V. M. Concas Pa'au.

Studies on Military Anthropology. Dr. F.

Garcia Diaz.

New Method for Rectifying the Variations of the Compass. 2 Figs. Lieut. B.

Estrada.

Central Pivot Mounting for 14 cm. Montoria

Gun, constructed at le Creusot for the Spanish Cruisers. 2 Plates.

ART, MUSIC, AND POETRY.

ART.

- L'Art. Paris. 2s. August 1.
Religious Tendencies of Contemporary Art. (Illus.) H. Mazel.
 August 15.
The French Salons of 1891. (Illus.) L. Bénédict.
Art Amateur. 1s. 6d. August.
 Frederick Walker. (Illus.)
The Draped Model—Chat with Walter Satterlee and J. G. Brown on Models and Costumes.
 St. Louis School of Fine Arts. (Illus.) E. Knauff.
Sketching from Nature. (Illus.) A. B. Ives.
Pen Drawing for Photo-Engraving—First Principles Reconsidered. E. Knauff.
The Painting of Poultry—Talk with A. F. Tait. (Illus.) A. B. Ives.
China Painting—White Enamel. (Illus.) M. B. Alling.
Tapestry Painting. III. (Illus.) Emma Haywood.
Art Journal. September. 1s.
 Holyrood. Etching by E. Slocombe.
 Sculpture at the Royal Academy. (Illus.) The Museums of Industrial Art in Italy. (Illus.) Prof. Melani.
The Pilgrims Way. V.—Gatton to Oxford. (Illus.) Mrs. H. M. Ady.
 Thomas Armstrong, Chief of the South Kensington Museum. With Portrait. J. F. Boyes.
 Old Art in the City Churches. (Illus.) F. Miller.
 The Clyde and the Western Highlands. (Illus.) IV. R. Walker.
 Pictorial as Compared with Decorative Art. W. W. Fenn.
Century. September.
 Italian Old Masters: Francis, Ghirlandajo. (Illus.) W. J. Stillman.
Chautauquan. September.
 The Social Side of Artist Life. (Illus.) C. M. Fairbanks.
 What English Women are Doing in Art. Elizabeth Roberts.
Cosmopolitan. September.
 France's Greatest Military Artist—Edouard Détaillé. (Illus.) Lady Dilke.
Magazine of Art. September. 1s.
 The Shepherd's Grave. Engraving after Sir Edwin Landseer.
 The Two French Salons. (Illus.) Walter Armstrong.
 The Dragon of Mythology, Legend, and Art. (Illus.) II. John Leyland.
 A Wall of Renaissance Sculpture. (The Tomb of Barbara Ordelaiff at Forli.) (Illus.) Stephen Thompson.
 "The Ladies Waldegrave." Engraving after Sir Joshua Reynolds.
 David Cox and Peter de Wint. (Illus.) James Orrock.
 The Romance of Art—The Post-Wife of the Sculptor Bartolommeo Ammannati, Leader Scott.
 Animal Painters Past and Present. (Illus.) H. Landseer Grundy.
Newbery House. September.
 Childeha in Art. III. (Illus.) T. Child.
Portfolio. September. 2s. 6d.
 Portrait of a Woman—Rembrandt's Picture in the National Gallery.
 Portrait and Landscape Painting in France. (Illus.) P. G. Hamerton.
 The Palaces of Naples. (Illus.) Edith Marget.
 "Thirsty Comrades." Etching after Birket Foster.
Strand Magazine. August.
 Henry Stacy Marks Interviewed. (Illus.)
Sun. September.
 Art in the Provinces. K. Parkes.

MUSIC.

- Atalanta. September.
 The Meistersingers of Nuremberg. (Illus.)
Church Musician.
 Ecclesiastical Counterpoint. F. J. Karn.
 On Amens.
 Jottings on Continental Church Music. G. B. Dobson.
 Parisian Organists: their Lives and Works. T. Westlake-Morgan.
Contemporary Review. September.
 Johann Sebastian Bach. W. F. Apthorp.
Month. September.
 Cardinal Newman as a Musician. Edward Bellas.
Magazine of Music.
 Sarasate's First Public Appearance.
 School Music in Australia. S. McBurney.
 Hints to Trainers of Village Chorus.
 John More Smleton (Scottish Composer).
 Portrait and Biography.
 The Future of the Drama and the Drama of the Future. J. F. Runciman.
 Music—"Liedchen," Haydn's "Ox Minnet," and "Lullaby," by John More Smleton.
Musical Herald.
 Mr. Edward Mills, Mus. Bac. Biography and Portrait.
 Folk-Songs of Arcady.
 Teaching Music to the Blind. S. McBurney.
 School Music in Germany and Switzerland. S. McBurney.
Musical Opinion.
 Form as seen in Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonatas. J. W. G. Hathaway.
 Making of Sound in Organ and Orchestra. Hermann Smith.
 School Music, The Church, and Tonic Sol-fa. S. McBurney.
 A Day with Liszt. J. F. Rowbotham.
Musical Times.
 The Great Composers—Wagner. Joseph Bennett.
 Jumbomania in Music. (The Worship of Bigness.)
 First Performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah." F. G. Edwards.
 Music in the Alps.
 Music—Four-part Song, "The Brook." Arnold D. Culey.
Musical Record.
 Liszt's "Consolations." Herr Niecks.
 Portrait Sketches from the Life—Gluck.
 Schumann in Leipzig, 1837.
 The Pianoforte Teacher. Herr Pauer.
Nonconformist Musical Journal.
 Music at Westminster Chapel.
 "St. Magnus" and its Composer. Jeremiah Clark. F. G. Edwards.
 Liturgical Tendencies and the Service of the Reformation. J. B. Remensnyder, D.D.
 "The Strad." (Journal for stringed instrument players.)
 The Italian Schools of Violin-Making. R. H. Legge.
 How to Make a Violin. John Broadhouse.
 Mr. Henry Farmer (Violinist and Composer).
Sun. August.
 Richard Wagner. R. F. Sharp.
Sun. September.
 Brahms and Grieg. Living Composers. R. F. Sharp.
PRICE AND PLACE OF PUBLICATION OF MUSICAL MAGAZINES.
 Church Musician (15th of the month). 2d. 11, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.
 Magazine of Music. 6d. St. Martin's House, Ludgate Hill, E.C.
 Musical Age. 2d. 88, Chancery Lane, W.C.
 Musical Herald. 2d. 8, Warwick Lane, E.C.
 Musical Opinion. 2d. 150, Holborn Bars, E.C.
 Musical Record. 2d. 86, Newgate Street, E.C.
 Musical Times. 4d. 1, Berners Street, W.
 Nonconformist Musical Journal. 2d. 44, Fleet Street, E.C.
 Orchestral Times and Bandsman. 3d. 39, Queen Square, W.C.
 The Strad. 2d. 185, Fleet Street, E.C.

POETRY.

- Argosy. September.
 The Three Ages. Marie Constantine. English by G. Cotterell.
Atalanta. September.
 A Song of Nereids. (Illus.). Roden Noel.
Atlantic Monthly. September.
 Song for Setting. T. W. Parsons.
 Forecasting. P. B. Marston.
Belford's Magazine. August.
 Frank, the Fireman. T. Frost.
Cape Illustrated Magazine. July.
 Dreams. H. Hanson.
 Now and Then. Frances Nicholson.
 The Young Captive, by André Chénier. English by J. Gill.
Century. September.
 The Wood Nymph's Mirror. C. H. Lüders.
 The Poems of T. B. Aldrich. F. D. Sherman.
 De Morte Beata. T. C. Williams.
Chautauquan. September.
 Dawn in the City. H. T. Sudduth.
 Secrets. W. H. A. Moore.
 September. O. F. Emerson.
Cosmopolitan. September.
 I am a King. Mrs. C. B. Foote.
 Ill Matched. Susan Hartley Snett.
English Illustrated. September.
 A Song of the Year. Lewis Morris.
Girl's Own Paper. September.
 A Type of Maidenhood. George Weatherby.
 Life. Rev. W. Cowan.
 A Rhyme of Songs. Augusta Hancock.
Good Words. September.
 A Plaything. Ellen T. Fowler.
Lippincott. September.
 Life. Douglas Sladen.
 Where Love Hath Been. Susanna Massey.
 Thou or I? J. G. Bettany.
 Love's Calendar. Chas. Morris.
 No Tears for Dead Love. P. B. Marston.
 To a Cloud. W. R. Sims.
Longman. September.
 Flat. A. Battye.
Ludgate Monthly. Sept.
 The First Time of Aaking. F. E. Weatherly.
Murray's Magazine. September.
 Love is Enough. M. C. E.
 This Life. D. M. Bruce.
Newbery House. September.
 Waiting. Sophia Caulfield.
New England Magazine. August.
 A Seaside Holiday. Mrs. E. C. Bolles.
 The Little Poet. A. P. Kimball.
 Our Neighbour. Mrs. J. T. Bayne.
Quiver. September.
 The Embroidery Frame. (Illus.) J. R. Eastwood.
Scots Magazine. September.
 Sonnet. Miss A. Werner.
Scribner's Magazine. September.
 For Remembrance. D. C. Scott.
Sun. August.
 A Woodland Reverie. Robina F. Hardy.
 Priam and Achilles. J. H. D.
Sunday Magazine. September.
 To the Night. Rev. B. Waugh.
 Graven. Clara Thwaites.
 Child's Holiday Hymn. B. M. S.
 The Sleeping City. C. T. Caribrooke.
Sydney Quarterly. June.
 Songs of Solitude. J. Le Gay Brereton.
Temple Bar. September.
 Man. F. F. Sheriff.
Tinsley. September.
 Edson. Samuel Barber.
 Et Ego Etiam in Arcadia Vixi. Charles Young.
 Two Sonnets. Ellen T. Fowler.
 When I am as Old as Mother. W. Lazarus Barlow.
 The Vale of Gramere.

INDEX.

Abbreviations of Magazine Titles used in this Index.

A.C.Q. American Catholic Quarterly Review	E.R. Edinburgh Review	Law Q. Law Quarterly Review	Photo. R. Photographic Reporter
A.R. Andover Review	Ed. R. Educational Review	L.H. Leisure Hour	Phren. J. Phrenological Journal
Ant. Antiquary	E.H. English Historical Review	Lipp. Lippincott's Monthly	Phren. M. Phrenological Magazine
A. Arena	E.L. English Illustrated Magazine	L. Q. London Quarterly	Pion. Pioneer
Arg. Argosy	Esq. Esquiline	Long. Longman's Magazine	P.L. Poet Lore
Art J. Art Journal	Ex. Expositor	Lud. M. Ludgate Monthly	P. Portfolio
As. Asclepiad	F.R. Fortnightly Review	Ly. Lyceum	P.R.R. Presbyterian and Reformed Review
A.Q. Asiatic Quarterly	G.M. Gentleman's Magazine	Mac. Macmillan's Magazine	P.M.Q. Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review
Ata. Atalanta	G.O.P. Girl's Own Paper	M.A.H. Magazine of American History	P.R.G.S. Proceedings of the Royal Geographical Society
A.M. Atlantic Monthly	G.W. Good Words	M. Art. Magazine of Art	Psy. R. Proceedings of the Society for Psychical Research
Au. Author	G.B. Greater Britain	Man. Q. Manchester Quarterly	Q. J. Econ. Quarterly Journal of Economics
Bank. Bankers' Magazine	G.T. Great Thoughts	M.E. Merry England	Q.R. Quarterly Review
Bel. M. Bedford's Magazine	Harp. Harper's Magazine	Mind. Mind	Q. Quiver
Black. Blackwood's Magazine	Help. Help.	Mis. R. Missionary Review of the World	Scots. Scots Magazine
Bk-wm. Bookworm	H-M. Home-Maker	Mon. Monist	Scot. G. M. Scottish Geographical Magazine
Cal. R. Calcutta Review	Hom. R. Homiletic Review	Month. Month	Scot. R. Scottish Review
C.F.M. Cassell's Family Magazine	Ig. Igdrasil	M.C. Monthly Chronicle of North Country Lore	Scrib. Scribner's Magazine
C.S.J. Cassell's Saturday Journal	In. M. Indian Magazine and Review	M. P. Monthly Packet	Shake. Shakespeariana
C.W. Catholic World	I.J.E. International Journal of Ethics	Mur. Murray's Magazine	S. Strand
C.M. Century Magazine	Ir. E.R. Irish Ecclesiastical Record	Nat. R. National Review	Sun. H. Sunday at Home
C.J. Chambers' Journal	Ir. M. Irish Monthly	N.N. Nature Notes	Sun. M. Sunday Magazine
Chaut. Chautauquan	Jew. Q. Jewish Quarterly	N.H. Newbery House Magazine	S.T. Sword and Trowel
Ch. Mis. I. Church Missionary Intelligence and Record	J. Ed. Journal of Education	N.E.M. New England Magazine	Syd. Q. Sydney Quarterly
Ch. M. Church Monthly	J. Micro. Journal of Microscopy and Natural Science	New R. New Review	T.B. Temple Bar
Ch. R. Church Quarterly	J.R.C.I. Journal of the Royal Colonial Institute	N.C. Nineteenth Century	Tin. Tinley's Magazine
Ch. R. Church Review	Jur. R. Juridical Review	N.A.R. North American Review	U.S.M. United Service Magazine
Cong. R. Congregational Review	K.O. King's Own Knowledge	O.D. Our Day	W.R. Westminster Review
C.R. Contemporary Review	Lad. Ladder	O. Outing	Y.E. Young England
C. Cornhill	Law M. Law Magazine & Review	Pac. Q. Pacific Quarterly	Y.M. Young Man
Cos. Cosmopolitan		P.E.F. Palestine Exploration Fund
Crit. R. Critical Review		P.R. Parents' Review
Down. R. Downside Review		Photo. Q. Photographic Quarterly
D.R. Dublin Review
Econ. J. Economic Journal
Econ. R. Economic Review

Ability, Distribution of, in the United States, by H. O. Lodge, C.M. Sept
Advertising in China, C. Sept

Africa:

Maahonaland, F. E. Harman on, Lud. M. Sept
Diamond-digging in South Africa, by L'ent.-Col. H. Knollys, Black, Sept
Across the Kalahari Desert to the Bot'etli River N'Gamila, by H. A. Bryden, Long, Sept
The British in East Africa, by the Marquis of Lorne, N.C. Sept
Alchemy in England, by R. Steele, Ant. Sept
Aldrich, T. B., Poems of, F. D. Sherman on, C.M. Sept
American Homes, Old, J. R. Spears on, Scrib. Sept
Analogy, Study of, by J. Burroughs, A.M. Sept
Anipodeans, D. C. Murray on, C.R. Sept
Anuradhapura and the Sacred B-Trees, by J. Hicaton, Scrib. Sept
Arcthuza, Training Ship, K.O. Sept
Armada: The Spanish Story, by J. A. Froude, Long, Sept
Ashby-Sterry, J., Portraits of, Str. Aug
Assyrian Research, Perils of, Rev. S. Kinns on, K.O. Sept
Astronomy:
Modern Astronomy, by Sir R. S. Ball, C.R. Sept
Telescope and Camera, by W. Schooling, W.R. Sept
The Mineralogy of Meteorites, by V. Cornish, K. Sept
Athletics: Their Use and Abuse, by C. Bissell, Bel. M. Aug
Swiss Athletic Sports, by J. A. Symonds, F.R. Sept
Aubrey, John, of Wilts, Rev. B. G. Johns on, G.M. Sept
Australia:
The Antipodeans, by D. C. Murray, C.R. Sept
Social Life, by F. Adams, F.R. Sept
Guileless Australia, by Hon. J. Fortescue, N.C. Sept

Bacarat, Humours of, Mac, Sept
Bach, Johann Sebastian, W. F. Apthorp on, C.R. Sept
Balkan Confederation, Jas. Bouchier on, F.R. Sept
Barrés, Maurice, E. Delille on, F.R. Sept
Bath, Social, in the Last Century, by Mrs. A. Phillips, Mur. Sept
Beaconsfield, Lord, Was He the Sun? A Lecture in the Year 3,000, G.M. Sept
Beatrice of Dante, by Katherine Hillard, Luc, Aug
Belief, Scientific Basis of, by Prof. R. H. Thurston, N.A.R. Aug
Bennington and Its Battle, by E. A. Start, N.E.M. Aug
Bermuda, Gen. Mitchell on, Lud. M. Sept
Bent, Mrs. Annie, on the Seven Principles of Man, Luc, Aug
Birds:
Some London Birds, by A. H. Macpherson, N.N. Aug
The Music of Birds, Str. Aug
Swallows and Sparrows, by Lady Lindsay, New R. Sept
Blackie, Prof. J. S., on the Learning of Languages, Y.M. Sept
B'ava'sky, Madame, Col. Olcott and others on, Luc, Aug
On the Blessings of Publicity, Luc, Aug
Blind:
With the Blind in Switzerland, C.J. Sept
B-delachwingh, Pastor von, and his Institutions in Germany, Countess of Meath on, Q. Sept
Bo-Trees, and Anuradhapura, J. Hicaton on, Scrib. Sept
Bretons at Home, by C. W. Wood, Arg. Sept
Briggs, Prof.,
On Authority in Religion, by Rev. H. H. Wyman, C.W. Aug
Brontë Family, Dr. A. H. Japp on, S. Aug
Browning's Asolo, by F. Moschles, Scrib. Sept
Buddha's Tooth, Adoration of, Miss C. F. Gordon-Cumming on, Sun. H. Sept
Burgoyne's Army, by N. H. Chamberlain, N.E.M. Aug

Cage-Dwellers, J. T. Benton, Mur. Sept
Caine, Hall, Portraits of, Str. Aug
California: To California in 1849 through Mexico, by A. C. Ferris, C.M. September
Calvary and the Tomb of Christ, by Rev. H. Smith, Mur. Sept
Camp Morton Prisoners, Treatment of, by W. R. Howland and J. A. Wyeth, C.M. Sept
Carl. P., Hero of the Goodwin Sands, Rev. T. S. Treanor on, Sun. H. Sept
Cathedrals, Nationalisation of, H. W. Manningham on, C.R. Sept
Cate, J. MacLaren Cobban on, Str. Aug
Cats in Literature and Art, by W. H. Davenport Adams, S. Aug
Celebrities at Play, Str. Aug
Cheese and Butter Schools for Girls, by Fanny L. Green, G.O.P. Sept
Chicago Architecture, M. Schuyler on, Harp. Sept
Chill: The Chilian Struggle for Liberty, by R. L. Trumull, F. Aug
China Hunting in New England, by Alice M. Earle, Scrib. Sept
Chinese Cookery, T. B. Sept
Chinese Secret Societies, F. Boyle on, Harp. Sept
Chiswick, Past and Present, by C. J. Hamilton, E.I. Sept
Christian Ideal of Human Life, Archbishop McLagan on, G.W. Sept
Christianity—a Philosophy, a Kingdom, and a Fellowship, by Jos. Cook, O.D. Aug
Church of England: Are High Churchmen Disloyal? by H. Ormoude, N.H. Sept
Church Progress in America, T. B. Preston on, N.H. Sept
City Government in the United States, by S. Low, C.M. Sept
Clubs: The Ladies' New York Club, by Julia H. Percy, Cos. Sept
Colonies and Imperial Federation: Many Lands—One People, G.B. July
Imperial Federation, by Lord Brassey and A. Carnegie, N.C. Sept
The Trade Aspect of Imperial Federation, by J. Rankin, G.B. Aug
The Britannic Confederation, by G. G. Chisholm, Scot. G.M. Aug

- Comings, Comte de, French Ambassador at the Court of Charles II., by J. J. Jusserand, N C, Sept
- Compulsory Insurance in Germany, Prof. Geffken on, N C, Sept
- Concord, An American Mecca, by Mary J. Safford, Bel M, Aug
- Copenhagen, Battle of, C Sept
- County Councillors: a Study, by H. D. Traill, Nat R, Sept
- Cousins German, C, Sept
- Criticism:
- A Neglected Limitation of Criticism, by Rev. A. Smith, A R, Aug
- Crosier and Crown, by Canon Pennington, N H, Sept
- Dante's Beatrice, by Katherine Hillard, Luc, Aug
- Daudet, Ernest, on Coblenz, by Lord Colchester, Nat R, Sept
- Detaille, E., France's Greatest Military Artist, by Lady Dilke, Cos, Sept
- Dickens's Letters to Wilkie Collins, by L. Hutton, Harp, Sept
- Early Settlers in English America, Black, Sept
- Education:
- Individuality in Education, by Prof. Mary L. Dickinson, A, Aug
- Edwards, Amelia B., on Her Home Life, A, Aug
- Electoral Facts, W. E. Gladstone on, N C, Sept
- Electric Railways:
- The Greathead Underground Railway, by S. Sterne, F, Aug
- Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, R. Hunter on, E I, Sept
- Emigration and Immigration:
- Immigration and Degradation, by F. A. Walker, F, Aug
  - The Russo-Jewish Immigrant, by Rev. S. Singer, E I, Sept
- English America: Early Settlers, Black, Sept
- Eton Montem: A Memory of the Past, Black, Sept
- Eve's Mission, W R, Sept
- Factory Girls: An Unclassified Class, by Eleanor Holmes, N H, Sept
- Farrar, Archdeacon, on Whitfield as a Preacher, Sun M, Sept
- Fiction: Sray Children in Fiction, by E. C. Sellar, Mur, Sept
- Finance:
- Fittest or Luckiest, by G. W. Bulman, Nat R, Sept
- Forbes, Archibald, War Correspondent, Reminiscences of, N C, Sept
- Fortescue, Miss, Portraits of, S T R, Aug
- Forth and Clyde Ship Canal, C F M, Sept
- Fowler, L. N., Reminiscences of, Phren M, Sept
- France:
- In the Sunny South, by C. F. Wills, Ata, Sept
- Free Law? a Scheme, by G. A. Lomax, Nat R, Sept
- French Hypocrisy, New R, Sept
- Fruit Culture in California, L. A. Sheldon on, F, Aug
- Gnos, J. G. Dow on, G W, Sept
- Germany:
- The New Emperor and his Chancellor, by O. Lowe, Nat R, Sept
  - The Unity of Germany, by Mdme. Blazé de Bary, A, August
  - Germany, France, and General European Politics, by M. de Blowitz, Harp, Sept
  - German Customs, Manners, and Characteristics, Syd Q, June
  - Compulsory Insurance, by Prof. Geffken, N C, Sept
  - Germany, Emperor and Empress of, Portraits of, Str, Aug
- Gladstone, W. E.
- Dr. J. L. M. Curry on, M A H, Aug
  - On Electoral Facts, N C, Sept
- Gnat, Midges, and Mosquitoes, E. A. Butler on, K, Sept
- Goethe:
- What Value has Goethe's Thought of God for Us? by Miss J. H. Gulliver, A R, Aug
- Gold Reports, Causes of, G. G. Williams on, F, Aug
- Goodwin, Dr., The British Weekly and, K O, Sept
- Gordon, Gen., on Tabernacle and Man, Bel M, Aug
- Gothenburg Licensing System, Rev. J. Halpin on, M, Sept
- Grant, Coas., Dr. Geo. Smith on, G W, Sept
- Greece:
- The Kingdom of the Hellenes, by A. T. Sibbald, S, Sept
- Grey, Sir Geo., G B, July
- Hamlin, Hannibal, Birthplace of, O. E. Watermann on, N E M, Aug
- Hampton Court, Davenport Adams on, Lud M, Sept
- Handwriting of Our Kings and Queen, by W. J. Hardy, L H, Sept
- Harris, Sir A., Portraits of, Str, Aug
- Harvard Commencement Essays, by H. R. Gedhill and others, N E M, Aug
- Hawallan, J. N. Ingram on, Chaut, Sept
- Hecker, Father, Life of, Rev. W. Elliott on, C W, Aug
- Hexham Abbey, Canon Talbot on, Sun M, Sept
- Hocking, Silas K. J. M. Mather on, Y M, Sept
- Hodge, by J. J. Davies, W R, Sept
- Homes of Foreign Reformers, by S. W. Kershaw, Q, Sept
- Horse, The Action Home of Rest, T B, Sept
- Hospitals:
- Emanuel Hospital, Westminster, by R. Hunter, E I, Sept
- Housage, Arab, Portrait of, M A H, Aug
- Hungarian Statesmen, L H, Sept
- Hymn-Writers (Ladies), J. C. Hadden on, G W, Sept
- Ibsen, Henrik, T B, Sept
- Poems of, F. H. Wicksteed on, C R, S, pt
- Immigration, see under Emigration
- Imperial Federation, see under Colonies
- India:
- A Month in Southern India, by Sir M. E. Grant Duff, C R, Sept
  - Women's Medical Work, by Mrs. F. Penny, M F, Sept
- Ireland: Democracy and Irish Local Government, Nat R, Sept
- Italy: The Ministry, W R, Sept
- Jersey, Countess of, Portrait of, Syd Q, June
- On Theosophy, Syd Q, June
- Jews, see also under Russia
- Jews in London, Mrs. Brewer on, Sun H, Sept
  - The Russo-Jewish Immigrant, by Rev. S. Singer, E I, Sept
  - New Light on the Jewish Question, by Prof. Goldwin Smith, N A R, Aug
- Journalism:
- Country Newspapers, E. W. Howe on, C M, Sept
  - Journalistic Heathenism, K O, Sept
  - The Evolution of the Society Journal, by Mrs. E. A. Pryor, Cos, Sept
- Kentucky, the Fifteenth State, by J. L. Heaton, M A H, Sept
- Kew Museums, J. R. Jackson on, N N, Aug
- Kingley, Charles, C. M. Yonge on, M P, Sept
- Könlsmark, Count, Romance of, by M. E. Sawell, Cos, Sept
- Körner, Theodore, H. Schütz Wilson on, New R, Sept
- Labouchere, H., Portraits of, Str, Aug
- Labour:
- Courts of Conciliation, N. Grevstad on, A M, Sept
  - The Labour Encyclical, A R, Aug
  - Side Lights of the Sweating Commission, W R, Sept
  - Ladies' Wreath: Book of Poems, edited by Mrs. S. J. Hall, Mac, Sept
- Lan, Andrew, and His Adventures among Books, Scrib, Sept
- Lassalle, Ferdinand, Mrs. A. Kennard on, N C, Sept
- Leo XIII, Pope:
- The Pope and the Proletariat, by Rev. E. B. Brady, C W, Aug
- Lewis, Governor Merriwether, M A H, Aug
- Lias and Tria Cliffs of the Severn, by C. Parkinson, G M, Sept
- Liddon, Canon, K O, Sept
- Lincoln, Abraham, W R, Sept
- Literature in the Market Place, by G. E. Woodberry, F, Aug
- Literature in the United States, by G. P. Lathrop, New R, Sept
- London: Prince and Merchant, by W. Besant, Harp, Sept
- London Streets, E. K. Pearson on, G M, Sept
- Lords, by P. C. Standing, Lud M, Sept
- Lowell, James Russell, Black, Sept, Bret Harte on, New R, Sept
- Lowell in His Poetry, by Sidney Low, F R, Sept
- Macbeth as the Celtic Type, Black, Sept
- Macdonald, Sir John A., J. McCarroll on, Bel M, Aug
- Masterlinck, Maurice, A Pessimist Playwright, by Wm. Archer, F R, Sept
- Magic Lantern: Series of Articles on, Help, Sept
- Matenon, Malame de, R. Niederhauser on, Tin, Sept
- Maison Chateau in the Market, by Mary B. Ford, Cos, Sept
- Malthusian Doctrine, A. J. Ogilvy on, W R, Sept
- Maps:
- How they are Made, C S J, Sept
  - W. B. Blakie on, Scot G M, Aug
- Marblehead and J. G. Whittier (A Poet's Town), Margaret B. Wright on, Chaut, 8 pt
- Marks, Henry Stacy, interviewed, Str, Aug
- Masonaland, F. E. Harman on, Lud M, Sept
- Meath, Countess of, on Pastor von Bodelschwingh's Institutions in Germany, Q, Sept
- Mechanical Flight, Possibility of, S. P. Langley on, C M, S, pt
- Meydoun Pyramid, Rev. H. D. Rawnsley on, G M, Sept
- Missions:
- The Claims of North India, Ch Mis I, Sept
  - Medical Mission Work in the Sudan, by Dr. C. F. Harford Battersby, Ch Mis I, Sept
  - The Miracles of Missions, Mis R, Aug
  - Moltke, Count von, Lord Wolseley on, U S M, S, pt
- National Health Society, Mary R. Pridham on, M P, Sept
- Nationalism:
- The Tyranny of Nationalism, by Rev. M. J. Savage, A, Aug
- Navies:
- The Value of Naval Manœuvres, by J. R. Soley, N A R, Aug
  - "Ye Mariners of England," by R. Walker, G W, Sept
  - How the Confederacy Changed Naval Warfare, by Geo. D. H. Maury, Bel M, Aug
- New Forest, the Last Bit of Natural Woodland, by Hon. A. Herbert, N C, Sept
- Newman, Cardinal, as a Musician, by E. Bellasis, M, Sept
- Newmarket, Str, Aug
- New York Chamber of Commerce, R. Wheatley on, Harp, Sept
- New York City: A Decade of Retrogression, by Florence K. Wischniewetzky, A, Aug
- Norfolk, Duke of, Portraits of, Str, Aug
- "North Christopher," by R. Lee, W R, Sept
- North Pole: A New Route, by Dr. F. Nansen, F, Aug
- Will Dr. Nansen succeed? by General A. W. Greeley, F, Aug
- Noumea, Calcutia, French Convict Colony, C J, Sept
- Olliphant, Laurence, Julia Wedgwood on, C R, Sept
- A Modern Mystic, A M, Sept
- Oriental Life: Under the Minarets, by F. H. Smith, Harp, Sept
- Osborne: The Queen's Private Gardens, by L. R. Wheeler, E I, Sept
- Ottinwies or Chippeways, Rev. E. J. Davine on, M, Sept
- Papuan, H. O. Forbes and H. Nisbet on, F R, Sept
- Paerel, Jacqueline, F. B. Harrison on, N H, Sept
- Pauperism and the Poor Law: Prof. Tucker on, A R, Aug
- Pensions and Patriotism, by Gen. G. B. Baum, N A R, Aug
- Petalozzi, Henri, C. J. Hamilton on, Mac, Sept

- Photography, see also Contents of Wilson's Photographic Magazine
Modern Achievements of the Camera, by W. J. L. Adams, O. Sept
Phthisis. Origin, Propagation, and Prevention of, Prof. Tyndall on, F. R. Sept
Poetry and Philosophy, by Prof. Dewey, A. R. Aug
Pompeii Revisited, by Prof. Halbherr, Ant. Sept
Powell, Sir George Baden, G. B. Aug
Preacher's Use of Illustration, by Dr. A. J. Gordon, Hom R. Aug
Preaching Politics, by Dr. D. W. C. Huntington, Hom R. Aug
Provence, a Painter's Paradise, by Eliz. R. Pennell, C. M. Sept
Provoost, Bishop, M. A. H. Aug
Psychic Experiences, by Sara A. Underwood, A. Aug
Public Life: Does it give Long Careers? by E. P. Clark, F. Aug
Pulpit Power, Elements of, Hom R. Aug
Pythæas, an Old Greek Explorer of Britain, by Karl Blind, F. R. Sept
- Race Problems:
Among the Ochipwees or Chippeways, by Rev. B. J. Devine, M. Sept
- Railways:
The Greathead Underground Electric Railway, by S. Sterne, F. Aug
Should the Nation Own the Railways? by C. Wood Davis, A. Aug
Can Railway Passenger Fares be Lowered? by W. M. Acworth, N. C. Sept
Read, Gen. M., Autobiographical, M. A. H. Aug
Red Deer of England, C. Turner on, O. Sept
Reformers, Foreign, Homes of, by S. W. Ker-shaw, Q. Sept
- Religion:
The Witness of Science to Religion, by Dr. Barry, C. W. Aug
Rest: How to Rest, by Dr. W. A. Hammond, N. A. R. Aug
Rewa River, Fiji, H. H. Thiele on, Scot G. M. Aug
Roman Lady, High-born, E. W. Carter, Sun M. Sept
Rouen: A Sermon in Rouen, Mac. Sept
Running High Jumping, by M. W. Ford, O. Sept
- Russia:
Woman's Share in Russian Nihilism, by Ella Norraikow, Cos. Sept
Russia and the Russians, by Mrs. C. R. Corson, Chaut. Sept
Russia under Alexander III., by Prof. Geffcken, New R. Sept
The Jews:
Russian Finance, by Dr. F. H. Geffcken, F. Aug
The Persecution, by I. H. Hourwich, F. Aug
Methods and Places of Refuge, by Baron de Hirsch, F. Aug
The Russ-Jewish Immigrant, by Rev. S. Singer, E. I. Sept
- St. John's Gospel, Prof. E. Schurer on, C. R. Sept
St. Joseph City. Beginnings of, Judge W. A. Wood on, M. A. H. Aug
St. Petersburg to Sebastopol, by W. B. Paton, T. B. Sept
- Sandwich Islands:
The Hawaiians, by J. N. Ingram, Chaut. Sept
- Scheffer, Ary, A. Laby on, L. H. Sept
Science:
The American Association for Advancement of Science, Chaut. Sept
The Warfare of Science, by A. F. Hewitt, C. W. Aug
Science and Society in the Fifties, T. B. Sept
Scripture, Inerrancy of, by Prof. L. J. Evans, Hom R. Aug
September, by T. E. Kebbel, Nat R. Sept
Shakespeare:
Romantic Comedy, by Dr. Garnett, Ata. Sept
"Much Ado About Nothing", Andrew Lang on, Harp. Sept
Shaw, Capt. R. M., C. S. J. Sept
L. N. Fowler on, Phren M. Sept
Shelley, Harriet, Extract from her Letters, Annie B. Ireland on, G. M. Sept
Shipping:
Steamship Lines of the World, E. Hunt on, Scrib. Sept
Siberia: A Winter Journey through Siberia, by Geo. Kennan, C. M. Sept
Slavery as it appeared to a Northern Man in 1844, by Dr. A. P. Peabody, A. R. Aug
Socialism:
The Tyranny of Nationalism, by Rev. M. J. Savage, A. Aug
Where must Lasting Progress Begin? by Eliz. Cady Stanton, A. Aug
Social Reform. Modern Methods of, Dr. L. Abbott on, Chaut. Sept
Soluntum, A Forgotten City, by Eleanor Lewis, Cos. Sept
Songs and Ballads of Fife, Black, Sept
Spa tans of Paris, by Gen. M. Read, M. A. H. Aug
Speech as a Barrier Between Man and Beast, by E. P. Evans, A. M. Sept
Sport: September, by T. E. Kebbel, Nat R. Sept
Stalking a Black Stag in Monar, Black, Sept
Stanton, Elizabeth Cady, Portrait of, A. Aug
State as an Immoral Teacher, by Ouida, N. A. R. Aug
Statesmen of Hungary, L. H. Sept
Straw Platters, F. Travers on, G. W. Sept
Swimming Animals, E. Lydekker on, K. Sept
Switzerland:
The Rise of the Swiss Confederation, by W. D. McCrackan, N. E. M. Aug
Swiss Catholic Sports, by J. A. Symonds, F. R. Sept
- Tasmania, G. B. Aug
Tattersall's, M. Z. Island on, Cos. Sept
Telegraphs and Cables:
Repairing Telegraph Cables at Sea, C. J. Sept
Telescope and Camera, by W. Schooling, W. R. Sept
Temperance and the Liquor Traffic:
The Gothenburg Licensing System, by Rev. J. Halpin, M. Sept
Theosophy:
Countess of Jersey on, Syd Q. June
Thirteenth Century, Survey of, by Frederic Harrison, F. R. Sept
Trade Unions for Women, by Lady Dilke, N. A. R. Aug
Training: Its Bearing on Health, by Sir M. Mackenzie, New R. Sept
Training Ships, Value of, C. J. Sept
Tudor, Elizabeth, Sarah Tytler on, G. O. P. Sept
Turkish Girlhood, by Fatima, E. I. Sept
Tyler, Rev. Wm., Rev. J. B. French on, Sun H. Sept
- United States: Should the Nation own the Railways? by C. Wood Davis, A. Aug
The Independent Party and Money at Cost, by R. B. Hassell, A. Aug
Decade of Retrogression (in New York City), by Florence K. Wischnewetzky, A. Aug
The Distribution of Ability in the United States, by H. C. Lodge, C. M. Sept
The Government of Cities in the United States, by S. Low, C. M. Sept
The New Political Party, N. A. R. Aug
Universities:
Present Ideals of American University Life, by J. Royce, Scrib. Sept
- Vampire Literature, by A. Comstock, N. A. R. Aug
Vermont State, A. Clarke on, N. E. M. Aug
Vinet, Alexandre, Prof. Pollens on, A. R. Aug
Vivisection, an Unscientific View of, by Lady Paget, Nat R. Sept
- West Indies for Young Englishmen, by J. J. Vickers, G. B. Aug
Westminster Abbey, C. J. Sept
Whitefield as a Preacher, by Archdeacon Farrar, Sun M. Sept
White Mountains, Literature of, N. E. M. Aug
Whittier, J. G., and Marblehead (A Poet's Town), Margaret B. Wright on, Chaut. Sept.
- Women and Women's Work:
The Working Women of To-day, by Helen Campbell, A. Aug
The Era of Woman, A. Aug
The Work of Women, by E. E. Hale, Cos. Sept
Women and Work, by Jules Simon and Miss C. Black, New R. Sept
Trade Unions for Women, by Lady Dilke, N. A. R. Aug
Factory Girls: An Unclassified Class, by Eleanor Holmes, N. H. Sept
Women's Medical Work in India, by Mrs. F. Penny, M. P. Sept
The Real Status of Women in Islam, by Justice Ameer Ali, N. C. Sept
Woman's Share in Russian Nihilism, by Ella Norraikow, Cos. Sept
What America does for Her Girls, by L. Toulmin-Smith, Ata. Sept
Society Women as Authors, by Anna V. Dorsey, Cos. Sept
The Ladies' New York Club, by Julia H. Percy, Cos. Sept
The Recreations of Eminent Women, by Rev. W. Cowan, G. O. P. Sept
Woman Suffrage, Chas. Mackay on, Syd Q. June
Woman's Life in Old Italy, by E. Davey, Nat R. Sept
Turkish Girlhood, by Fatima, E. I. Sept
Wood, Thos. Winter, Tin, Sept
Wood-carving, by H. Townsend, G. O. P. Sept
Woodford, Major-Gen. Sir John Geo., Derwent-water, Veteran and Recluse, W. W. Tomlinson on, M. C. Sept
Worn-out Parsons, Dr. Jessopp on, N. C. Sept
- Yachting:
Possibilities of the Steam Yacht, by L. Herreshoff, N. A. R. Aug
Yacht Clubs of the East, by Capt. A. J. Kennedy, O. Sept
- Zoological Retrogression, H. G. Wells on, G. M. Sept
- R. HETHERINGTON.

NOTICE.—OBERAMMERGAU PASSION PLAY SLIDES.

These Slides will be Loaned out as under:—

Set of Slides for 1880, including several Kodaks taken by Mr. Stead, 1s. for one night (5s. for every additional night).
Set of Slides for 1890	... Same price.
Set of Slides for 1890 (coloured)	... 15s. per night (7s. 6d. for every additional night).

EAPLY APPLICATION SHOULD BE MADE.

All communications addressed Passion Play, Mowbray House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

CONTENTS.

Frontispiece:—

The Peace-keeper of Europe: Alexander III. Tsar of Russia ... ..	322
--	-----

Progress of the World:—

Portrait of Sir Robert Morier ... ..	323
Map of Dardanelles and Mitylene ... ..	324
Portrait of Djavad Pasha, the new Grand Vizier of Turkey... ..	325
Portrait of President Carnot ... ..	326
" of Sir Evelyn Wood ... ..	327
Cartoon of the Chinese Difficulty ... ..	328
Map of the Valley of the Yang-tai-Kiang ... ..	328
Portrait of the Crown Prince of Roumania... ..	330
Map of the Flooded Districts in Spain ... ..	330
Map of German East Africa ... ..	331
Portrait of Mr. Thomas Burt, M.P. ... ..	331
" of Sir James Fergusson, the new Post-master-General ... ..	332
Portrait of Mr. Dwyer Gray ... ..	333
" of Mr. Thomas Greenwood ... ..	333
Cartoon of Baron Hirsch as the Modern Moses ... ..	334
New Portrait of Mr. Cecil Rhodes ... ..	335
Portrait of the late General Boulanger ... ..	337

Diary of the Month ... ..

Portrait of Admiral Tryon. ... ..	338
-----------------------------------	-----

Obituary ... ..

Portrait of Mr. Hutchinson, of Ariel , with caricatures from American, English, Australian, Italian, and Canadian comic papers. ... ..	340
---	-----

Caricatures of the Month ... ..

Portrait of Mr. Hutchinson, of Ariel , with caricatures from American, English, Australian, Italian, and Canadian comic papers. ... ..	341
---	-----

The Census of Ghosts ... ..

A Suggestion for Psychological Researchers. By Mr. Frederick W. H. Myers ... ..	347
---	-----

Character Sketch:—Mrs. Annie Besant:—

Portraits of the leading officials of the Theosophical Society ... ..	348
Portrait of Mrs. Besant to-day ... ..	349
" of Dean Vaughan ... ..	351
" of Mrs. Besant and her Mother ... ..	352
" of Mrs. Besant and her Baby ... ..	354
" of the late Rev. E. D. Fusey... ..	357
" of Dean Stanley ... ..	359
" of Mrs. Besant in 1876 ... ..	361
Caricature of Mrs. Besant ... ..	362
Portrait of Mrs. Besant in 1885 ... ..	363
" of Herbert Burrows ... ..	365

The Lantern Gospel:—

Another Suggestion for Co-operative Efforts ... ..	368
--	-----

"England at the End of the Century":—

An Appeal for Associated Workers ... ..	370
---	-----

Leading Articles in the Reviews:—

How France would Fight England. By a French Officer ... ..	372
If we were at War with France? By the Right Hon. George Shaw Lefevre ... ..	373
The Demoralisation of Russia. By Mr. E. B. Lanin ... ..	374
Italy and the Triple Alliance ... ..	375
France, Russia, and the Dardanelles... ..	376
If Jesus were in New York! ... ..	377
Tributes to Mr. James Russell Lowell. By Dr. Holmes and others ... ..	378
A Couple of Cheery Pictures ... ..	380
The Education of American Women ... ..	381
The German Socialist Programme ... ..	381
The Reunion of Christendom... ..	382
Sir Edward Baines ... ..	383

Leading Articles in the Reviews (continued):—

Some Stories of Dr. Arnold. By the Author of "Tom Brown's Schooldays" ... ..	384
Count Moltke. By Lord Wolseley ... ..	384
The Warfare of the Future ... ..	385
The Spanish Story of the Armada ... ..	385
How I would Federate the Empire. By Sir Charles Tupper ... ..	386
Restoring its Soul to an Idiot ... ..	386
What Women are Doing in America ... ..	387
Do Inebriate Asylums cure Inebriates? ... ..	388
Is Habit Hereditary? ... ..	388
Will Women ever Dress Sensibly? ... ..	389
The Deadly Dulness of Village Life... ..	389
United Campaign against Drink ... ..	389
Mr. Rudyard Kipling. By Mr. Edmund Gosse and others ... ..	390
An American View of "Darkest England"... ..	390
The Ruskin Reading Guild and its Authors ... ..	391
The Vampire Vine ... ..	391
L. Alma Tadema and his Work ... ..	392
Wilhelm Müller ... ..	393
The Loveliest Wonderland on Earth. By Mr. Christie Murray ... ..	394
Faith Healing ... ..	394
My Ministerial Experiments. By a Congregational Minister ... ..	395
Did Byron turn Methodist? ... ..	396
A New Profession for Women ... ..	396
The Adventures of a Lion Tamer ... ..	397
The Future of the Electric Railway... ..	397
How Trees Fight for Life ... ..	397
Revival of Civic Religion in America ... ..	398
Why Russians Love France ... ..	399
Why Italians Hate France ... ..	399
How England can keep the Peace ... ..	400
How to Improve the Race ... ..	401
The Dangers of Spiritualism ... ..	401
Railways and the State ... ..	402

Reviews Reviewed:—

Contemporary ... ..	403
Fortnightly ... ..	404
National Review ... ..	405
Nineteenth Century ... ..	406
Scribner ... ..	406
Arena ... ..	407
Westminster Review ... ..	407
Forum ... ..	408
North American ... ..	409
Murray's Magazine ... ..	410

Nature in Great Towns:—

Helpers' Service for October ... ..	410
-------------------------------------	-----

The French Reviews:—

The Nouvelle Revue ... ..	411
Revue des Deux Mondes ... ..	411

The London Morning Dailies that Are and Are to be:—

(From "Sell's Press Guide," 1892) ... ..	413
--	-----

Photographs of the Month ... ..

The Index of Standard Photographs ... ..	419
--	-----

New Books of the Month ... ..

The Contents of the Reviews and Magazines at Home and Abroad ... ..	425
---	-----

Poetry, Art, and Music in the Magazines ... ..

Index to Periodicals ... ..	428
-----------------------------	-----

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

Leading Bankers and Merchants are availing themselves of the investment advantages of the Company's Endowment Policy with Life Option.

Accumulated Funds exceed, £20,000,000

The BONUSES declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only Five Years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

BANKERS—BANK OF ENGLAND.

Bonuses Paid in 1890, £275,748; an increase over the amount Paid in Bonuses in 1889 of £98,499.

The BONUSES declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only Five Years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

A LARGE BONUS.

The Company have recently forwarded to the holder of policy No. 278,127 a cheque for £1,000 13s. 6d. in payment of the cash value of the Bonus for 1890; the policy being for £10,000, and issued in 1886, on the five year distribution plan. This return is equal to an annual cash bonus of 23 1/2 per cent. Many of these policies are reaching the bonus period with results very gratifying to the insured.

The New Six per Cent. Consol Policy now being issued by the Company is specially devised to meet the requirements of people of means, to whom a good investment may be of more moment than Life Insurance. This Policy meets both requirements.

Head Office for the United Kingdom: 17 & 18, CORNHILL, LONDON, E.C.—D. C. HALOEMAN, General Manager.

ACTUAL RESULTS.

ORDINARY POLICIES.

The Bonuses declared on the Company's Whole Life New Distribution Policies of only five years' standing range from £1 19s. 1d. to £3 12s. 7d. per cent. per annum, according to age.

The total payments to Policyholders to December, 1890, amounted to £263,469,823, of which upwards of £16,500,000 were bonus payments—more than twice the amount of Bonuses paid by any other Company.

The Company is specially devised to meet the requirements of people of means, to whom a good investment may be of more moment than Life Insurance. This Policy meets both requirements.

GOLD PENS: MABIE, TODD & BARD'S

Manufacture, are 14 carat tempered gold, very handsome, and positively unaffected by any kind of ink. They are pointed with selected polished iridium. The 'Encyclo. Brit.' says:—"Iridium is a nearly white metal of high specific gravity, it is almost indestructible, a beautifully polished surface can be obtained upon it." They will not penetrate the paper. Writer's cramp is unknown among users of Gold Pens: One will outwear 90 gross of steel pens. A choice is offered from 250 various shapes and points. They are a perfect revelation to those who know nothing about Gold Pens.

DR. OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES has used one of Mabie, Todd & Co's. Gold Pens since 1857, and is using the same one (his "old friend") to-day; it cost him only 9/6, it would have cost him, in money alone, over £10 to have done the same work with steel pens.

"SWAN" FOUNTAIN PEN, 10/6, Broad, Medium, or Fine Point.

The "Swan" is a Mabie, Todd & Co. Gold Pen joined to a rubber reservoir to hold any kind of ink, which it supplies to the writing point in a continuous flow. It will hold ink enough for two days' constant work, or a week ordinary writing, and can be refilled with as little trouble as to wind a watch. With the cover over the gold nib it is carried in the pocket like a pencil, to be used anywhere. A purchaser may try a pen a few days, and, if by chance the writing point does not suit his hand, exchange it for another without charge, or have his money returned if wanted.

Illustrated Price List, of various sizes (with testimonials), will be sent gratis and post free: Address postal card to

MABIE, TODD & BARD, 93 CHEAPSIDE, LONDON.

The Gigantic Sale of the "Queen's Royal" Household

HEARTHTRUGS (REGD.)

Carriage Free.

2/6

IN REVERSIBLE RICH TURKEY PATTERNS, measuring 6 ft. long and 3 ft. wide. These Hearthrugs have gained a world-wide reputation for magnificence, cheapness, and utility, having no equal. Registered Designs, and considered works of art. Thousands of repeat orders and testimonials received, including undermentioned giving the highest satisfaction, special Offer—Three for 7s.; Six for 13s. 6d.; Twelve for 23s. Carriage Free.

Sunningdale, Berks, 5th July.—Sir Frederick A. Millbank, Bart., writes:—"Please supply me with another 'Queen's Royal' Carpet, 12 by 21 feet, 40s. 3d., for a dining-room for my shooting residence at Barningham Park, similar terra-cotta and gold colours as supplied for my drawing-room last year."

Archbishop of York.

Archdeacon of Dromore, D.D.

Archdeacon of Ossory.

Archdeacon Rawstorne.

Bishop of Capetown.

Trade Mark on all Goods. Beware of Imitations. Please mention this Paper.

THE "QUEEN'S ROYAL" HOUSEHOLD REVERSIBLE Rich Turkey Pattern CARPETS (Regd.)

Admittedly the Cheapest in the world. Woven without seam, superior quality, with handsome border to correspond; a marvel of excellence and beauty.

6 ft. by 9 ft., price	11s. 9d.	10 1/2 ft. by 12 ft., price	25s. 9d.
6 ft. by 9 ft., Carriage Free.	12s. 6d.	9 ft. by 15 ft., "	27s. 9d.
6 ft. by 12 ft., "	15s. 6d.	12 ft. by 12 ft., "	27s. 9d.
9 ft. by 9 ft., "	17s. 9d.	12 ft. by 13 1/2 ft., "	31s. 3d.
9 ft. by 12 ft., "	20s. 9d.	12 ft. by 14 ft., "	34s. 9d.
9 ft. by 14 ft., "	22s. 9d.	12 ft. by 15 ft., "	36s. 9d.
9 ft. by 15 ft., "	25s. 9d.	12 ft. by 16 ft., "	40s. 9d.
9 ft. by 13 1/2 ft., "	25s. 9d.	12 ft. by 21 ft., "	43s. 9d.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE (Chancery Division).—Hodgson v. Webb Brothers.—On the 18th day of July, 1890, his Lordship, Mr. Justice Chitty, granted an interim injunction restraining Messrs. Webb Brothers, of Hackney Wick, from infringing Mr. Fredk. Hodgson's trade mark "Eclipse," No. 16,774 (of 1 reads).

The World's Wonder "ECLIPSE" CARPET (Regd.)

THE LARGEST EVER SOLD AT THE PRICE.

Carriage Free. I will forward direct from the loom to any address, on receipt of amount, a Genuine Woven Reversible Carpet, suitable for sitting-room, bedroom, bordered and woven in art shapes, large enough to cover any ordinary sized room. A RUG sent with Carpet, 1s. 6d. extra, or two Carpets and two Rugs for 10s. 6d., or four Carpets and four Rugs, 25s., carriage paid. Satisfaction guaranteed. Do not miss this opportunity.

Lansdowne Road, Lee, Kent, 2nd Jan.—Lady Willis writes:—"I am so pleased with the 'Eclipse' Carpets and Rugs sent, that I should like two more 'Eclipse' Carpets and two Rugs to be forwarded at once. Cheque 10s. 6d. enclosed. Illustrated Lists and Testimonials free. To readers of 'Review of Reviews' all Goods sent carriage free. Cheques and P.O.O.'s payable to (Sole Proprietor) F. Hodgson, Manufacturer, Importer, & Merchant, Woodsley Rd., Leeds.

NOTE.—The above goods can only be had direct. No Agents appointed.

HORNIMAN'S PURE TEA

(IN PACKETS ONLY)

IS THE BEST.

Strong, Delicious and Nourishing,
Selected from the Spring Crops of India, China, and Ceylon.

Price 1s. 10d. to 3s. 4d. per lb.

SOLD BY 5,000 AGENTS IN ENGLAND.

CLARK'S GLYCOLA

Gives a Lovely Complexion, prevents Tan, Freckles, Sunburn, &c. Removes all Redness and Soreness caused by sea water and sea air. Allays the Bites and Stings of insects. Is very soothing for gentlemen after shaving. "The Queen" says: "We prefer Glycola to any other complexion cream."

"Lady's Pictorial": "A very excellent preparation." In bottles, 6d., 1s., and 2s. 6d., from all Chemists; post free from maker, 9d., 1s. 3d., and 2s. 9d. Clark's Glycola Soap softens hard water; superfatted; free from potash or soda. Prevents and allays all skin irritations. Price 6d. per tablet, 1s. 6d. per box, of all Chemists; post free, 1s. 9d.

Wholesale Agents:

EDWARDS & SONS, 157, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.

SANGER & SONS, 459, OXFORD ST., W.

Sole Maker: T. T. CLARK, THE LABORATORY, CROUCH END, LONDON, N.

DE.

1.

aker
the p on not swal-ence
last med istic lus-
one
aul,
why
out-ard adt her
of
in.
not ere nt,
n-ng is-ls-
eto to re
of e d
l
r

THE PEACEKEEPER OF EUROPE

ALEXANDER III. TZAR OF RUSSIA.

VOL. IV. No. 22.]

OCTOBER, 1891.

[PRICE SIXPENCE.]

THE PROGRESS OF THE WORLD.

October 1, 1891.

PEOPLE talk sometimes," said Sir Robert Morier, in the course of one of those brilliantly eloquent improvisations which give such a charm to his conversation, "people talk sometimes as if stupidity were a dead, inert thing, powerful only by vis inertia. Never was there a greater mistake. Stupidity is one of the most hideously alive of things. It may have been dead once, but nowadays it is, as it were, possessed by a demon of restless energy, and it roams feverishly up and down the world, seeking with the most diabolical ingenuity what mischief it may do." Of that hideous phenomenon of a Stupidity possessed of a devil, there have been last month illustrations enough and to spare. Seldom has there been hatched in so short a space of time so large a brood of fatuous absurdities. Their parentage is not doubtful, nor their source obscure. They are the natural offspring of the hallucination under which the French nation seems to have temporarily passed. Having given themselves up to believe the supremely incredible thing that the Peacemaker of Europe is about to help them to make war on the Power with which he is most anxious to keep on friendly terms, it is not difficult for them to swallow any absurdity. Hence the French Press last month literally teemed with the most fantastic inventions. Now, the Russian vodka may have gone to the head of the Gaul, but that is no reason why sober, sensible people outside Paris should regard the illusions of Cronstadt and Portsmouth as other than the hallucination of a highly intoxicated brain. For instance, editors not in lunatic asylums were not ashamed to print, among other items of information, the startling intelligence that the Russian and French Consuls-General at Cairo had received instructions to present an ultimatum to England demanding the immediate evacuation of

SIR ROBERT MORIER.
(From a photograph by Lombardi and Co.)

Egypt; and then, as if in order to show the impartiality of their lunatic minds, they balanced this with the equally farcical story that England had already begun to make war on Turkey by invading and annexing the island of Mitylene. Here, surely, we have stupidity under diabolical obsession in its highest manifestation. The hall porters in Downing Street, in a fit of delirium tremens, could not have invented more ghastly nonsense, which was, nevertheless, telegraphed all over Europe at the cost of hundreds if not thousands of pounds, and commented upon in hundreds of leading articles. France seems to be temporarily out of her mind, and that, perhaps, is the reason why these vagaries of a disordered imagination are printed in other than Parisian newspapers. Every one with a grain of common sense could see at a glance that they were the veriest nonsense. But if the French were to announce that a German gunboat had annexed the United States, or that an Italian bicyclist had taken Constantinople, it would probably be necessary to treat the announcements seriously and discuss them as possibilities.

France Russia, it was announced, had prepared Phantasms a plan for seizing Constantinople, the of the Month. Italians had wantonly outraged the French flag at Salonica, the Grand Duke of Baden had blustered out threats of war, and so forth and so forth. These are all lies, sheer downright unadulterated falsehoods, without even the shadow of truth to justify their circulation. Yet they have produced a temporary sense of unrest and of danger. The Stock Exchanges have been affected—possibly the primary reason why these stories were invented—and a general impression has been produced exactly contrary to that which the actual fact justified. That is the result of what the old Hebrews called filling your belly with the east wind. The Russo-French alliance, so far as such a phantasmal understanding can be called an alliance, which has so entirely upset the mental equilibrium of our excitable neighbours, is not a thing that increases France's capacity for realising her longing for revenge. It has been formed, or rather its semblance has been permitted, in order the more effectively to prevent any breach of the peace in Europe. The French have practically placed themselves in the hands of the Tzar. He has given them no pledges, he has promised them nothing; but they have deluded themselves into such a belief in the reality of this alliance that they will find it difficult to move a step without the permission of Alexander III. And so long as Alexander III. lives no better arrangement could be desired for the general peace. Henceforth no gun can be fired in Europe except by permission of two men, the Kaiser and the Tzar, both of whom, alike by interest and conviction, are passionate for peace.

The wisecracks who talk about Russian Russia and the Dardanelles. descents upon Constantinople do not know the A B C of Russian policy. If any one would but for a moment imagine himself in Russia's place, he would see that, whether Russia's ultimate object is conquest or pacific development, it must suit her much better to have the Sultan as her hall-porter rather than to have to face all the risks of ejecting him, merely in order to have to do herself what he can do for her much more cheaply and effectively. The recent discussion, which ended in the recognition of the right of Russia to despatch steamers with troops and prisoners from the Black Sea through the Bosphorus to her stations in the Pacific, indicates plainly enough the natural line of Russian policy. Does any human being imagine for a moment that if Englishmen, instead of Russians, held Odessa and Sebastopol, any human power would prevent us sending our Indian reliefs through the Bosphorus? That narrow waterway through the Turkish capital may be rightly closed to ironclads which are floating fortresses, but it is monstrous to strain that interdict so far as to forbid the egress of Russian transports. The Sultan has agreed to allow the Russians to forward a certain fixed number of soldiers through the Dardanelles to and from Eastern Asia, and as this is nothing more than we should have demanded if we had been in Russia's shoes, there is no need to make such a potter about this "concession." If it has pleased the Russians, that is not an evil; for it is always well to please a neighbour and an ally when it can be done without injuring yourself. But if the French imagine that it helps them a hundredth part of an inch nearer to the objects of their policy on the Rhine and the Nile, they are deluded indeed.

France wants to get us out of Egypt. It is a curious way of attaining that end to afford us a fresh illustration of the extent to which the Sultan is a mere puppet in the hands of the Tzar. The more power Russia has at Constantinople, the less chance there is of our weakening our hold upon Egypt. That surely is as plain as the nose upon your face. We have not annexed Egypt, and we do not intend to annex Egypt, neither has Russia seized Constantinople; but just as we have put the Khedive into our pocket, so the Sultan will go into the pocket of Russia. Russia has no need to trouble to occupy Constantinople. The Sultan every year gravitates steadily to the position of mere agent and factotum of the Tzar. All that Russia has to do is to allow the natural forces to operate unchecked, and ere long the Sultan will be neither more nor less than a Russian agent in a fez. The more clearly the British public recognises that, the less chance there is of any evacuation of Egypt. This has always been admitted in the frankest way by the Tzars. Even Nicholas recognised that England in Egypt was the natural and proper counterpoise to Russian dominance on the Bosphorus.

The Future of Mitylene. The scare about the alleged British occupation of Mitylene is useful from one point of view. A British gunboat exercising its crew, landed a fraction of a ship's company for land drill on the small island of Sigri, with the express permission sought and obtained of the Turkish authorities, and in a few hours took them on board again. That was the infinitesimal grain of truth upon which so gigantic a superstructure of fiction was erected. Nevertheless, the incident may serve a good purpose if it reminds Europe that should Constantinople ever pass into the hands of the Tzar, not a shot will be fired by Britain to prevent it. We have at last emancipated ourselves pretty completely from the superstition that the occupation of the waterway into the cul de sac of the Euxine is a matter of supreme importance to us. If Russia occupied Constantinople, we might occupy Mitylene, and strengthen our hold on Egypt. Beyond that we should not go. It is an open question whether it would be worth while even going as far as to occupy Mitylene. But as no serious objection would be taken by Russia to such a compromise, it might be the easiest way out of the difficulty.

The Sultan and his Grand Viziers.

The fall of Kiamil Pasha, the late Grand Vizier, and the appointment of Djavad Pasha as his successor, need not concern us much. The wonder is not that Kiamil has fallen, but that he kept his place so long. The Sultan is supreme, and whenever the Sultan gets in a particularly tight place, he naturally changes his Grand Vizier. At present he is worried about the insurrection in Yemen, where the Arabs refused to be pacified, despite all the telegrams announcing their complete subjugation, and he is not particularly pleased about the position of affairs in Egypt. Moreover, Kiamil is said to have lent Prince Mohamed Resched Effendi, the Sultan's brother, who is heir presumptive, a considerable sum of money unknown to the Sultan. Abdul Hamid, who is timid and suspicious, was probably easily persuaded that he had better replace his septuagenarian Arab by a Turk who had not completed his fiftieth year. Whether it is Kiamil or Djavad who executes the orders from the palace, these orders will still be issued by Abdul Hamid, who will of necessity gravitate more and more towards Russia, as she can either help or harm him more than any other Power.

The Kaiser and the Tzar.

The really important question is, what the Kaiser and the Tzar are thinking. The Tzar has been spending his annual holiday at Fredensburg, and, according to European gossip, has been thinking much of the best way to show that he wished the Cronstadt demonstration not to encourage dreams of war, but to establish a new security for peace. Called home by the sudden death of the Grand Duchess Paul, he had not an opportunity of meeting the Kaiser at Berlin, but there is little doubt as to his views on the subject. The Kaiser, as his manner is, has been more outspoken. He has been visiting the Emperor of Austria at the Austrian manœuvres, and he has been witnessing the military manœuvres in Bavaria. At Erfurt he made a characteristic speech, blurred with a somewhat unworthy sneer at Napoleon as a parvenu, which somewhat irritated the French; but he at the same time relaxed the irksome passport regulations to Elsass-Lothringen, and at the dinner table is reported to have declared, with much emphasis, that even if he knew a neighbouring power were meditating war he would not take the responsibility of anticipating attack. If even he could gain an additional month of peace he would take it, believing that the advantages of forestalling your enemy in the present condition of Europe would not be worth the sacrifice of a month of peace. He would prefer to trust in Providence, and leave the responsibility of making war to be taken by the other. He is entirely of Lord Derby's opinion, "If war must come sooner or later, for Heaven's sake let it come later." M. Ribot and General Caprivi have both made pacific speeches, and so far as the statesmen are concerned, peace seems more secure than before.

DJEVAD PASHA.

The New Grand Vizier of Turkey.

PRESIDENT CARNOT.

The French Manœuvres and President Carnot. The contrast between the calm abroad and the fuss in France is very curious. "What do you think of the Franco-Russian Alliance?" said an interviewer to Signor Crispi, to whom the Prime Minister sententiously replied, "'Much ado about nothing,' mere rhetoric and champagne." Herr Berlepsch, who presided over the Labour Congress in Berlin, has also declared his satisfaction with the prospects of peace. Signor

Rudini is equally confident there will be no war. Only in France there is commotion, and feverish hopes of an early realisation of their aggressive designs. So incapable are some Parisians of displaying the calm of conscious strength, that 1,100 men had to be arrested in the streets before Lohengrin could be performed at the Opera House. They deemed it patriotic and seemly to avenge Sedan by hooting the music of a German composer. Russia benefits because her new loan has been taken up in Paris. It was also issued simultaneously in Berlin; but when France awakes from her hallucination she is not likely to be more tranquilly content than she has been hitherto. The chief domestic event in France last month has been military. President Carnot has been reviewing 100,000 French troops in the Champagne country. The French soldiers marched well, and the President declared that "the army has once more shown what France may expect from it"; and the country, which followed the manœuvres with "passionate interest," has felt somewhat reassured by reading the reports of the correspondents, whose imaginations were evidently impressed by the "human wall, 2,000 yards front and 750 deep," which was drawn up upon the parade ground at Vitry. President Carnot did his work well. The Bishop of Chalons hailed him as the "Pacifier of Consciences," in allusion to the understanding with Rome, and the workmen at Rheims saluted him as the first worker of France. He made half-a-dozen speeches, and achieved the almost impossible task of satisfying French patriotic fervour without occasioning any alarm abroad.

Military
The Condition of the British Army. manœuvres have been the order of the day. In Germany, in Thuringia, 60,000 soldiers were in the field, and it was noticed that although the firing was incessant, the atmosphere remained perfectly clear. In the next war, thanks to smokeless powder, there will be no more smoke than there was at the battle of Hastings. England also has been having her manœuvres in South - Eastern Hants. General Sir Evelyn Wood was in command, and although the officers were zealous and the men obedient, the reports from day to day do not tend to reassure the country as to the efficiency of its second line of defence. The proportion of men who fell out in the march was excessive, and it was asserted that if the majority of the troops had been in heavy marching order they would never have reached the rendezvous at all. Mr. Arnold Forster, whose admirable "Citizen Reader" should be a text-book in every school, and who rendered yeoman service to the country by the alarm which he raised seven years ago about the navy, declares in the Times that he never yet witnessed so unsatisfactory and humiliating a display as that presented by the First Army Corps. This is no fault of the officers or of the men, but of the system, which he declares he can prove has utterly broken down :—

Our cavalry are without horses, our artillery without guns or train, our infantry battalions are, I firmly believe, becoming worse every year. The militia is a patent and recognised fraud, while the yeomanry has ceased to exist as a military force.

So that, it seems, we spend nearly £20,000,000 a year upon a force which is a worse than useless sham! If so, how would it do to cut down the Army estimates by one half, and spend the ten millions rescued from waste in supplying every crowded Babylon in the land with sufficient open spaces and playgrounds to give our citizens a chance of growing up healthy enough to serve as soldiers when we develop a War Office capable of organising an army?

SIR EVELYN WOOD, V.C.
(From a photograph by Messrs. Fradette and Young.)

The news from China grows more and more disquieting. At the beginning of September the riotous anti-foreign movement, which had cost so many valuable lives at Wuhu and other towns in the Yang-tse-Kiang Valley, burst out afresh at Ichang, a thousand miles up the great river, beyond which steamers do not ply. All the property of the English and foreign merchants has

The Trouble
in China.

been destroyed by an organised outbreak of Hunan soldiers. The telegrams seem to point to a probable

From July.

[September 2, 1891.

UNMANAGEABLE.

"Can't manage him, eh? Then you'd better tie him up or muzzle him, or we'll know the reason why."

general rising along the Yang-tse, directed impartially against all foreigners, but specially against the missionaries. How serious this may become a glance at the accompanying map will show. The whole country is dotted with missionaries, and every treaty port contains some merchants. If the thousand miles of valley blaze up in fanatical savagery, the Emperor of China may have urgent need for another Gordon to rescue him from another Taiping rebellion. Rumours assert that the insurrectionary movement is fomented by the Emperor's mother, and that Li Hung Chung is also hoping to gain an advantage by fishing in troubled waters. The two theories, apparently conflicting, that the anti-European movement is at once instigated by the Government and set on foot by a party which only uses hostility to foreigners as a pretext to mask its designs against the dynasty, may be reconciled if we suppose that the Government sees some advantage in secretly favouring a movement which, although ultimately aimed at the dynasty, may, in the meantime, help the dynasty against the foreigner. The Chinese are adepts in the art of facing both ways, and it may be that in the Yang-tse valley "the spur, insidiously applied, provokes the caper which it seems to chide." It is a very serious business, however. Gunboats are already in motion, troops are being despatched to protect life and property, and many things are more improbable than the temporary establishment of a European naval protectorate of the Chinese treaty ports until such time as the new Gordon, whoever he may be, makes the Chinese Emperor once more master in his own house.

THE VALLEY OF THE YANG-TSE-KIANG.

Wherever the Map is marked  it indicates a Catholic Mission Station.

The Chinese and the Missionaries.

One curious consequence of the present agitation against the Europeans is, that the Chinese Government itself has been compelled to vindicate the character of the Christian missionaries. The anti-foreign placards accuse the Christians of immorality, dishonesty, and murder. The favourite charge is that women are procured to abduct children, whose eyes and intestines are taken out, and whose heart and kidneys are cut out. This extraordinary accusation, which implies that the devoted missionaries of the Cross are mere variants upon Jack the Ripper, has had one good result. It has elicited from the Tsung-li-Yamen a direct declaration, embodied in the official memorial to the Emperor, that the missionaries are an element of good in the land and not of evil. This is the formal finding of the Imperial Ministry, who, as usual, style themselves "the memorialists":—

The memorialists find that the religion of the great West persuades people to follow the paths of virtue. It has been propagated in all the western countries for many years. The hospitals for the sick and asylums for infants are all good works. Of late years in all the places in the different provinces visited by calamities there were many missionaries who contributed large sums and helped to alleviate the sufferings of the people. Their love to do good and their generosity in giving are certainly commendable.

On the strength of this memorial the Emperor issued an edict which favours the propagation of the Christian faith more than any previous edict that has been issued from the Chinese throne. It is earnestly to be hoped that the Chinese Government may be able to maintain order. No policy could be more fatuous on our part than to adopt any course that would weaken its authority over its own people.

After several years of calm, there are indications that Russian generals on the Central Asiatic frontier are beginning once more to feel their feet. It is not improbable that the most mischief that will result from the fiction of the Russo-French entente will be felt on the border line between the Caspian and Thibet. The Tzar may be as pacific as he pleases, but his prancing pro-consuls in Central Asia can hardly fail to feel encouraged to play tricks by the exhilaration of the French champagne. Hence it is not surprising to hear of Russian exploring parties in the Pamir, of the Afghan Ameer having decided to open Afghanistan to free commercial intercourse with Russia, and even of a Russian protectorate of Persia. Russia and Persia, it is reported, have all but agreed to a commercial and diplomatic union, by virtue of which other Powers will be shut out from commercial relations with Persia, and that Persia's diplomatic business will always be discharged by the Russian Ambassadors. The story is not very credible; but of course Persia is, to all intents and purposes, in Russia's pocket already, and the Tzar may button up his pocket at any time. The exclusive commercial policy of Russia will have the effect in the long run of making every commercial nation the ally of England—the only Power whose conquests always extend the area of neutral trade.

The Famine in Russia.

The news from Southern Russia leaves no doubt as to the appalling nature of the catastrophe which has befallen the unfortunate Muscovite peasantry. Owing to the failure of the crops, thirty-three millions of Europeans are in actual and imminent danger of perishing outright from starvation. We are familiar with such famines in India. It is the first time in our memory that a European nation has been confronted with so terrible a menace. The region which is smitten with death used to be the granary of Europe. The Russian Government will do, and is doing, its cumbrous best, but millions will perish before the spring. In presence of so colossal a calamity, it is to be hoped London will set the civilised world an example of the sympathy of human brotherhood by raising a substantial relief fund for the perishing millions of Southern Russia. The fund itself will not save the doomed myriads. It will at best only snatch a few thousands from the grave. But it will be a brotherly thing that will help to wipe out the bitter memories of evil times when mistaken policy and unscrupulous intrigue arrayed against each other the nations whose amity is the indispensable condition of Asiatic peace.

The Roumanian
Prince of Roumania,
Love Story.

On page 330 is a portrait of the Crown Prince of Roumania, for love of whom Mlle. Vacaresco has nearly broken her heart. Carmen Sylva nearly lost her life in grieving over the hapless lovers, and for some little time it seemed as if the correspondents were preparing us for the abdication of the King of Roumania. "The course of true love never does run smooth," but it seems as if it were destined to play the very mischief with the politics of Eastern Europe. Master Cupid has sacrificed the heir to the Austrian throne, deposed the King and exiled the Queen of Servia, and all last month it seemed as if he might bring about a general war by vacating the throne of Roumania. It was announced that a match had just been arranged between the little boy King of Servia and Princess Helen of Montenegro, but this also seems to have been marred by the untoward fate which seems to preside over the marriages of the Princes of the East.

THE CROWN PRINCE OF ROUMANIA.

While in the East millions are starving for want of rain, our crops are spoiled by an incessant downpour which has made a shower-bath of the summer. In Spain matters have been far worse. An unprecedented deluge converted the rivers which at this season are often mere

The Floods
in Spain.

S.E. SPAIN, SHOWING THE DISTRICT SUBMERGED.

rivulets into raging torrents, which inundated the valleys, washed away the railways, made 100,000 persons homeless, and drowned outright nearly a thousand persons in Consuegra alone. The devastation caused by the floods in the valley of the Armaquillo, where the mud-walled houses dissolved like sugar in the twenty feet of water beneath which they were submerged, struck horror into the heart of the Spanish nation, which made itself felt as far as New York. But the destruction of life and property in Spain is but a fleabite compared with the silent horror of the Russian famine. We are such creatures of the senses that the sensational drowning of a handful of men in dramatic circumstances affects us more than the wasting away of millions in the agonies of starvation.

The triumph of the Constitutional party in Chili is now complete. All armed resistance ceased with the occupation of Valparaiso, and the last finishing touch was given to the success of the Congressionalists by the suicide of the late President Balmaceda. It would, no doubt, have been better if he had been taken, tried, and hanged; but it is seldom that the Charles Stuarts make a judicially appropriate ending. Balmaceda's suicide simplified matters, and Chili, it is to be hoped, will now settle down into peace and quiet.

The German
Reverse in Africa.

The Germans, last month, had another unpleasant experience of the colonial troubles with which we are so familiar. Their section of East Africa seems to be in a ferment. An insurrection is said to have broken out among the Wadigos, who have the usual human, ignorant impatience, and who reply by riots to the edict taxing palm kernels. The Arabs on the coast are restless, and the situation is critical. All this reads ugly, following as it does hard on the heels of the news of the destruction of Lieutenant Zalewski's expedition in the Wahehé country. Lieut. Zalewski started for Kilwa on June 22nd, and marched inland north of the Rufiji to Mpapwa. The Wahehé Chief Taramakeng robbed thirty of the members of the expedition at the last-named place, whereupon Lieut. Zalewski bombarded and stormed his fortress and then began a punitive march into the Wahehé country. He had with him five German officers, seven non-commissioned officers, two cannon, two Maxim guns, and 350 native troops. The expedition was very carefully equipped, armed with Mauser rifles, and the blacks were the best fighting material procurable. But on August 17th, as they were forcing their way through the bush at a place called Ihela, south of the Ruhaha river, they were attacked in force by the Wahehés, who are of the race of Zulus, and who have guns and ammunition from the Portuguese. After a brief but hopeless resistance, Lieut. Zalewski, with five officers and five non-commissioned officers, were killed, his cannon and Maxims captured, and three hundred of his men were speared or shot. On September the 18th, two officers, two non-commissioned officers, and sixty-five men, the sole survivors of the ill-fated expedition, arrived at Bagamoyo.

Two Little Sermons by the Pope. The Pope has received the first contingent of 20,000 working men who, under the leadership of Cardinal Langenieux, M. Harmel, and the Comte de Mun, have enjoyed a pleasure trip to Rome with the comforting adjuncts of a quasi-religious pilgrimage. To them he addressed a good little sermon, in which he exhorted them to be diligent and docile, and to avoid perverse men, especially when, as Socialists, they try to overthrow social order. "On your return to your beautiful country, say that the heart of the Pope is ever with the heavy-laden and the suffering." The Comte de Mun saluted "the great workman, Leo XIII."; and it is to be hoped that the Government will take due note of the Pope's declaration that "it is imperative to act in all directions without losing precious time in barren discussions." Besides thus preaching to the French workmen, the Pope has addressed a letter to the German and Austrian bishops, in which he lifts up his voice on high and denounces duelling. Both divine and human laws forbid "that a man should be wounded or killed, except when the interest of all is concerned, or it is done in necessary defence." "The savage custom of duelling," it is to be feared, will survive the Pontifical anathema, which is but a renewal of the testimony which the Church has consistently borne for many centuries against this odd survival of the old barbaric custom of trial by ordeal of battle.

The Workmen at Work. While the Pope is preaching, the working men are acting; and in this country, at least, they seem likely to do more for themselves than any number of Papal Encyclicals can do for them. At the Trade Union Congress at Newcastle, over which Mr. Burt presided—filling the chair in a fashion which extorted the enthusiastic encomiums of his opponents—a resolution was passed urging the united trades of the country to seize every opportunity to select, nominate, and return Labour representatives, "independent of party politics." The last phrase was added as an amendment by 258 votes to 208. Its significance has been emphasized by Mr. Tillet's acceptance of an invitation to contest one of the Bradford seats in opposition to both Liberals and

MR. THOMAS BURT, M.P.

(From a photograph by radelle and Young.)

Conservatives. It remains to be seen whether this attempt to form a strong and vigorous Labour party will succeed. What seems more certain is that the hope of holding together the old and the new Unionists in one Congress is diminishing. The Eight Hours Legal Day men outnumbered the men of the old school, and a split on the question of the reconstitution of the Congress seems not unlikely.

English Politics. In home politics little has been doing. It took Lord Salisbury nearly three weeks to discover that Sir James Fergusson, who has been his Under Secretary at the Foreign Office since 1886, had the best claim to be put in Mr.

Raikes's post. The new Postmaster-General has the business to learn, and it is to be feared that the net result of the change will be that the whole subject of penny postage throughout the English-speaking world, and halfpenny postage for all periodical publications in Great Britain, will be held over until the next Administration. Sir James Fergusson's re-election was hotly opposed by the Liberals of North-East Manchester, who were for the third time represented by Mr. C. P. Scott, of the Manchester Guardian. Mr. Scott is, like his paper, solid, reliable, and well-informed, but a trifle slow and somewhat woolly in the texture of his thought. Note

SIR JAMES FERGUSSON.
Postmaster-General.
(From a photograph by Russell and Son.)

in this connection that the Tynemouth Liberals have selected as their candidate Mr. James Annand, of the Newcastle Leader, who for twenty years past has, as a journalist, instructed in politics those who are now asking him to represent them in Parliament. Before the twentieth century arrives it will be as much a matter of course for every great newspaper to have a representative in Parliament as at the beginning of the nineteenth it was for the eldest son of a great noble to occupy the family seat for the rotten borough which formed an indispensable part of the patrimonial inheritance.

Last month the newspapers had it all their own way, and the only new topics for discussion were the Daily Chronicle's Mahatmas and the Daily News's series of letters on "Life in the Villages." The latter attracted widespread attention, and formed the staple topic for the three political speeches of September. Mr. Morley, at Cambridge, spoke with much feeling and force upon the necessity of doing something to vivify the dull torpor of bucolic existence; Sir Michael Hicks-Beach dealt with the same subject from his own standpoint in the West country; and Sir W. Harcourt, as his manner is, included it among the other ingredients of his omnium-gatherum, rollicking discourse in Lancashire. As yet the other newspapers in, London at least, refuse to discuss the question, for the trumpety reason that it was started by one of themselves. The usages of the London press in these matters are quite idiotic. While the politicians are discussing matters, could not the various religious bodies, established and non-established, agree to unite forces in order to establish a council in every parish for the purpose of working together to mend matters? A competent public-spirited parish council, which had cast out the twin devils of clerical intolerance and dissenting jealousy, might do a great deal to secure the removal of the deadly dulness which broods over evening in the village. It is to be feared, however, that this is but a vain dream. The Church of God has so far forgotten its Maker that the work will have to be taken in hand by politicians. The promised parish council will come by the law, not by the gospel.

In Ireland also the only event of importance has been journalistic. Young Mr. Dwyer Gray—he is said to be only one-and-twenty—has succeeded at last in making up his mind on the vexed question of Mr. Parnell. As a consequence, the Freeman's Journal has now ceased to advocate the claims of the fallen chief, and Mr. Parnell's caricaturists in United Ireland exhaust their bitterness in caricaturing Mr. Gray as if he were an infant of twelve months. Considering that Mr. Parnell fought and won the battle of the Land League largely by utilising the zeal and energy of young men, this kind of satire is very harmless. Even now the only gleam of hope that has relieved the gloom of the Parnellite horizon has come from the attempt—the gallant but futile attempt—of Mr. John O'Leary to constitute a Young Ireland League, which, to judge by the speeches at the preliminary convention, is to be mainly directed against the Catholic Church. The leaders of the Irish Home Rulers have thrown away the scabbard and have now proclaimed their determination to do their best to drive every Parnellite out of Parliament. They announced at the mid-monthly meeting of the National Federation that they have formally espoused the cause of the evicted tenants, and that a convention is to be held in every county to raise funds for the evicted and to prepare for the General Election. They are further to appeal to Irishmen all round the world for help—which they may get on one condition, and on one condition only. American money will flow again the day after the Irish are re-united, that is to say, after Mr. Parnell disappears. He has been the Balmaceda of Home Rule; and, although no one would suggest suicide, his resignation is the only service he can now render to his country.

MR. DWYER GRAY.

(From a photograph by Falk, Melbourne.)

Librarianism, if we may coin a word, is being naturalised amongst us. In America the art and science of Librarianism is much more studied than it is here. But the meeting of the Librarians' Association at Nottingham in September shows that we are getting on. America leads the world, England follows, the Continent lags behind. One difficulty is that we have too many books. As Robert Hall said of Dr Kippis, "he has put so many books on the top of his head he has crushed out his brains," so the enormous mass of volumes which lumber the shelves of the Old World libraries render it impossible for the librarian really to master his task. When libraries are smaller, librarians have a chance. In time it will be recognised that the librarian is the soul, or the grey matter, of the brain of a library, and that it is little use for Mr. Carnegie or other benefactors to dump truck loads of books in a town unless they also supply a luminous and instructed custodian to lend them out. So obvious has this become, that we may confidently expect Mr. Carnegie, the millionaire, whose hobby is libraries, to be casting about to discover how best he can use his money in increasing the output of thoroughly competent librarians, who will be the beneficed clergy of the new Church of General Reading which is growing up amongst us. The work of establishing new Free Libraries is being steadily pushed forward, and I am glad to welcome a new edition of Mr. Greenwood's admirable Plea for Free Libraries. If any man or woman anywhere in the British Isles wants a Free Library established within easy reach of his door, and does not know exactly how to go about the getting of it, let him order Mr. Greenwood's book, and if he wants any further information or counsel, a letter to Mr. Greenwood will bring him the best advice by return of post.

MR. THOMAS GREENWOOD.

(From a photograph by Maull and Fox.)

In the work of vivifying the villages, the institution of Free Libraries will necessarily have a leading place. The Free Library machinery, as it exists at present, will not work in the rural districts. What is wanted is the power for the County Council to establish a good free central library in every county, with reading-rooms for Reading for Villagers.

in every village: the books to be left at local points of call every week. The Sunday-school Library, which was the pioneer of the Free Library, was opened only once in seven days, and it would be enough at first if the householders in the counties could get these books from the weekly parcel. About reading-rooms there should be no difficulty; every schoolroom ought to be available for the purpose. The Daily News published the following suggestion from "Interested":—

Is it not possible to establish a society, either in London or elsewhere, whose object would be the founding of libraries, and supplying them free with the best literature and periodicals? Undoubtedly, if such a society were started, it would, upon becoming known, be flooded with old monthlies, newspapers, etc. from all parts of the country, and there are hundreds of people who would gladly subscribe annually to the formation of such a fund if they could but know the pressing need of such a society felt by "our villages."

I doubt as to the "hundreds of people who would gladly subscribe"; but if there are even a few scores, I shall be very glad to hear from them with a view to practical action in this matter.

There is a new hope dawning on the world in these latter days, and that is a nascent faith in the feasibility of the conversion of millionaires. Mr. Rhodes may be regarded as the first wealthy man to demonstrate in his own person that wealth is not incompatible with imagination. Mr. Carnegie followed suit by not only preaching but practising his gospel of wealth. Mr. Rockefeller, by his promise to endow a splendid university in Chicago, keeps the ball rolling; and now Baron Hirsch rolls in his millions to encourage the expectations of those who regard millionaires as but the purse-bearers of God Almighty's bounty. Baron Hirsch's limited liability company for the transportation of Russian Jews has a capital of £2,000,000, of which he subscribes £1,999,900 himself. The first Hirsch Colony has been established in New Jersey. 250 families are to be established on 5,100 acres. Each family must have £400 in cash, and will live in a detached house, of from four to six rooms, built on a fifteen acres holding, 50 yards back from the road with lawn in front. As the schoolhouse is three miles off, a conveyance is engaged to take the children both ways. With this example before us, who knows but that some fine day we shall hear that the Rothschilds, looking down from the heights of the new Mount Zion on which they have reared their palaces over the Aylesbury plain, may decide to set aside a million or two to make the lot of the labourer in central England a little brighter and more radiant with hope than it is to-day? Beneficial as this might be for the labourer, it would be far more blessed to the

THE MODERN MOSES.
(From Ariel, September 26, 1891.)

millionaires, who must feel at times bored to death as they reflect that they are becoming little more than the keepers of the keys of the safes where their securities lie.

Wanted, a Millionaire in East Africa. If there be any millionaires unattached who have within them something of the soul of Mr. Rhodes, there is a great opportunity before them in British East Africa. Sir W. Harcourt, last session, burked the Ministerial proposal to guarantee the construction of a railway from the Zanzibar coast to the great inland sea of Victoria Nyanza. The result is that our East African Company is on the verge of a catastrophe which a millionaire could avert with a stroke of his pen. To paint red the map of Africa north of the German region of influence, it is necessary to use a paint brush of steam engines. Such paint brushes are costly, but effectual. The Government believed the investment was good from an Imperial point of view. The collapse consequent upon the failure to construct the railway will undoubtedly be disastrous. Here then is the very providential opening for a millionaire who has a soul above his millions. Why should it be impossible? Thousands of their relations, poor men, have given their lives to build up the Imperial fabric. Is it so great a sacrifice that a few rich men should give their substance?

MR. CECIL RHODES AT HOME.

Mr. Rhodes, who has last month visited South African Affairs. Natal, is studying the question of the Franchise. Next session the Cape Parliament will be engrossed with this burning question, What is to be done with the black electorate? The movement in favour of one man one vote does not prevail in South Africa. There the tendency is the other way. Like the Melbourne farmers, who carried the other day a resolution in favour of giving an elector one vote for manhood and another for property, if he has any, Mr. Hofmeyer would give his Dutch supporters a multiple vote—education and land-owning being regarded as affording a fair claim for extra votes. As a rule, educated and land-owning classes have succeeded in getting their own way, vote or no vote. The instinct of democracy is in favour of making all men and women equal at the polling booth, leaving those who have most land, or wealth, or culture, a free field to influence the electorate by any legitimate means. In the Southern States the chief result of enfranchising the negro has been to increase the voting power of his old master in Congress—the last result the stalwart Republicans contemplated when they enfranchised him.

The shearing agreement arrived at by the Australasia. shearers and squatters of Sydney has been accepted by the unionists of Victoria and Queensland. The difficulty is therefore at an end. According to the satirist of the Sydney Bulletin the victory has been altogether on the side of the squatters; but impartial justice would hardly admit this cartoon as evidence as to the result. Sir Samuel Griffiths has brought forth a Bill dividing Queensland into three Home-Ruled provinces, North, South, and Central, which are, however, to have power to levy their own customs duties, subject to the proviso that the natural products of the three provinces are to be free from import duties when carried from one province to the other. Marriage and the Criminal Law, and many other matters, are reserved for "the Parliament of the United Provinces." The Victorian Parliament has passed the Federation Bill, with the omission of the clause permitting the Senate to make alterations in Money Bills. The New Zealand Senate has rejected the Bill permitting women to be both electors and elected, and Sir George Grey, in reply, suggests a Legislative Chamber composed entirely of women to replace the Upper House.

The Position of Women. The question of the position of women has been a good deal discussed last month in the papers, owing to the re-affirmation by

Mr. Frederic Harrison of the Comtist heresy about the status of the sex. It is somewhat quaint to hear men discussing what a woman should do or not do, as if it lay with them to decide. If they were but to be condemned one week in the year to hear women discuss in the same way what men should or should not do, they would be cured of their folly. In this connection note, as an illustration of the close tie that unites political, economical, social, and moral questions, the following suggestive little paragraph:—

One result of the par Britannica has been to raise the market price of a wife to the average Brahmin and Rajpoot cultivator in the Punjab. At the time of the annexation of the Punjab a wife could be purchased for from 20 to 40 rupees; the quotations vary at present from 60 to 300 rupees. The decrease of infanticide in the Punjab is said, indeed, to be largely due to this enhancement in the prospective value of female infants.

General Booth's Triumphal Tour. General Booth, after a very successful visit to South Africa, where he seems to have seen every one, from Mr. Rhodes downwards, has swept in triumph through Tasmania, Victoria, and New South Wales. Everywhere he has been received by everybody who was anybody, and by the great mass of those who are nobodies, as if he were—what he really is—one of the most remarkable of the great men of our time. Self-denial Week, which began September 27th, will realise, it is hoped, the sum of £50,000. In 1889 it produced £20,000; in 1890, £30,000. Negotiations are in progress for the acquisition of the vacant piece of land on the Embankment for the purpose of building a great "Central Citadel." The disturbances at Eastbourne continue to disgrace that watering-place. If the Duke of Devonshire or his agents do not yet realise the fact that the only way out of such an impasse as that in which they find themselves is by peremptorily crushing the rowdiness that is making their town a byword in the land, it is about time they learnt their lesson. It is, of course, quite possible to keep up riots indefinitely when rioters have only to riot in order to be supplied with free drink all Sunday; but decent respectable people have a right to object to such attempts to cast out the very small devil of a Sunday band by calling up the great drunken devil of riot and savagery into whose keeping Eastbourne seems to have been delivered all this autumn. The Chinaman who burnt down his house to roast his pig seems to have been taken as a model by the authorities of Eastbourne.

General Boulanger's End. General Boulanger took his life at Brussels, on September 30th, by shooting himself on the grave of Madame de Bonnemain, the mistress for whose sake he sacrificed his chance of the Presidency of the Republic. The tragic end recalls the fate of the Crown Prince Rudolph, and will excite a certain sympathy for "le brav' Général" which nothing in his life has hitherto been able to command. Suicide is gaining in popularity, yet, if the creed of the Theosophists be true, suicide is surrounded with terrors at least equal to those of Dante's hell. There is a simply awful story now running in the pages of L'Initiation, a French monthly devoted to the occult sciences, which makes it impossible to contemplate General Boulanger's fate without horror. It is entitled "La Vie d'un Mort," and goes to prove that the new science of occultism bids fair to rehabilitate the ghastly vision of the under world. General Boulanger was a man whom I knew fairly well. He was always pleasant and affable, but he had not in him the stuff of which Dictators are made. But for Madame de Bonnemain he might have realised his ambition, and it must at least be reckoned to his credit that his devotion to her stood the strain of a wrecked career.

The Corruption in Canada.

The publican, both at home and in America, is the source of much corruption of our politics, but that there is other corruption the painful revelations in Canada remind us only too loudly. Without going into the details of this infamy, it is more comforting to note the statement made by a member of the Canadian House of Commons in the Times as to the Nemesis that has overtaken the guilty:—

That is very satisfactory, and a fact of good omen for the future of the Dominion. Those recent events which have given to this country so unhappy a prominence have brought with them prompt and rigid investigation, and swift and severe retribution. A Minister of the Crown, who has for years occupied a position in the Cabinet second only to that of Sir John Macdonald, has been compelled to resign office and emolument, and is now awaiting the judgment of the Committee before whom he has been tried. The other member who was implicated has not only resigned his seat, but has fled the country to avoid the necessity of appearing at the bar of the House of Commons to answer for his conduct. Every official, from the highest to the lowest, against whom any charge of malfeasance has been established, has been promptly suspended, and, in most cases, dismissal has followed upon suspension. No desire has been shown, nor attempt made, by the party in power, or their leaders in office, to avoid inquiry or to stifle its results. Every charge made has been investigated, or is in progress of investigation, and the result of every inquiry has been followed to its legitimate conclusion.

THE LATE GENERAL BOULANGER
(From a photograph by M. Nadar, Paris.)

DIARY FOR SEPTEMBER.

EVENTS OF THE MONTH.

- Aug. 31. Baron Mohrenheim, Russian Ambassador in France, entertained at a banquet at Cautelet.
- Sept. 1. Autumn meeting of the Associated Chambers of Commerce at Dublin opened, with Col. Hill, M.P., as president. Partridge shooting commenced. In the New South Wales Legislative Assembly, motion in favour of Protective Import Duties negatived by 61 to 47. The 21st Anniversary of the Battle of Sedan celebrated throughout the German Empire. Meeting of the Chambers of Commerce at Dublin concluded. Resolution adopted affirming the expediency of practical arrangements being devised to secure a closer commercial union between the Mother Country and the Colonies and Dependencies. Meeting of Prince Albert of Prussia and Prince Bismarck.
2. The Emperor William and his suite arrived at Horn, Lower Austria, to witness manoeuvres. Manoeuvres in the east of France commenced. Kiamil Pacha dismissed from the post of Grand Vizier, and Djavad Pacha, Governor of Crete, appointed his successor. Further prosecutions arising out of the Salvation Army disturbances at Eastbourne. Meeting of the Executive of the Welsh Union of the National Union of Conservative Associations at Swansea. A torpedo boat and an armed transport, the last armed forces that remained loyal to Balmaoceda, surrendered at Callao to the Chilean Minister.
4. Encounter between Parnellites and McCarthyites at New Tipperary. Annual Meeting of the National Association of Colliery Managers, with Mr. Palmer as President, at Newcastle. Resolution passed against the hours of adult labour being fixed by Parliament. Hearing of the charges of riot arising out of the Salvation Army Sunday processions resumed, and all the defendants committed for trial at the next Assizes. The New Zealand House of Representatives passed Bill conferring on women the suffrage and the right to be elected to Parliament, which Bill was afterwards rejected by the Upper House.
5. M. Baross, the Hungarian Minister of Commerce, received Colonel Rich, the English Railway Inspector, and Mr. H. B. Harvey, in charge of the Indian mails, to discuss with them the proposed new route for the Indian mails via Germany, Austro-Hungary, and Salonica. The Greek Minister of Finance having resigned, M. Delyannis, the Prime Minister, takes the Portfolio of that department, in addition to his present office. A Provisional Government stated to have been formed in Chili. The Congressional army disbanded. The Mayor of Eastbourne issued a proclamation prohibiting processions, accompanied by instrumental music, on the part of the Salvation Army. Double murder, followed by the suicide of the murderer, supposed to have been committed at Camden Town.
6. Ruseophile manifestation at Cherbourg. Local fete in honour of Russia at Bagueres.
7. Sir Hector Langevin resigned from the Canadian Ministry. Loss reported of the barque Fife, from Hamburg; thirteen of the crew drowned. News received of an English expedition which left New Calabar in June last, and passed through Sokoto.
8. Austrian Manoeuvres closed. Several foreign papers—French, German, and English—confiscated by the police at Vienna, because they contained extracts from a certain pamphlet on the death of the late Crown Prince Rudolph. International Agricultural Congress at the Hague opened. Festival of the Three Choirs commenced at Hereford, and continued daily to September 10th.
9. Annual Show of the Derbyshire Agricultural Society opened at Derby. Terrible earthquake in San Salvador, involving wreck of many towns and sacrifice of hundreds of lives. The German Emperor attended review of Bavarian troops.
10. Annual Meetings of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Liberal Federation and the Welsh National Council at Pontypridd. A telegram from Constantinople gives terms of reply of the Porte to Russian demands on Dardanelles Question, and adds that assurances have been given that vessels of the Russian Volunteers, though not ships of war, will be allowed to pass freely through the Bosphorus and Dardanelles, provided notice is given by the Russian Embassy.
12. News received in Berlin of a German victory in East Africa on the 17th ult. Natives attacked the Expedition under Captain Von Zalewski, who, besides several other officers is reported missing. First-class armed cruiser Nelson, just refitted, passed out of the Sheerness hands.
13. Fire at the Montpellier Music Hall, near Walworth Station.
14. Sensation excited in all European capitals by a telegram from Constantinople, to the effect that a British force had landed on a small islet, on the west coast of Mytilene, and fortified the place. Funeral of M. Grévy at Mont-aux-Vandres. Three thousand five hundred hands in the lumber mills of Ottawa struck work, demanding increased pay and shorter hours. Mutiny reported to have broken out on board the Chilean cruiser Presidente Pinto in Hamburg docks. Serious floods reported from the central and southern districts of Spain. Several villages in the province of Toledo destroyed, and many people drowned.
15. It is reported from Bombay that fifteen deaths from cholera have occurred on board the British war vessels Marathon and Redbreast. News received of the arrest of the "Free Cosack" Ashinoff, who took charge of an expedition to Abyssinia two years ago. Outbreak in Guatemala City, and a terrible conflict between soldiery and people. The report of the occupation of a Turkish island by a British force proved to have had no foundation. The German Emperor arrived at Tettelstadt and attended the manoeuvres at Erfurt. Queen Christina opened a national subscription for the relief of the sufferers by the inundations in Spain. The Netherlands Parliament opened by the Queen Regent, who declared the general position of the country to be satisfactory. The reported outbreak of cholera on board Her Majesty's ships Marathon and Redbreast confirmed. The Committee of Inquiry into the Canadian scandals issued two reports. That of the majority states that there has been a conspiracy to defraud the Government, and recommends a prosecution. The minority report strongly condemns Mr. McGreevy, and finds that Sir H. Langevin had passively connived at certain frauds. The enthronement of Dr. MacLagan as Archbishop of York performed in the Minister. At the Central Criminal Court two postmen severely sentenced to three years' penal servitude for stealing letters.
16. Publication of telegram relating to the Sigi incident, which was forwarded to our Embassy at Constantinople. The German Emperor witnessed manoeuvres at Hongkong. On his return to Mulhausen the Burgomaster presented him with an address. Performance of Lohengrin at the Paris Opera House. Ticket holders allowed to enter without molestation, but there were noisy demonstrations against Germany outside, and several arrests made. Germany, France, and Italy officially notified their recognition of the Provisional Government of Chili. The Canadian Government decides to ask Parliament to vote to her Majesty an address declaring the existing Treaties with Belgium and the German Zollverein to be incompatible with the rights conferred upon the Canadian Parliament to regulate the trade of the Colony. Mr. Henry Irving unveiled the Marlowe Memorial at Canterbury.

ADMIRAL TRYON.

(From a photograph by R. Ellis, Malta.)

10. Collision off Cape Colonna between Italian mail steamer Taormina and the Greek steamer Thessalia. The former sank and most of her passengers perished. The Kursaal at Heligoland destroyed by fire. Revolting murders by Araucanian Indians in Lower Chili. International Agricultural Congress at the Hague discussed agricultural education and the organisation of special technical schools for teaching horticulture and arboriculture. The Thetis, twenty knot cruiser, successfully completed official trials off Sheerness.
11. The Tzar's name-day celebration at Copenhagen. International Agricultural Congress unanimously rejected the principle of the nationalisation of land. Inauguration of the monument to Garibaldi at Nice. Chilean war vessel Presidente Pinto arrived at Hamburg. Autumn Manoeuvres on the Hampshire Downs commenced.
12. The Sultan gave audience to the British Ambassador, and the alleged misunderstanding is said to have been satisfactory terminated.

17. The German Emperor was present at a battle near Muhlhausen, between the Fourth and Eleventh Army Corps. President Carnot reviewed the four Army Corps which have recently taken part in the military manoeuvres in the East of France.
- Rebellion in the Yang-tse-Kiang believed to be imminent.
- Mr. Lidderdale explained in the Court of the Bank of England the progress that had been made with the Baring liquidation.
- The Young Ireland League inaugurated at Dublin. Mr. John O'Leary, who was elected president, intimated that the new organisation aimed at securing independence in Irish national politics.
- Meeting at Lowestoft to discuss what further steps should be taken to defend the public right to sail and fish on the meres and brads of Norfolk.
- In an action for breach of promise of marriage before the Sheriff's Court, £1,000 was awarded to Miss Mary Jane Bensou, the plaintiff.
- Serious mail coach accident between the Engadine and Coire. Two lives lost and four other passengers injured.
18. Second performance of Lohengrin at Paris. There was less excitement, but several arrests were made.
- The Dutch Budget, showing an accumulated deficit of 36 million florins, was laid before the Chamber.
- Spread of the phylloxera in the vine-growing districts of South Russia, Bessarabia, and the Crimea.
- The British Minister at Washington called the attention of the United States Government to an alleged breach of the motus vivendi relating to the maximum number of seals to be taken in the Behring Sea.
- A. the instigation of the Dockers' Union the men at the Carron and Hermitage wharfs go out on strike.
- At the Central Criminal Court Edward Newton was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for the abduction of Lucy Pearman.
19. Balmaceda committed suicide at the Argentine Revolution at Santiago.
- An official despatch from Baron von Sotén, Governor of German East Africa, received in Berlin, stating that the remnant of the expedition of Lieut. Zaleski had reached the coast, and confirming the death of Schmidt and Tiedemann.
- The Austro-Hungarian railway authorities announce that on October 1st the Central European standard time on the zone system will be introduced throughout their lines.
- At an explosion of fire-damp in a colliery at Charleroi, in Belgium, about thirty men were killed.
- News has reached Constantinople that the insurgents had captured Sanaa, the capital of the Turkish province of Yemen. Additional men engaged to take the places of the men on strike at the Carron and Hermitage Wharfs.
20. In the chief towns of Italy the twenty-first anniversary of the entry of the Italian troops into Rome was celebrated.
- Third representation of Lohengrin at the Paris Opera without marked demonstration or serious disturbance on either side.
- The German Imperial Decree relaxing the passport regulations for Alsace-Lorraine published at Straßburg.
- A Pastoral letter against duelling addressed by the Pope to the Bishops of Germany and Austria.
- Michael Effendi, a Christian functionary, and late Under-Secretary at the Turkish Ministry of Finance, appointed Minister of the Civil List in place of the late Agop Pacha.
- A surveying party, under the command of Lieut.-Gen. Maukiu Nevstroueff, sent down from St. Petersburg to survey the whole of the Crimea and draw topographical plans for the Russian War Office Department.
- Operations for the defence of the entrances of the Thames and Medway commenced.
20. International Congress for the Protection of Workmen against Accidents opened at Berne.
- Lindon Howard sentenced to nine months' hard labour for taking Alice Sargent out of the custody and control of her parents.
22. The report that Sanaa, the capital of Yemen, had been taken by insurgents, denied.
- The new territory in Oklahoma is reported as being large enough for five thousand settlers.
- Terrible storms and floods in Scotland, causing great loss to the Border farmers.
- At the Central Criminal Court, William G. Day, found guilty of cruelly neglecting and ill-treating his child, was sentenced to eight months' hard labour.
- Alfred Brodick, coal retailer, sent to prison for fourteen days for having given short weight in coal.
23. News of rebellion having broken out in the valley of the Yang-tse-Kiang.
- The text of Balmaceda's last letter to the Argentine Minister, who gave him refuge, published.
- Motion in Canadian House of Commons for a committee to investigate charges against the Postmaster-General rejected, the Government declaring that the charges had already been proved groundless.
